"It is a new manner of accepting and vitalizing our duty to give ourselves with thoughtful devotion to the common purpose of us all. It is in no sense a conscription of the unwilling; it is, rather, selection from a Nation which has volunteered in mass. It is no more a choosing of those who shall march with the colors than it is a selection of those who shall serve an equally necessary and devoted purpose in the industries that lie behind the battle line."

Let's not encourage Hitler's Nazi philosophy by any further fumbling with the established superior efficiency of America in both war and peace. Let's prove in 1940 against him, as we proved in 1918 against the Kaiser, that our democracy can defend against any form of autocracy on earth. Let's start now.

Senator Kenneth McKellar

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. TOM STEWART

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE ATLANTA JOURNAL

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, on August 6, Mr. Ralph Smith, veteran Washington correspondent for the Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga., in his column in that paper, in speaking of my colleague [Mr. McKELLAR], made an interesting statement about length of service in the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to have this statement printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRACKERLAND IN WASHINGTON—KENNETH M'KELLAR'S APPRECIATION

(By Ralph Smith)

It is less'n a cat hop from Georgia to Tennessee. Fact is, the line of demarcation isn't visible. It is with little difficulty and a great deal of pleasure, then, that this old Cracker invades the Volunteer State today for a few words about Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR'S fifth consecutive nomination. He won hands-down and handsomely last week, you'll recall, and herewith below you'll find his sincere expression of thanks. It is impressive and unusual, you'll agree:

"The action of the Democratic voters of Tennessee in renominating me for a fifth term in the United States Senate fills me with the greatest satisfaction. After serving them in the Senate for 24 years, to be chosen by them for another term is just about the finest thing that ever happened to me. I thank them from the bottom of my heart.

"My feelings are best described by the thoughts contained in the Twenty-third Psalm of David, when he spake of Jehovah. I hope it is not sacrilege to connect my thoughts of Tennessee at this time with David's thoughts of his God, when he said:

" 'The Lord is my Shepherd;
I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures;
He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou annointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.'

"God bless Tennessee and the Democratic Party. I can only hope that my services may remotely equal the confidence they have again placed in me. That will be my goal. To my friends throughout the State I give again my heartfelt thanks."

M'KELLAR'S UNRIVALED RECORD

MCKELLAR—and, by the way, he is a native Alabamian—even before he enters on the fifth term lays claim to a unique distinction never before conferred by Tennessee upon a Senator. Rounding out his twenty-fourth continuous year in the Senate, his service exceeds that of his nearest rival from Tennessee—the famous Isham G. Harris—by nearly 6 full years.

Further, it is pertinent to record when MCKELLAR shall have completed his fifth term he will enter that charmed senatorial circle reserved for only 15 Members of the Senate, and only 1 of them surviving today.

"The charmed circle, in addition to my colleague, Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, included 14 great Senators who have gone to their reward," said MCKELLAR today. "The list includes Francis E. Warren, of Wyoming; Reed Smoot, of Utah; William E. Borah, of Idaho; William B. Allison, of Idaho; John Sherman, of Ohio; Eugene Hale, of Maine; William P. Frye, of Maine; John P. Jones, of Nevada; Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont; John T. Morgan, of Alabama; Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts; Francis M. Cockrell, of Missouri; Furnifold M. Simmons, of North Carolina; Shelby M. Cullom, of Illinois.

"Of the 15, it was my honor and my pleasure to serve with 6 of them—Smith, Warren, Smoot, Borah, Lodge, Simmons, and I knew Senators Morgan and Cullom."

Incidentally, your correspondent enjoys the distinction of having personally known all those named above by Senator McKELLAR and three others in addition—Senator Morgan, of Alabama; Senator Allison, of Iowa; and Senators Hale and Frye, of Maine, indicating, you'll infer, that I crashed the Senate press gallery before KENNETH McKELLAR crashed the Senate.

Acquisition of Foreign Island Possessions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

STATEMENT BY HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN, OF MINNESOTA

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement prepared by me concerning foreign-island possessions in the Western Hemisphere.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Recent maneuvers to trade 50 United States destroyers for island bases in the Caribbean has brought the issue of old war-debt payments back to the American people. In the interest of American security, we must keep our Navy at home, in American hands. The question of acquiring the Caribbean islands does not involve giving away our Navy. The debts of the World War still remain unpaid. This Government has waited and negotiated for 22 years seeking a substantial payment from defaulting foreign countries. For 22 years the answer has been continued evasion and repeated attempts at cancelation.

Great Britain borrowed from the United States more than $4,000,000,000. Has Great Britain paid that debt? No. France borrowed $3,404,818,945; Italy borrowed $1,648,034,050. Have they paid? No. And 17 other countries received similar loans.

Giving Britain destroyers and underwriting the security of her empire with our Navy involves the United States in a war with Germany. It is an act of war. The security of America demands that we maintain our fleet at its present strength and render our coasts and the Panama Canal invulnerable to any combination of foreign powers by acquiring and fortifying strategic islands off our coast. Our fleet is now the greatest in all the world, but it must have secure bases in islands which form the outposts of our defense.

Maj. Fielding Eliot, Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., and many other military and naval authorities maintain that we must have fortified island bases off our coasts to protect the Panama Canal, the American life line.

The smoldering bits of Old World empires have studded the Caribbean. British and French islands extend like a great bowstring over those waters to control the Atlantic entrance to the Panama Canal. America has every right to ask that Britain and France liquidate their old World War debts by turning over these islands to us. They are not essential to British or French security, but they are essential to American security. At this very date these two countries owe the United States more than $10,000,000,000. After cutting the debt in half the United States allowed foreign countries to evade their legally contracted debts for more than 20 years. There is no evasion or cancelation of debt for evicted farmers, home owners, sharecroppers, and American workers.

Andrew Jackson set the course for us when he said in his annual message, 1834: "It is a well-settled principle of the international code that where one nation owes another a liquidated debt which it refuses or neglects to pay, the aggrieved party may seize on the property belonging to the other, its citizens or subjects, sufficient to pay the debt without giving just cause for war."

I am not the first to demand seizure of Bermuda and the West Indies. Andrew Jackson did that more than a century ago. James A. Reed advocated acquisition of these islands on February 20, 1923, when he said on the Senate floor: "These island possessions form a barrier which commands the Gulf of Mexico, the Caribbean Sea, the Panama Canal, and every trade route between North and South America. It is not too much to say that in the hands of a hostile power they could be so employed as to close the Panama Canal, rendering it practically useless, and that the Gulf of Mexico, including the mouth of the Mississippi River, would be placed under terrible menace. * * * These islands are of no substantial value to either France or England save as positions from which America may at some time be attacked."

While we were talking of moratoriums on the war debts in 1932, Representative Louis T. McFadden, Republican, chairman of the important Finance Committee, said that there was no logical reason why Great Britain and France could not turn over the islands to us in payment of the war debts.

And in 1935, Brig. Gen. Charles H. Sherrill, former United States Ambassador to Turkey, urged that the United States negotiate for European possessions in the Western Hemisphere, potential threats to the Panama Canal, these islands to be taken over in part settlement of the war debts.

It appears that I have not been alone in this idea of collecting that war debt through a logical and sensible way which has as its basic purpose the interest and welfare of the American people.

Former Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, who was Secretary of the Treasury during the first World War, wrote the Make Europe Pay War Debts Committee: "I have always favored acquiring the British West Indies and Bermuda in part payment of Great Britain's debt to the United States, and I have advocated it for more than 20 years. The first debt settlement was effected without any considerations of this important question by the United States representatives of the Debt Commission. I am frank to say that I can see no good reason why the British Government should not be willing to transfer these possessions to us in part payment of their debt. The advent of the airplane and its continuing development makes it more than ever important that the islands adjacent to our shores be wholly under American sovereignty."

Year after year, the United States keeps sending perfumed and perfunctory semiannual notices to its favored and kept debtors in Europe. It seems to me that it is high time that we followed a different course—we should make an immediate demand for cession of the British and French West Indies, naming a time limit in which a satisfactory answer must be received, and specifying that military action will be taken if such a response is not forthcoming.

The elimination of foreign control from countries south of us and islands in the Caribbean Sea and vicinity, as well as islands off the coasts of the two continents, will result in a union of the nations of North, Central, and South America in a close bond of friendship. The day will come when there will be no flags in the American skies but American flags, North and South. Every sovereignty will be an American sovereignty from pole to Panama and from pole to pole. It will be not only a Western Hemisphere; it will be the American Hemisphere.

Comment on Senator Pepper's Recent Speech

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY RAYMOND CLAPPER

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Raymond Clapper, published in the Washington News of August 23, 1940, under the heading "Abusing free speech." The article pays tribute to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] for the remarks he made in the Senate in connection with the recent effigy-hanging incident.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of August 23, 1940]

ABUSING FREE SPEECH

(By Raymond Clapper)

So far as I know there is no handbook of etiquette that suggests appropriate remarks one might make after being hanged in effigy.

That long-felt want has now been admirably met by Senator CLAUDE PEPPER of Florida.

He has been advocating conscription and he was hanged in effigy on Capitol Hill by a crowd of angry mothers opposed to the draft. It was the first symbolic lynching that had occurred under the eaves of our citadel of democracy since the Civil War, so the oldest inhabitants hereabouts tell us.

This symbolic lynching was a symbolic disgrace, but it had a supreme and perhaps a slightly glorious climax when the notification ceremonies were held afterward in Senator PEPPER's office. The effigy, bearing its insulting placard, "Claude Benedict Arnold Pepper," was cut down and delivered to the Senator. If Wendell

Willkie was on a spot with his acceptance speech, it was a spot no hotter than that upon which the audacious young Senator PEPPER found himself on this occasion as he gazed at the noose-draped effigy of himself and bethought himself what he might say in acknowledgment of the unusual tribute.

Senator PEPPER'S speech of acceptance after being hanged in effigy was a brief gem. It breathed so deeply of the spirit of our free democracy that it deserves its place among the classic utterances of our history.

I quote it, and I hope that many others will quote it, too—now and for years to come—to shame those intolerant persons whose first impulse, whenever an issue arises, is to let go of the primary essential of democracy—tolerant respect for the opinions of others.

Senator PEPPER made this comment: "Knowing these women, like all other Americans, are sincere in their patriotism, placing America first and Hitler last, I feel that their hanging me in effigy is a splendid demonstration of what we are all trying to preserve—freedom of speech and freedom of action in the American way of doing things. I only hope that the spectators and those who hear about this business will feel that I also love America and that I am sincere in my daily efforts to defend the United States in liberty, the right of free speech and free action."

Lincoln could not have said it better.

One of the curious inconsistencies of this bitter fight over conscription that has shaken Washington to its roots is that those who oppose conscription as a threat to democratic institutions are themselves using the most intolerant tactics. They make the point that conscription would fasten the ways of dictatorship on us. But in so doing, they frequently desert the level of reason and stoop to the intimidating, smearing tactics of the Nazi Goebbels. They attribute the lowest motives to those advocating conscription and shower them with buckets of mud and threats of reprisal in the true Nazi style. They appear to respect free speech only by themselves.

Ambassador Bullitt, because of his experience in France, surely is entitled to be heard. But when he speaks he is denounced as almost a traitor. Demand is made that he be prosecuted for trying to influence Congress. A columnist who wrote a dispatch approving of Bullitt's position is denounced as an "obsequious lickspittle." A distinguished radio commentator who knows as much about the history of the last 2 years as any Senator is denounced as a propagandist who should be driven off the air.

Adequate defense of the United States and how it should be achieved is a question that rises supreme over all other considerations. The fullest discussion of it is warranted—discussion of the question, not of the personalities.

In 1917 it was not possible for the elder La Follette nor for Senator GEORGE NORRIS to get a hearing. Then the intolerance was on the other side. Opponents of conscription now are having their day in court, a field day, and it is not in the best interest of democratic processes that they should abuse their opportunity. That will only breed the intolerance and tend to incite the repressive tactics that we all are trying to escape this time.

William C. Bullitt

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK

OF MISSOURI

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

LETTERS FROM HON. WILLIAM C. BULLITT AND MRS. GENEVIEVE CLARK THOMSON

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, pursuant to the permission granted me, I offer for printing in the RECORD a letter dated August 17, 1940, from William C. Bullitt to myself; a letter dated August 23, 1940, from Mrs. Genevieve Clark Thomson to myself; and a letter dated August 22, 1940, from Mrs. Genevieve Clark Thomson to William C. Bullitt.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 17, 1940.

The Honorable BENNETT CHAMP CLARK,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR CLARK: My attention has just been called to page 5000 of the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where, under the heading "Ambassador Bullitt—Extension of remarks of Hon. Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri in the Senate of the United States, Wednesday, August 14 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940" is an article by Genevieve Clark Thomson, your sister.

This article contains so many serious misstatements that I am sure you will wish to know the facts and will wish to have them published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Among the many misstatements the following are the most important:

1. "The country was startled about that time by the severity of Under Secretary of State Welles' castigation of Russia concerning its acquisition of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania. * * * It in no way lessens the consternation of informed people to learn that the broadside delivered by Mr. Welles was in fact drafted at Hyde Park, and that Ambassador Bullitt had a heavy hand in its drafting."

Not only did I not have a heavy hand in the drafting of this document but in point of fact, I had no hand whatsoever. I did not even know that such a document was being prepared. The document in question was prepared in the Department of State.

2. "About 6 weeks ago it was said in the United States that Mr. Bullitt had, in the course of his diplomatic and literary pursuits, written a letter to the then French Premier, Paul Reynaud, assuring him that if France went to war upon the invasion of Poland, she would be followed in a short time by the United States."

Paul Reynaud did not become French Premier until more than 6 months after France had gone to war upon the invasion of Poland. Never at any time, to any French Premier or to anyone else, did I write any letter indicating or intimating that if France went to war she would be followed in a short time by the United States.

3. "Some provincial Americans were rather shocked to learn that on occasion he actually sat in French Cabinet meetings."

This is, of course, fantastic nonsense. It would be as impossible for the American Ambassador in Paris to sit in a French Cabinet meeting as for the French Ambassador in Washington to sit in an American Cabinet meeting. I have never on any occasion sat in any French Cabinet meeting.

4. "When the tragic collapse of France came a few weeks ago Mr. Bullitt, contrary to orders from the State Department, remained in Paris, instead of following the French Government to Bordeaux."

I never received any orders from the State Department to follow the French Government to Bordeaux. It had been understood by the Department of State, the President, and myself that in case the Germans should reach Paris I should remain in the city in accordance with the long tradition which began at the time of the French Revolution, when Gouveneur Morris remained as the only diplomatic representative in the city, and was continued by Elihu Washburne during the seige of Paris and the Commune of 1870, and by Ambassador Myron T. Herrick in 1914.

5. "Without reporting to his supposed chiefs at the State Department, he went straight to the President. It is reported that the State Department is still as much in the dark as the general public regarding the events leading to and surrounding the death of the French Republic."

I reached Washington from Europe on a Sunday. The Secretary of State and the Under Secretary were absent from the city. I reported immediately to the ranking officer of the Department of State who was in the city—an adviser to the Secretary of State. I then reported at the White House, and after returning to Washington from Hyde Park, immediately reported to all the authorities of the Department of State.

6. "He is reported as urging the President to release to the Petain government the $2,500,000,000 deposited here by the French Republic for safekeeping. The Treasury Department had every intention of keeping this money frozen here, since, if it is released to Petain, it will find its way into Herr Hitler's hands. Consequently the Treasury is greatly upset by Mr. Bullitt's crusade for its release."

This statement, like those above, is totally untrue. I have never urged the release of the funds in question.

I am sure, my dear Senator, that your sense of fair play will cause you to have this rectification published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of next Monday.

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM C. BULLITT.

THE ITEM-TRIBUNE,
NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 23, 1940.

Hon. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CLARK: Thank you for permitting me to see the charges of misstatements which Ambassador William C. Bullitt lodged with you against me. I am at a loss to know why the Ambassador applied to you for redress when the New Orleans Item-Tribune was the source of the publication, and I was the author.

I am enclosing herewith my reply which I sent direct to Ambassador Bullitt, together with citations of the sources from which material was taken, which I think covers the case.

I greatly regret to have inconvenienced you in the matter, and my delay in replying was due to the fact that I had destroyed the clippings upon which that part of the article to which the Ambassador objected had been based, and it necessitated some searching of the files.

Sincerely yours,

GENEVIEVE CLARK THOMSON.

THE ITEM-TRIBUNE,
New Orleans, La., August 22, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM C. BULLITT,
American Ambassador to France,
Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: My brother, Senator CLARK, has at my request forwarded to me your letter of August 17, relative to an article appearing in the New Orleans Item-Tribune of August 11, and written by me.

If, my dear Mr. Ambassador, you have been misrepresented in this instance, I am the culprit, and if I have, to borrow the words of the redoubtable Mae West, "done you wrong," in justice to you and to myself I certainly wish to rectify it. I may say that as an American citizen who has been profoundly disturbed by some of your reported activities, I should be most happy to have you prove that these reports were erroneous.

Let me say also that I have followed your career for years with great interest and, believe it or not, in the friendliest spirit. I first became interested in you through my mother, who was your warm admirer. She had a brilliant mind and was a great liberal who, until her death at the age of 81, maintained a keen interest and a championing sympathy for oppressed peoples everywhere. She had an enormous interest in Russia and in the Russian experiment. And since in her later years she was an invalid, it was my pleasure to read to her for hours every day, whatever she chose to hear. And she chose to hear a great deal about Russia. She greatly admired John Reed, and Louise Bryant Reed, who was later, I think, Mrs. Bullitt. And she also held you in high regard, which I came to share. Because of this I have, as it were, kept a file on you for some years. So much for that.

In the second place let me say that the Sunday page which I edit in the New Orleans Item-Tribune is based on editorial opinion and news matter from other newspapers and periodicals, to which I write a lead. Please don't misunderstand me. I am in no way trying to shift the blame, if blame there be. I simply wish you to understand that I did not throw myself into a trance and produce a vision of you in an unfavorable light in the article under discussion. On the contrary, every observation of mine to which you object was based on published reports in American newspapers, which were never, to my knowledge, denied until I read your letter to Senator CLARK. American newspapers are not, of course, infallible, but in the main they strive, I think, to be both accurate and fair. Certainly that is the goal of the New Orleans Item-Tribune.

I have more sympathy than you might suppose with your irritation at what you consider unfairness on the part of the press. My father was long in public life, and my brother, as you know, is now in the Senate. And I am frank to say that I have at times been greatly irked by published criticism of them which I thought unfair.

As a matter of fact, some of the distinguished gentlemen, whose columns we print, are in my opinion studiedly unfair to my brother. Yet I have never once protested the publication in our columns of one of these criticisms. This is no evidence of nobility on my part. It is the way I think newspapers should be run, and I am in the newspaper business.

On the other hand, my dear Mr. Ambassador, I am sure you will agree that those in the public service must be prepared at all times to have their conduct of their public duties submitted to that "pitiless publicity" so strongly advocated by Woodrow Wilson.

Now, if you have not swooned before this, I will take up your complaints in the order in which you have stated them:

No. 1. Quoting from my page: "The country was startled about that time by the severity of Under Secretary of State Welles' castigation of Russia concerning its acquisition of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania. * * * It in no way lessens the consternation of informed people to learn that the broadside delivered by Mr. Welles was in fact drafted at Hyde Park, and that Ambassador Bullitt had a heavy hand in its drafting."

Your reply: "Not only did I not have a heavy hand in the drafting of this document but, in point of fact, I had no hand whatever. I did not even know that such a document was being prepared. The document in question was prepared in the Department of State."

My answer: It is not clear to me whether you question the accuracy of one of these statements or both. Concerning the first, "that the country was startled by Mr. Welles' castigation of Russia," I will say that is a matter of opinion. And without wishing to be presumptuous I think that it is a matter upon which my opinion would be fully as good as yours. If you don't think the country was startled it may possibly be because you don't read as many daily newspapers as I do, as part of my duty.

Regarding the "consternation of informed people" to learn that you had had a hand in drafting the document under discussion, I myself am fairly well informed and I come in contact with a good many very well-informed persons. That was their reaction, as it was, I say quite frankly, my own. This feeling was based on your well-advertised hatred of Russia. Perhaps you have been misrepresented in that. If so, it is an idea which has been allowed to prevail unchallenged for some years.

Now regarding your participation in the drafting of the document, the words are my own, but they were based on statements in the Washington Merry-Go-Round by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, which appeared in the New Orleans States Monday, July 29, 1940, and many other newspapers throughout the United States, and was never denied by you or anyone in the State Department, as far as I know, until I read your letter charging me with inaccuracy. The column is given below:

"(By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen)

"WASHINGTON.—Inside fact regarding the scathing State Department blast at Soviet Russia for seizing the Baltic states was that it was drafted largely in Hyde Park, and that Ambassador William Bullitt had a lot to do with the drafting. Undersecretary of State Welles merely acted as the mouthpiece.

"The State Department had written a statement criticizing Russia's seizure of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, and sent it to Hyde Park for approval. Here Bill Bullitt, ex-ambassador to Russia who now hates everything about it, completely rewrote the statement, putting in some of its most pungent phrases.

"The incident is significant, for two reasons: First, it illustrates how the President and his favorite ambassador act as a super state department; and second, it indicates that despite the increasing belligerency of Japan, the Roosevelt administration is loath to warm up to its most logical ally in the Pacific, Soviet Russia.

"The closeness of the Bullitt-Roosevelt tie-up has become rather embarrassing to the rest of the State Department. For instance, following Bullitt's return from Europe last week he did not even visit the State Department. He went straight to the White House; and after a week end there, accompanied the President to Hyde Park.

"As a result, the State Department had no idea what Bullitt's views were on the Petain government. In fact, while he was issuing public statements approving the Petain regime, his alleged colleagues in the State Department were of the very positive opinion that the Petain government was a mere puppet for Germany, and that it would be replaced sooner or later by another puppet government under the ex-Communist, now Nazi, Jacques Doriot.

"Bullitt's last days in Paris and Vichy comprise one of the most important chapters in recent world history. But the State Department knows no more about it than the interviews which its ambassador gives to the press.

"JAPAN'S RAMPAGE

"United States intelligence reports from the Far East state that Japan will join the axis officially and actively just as soon as Hitler launches his big "blitzkrieg" on Britain.

"Meanwhile, the Japanese military have adopted the policy of causing as many incidents as possible to annoy the United States and to fan them up in the Japanese press. There is no question in the minds of the United States officials that this strategy is being worked out in cooperation with Hitler and has two ends in view:

"First, to keep the American public worried over the Far East, so that the White House cannot become too absorbed with the plight of England during Hitler's "blitzkrieg."

"Second, to convince the Japanese public that there is nothing to fear from the United States. The more the Japanese press attacks this country, and the more American citizens are beaten up in Shanghai, the more the Japanese public will be led to believe that the United States is powerless to send armed forces across the Pacific.

"Then when this conviction is thoroughly embedded, the military will make their long contemplated drive into the Dutch East Indies.

"Note.—Looking further ahead, United States observers in the Orient also are convinced that when Hitler gets ready for his drive into South America, Japan will strike toward the Pacific coast of South America simultaneously.

"RUSSIA-UNITED STATES ALLIES?

"All of this demonstrates the fact that the United States, if it is not to be left entirely alone in the Pacific, must move quickly and must secure friends. To date, there are only two potential friends worth worrying about.

"First is Great Britain, which in fact is America's first line of defense, and which might be saved if the United States gave major aid.

"Second is Russia, the natural enemy of Japan, whom Japan fears more than she fears the United States. A hook-up between Russia and the United States could hamstring Japan, keep her powerless in the North Pacific.

"That is why the Roosevelt-Bullitt statement denouncing Russia is so important. Bullitt was the man who persuaded Roosevelt to recognize Soviet Russia in the first place, and apparently he still has the last word on the country he now hates so bitterly.

"So probably there will be no warming up to Russia, no matter what Japan does in the Pacific.

"NEW ALLIANCE

"A new Workers Alliance (union of W. P. A. workers) is quietly in the making.

"David Lasser, former alliance president who resigned in protest against Communist and fellow-traveler domination of the executive board, has received so many pledges of rank-and-file support that he has undertaken to establish an entirely new organization. Three days after he quit, Lasser had received more than 1,000 letters from alliance members and local leaders urging a new union.

"Lasser's resignation apparently was a blow to the left-wing leaders. They had secretly planned to seize complete control of the alliance at its national convention, originally scheduled for July 11. But his bold and open charge that they were 'reds' upset this scheme, and they postponed the convention to August 28.

"MAIL BAG

"S. A. V., Atlanta—The most effective Negro in the A. A. A. service, according to officials here, is Jennie B. Moton, widow of the former president of Tuskegee University. She works in the field offices, handling complaints and explaining the program to Negro farmers. H. G., Washington—The job of assistant translator, for which Civil Service is now offering an exam, pays only $2,000, though the candidates are expected to have command of four languages—French, German, Italian, and Spanish. Result is that the Government gets mediocre people who have a smattering of all four languages, an expertness in none. K. S., Boston—It was in 1914 that the Germans first gave assurances to the United States that they had no territorial designs in this hemisphere. Ambassador Bernsdorff, in a note to Secretary of State Bryan, used language strikingly similar to the language the Germans use today: 'I am instructed by my government to deny most categorically the rumors circulated by English agents to the effect that Germany, in case she emerges victorious from the present war, intends to seek expansion in South America.' J. L. C., Salem, Ohio—The United States makes no charge for carrying great quantities of Argentine mail to Chile and other South American countries on United States ships. Supposed to be a reciprocal arrangement, actually the United States gives extensive service free and gets practically nothing in return. It is a part of the good-will program."

No. 2. Quotation from my page: "About 6 weeks ago it was said in the United States Senate that Mr. Bullitt had, in the course of his diplomatic and literary pursuits, written a letter to the then French Premier, Paul Reynaud, assuring him that if France went to war upon the invasion of Poland, she would be followed in a short time by the United States."

Your reply: "Paul Reynaud did not become French Premier until more than 6 months after France had gone to war upon the invasion of Poland. Never, at any time, to any French Premier or to anyone else, did I write any letter indicating or intimating that if France went to war she would be followed in a short time by the United States."

My answer: Perhaps you were not aware of it, but such things were said in the United States Senate. In volume 86, No. 124, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Friday, June 21, 1940, pages 8791 to 8805, is to be found a debate on our foreign policy with particular reference to possible secret commitments on the part of the President of the United States and his Ambassadors, which was quite startling in character. On page 8795 Senator NYE was reported as follows:

"Mr. President, before I go further I should like to read a paragraph from the dispatch of Arthur Sears Henning of June 17, under a Washington date line:

" 'It already is known that Bullitt promised the French that the United States would get into the war if necessary to defeat Hitler. It was to ask the President to make good on this assurance that Lord Lothian, the British Ambassador, and Count de Saint-Quentin, the French Ambassador, called on Mr. Roosevelt last Saturday. They asked him to come through with the promised declaration of war.

" 'Mr. Roosevelt could not deliver. He was compelled to say in his cable to Premier Reynaud that only Congress can declare war.'

"One week ago yesterday an individual whom I shall under no circumstances compromise came to my office and wrote a memorandum. I could not doubt this man for one minute. In his memorandum he said:

" 'It was known'—remember, this was before the French surrendered—" 'It was known that France might definitely give in within 10 days, and that when it did the Government of France would release a letter from Bullitt, written on orders of Roosevelt, to Daladier, dated last August or September, stating the full support of the United States if it went to war against Germany on the basis of the Polish incident.'

"Three days later the editor-in-chief of a most eminent American news service, in a confidential letter to the editors who subscribe to his service, in a release of June 18, had this to say:

" 'Unless combined pressures are effective in changing Premier Reynaud's plans, he will drop a bomb soon with repercussions which may reach far over here. The expected separate peace to be made by the French will call for certain categorical explanations. These will include, according to a trustworthy report from France, the releasing of a letter written by Ambassador Bullitt just before the war started, giving the French assurance of our full cooperation with them if they would support the Poles.' "

"Mr. President, take all these things in combination and then look back over the whole performance. Before the war started the President of the United States, by act and by innuendo, made himself the leader of the 'no more Munichs' group. His Ambassador to France made a public speech to all intents pledging American aid. He was never reprimanded. Although the question of possible promises has been raised many times since, as well as the question whether Bullitt made private statements to French officials spelling out in detail what he meant by his public speeches, he himself has never answered the question, and has taken particular care to avoid having to answer it. The Senate will not quickly forget how Mr. Bullitt made his get-away from these shores last winter when the Senator from North Carolina introduced his resolution asking the Foreign Affairs Committee to inquire of Mr. Bullitt while he was here whether or not any commitments had been made in the name of the American Government. If I am not mistaken, the very next day after the introduction of that resolution Ambassador Bullitt was on his way to Europe. Yet, Mr. President, some such commitment of military assistance was made, or the dispute over Danzig and the Corridor would have led to quite a different result than has been reached."

It is true, as you say, that M. Reynaud was not Premier of France at the time of the invasion of Poland. It is true that it was M. Daladier who was then Premier, to whom the letter was said to have been written. In that detail I was in error, and I freely admit it, although it in no way alters the gravity of the charge. It was M. Reynaud in whose possession the letter was said to be, and who was said to have the intention of releasing it.

So far as I know, you have never made a denial of these statements, except in your letter to Senator CLARK complaining of my misstatements. As an American citizen who would feel at least my humble share of the responsibility for the result of such a dreadful indiscretion on the part of an American Ambassador, I have read your forthright denial with great relief. And I suggest that in justice to yourself and to the public, you make the news of this denial available to the whole Nation.

In passing may I say that you could yourself have a little more care in charging people with making misstatements. I did not say you had written such a letter. I said it was said on the floor of the Senate. And it was. So much for that.

No. 3 quotation from my page: "Some provincial Americans were rather shocked to learn that on occasion he actually sat in the French cabinet meetings."

Your reply: "This is, of course, fantastic nonsense. It would be as impossible for an American Ambassador in Paris to sit in a French cabinet meeting as for the French Ambassador in Washington to sit in an American Cabinet meeting. I have never, on any occasion, sat in any French cabinet meeting."

My answer: You say this is fantastic nonsense. It may be. Certainly it is fantastic and that was precisely the point I was seeking to make. That we were living in an age of fantastic happenings, some of the most fantastic of which had to do with our own foreign policy—whatever that is. Perhaps it never happened. If not, again as an American citizen I am heartily glad. But the point is that I am a rather matter-of-fact person, and did not conjure that fantasy from my own brain. Perhaps you didn't know it, but that statement has appeared in the public prints many times, and by writers who seemed most friendly to you, and who seemed to feel it an exploit very much to your credit, which I certainly did not.

On page 13 of that colorful pamphlet, An American White Paper, subtitled "The Story of American Diplomacy in the Second World War," by Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner, are the following words:

"Bullitt who has so charmed the French as to serve occasionally as an unofficial Cabinet minister, is a romantic, Childe Harold sort of fellow."

And again it was restated, and amplified, in a column by Messrs. Alsop and Kintner, dated July 28, and herewith attached:

"WASHINGTON, July 30.—Mr. Bullitt's explanation of the mystery of Mr. Bullitt appears to be more confusing than explanatory. So far as can be learned from those who have talked with the returned Ambassador to France, Bullitt's main argument, supporting his stand in favor of the Petain government, is that Petain, Laval, Weygand and company have saved their country from the Communists.

"It is reported that Bullitt is extremely eloquent on the power of the Communists in Paris during the days of terror, on the elaborate organization of their activities, and on the serious threat which they constituted. Bullitt is an able observer. A large underground Communist movement still existed in France until the very end of the war. No doubt Bullitt is right that the Communists hopefully came out from their holes during the time when France began to disintegrate. Nor would a Communist threat impress any man more than Bullitt, who has been one of the most violently anti-Communist public men in the world ever since his bitter disillusionment in Russia.

"On the other hand, it is also reported that Bullitt is even more eloquent on the present threat of the Nazis to the world than on the past threat of the Communists to France. His antifascism is as nobly intense as ever. It is difficult to imagine that a Communist uprising in Paris or elsewhere in France would not have been cleaned up by the German Army and Gestapo in double-quick time. And thus Bullitt's plea on behalf of the Petain government is not explained logically, at least, by his talk of the Communist threat.

"Although the Petain government may have prevented a Communist uprising which the Germans would certainly have put down anyway, the crowd around Petain are themselves under the gravest suspicion of German domination. The plan to move the seat of government to Paris, now in the hands of the Gestapo, should be indication enough of the grounds for this suspicion. If it is not, there is the known character of Pierre Laval, long classed as a virtual agent of the Italian Government and regarded by all informed observers as no better than Georges Bonnet. There is the reputation of Adrien Marquet, a sort of French ersatz fuehrer. There is the policy followed by the Government with regard to the Navy, whose independent officers were being replaced by more biddable ones, when the English acted in fear of the new men taking the ships into French ports for German use. These items of evidence, plus the mere shape of the general situation in France, make it perfectly incredible that the Petain government can be independent in any true sense.

"Possibly some light may be cast on Bullitt's attitude by the peculiar character of his position in France. He is a romanticist, dashing, brilliant, excitable, given to magnificent hospitality, passionately fond of the stirring goings and comings of international politics. Being so colorful a figure, and known as one of the President's closest intimates, he was accorded a standing in Paris quite unlike that of any other ambassador. Both in the Blum and in the Daladier governments, he was an unofficial member of the cabinet. Ministers constantly asked his advice. He was given almost as large a voice in the proceedings of the French foreign office as in the debates of the State Department.

"Naturally a lover of good food, good living, and all things French, he could not help but grow more pro-French than ever under the influence of his very special relationship with the French Government. Occasionally, his Francophilism carried him into indiscretions. For example, in the period before the war broke out, he was sometimes given to telling French officials what the President wanted to do for France. The President, of course, wanted to do everything possible, except actually going to war. And the French officials frequently failed to understand the difference between what the President wanted to do and what the Senate, American public opinion, and all the other factors controlling policy would permit him to do.

"This same Francophilism undoubtedly influences Bullitt now, for unless the American people are willing to extend a helping hand, France, like all Europe, will have the most dreadful winter since the Thirty Years' War. It is still a question, however, whether natural American generosity or a hard-headed consideration of the fact that by helping the French we shall be extending indirect aid to Germany should control our decision.

"Possibly some light may also be cast on Bullitt's attitude by the conditions which prevailed in France during the last days. Tales that would be incredible if they did not come from such good sources have begun to trickle out. One, for example, is that in the last 4 days before his fall, Premier Reynaud was really out of touch with Prime Minister Churchill because, trusting no one else, he confided his telegrams for the English Prime Minister to Mme. des Portes, who was secretly an appeaser and did not send them. In an atmosphere where such things could happen, it does not seem unreasonable that the head of the French armies, General Weygand, now a leading member of the Petain government, should have fallen victim to a transport of mysticism. Apparently he combined the conviction that France must now suffer to expurgate her great sins, with a strong trace of defeatism and a violent fear of the Communist menace. Bullitt is said, perhaps wrongly, to have been much influenced by Weygand's views.

"Bullitt is a responsible official, with much that is excellent in his record, and certainly cannot be condemned out of hand. His stand is puzzling. But unless he is not ready to defend it in detail, it must be filed calmly in the 'fuller explanation' department until he does so defend it."

This may not be so, but I never heard of its denial by you or anyone else, and to contend that there is any essential difference between "actually sitting upon occasion with the cabinet" and "serving occasionally as an unofficial cabinet minister," is to make a distinction without a difference. In my humble opinion, and I believe that of most thoughtful Americans, either would be a highly improper role for an Ambassador of the United States.

Although I derived the distinct impression that Messrs. Alsop and Kintner were your great admirers, since they painted a charming portrait of you in the best rich young ruler style, I dare say that some provincial readers like myself, wondered if it was in the highest interest of the United States to have Childe Harold as our Ambassador to France.

Again I emphasize that I have nowhere seen this denied, except in your letter to Senator CLARK complaining of my misstatements. So much for that.

No. 4. Quoting from my page: "When the tragic collapse of France came a few weeks ago, Mr. Bullitt, contrary to orders from the State Department, remained in Paris, instead of following the French Government to Bordeaux."

Your reply: "I never received any orders from the State Department to follow the French Government to Bordeaux. It had been understood by the Department of State, the President, and myself that in case the Germans should reach Paris, I should remain in the city in accordance with the long tradition which began at the time of the French Revolution when Gouverneur Morris remained as the only diplomatic representative in the city, and was continued by Elihu Washburne during the Siege of Paris and the Commune of 1870, and by Ambassador Myron T. Herrick in 1914."

My answer: Unfortunately, before I knew that we were going to have all this shooting I threw away the clippings upon which I based my observations. Those from the columnists I have been able to recover from our files. The statement that you had acted contrary to State Department orders was taken from a straight news story which, I believe, appeared in the New York Times. If my memory, which sometimes is faulty, serves, it was in the same article in which Judge Hull was described as being vexed with you. Unfortunately, I have not a file of the Times in the office, and it may take me some time to locate this reference. However, I shall try to do so. But as I am accepting a good many denials on your part and on your word, I am sure that you will be fair enough to believe me when I say that I didn't gather that out of the circumambient atmosphere, but based the observation upon reports in the public press.

Again I am glad to know that you did not take your own head and go contrary to orders from the State Department.

It is my belief that, without regard to party, the American people have the same profound respect for the patriotism, intelligence, and integrity of Secretary Hull that I have and that it causes grave apprehension on their part when his supposed subordinates flout his authority or act in a way to warrant publication of a statement that he is vexed with them. And since from your letter it seems that you have been so consistently misrepresented, I venture to hope that Judge Hull was not vexed with you. He is a man whom I personally should not wish to vex.

No. 5. Quotation from my page: "Without reporting to his supposed chiefs at the State Department, he went straight to the President. It is reported that the State Department is still as much in the dark as the general public regarding the events leading to and surrounding the death of the French Republic."

Your reply: "I reached Washington from Europe on a Sunday. The Secretary of State and the Under Secretary were absent from the city. I reported immediately to the ranking officer of the Department of State who was in the city, an adviser to the Secretary of State. I then reported at the White House, and after returning to Washington from Hyde Park immediately reported to all the authorities of the Department of State."

My answer: The remarks are mine, based on the Merry-Go-Round, by Drew Pearson and Robert Allen, which I have quoted above.

No. 6. Quotation from my page: "He is reported as urging the President to release to the Petain government the $2,500,000,000 deposited here by the French Republic for safekeeping. The Treasury Department had every intention of keeping this money frozen here, since if it is released to Petain it will find its way into Herr Hitler's hands. Consequently, the Treasury is greatly upset by Mr. Bullitt's crusade for its release."

Your reply: "This statement, like those above, is totally untrue. I have never urged the release of the funds in question."

My answer: The words are mine, based on statements of Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner, in the News Behind the News, printed in the New Orleans Item and other newspapers on July 27, herewith attached:

"(By Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner)

"WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Treasury is grimly whistling in the dark about the problem of the French assets, which may turn out to involve the whole huge problem of the attitude of the United States toward all the German-occupied territories in Europe. The immediate reason for the whistling is the return to this country of Ambassador William C. Bullitt.

"The Treasury has followed a well-defined policy with regard to the American-held valuables of nations overrun by German arms. As each nation has been conquered, its assets have been impounded and held in escrow for the rightful owners—the theory being that citizens of conquered territories being in Germany's power could otherwise be fleeced of the gold, securities, and so forth they sent for safety to this country.

"RELEASE WOULD AID GERMANS

"The French assets were impounded like the rest. The total is now about $3,500,000,000, of which between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000 is French.

"The Treasury wishes to keep these huge sums under lock and key until further notice. To release them, the Treasury believes, may have the gravest results. For example, while Germany is not able to import much from abroad so long as the British blockade persists she could use a big sum of dollar exchange to buy South American surpluses, thus knocking spots out of the State Department's program for hemispheric unity.

"BULLITT IS EMPHATIC

"In truth, about the only advantage over her enemies and over this country which Germany now lacks is a shortage of liquid assets with value on the world money markets. And if Germany is allowed to get her hands on her victims' valuables, her world position will be incalculably improved.

"The official Treasury position is that the assets will not be released for any purpose. But Bullitt's return has caused a whistling-in-the-dark note to creep into the Treasury's assertions, because it appears to be Bullitt's purpose to change the Treasury policy.

"OFFICIALS DISCREDIT BULLITT STORY

"Ever since he landed in this country Bullitt has placed the strongest emphasis on the independence and non-Fascist character of the new French Government. He has talked, in large terms, of schemes of rehabilitation, and he has made no secret of his opinion that American policy toward France should not be altered by France's defeat. As yet the Treasury has not heard from Bullitt. But as he has been closeted with the President, the Treasury officials are momentarily expecting the worst.

"The Treasury fears being forced to change its policy by Bullitt's pleas simply because neither the Treasury nor many other American Government officials credit Bullitt's picture of the present situation in France. Both the character of the individuals composing the new French administration and the weight of the evidence that anarchy will come when the German Gestapo is withdrawn strongly suggest that calling Laval and his crowd independent and non-Fascist is extremely wishful.

"Unquestionably the situation is as thorny as any the President and his aides have ever confronted in the field of foreign affairs. Despite the general suspicion of Laval and his entourage, the French Government is still recognized by the Government of the United States. Being recognized, the French have a perfect right to demand the release of their assets. Strong representations to this effect have already been made."

In view of the fact that it seems I have based most of my observations in the article to which you object on the correspondence of Messrs. Pearson and Allen and Messrs. Alsop and Kintner, I suggest that if you wish to have yourself and your case "reported aright to the unsatisfied" you should take the matter up with them also. I should be particularly interested in any errors in the column of Messrs. Alsop and Kintner, as we print them and naturally have some concern with their method of reporting.

Since all the things you complain of have been said by bright luminaries of the newspaper profession, in which I am but a lowly journeyman, I cannot but be flattered, although somewhat nonplussed, that it should be upon my head that you bring down your righteous wrath.

My mother used to say of me that I always told the truth—sometimes when it was unnecessary. I must say that the first person charging me with misstatements has done so in a wholesale fashion, and I have trespassed upon your time with a very lengthy letter in reply to your charges not only in justice to you but in justice to myself, because anybody who sat down and wrote as I did about you, without basing it on supposedly reputable authority, has no place in the newspaper business. They should go in for fiction. And if the gentlemen upon whose correspondence I based that part of my comment to which you object are not reliable newspapermen, it is of as much importance to the newspaper publishers who pay them for their work as it is to you to establish the fact.

I hope that I have made it clear to you that however profoundly I may disagree with you, I wrote the piece which so enraged you in perfect good faith, based upon statements made in the public press, and never to my knowledge denied by you or in your behalf.

I am sure, my dear Mr. Ambassador, your sense of fair play will cause you to accept this, as my reputation as a newspaperwoman is just as important to me as yours as a diplomat is to you.

Sincerely yours,

GENEVIEVE CLARK THOMSON.

If Germany Wins

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WARREN R. AUSTIN

OF VERMONT

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY COL. JOSEPH FAIRBANKS

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, under the permission granted me today, I submit for printing in the Appendix the article by Col. Joseph Fairbanks on the subject If Germany Wins the War.

The article referred to is as follows:

IF GERMANY WINS

Back in 1914 an apocryphal story went the rounds in New England. On a sunny afternoon in early August of that year a farmer on his way back from the village called to a neighbor at work in the hay field, "Say did you know that England and Germany have gone to war?" The haymaker leaned on his pitchfork, cast a glance at the cloudless sky, and replied, "Well, they've got a good day for it."

To millions of Americans in that fateful month the news of foreign war brought no more feeling of personal concern than to our rural commentator. It was Europe's war, not ours, and would continue so. How complete the contrast when, in September 1939, word of another overseas conflict sped to every American city and farm. Instantly public opinion struck the dominant note of anxiety lest the United States become a participant. Many weeks have passed during which our legislative barriers have been strengthened, but still the dread of war absorbs our thoughts, even to the exclusion of domestic differences.

The passage of the Neutrality Act of 1939 and the admirably prompt adjournment of the Congress afforded a much-needed respite for the people of the United States to take new bearings, determine their true position, and chart their future course in the sea of international troubles. The atmosphere is clearing. Confronted on September 3 with the hard fact of a major war in Europe, our people as a whole leaped instinctively to the conclusion that the United States was in imminent danger of becoming a belligerent. We had not been able to keep aloof in 1917 and history was all set to repeat itself. This instant and emotional reaction quickly hardened into a firm determination to keep out of war—made vocal with a unanimity well-nigh unique in our annals. The debate by radio, in the press, and in the Senate centered on the choice of methods best designed to keep us free from present conflict. The net result is an act of Congress declaring in its preamble the desire of the United States "to preserve its neutrality in wars between foreign states and also to avoid involvement therein." With that done, the opportunity arises for a more dispassionate survey of the foreign policy of our country. It is time to take a longer look ahead.

We can see now that the imminency of war for us has been vastly overemphasized. The plain and fundamental reason is that we don't want to fight and no other nation wants to fight us. Even without the additional safeguards provided by the Neutrality Act, far greater provocation than ever before would be necessary to goad us to war. We are determined to stay out. On the other side there are only two possible opponents, Germany and Japan. Which of them amid their present involvements is likely to pick a quarrel with the United States? Germany knows better after having once taken on the whole world, and for Japan, embroiled in China, to challenge us now would be sheer folly. Russia by herself alone threatens us with her communistic doctrine, not with her armed forces. Nobody dreams of war with England or France. Where then, in the absence of some radical and unforeseeable change in the international picture, is the acute danger? As an earthquake breeds a tidal wave, so the shock of the present conflict overwhelmed the American people with a blinding dread of war for themselves. Slowly that emotional wave recedes and the true logic of the situation emerges. With it will come the conviction that we are going to keep out, and then we shall settle down to the far more vital problem of so directing our national policy that we may not only remain neutral in this war but may also promote an enduring peace for America when the present fighting subsides.

The current national debate has dealt far too much with temporary immunity from war and far too little with lasting security. Would that someone with the voice of leadership may arise to champion the conviction that our actions of today must be sighted at longer range to produce for America not merely continued neutrality but a future of peace and not of arms. An enduring peace is the deeper expression of our desire and the truer measure of our need.

Obviously, the basic condition for such a program is a frank and searching look ahead. We must test every step we propose to take now by relating it to our national interest in that post-war world which is just as certain to come sooner or later as the armistice of November 11, 1918. Common sense demands this.

It should be unnecessary to contend for a calm analysis of America's position at the close of hostilities, but attempts in that direction have been few. Even those speakers and writers who discern future danger to this country if the fighting ends in a victory for one side or the other are too much inclined to stop with the mere assertion of this belief, and every statement of that sort is promptly howled down with the cry that it is warmongering and rabble rousing designed to lead the country into the war we seek to avoid. That is purely an appeal to emotion, not to reason. No human being knows how the war will result, but no thinking American can be excused if he fails to visualize with the utmost realism the major contingencies as each may affect this country. No more dangerous sedative can be administered to our people than the idea that neutrality restricts free and candid public discussion of what will happen to the United States when neutrality ends by the cessation of hostilities in Europe. No obsession by the desire to keep out of war, no comforting feeling that United States territory is immune from invasion, and no preachment that European quarrels are not our concern can be allowed to befog the vision of our people or hinder them from a frank appraisal of their vital interests at every stage of events.

The military operations now being conducted in Europe may result in a clear-cut decision for one side or in some less conclusive manner. Of these numerous contingencies, all of which should be examined, I propose to consider only one, the possibility that Germany may be the victor. Whether we believe she will win is another matter. We must admit that it can happen. It is one of the major chances of which we must take reckoning in advance. No man drives an automobile looking always to the right and never to the left.

Let it be assumed that the United States has successfully maintained her neutrality and that Germany, by force of arms, has gained the power to dictate the terms of peace. What would probably be the nature of that peace treaty as affecting America? Then would be presented, in the words of Dr. Goebbels, "that rare moment for the redistribution of the world." The German theory of peacemaking was expressed by the official military publication Deutsche Wehr in June 1935:

"Totalitarian victory means the utter destruction of the vanquished nation, and its complete and final disappearance from the historical arena. The victor will not negotiate with the vanquished concerning the conditions for peace, because there will be no party capable of negotiations. He will impose whatever conditions he thinks fit. In reality totalitarian warfare is nothing but a gigantic struggle of elimination whose upshot will be terrible and irrevocable in its finality."

Shades of Versailles, thou art become a bedtime story. But let us be content with understatement and affirm the fact that German peace terms from first to last would be designed to place that nation in a position of world domination with respect to naval and military strategy and economic advantages. With the French Army beaten and the English Fleet eliminated, nothing less than such a far-flung readjustment has any basis in reason. It is hard to think in such terms, yet certain of the major conditions and their consequences can be stated with almost complete certainty. Some of those factors directly affecting America are as follows:

1. German naval, submarine, and airplane bases will be established and maintained all around the world. Most of these will be former British and French possessions. In the Western Hemisphere they will be just as near to the shores of the United States and to the Panama Canal as Germany dares to demand without provoking the United States to immediate war. Leaving Canada out of the picture, Great Britain now owns Bermuda, the Bahamas, Jamaica, Antigua, Barbados, Trinidad, and numerous other West Indian islands. On the mainland she owns British Honduras, bordering Mexico, and British Guiana, near Venezuela. Far to the south are the Falkland Islands. France owns Guadaloupe, Martinique, and other islands, together with the mainland colony of French Guiana. No transfer of title to any of these possessions would infringe the Monroe Doctrine, unless restated for the occasion [it was restated by S. J. Res. 271. H. J. Res. 556, never passed by both Houses. Was there made a certain causus belli?—before or after peace], since all are now owned by European powers. Possibly Germany would not insist on such aquisitions, but the point is that as victor she would have the power to do so, restrained only by the United States, and the question of her intention would inevitably spring into the forefront of public discussion to become a living issue just as soon as hostilities ceased.

By far the shortest crossing of the Atlantic and the easiest for aircraft is from the present French and British colonies of West Africa to Brazil. This route would surely become German.

In the Pacific those South Sea islands formerly owned by Germany would unquestionably be restored to her and others acquired. Great Britain would not be allowed to retain the vitally important Singapore base, Australia would be helpless, and the entire Pacific Ocean front would assume a vastly altered aspect in relation to the interests of the United States. Whether the German gains in the Pacific prove a little less or a little more than here suggested is beside the point. At the very least, a German victory means that American national policy must relate itself to important German naval, commercial, and economic establishments in the Pacific Ocean.

2. A German-dictated peace will include provisions designed to place under German control the mechanism of international trade. This includes banking, foreign exchange, and insurance. A vital blow can thus be struck at the prestige of Great Britain. Large revenues will be secured for Germany and her facilities for trading with all nations will be vastly expanded and improved. Transfers of this nature can be arranged by way of payments on indemnities which Germany would have the power to exact. Thereafter every American exporter and importer would be faced with an altered pattern of international trade in which the purpose to make Germany the dominant commercial nation would be an ever-present and annoying factor. Close on the heels of this would come the new German merchant marine, composed both of ships transferred from the French and British flags and of vessels newly constructed. Just so far as Germany gains naval control, thus far she will be able also to absorb the carrying trade of the world's commerce.

3. A German victory and a German peace mean that Germany can and will create for herself a naval establishment equal to that of any other nation, including the United States. This can be done in 10 years or less. Her fleet may or may not include as many battleships as the present British Navy. Its strength may depend more upon fast vessels, aircraft carriers, submarines, and airplanes, depending upon the lessons of the current war, but she will see to it that her naval power is superior to any possible European combination and the equal of whatever America may build. As victor she can and will do this. Superior force brought success and will be continuously employed to maintain that success. No thinking American can fail to see that the United States will then be obliged to construct and maintain an equivalent navy based in the Atlantic Ocean [provided for since], in addition to our present fleet based in the Pacific. The two-ocean standard would become imperative. No British fleet would then offset German naval power. If anyone doubts that, consider what happened to the German high-seas fleet at the close of the last war. If and when the British Fleet is destroyed or towed captive into a German harbor, American isolation becomes a stark fact, to which the only possible answer of the peace-loving American people will be to pour out their treasure without stint to safeguard themselves. Whether the outcome be subsequent war or armed peace, we cannot have tranquility on those conditions.

4. A German victory will raise before the American people the specter of an alliance between Germany and Japan. I say "specter" because no such thing may happen. But a ghost can work a lot of mischief and this one would be sure to. A Japan consolidating its gains in the Far East and a victorious Germany trying on the shoes of Great Britain as a world power, both nations governed by a similar absence of morality, would inevitably suggest to American minds the idea of a partnership between these two aggressors. The potentialities of such a combination need not be developed. Whether or not a two-ocean war, testing the defenses of this country to the limit, ultimately came about, the realization that it could happen would be forced upon the American people if Germany dictates the next peace. A deep-seated feeling of alarm, working out in redoubled expenditure for national defense, would be inevitable.

5. If Germany wins, the commercial penetration of South and Central America, including Mexico, will proceed with German thoroughness, abetted by her newly acquired prestige. Expanding trade will open the door to encroachments far beyond ordinary competition. The German political propaganda will keep pace. Centers of German influence and population will develop, and any local restraints imposed thereon will be construed as persecution and used as stepping stones to more aggressive measures. If Germany is the victor, the fact of persistent penetration by German interests from Cape Horn to the Rio Grande will confront the people of the United States. How will Americans, who are practically a unit in their dislike of Teuton ideology, react to this situation?

WORLD REVOLUTION

6. If Germany wins, what of the effect within the continental United States? Unless one is simple enough to believe that German ambition will be satisfied with a military decision in Europe and the return of her pre-war colonies, a systematized effort to impair the morale of this Nation will be undertaken. If there be doubt about this, consider the fact that every forward step taken by Germany in recent years has been preceded by a campaign of the spoken and written word, broadly known as propaganda. This is basic policy. It has two objectives: First, to justify German intentions, and second, to soften opposition, generally by promoting internal dissension abroad. Under a dictatorship uncontrolled by morals, the use of these same methods in the United States will be regarded as a necessary means of defense to safeguard the dominant world position of the German race. No ocean barriers can prevent such internal meddling, and our own insistence upon the rights of free speech will make for difficulty in coping with the situation. For example, antisemitism is a cardinal point in Nazi doctrine. What could deter the German leaders from touching the match to anti-Jewish prejudice in this country? Any dissatisfied minority presents a similar chance to promote internal conflict of opinion and disturbance, thus diverting the attention of the people from external affairs. The system of German propaganda and espionage long existing in France and England is common knowledge. Under a German peace, the infiltration of the same methods in the United States will begin. Perhaps it has already begun. If this process is allowed to have its way, no limit to the resulting mischief can easily be foreseen. If repressed, the measures for its control are likely to be repugnant to the Bill of Rights, a result precisely in line with the totalitarian ideas we seek to exclude. The main differences between German propaganda of the first World War and of today are that its technique has improved and that its use in peace as well as in war has been developed. In due course hostilities will cease, but, if Germany prevails, the march of Teutonic ideology in the name of German racial superiority will not stop. Americans cannot be indifferent to this prospect.

Many well-meaning and eloquent Americans of late have pictured this Nation keeping resolutely aloof from the battles of Europe, prepared at the end of the struggle to act as a haven for the arts of peace. They see her, secure in her isolation, carrying on the torch of civilization which it is assumed will fall from the hands of other exhausted peoples. That conception of our future has validity only if general exhaustion of all major contestants actually occurs. That is one possible outcome and only one. Those who foresee America as a refuge for civilization invariably fail to consider that the expected general exhaustion may not take place. To the extent that they ignore other equally plausible contingencies, their hypothesis is devoid of realistic thinking. The chance that Germany may definitely win has just as good support from competent experts as the theory of a stalemate, the break-down of European civilization, or a victory for France and England.

Certainly it is unsafe to assume that a German conquest will leave her too exhausted for further aggression. In the second decade after the prostration of the World War, she again treads the paths of power. If defeat only gave her pause, it cannot be supposed that victory, however dearly bought, would prevent another resurgence.

All reasonable contingencies should be honestly examined as they affect America. In this spirit an attempt has been made to appraise the main features of a German-dictated peace. Whether or not all the foregoing conclusions are accepted, this much is certain: In a post-war world, dominated by a Germany flushed with success and guided by a philosophy abhorrent to the American people, the prospect for tranquillity and unimpeded pursuit of democracy will be nonexistent anywhere in the Western Hemisphere. To permit the American people to ignore that fact on the charge that to talk about it is unneutral and warmongering would be criminal negligence on the part of those who endeavor to guide public opinion. Ten, twenty, or thirty years might elapse before an acute crisis arose, but does anyone dream that a German Government victorious over England and France would vary its methods or mend its manners out of consideration or fear of the United States? Only wishful thinking can reach such a conclusion.

Nevertheless, if these views were broadcast some evening to Americans, I can hear murmurs of dissent and incredulity in the listening audience. "The Germans aren't that bad." "They only want elbow room in Europe and maybe a few colonies." "If they do win, they won't bother us any more than England bothers us now." "That is Jules Verne talk, he's just an alarmist." "It's British propaganda again." Thus speaks the easy-going American, slightly skeptical and thinking only of keeping out of war by the week or the month. There may be others who would reflect, "Can that happen here? Is not the picture overdrawn?" To all such who have open minds and are willing to use them, the most convincing answer comes from the lips of German philosophers, statesmen, and soldiers for the last 75 years. During all that period (except for a brief respite after 1918) the intelligent, energetic, but politically docile German people have been taught that they constitute a race superior to all others, that the highest good of civilization requires the German nation to attain world leadership, and that war is a legitimate, a noble, and a necessary means to that end. The Nazi doctrine of Aryan racial superiority and the earlier conception of the German superman stem from the same fountain head of philosophy. Wilhelm II and his generals with their "place in the sun" and Hitler with his "lebensraum" (living space) speak the same language. Bismarck preaching blood and iron and Goering with his lightning war of extermination proclaim the same theory of brute force. Such is the diet that for two generations has been fed unremittingly to the German people. If the bitter lesson of defeat in the first World War did not rid Germany of this theory of national life, what limit to its practical application can be set if Germany emerges victorious in the present struggle?

It must not, however, be assumed that pan Germanism and present day national socialism are synonymous. There is evidence that the true Nazi movement is revolutionary beyond all precedent, and that its only fixed tenet is the pursuit of power in the hands of an inner group, whose members are free from the shackles of any political or moral code and therefore prepared to adopt any ideology suited to command the allegiance of the masses at home and to create a maximum of unrest in other lands. Dr. Rauschning, once a Nazi leader and president of the Danzig Senate, in his scholarly book The Revolution of Nihilism, writes:

"The National Socialist leaders concealed their true objectives so well that many members of the elite only realized after a considerable time that they had been drawn into a double existence, with fictitious spiritual, national aims and one very real one—the pursuit of power. The most outstanding quality of the elite is 'the accurately chosen and ruthless application of all the physical and material power at its disposal.' Here again the National Socialist leaders carried into practice the new doctrine of violence, the doctrine that spiritual assets are of value for the legitimation of political power and for nothing else; such things have no intrinsic authority, no value in themselves; there is nothing that counts except force; it is by force alone that an elite comes to the top."

If this view be accepted, the sudden fraternization between Germany and bolshevism presents no riddle. No inconsistency counts if it leads to power. But, regardless of sincerity, the doctrines of racial superiority and German destiny pressed upon the entire nation by Hitler and his party bear unmistakable affinity to the philosophic and political dogma upon which Germans have been reared ever since long ago the Prussian militarists joined hands with the intellectuals.

If there be those who believe that German ambition will be content with predominance in Europe, let the German leaders briefly state their own case.

In August of the present year, Hermann Goering, Hitler's chosen successor, made an important speech during which he allowed a few questions from his listeners. He passed in review the potential European enemies of Germany and gave assurance that her military power would subdue them. Then a voice cried, "What about the Americans?" "Sie werden kommen," answered Goering. Literally, "They will come." In other words, "They are on our list. We will deal with them in due time." Probably those were unguarded words, perhaps half in jest, but in uttering them at all Goering slipped and gave us a momentary glimpse of the future according to the gospel of the Nazi leaders.

If it be urged that this was only a straw on the wind of oratory and not entitled to weight, compare Hitler's statement in Mein Kampf (abridged ed., ch. XXVI), written about 1925:

"The 1914 frontiers mean nothing to Germany's future. They were not a protection in the past, and they would not mean power in the future. The distance to England would not be lessened, the size of the United States would not be equaled, nor would France be deprived of any political power.

"Any attempt to reestablish the 1914 borders would merely bleed our people; and if this small aim was achieved, the drunken joy of victory would weaken interest in greater goals."

If it still be felt that this is bombast which does not concern America, turn back to Heinrich von Treitschke (1834–96), the noted historian to whose lecture room at the University of Berlin young men flocked for more than 20 years. He said:

"Then when the German flag flies over and protects this vast empire, to whom will belong the scepter of the universe? What nation will impose its wishes on the other enfeebled and decadent peoples? Will it not be Germany that will have the mission to insure the peace of the world?"

The German press strikes the same note (Vossische Zeitung):

"As we are the supreme people, our duty, henceforth, is to lead the march of humanity itself. * * * It would be a sin against our mission to spare the people who are inferior to us."

Deutsche Tageszeitung:

"It is a crying necessity that German should replace English as the world language. Should the English language be victorious and become the world language, the culture of mankind will stand before a closed door and the death knell will sound for civilization. Here we have the reason why it is necessary for the German, and with him the German language, to conquer. And the victory once won, be it now or be it 100 years hence, there remains a task for the German than which none is more important, that of forcing the German tongue on the world."

In 1915, when victory hung in the balance, Maximilian Harden, journalist, wrote:

"Now strikes the hour for Germany's rising power. The terms of a peace treaty that does not insure this would leave the great effort unrewarded. Even if it brought dozens of shining billions into the national treasury, the fate of Europe would be dependent upon the United States of America."

In the same year a Manifesto of the Intellectuals, formulated by 352 leading German professors, 350 diplomatists, and 185 high Government officials, was presented to the Imperial Chancelor, setting forth Germany's war aims. Although it disclaimed the wish "to dominate the world," the following passages from this document are noteworthy:

"The German mind is, in our opinion, beyond all doubt our one supremely valuable asset. It is the one priceless possession amongst all our possessions. It alone justifies our people's existence and their impulse to maintain and assert themselves in the world; and to it they owe their superiority over all other peoples."

And again speaking of England:

"Undoubtedly it will be necessary to change the direction of a considerable part of our oversea trade; but we shall also have to conquer anew our old trade and shipping connections. Herein we shall in future stand upon our own feet, and shall, e. g., eliminate the hitherto customary mediation of English bankers and brokers, English arbitrage and exchange business, and the preponderance of English marine insurance companies. England has wantonly destroyed in us the trust and confidence which all such transactions require, and must pay the penalty by losing the profits which she has hitherto derived from them at the expense of German trade. * * *

"Further, we must break the chain of England's naval bases, which encircles the globe, or weaken it by a corresponding acquisition of Germany bases. * * *

"But England's power is also essentially based upon the overwhelming influence which she exercises on the governments and the press of the whole world.

"In order to remedy this state of affairs and to secure counter influence for Germany it is vitally necessary to destroy England's monopoly of the cable service and press agencies."

In 1913 the German headquarters staff, in a then-secret memorandum, wrote:

"Neither ridiculous shriekings for revenge by French chauvinists, nor the Englishmen's gnashing of teeth, nor the wild gestures of the Slavs will turn us from our aim of protecting and extending Deutschtum (German influence) all the world over."

Major General von Roehl spoke for the army:

"Only one people has the right to play a leading role in the political world, and that people is the German people."

And Kaiser Wilhelm spoke for himself:

"The ocean reminds us * * * that on it and beyond it no great decision may henceforth be made without Germany and the German Emperor."

Even religion fell into line with the statement of the Evangelical League:

"The King at the head of Prussia, Prussia at the head of Germany, Germany at the head of the world."

At all times the virtue and necessity of war are preached. Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900), whose brilliant and destructive philosophy molds German conduct to this day, wrote in his book, Thus Spake Zarathustra:

"Ye shall love peace as a means to new wars, and the short peace better than the long. * * * I do not advise you to work, but to fight. I do not advise you to conclude peace, but to conquer. Let your work be a fight, your peace a victory. * * * Ye say, A good cause will hallow even war? I say unto you, A good war halloweth every cause."

In 1935 Ludendorff modernizes this teaching:

"All the theories of Clausewitz have been turned upside down. * * * War is the highest expression of national life. Therefore politics must be subordinate to the prosecution of war."

In the same year the official Deutsche Wehr takes up the strain:

"War has become a form of national existence, with the same rights as peace. No human or social activity has any right to exist unless it serves the preparations for war."

Hitlerism is pan-Germanism equipped with a slightly different vocabulary and fewer scruples. It is idle at the present juncture to debate whether this Teutonic ideology is an outgrowth of social and economic factors, such as overpopulation. The continuity of the German pressure demands the attention of the American people. National defense will not permit that it be ignored. This fact rises supreme over all weak-minded complaints that as neutrals we should not talk of such things. The most ardent disciples of peace are precisely the people who should ponder what the dynamic ambitions of National Socialist Germany really are and what they portend for the future of America. Truth is dangerous only when it is ignored.

It is urgent that our citizens understand that the Imperial German Government under Wilhelm II and the German Reich under Adolf Hitler have the same objective, namely, to secure for Germany that preeminence in the world to which the superior qualities of the German race entitle her. Thus will the ultimate good of humanity be served. If the rest of the world does not see this, war is a justifiable and necessary means to bring conviction. Repeatedly Hitler reminds his followers of this mission:

"The National Socialist movement must, moreover, remain conscious that we are also obligated to a high duty as the guardians of the highest human race on this earth." (Mein Kampf, complete edition, p. 940.)

And this guardianship is to be governed by a philosophy which says:

"Since a view of life is never willing to share with another one, it cannot be ready either to cooperate in an existing condition it condemns, but it feels the obligation of fighting, by all available means, this condition and the entire hostile world of ideas; that means of preparing their collapse." (Mein Kampf, complete edition, p. 677.)

And again—"every attempt made for the sake of a world idea fails unless the struggle takes the form of a violent attack. The weapon of ruthless, brute force is of greatest value in war between two diverse views of the world." (Mein Kampf, ch. V, abridged edition.)

The United States is regarded as a flourishing offshoot of the German race and the preservation of racial purity there is important.

"North America, with a population composed overwhelmingly of Germanic elements—which mingle very little with inferior, colored races—shows a higher humanity and culture than does Central and South America, where the Latin settlers had mixed with the aborigines.

"The German settler of the North American continent, keeping himself pure, has mastered the land; he will hold his position as long as he avoids blood defilement." (Mein Kampf, ch. XI, abridged edition.)

Is it not crystal clear that if this "superior" race imposes a Germanic peace on Europe, nothing will prevent closer attention to North America to the end that the elements of German culture in that area be protected from defilement? The Germanic racial crusade will discover a duty to save the United States from racial deterioration under a loose and demoralizing democracy.

Our thinking people must be made aware that the methods which they so heartily condemn when applied in Europe will not be confined to any one continent. They are essentially international in scope and will spread to other quarters of the globe just so soon as they are implemented with the necessary physical force. That day will be near at hand if England and France are defeated in the present war.

Rauschning, in his Revolution of Nihilism, says:

"At the back of this policy of stutzpunkte (key positions) lies the deliberate plan of promoting revolutionary dynamism all over the world. This is the actual plan of national socialism in foreign policy—universal political unsettlement. * * * And it is only by its ubiquity, its intereference in every problem of the world, that national socialism can attain the maximum of power and influence which is its aim."

The elements of danger to the United States in the contingency of a German victory are thrown into clearer relief by Hitler's extraordinary affiliation with Russia, permitting that Nation to advance into western Europe. He has thus closed the door to German expansion eastward so far as now discernible. Therefore, if Germany wins, she must glean the fruits of victory elsewhere, and there is no elsewhere except westward. Her compensation must come from France and England, on the high seas and the continents beyond. Since to all appearances the dream of an Eastern March (Drang nach Osten) has been abandoned, the peace treaty must provide equivalent gains in other parts of the world, including the Western Hemisphere. Apart from all question of military alliance with Russia lies the fact that the ambitions of a victorious Germany, voluntarily barred from overrunning the Ukraine and other eastern areas, will spread outward into regions where collision with the vital interests of the United States will become probable. The United States pays the penalty of its greatness. It cannot ignore the dangerous potentiality that lurks in the secretive dealings of the two dictators.

To every attempt, such as here made, to state in concrete terms the situation threatening our country if Germany wins, the inevitable response is, "Well, if England and France are really fighting our battle now, we should go to their aid at once by declaring war on Germany. Are you ready to do that?" It is obvious that this attitude does not refute the existence of the peril. It completely begs the issue by conceding the danger and suggesting a radical course of action to meet it. The foreknowledge that America is not willing to go to war under present conditions makes this evasion easy and safe. The inference is that, if the writer is not prepared to plunge the country into immediate war, then the dangers he depicts cannot after all be so serious. This is a complete non sequitur. If a fire is raging down the street from my house and I think that it may develop into a conflagration threatening my home, it does not follow that I am obliged to join the fire department immediately in fighting the blaze. But if I go inside my house, pull down all the shades and try to ignore what is happening a few doors away, I cannot justify my action. I should be out looking for sparks on my roof and planning what to do if things get hotter. But if in place of either course, I go out on the street and obstruct the firemen by turning off the hydrant or cutting the hose, then, if the fire spreads and my own house burns, I have nobody but myself to blame.

The United States is in very much this position today. A fire is raging in Europe. If it is not brought under control, it may spread to this country. That fire is not the war itself. It is the powerful flame of an alien philosophy of revolution (a view of life, in Hitler's words) destructive to our future tranquility and fanned by the winds of fanaticism. The war is the struggle between that flame and those who seek to extinguish it. England and France are struggling to subdue it, even though their carelessness may have contributed to the start of the catastrophe. We, the people of the United States, believe that our active participation on the side of the fire fighters would involve us in immediate sacrifices we are not prepared to make. We are practically unanimous on that point. But if, having decided not to engage ourselves actively, we go further and refuse to those nations engaged in subduing the conflagration the means to carry on the contest, we are hurting ourselves, we are endangering our own national structure without the shadow of an excuse. If, for the lack of a few thousand airplanes which we might have furnished, England and France are obliged to yield supremacy in the air to Germany, whereby she conquers, as may easily happen, we would be false to our own self-interest. This aspect of national security, although largely and perhaps wisely camouflaged, underlay the entire debate which resulted in the Neutrality Act of 1939. We can now thankfully acknowledge that this revision of our policy, by making available the material resources of the United States to England and France within our rights and obligations as a neutral state, materially strengthens our national defense against the spread of Teutonic power politics to the Western Hemisphere. Thereby the act contributes to the cause of lasting peace no less than to temporary neutrality.

Surely there is no longer any justification for camouflage. Term insurance, year by year, against war is not enough, and to provide protection for a longer period we must look the risks of later years squarely in the face. Americans do not hesitate to discuss and condemn communism. They freely analyze totalitarianism as a theory of government destructive to democracy. They score Hitler without mercy. But when it comes to a plain statement of the potential danger to this Nation if Hitlerian Germany wins the war, men hesitate, frown, and dismiss the topic by convincing themselves that anyhow Germany can't win.

America has been shell-shocked by the dread of war. Even while every Senator and columnist, whether for or against the arms embargo, exhorted us to shun emotion and let cool reason prevail, the hearts of the American people surged with a firm resolution to keep out of war, more nearly unanimous than any similar phenomenon for many a year. He who ventured to mention the aftermath if Germany should win was branded as a warmonger willing to send our boys again to die on Flanders fields. Thus, after all, emotion shut out realism.

As we regain our bearings, standing firmly on our neutrality, we shall scan the future for the path of enduring peace. With frankness befitting our strength we shall try to forecast what the world will be like when the present conflict ends, and among other conclusions we shall acknowledge the bitter truth that if Germany wins there can be no tranquility for America.

JOSEPH FAIRBANKS,
1001 Fifteenth Street NW., Washington, D. C.

Proposed Transfer of Destroyers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 24 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

STATEMENT BY HON. DAVID I. WALSH, OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement made in the American Forum of the Air by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and, I believe, our foremost expert on the Senate floor on our Navy. The statement is in answer to the question propounded in the forum, Shall the United States make available to England 50 of our World War destroyers?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHALL THE UNITED STATES MAKE AVAILABLE TO ENGLAND 50 OF OUR WORLD WAR DESTROYERS? "NO," SAYS SENATOR WALSH

(By DAVID I. WALSH, United States Senator from Massachusetts and chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee)

There is a strong emotional appeal in the proposal that we help England in her present extremity by immediately putting at her disposal 50, or possibly more, naval vessels of the destroyer type now in commission under our flag in our fleet and on patrol of our coast.

Those who advocate this step seek to justify it on the ground that in assisting the British Navy we are really assisting ourselves; that if the British sea power with our aid is maintained, the danger of attack upon us from overseas is averted; that even if the final outcome be defeat for Britain and destruction of her navy, nevertheless, if our ships have served to postpone the catastrophe, thereby affording us more time to make ready our own defenses, loss of these ships will not have been in vain.

NOT GOOD TO DO

This proposal does credit to the hearts of its sponsors, but not to their heads. The suggested dispcsal of these naval destroyers is not, in fact, the best thing for us to do at this juncture, but the worst thing—viewed from the standpoint of our security and avoidance of war.

It seems to me that any realistic examination of the facts and appraisal of the consequences must lead to this conclusion. I say this with full recognition of the importance to us of British sea power and of our earnest hope that it may survive. But I do not favor and I am confident that the vast majority of Americans do not favor going to war with Germany on that account, even were we ready for war, which we are not. Nor do I favor a course, the likely consequences of which would be the piecemeal dispersal and destruction of our present Navy.

Let us dismiss at the outset the notion that we possess a large number of destroyers that, as far as we are concerned, are "obsolete" and of no account, but which could be of immense service to Britain in her present fight for life. These vessels do not change their quality and value by a change of flag. The truth is that we have no "surplus" in the destroyer class, or indeed in any other class in our fleet. Three hundred or more over-age and once decommissioned destroyers have been put back into service—some of them being converted into fast mine layers, aircraft tenders, and anti-aircraft vessels, types of craft urgently needed in our Navy. Many of these older destroyers are now performing invaluable service on neutrality patrol. Others are being used to train officers and men of the Naval Reserve.

ALL DESTROYERS NEEDED

So to the question, Are all the destroyers which our Navy now possesses needed for United States defense now and later? the answer is most emphatically "Yes." There is no room for argument on that score.

But there are other and even more compelling reasons why we should reject this proposal for turning over to England a portion of our own fleet, unless we are ready and willing, with our eyes open, to enter the present war on the side of England.

The transfer of these destroyers from our flag and our fleet to the British flag and the British Fleet, no matter by what method or device or circumlocution, makes mockery of our declared policy of neutrality and nonintervention. It is an act of belligerency and of war.

The putting of a part of our Navy at the disposal of Britain is not a measure "short of war." It is an act of war.

The champions of this proposal contend that in moving to aid and to save the British Fleet we are serving ourselves and acting for our own protection. If we accept that premise, what is the conclusion? Is it that we should send our entire fleet to England in order to make an English victory so much more certain? I see no middle course, no halfway point. Either we should enter the war and give our all or we should stay out of war and retain our fleet intact for the defense of our own country.

Obviously the advocates of reinforcing the British Navy with some of our destroyers can offer no positive assurance that such a step will insure British victory or save the British Fleet. The most that can be said is that it might prove just enough to tilt the scales in Britain's favor.

It is said that risking 40 or 50 destroyers is a fair gamble that war can be kept on the other side of the Atlantic.

Let me inquire: If 40 or 50 old destroyers do not save the world, will we gamble 150 or 200 destroyers? And if they do not save the world, will we next gamble with our cruisers and our aircraft carriers, and then with our battleships, and then with our manpower?

GAMBLE ALWAYS GROWS

Why gamble with the United States Fleet—the only force in the world today that can keep war from our shores; the only force in the world that can prevent aircraft from beyond the seas from bombing our large cities, our industrial areas, and our civilian populations?

Of particular pertinency in the present discussion are the findings as to naval policy which were set forth in the report submitted to the Senate last May by the Senate Naval Affairs Committee in connection with the naval expansion bill then pending. This report reflected the composite views and considered judgment of the Senate committee after listening to the testimony of naval officers and experts. These conclusions (what follows is an exact quotation from the report) were:

FOR UNITED STATES DEFENSE

(1) "Our naval and air forces should be preserved for our own defense, if and when needed."

(2) "We are not prepared to participate in the European war and we do not possess the necessary weapons to make our efforts effective."

(3) "The assumption that British sea power may be destroyed implies that we should take our stand in the Western Hemisphere, where our military power can be applied effectively and efficiently; that our Navy should not be subjected to the hazards of short-range, shore-based aircraft, and small submarines based on the Continent of Europe."

(4) "It implies that our Navy should be retained intact to prevent ship-borne aircraft from directing attacks against our cities and industrial areas and prevent an enemy from establishing naval, air, or submarine bases in this hemisphere which would threaten our security by attacking in any manner our vital sea communications or our homeland."

I submit that nothing has since transpired to alter the validity of the foregoing conclusions.

KEEP OUT OF WAR

To be sure, France has fallen, and England's situation is more critical. The inadequacy of our own defenses is more apparent. Our own fears are greater. But these circumstances are no ground for a different policy or a different judgment. Instead they serve to reinforce and to underscore the advice to keep out of the war in Europe and keep all of our fleet for our own defense.

In conclusion, let me underscore the fact that disposal of these destroyers without affirmative action by Congress would be a violation of existing law. Legal hair-splitting will not suffice. It is also noteworthy that to date no request or recommendation has been forthcoming from the President or from the Navy Department. As recently as June 14, the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Lewis Compton, testified before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee concerning the disposal of destroyers: "If we were asked to do it, our answer would be 'No.'"

My answer is "No," I am for keeping out of war and for keeping our fleet intact.

Third-Term Menace—If Roosevelt Is the Indispensable Man, "God Save America"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROBSION

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 25, 1940

ARTICLE BY DAVID LAWRENCE

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to me by the House I am including in my remarks an illuminating article by the able and distinguished editor and writer, Hon. David Lawrence, of the United States News, under the caption, "The third-term scandal." Mr. Lawrence portrays most vividly the intrigue, deceit, and other questionable methods by which President Roosevelt secured this third-term nomination. It has been clear to many of us that Mr. Roosevelt has been an active and consistent seeker after this nomination for the past 2 years. Every subterfuge known to clever and skillful politicians has been resorted to by Mr. Roosevelt and his inner circle of New Deal appointees to gratify the wishes of our politically ambitious President.

THE THIRD-TERM MENACE

George Washington, the Father of his Country, "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," with many years of successful and patriotic service to his country on the battlefield and in the councils of the Nation, did not claim to be the "indispensable man." He did not seek a third term. The American people with one heart and one mind urged him to do so. At that time there were wars raging in Europe. France, England, and other countries brought the wars to our shores, yet Washington did not consider himself indispensable. He wisely, unselfishly, and patriotically refused to set such an example.

Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party, followed in the footsteps of Washington. He declared if any President should be a candidate for a third election he should be rejected because such an act was a demonstration of such President's ambitious views.

President Andrew Jackson, the patron saint of the Democratic Party, in many messages to Congress urged that the Presidential office should be limited to one term. He refused to be considered for the third term. This was likewise true of two other great Democrats, Madison and Monroe.

The Democratic platform in 1896 declared unequivocally against the third term and strongly advocated a constitutional amendment making a President of the United States ineligible to be reelected after one term. The Democratic platform in 1912 declared that no man should be eligible for a third term. As late as 1928 the United States Senate adopted a resolution against a third term by an overwhelming majority, and practically every Democrat in the Senate voted for the resolution. Many of the Democratic leaders of the United States Senate today voted for that resolution. These include Senators BARKLEY, GLASS, SHEPPARD, HARRISON, PITTMAN, SMITH, WHEELER, TYDINGS, KING, MCKELLAR, THOMAS of Oklahoma, and others. Even the venerable Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, voted for the resolution.

President Wilson made the positive statement, "There is no indispensable man in this country." President Roosevelt quoted this statement of President Wilson's with approval at New York City, November 3, 1932. Former Presidents, party platforms, and other great leaders have opposed a third term because it was a real threat to the freedom and liberties of the American people. This great office was considered by Washington, Jefferson, and Jackson as too powerful to be held by one man more than 8 consecutive years. If the power and influence of the Presidential office was dangerous then to our liberties, how much more dangerous is it today. President Roosevelt is the first American President to seek actively the nomination for a third consecutive term. President Grant, who had rendered unusual services to our country, was persuaded by some overenthusiastic admirers and friends to seek the nomination of the Republican Party for a third term, but it did not follow his 8 years as President. The Republican Party denied him that nomination. Another Roosevelt, the great "Teddy," sought the nomination of the Republican Party for a third term, but it was not consecutive. The Republican Party denied to him that nomination.

The American people can now more fully appreciate the warnings of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and other Presidents. We now see the present occupant of the White House using the great power of his office to whip into submission the lawmaking body. They have given to the President more than $22,000,000,000 in blank checks with dictatorial powers. With this he has created more bureaus and commissions than any dozen or more Presidents, and has increased the number of Federal officeholders from approximately 500,000 to more than a million. He has handed out great subsidies and bounties to numerous large and powerful groups. He has surrounded himself for the most part with "yes men," and with all of this influence and money, the efforts of every other Democrat to be considered for the nomination were frustrated. Garner, Farley, McNutt, Wheeler, and their friends were run over by the Roosevelt political machine and were clubbed into submission.

The President undertook to give the impression that he was not interested, yet Secretary Ickes and others went about over the country boosting the President, collecting delegates, and viciously assaulting other Democrats seeking this nomination.

The Roosevelt machine, the greatest political machine ever built in this country, was ruthless. There never was a convention so completely dominated by officeholders and political favorites as the Democratic Convention at Chicago that nominated President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace. Mr. Roosevelt and his machine not only dictated his nomination, but they ran roughshod over the gentleman from Alabama, Speaker BANKHEAD, and others and gave the nomination for Vice President to Secretary Wallace, and some of the important cogs in this great machine were the corrupt machine of Kelly and Nash of Chicago, the Hague machine of New Jersey, the Pendergast machine of Kansas City, and others. Yet we are told that this third-term nomination came as a result of the overwhelming demand of the American people. What must be the all-consuming political ambition of President Roosevelt to cause him to attempt to destroy this third-term tradition, to fly in the face of the warnings of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Wilson, and the platforms and resolutions adopted by his own Democratic Party through the years? Did any Hitler, Mussolini, or Stalin ever have a more consuming ambition for place and power? Mr. Roosevelt has forsaken the path of Washington; Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party; Jackson, its patron saint; and Wilson, the great war President. Is it little wonder that millions of patriotic Democrats refuse to follow him?

THE INDISPENSABLE MAN

It is urged that President Roosevelt is the indispensable man in this great country. Neither Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, or any one of the other great Presidents was, but Mr. Roosevelt is.

Mr. Roosevelt and his backers say that we have an emergency and no other American, however able, experienced, or patriotic, could meet the emergency. There were wars in Europe when Washington handed over this great office to Adams and when Jefferson relinquished control to Madison.

Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin each for years has claimed and now claims that he is the indispensable man. They will persist in that claim until the people overthrow them.

What is this great emergency? We have now had nearly 8 years of manufactured emergencies. Mr. Roosevelt claimed it was an emergency that made it necessary to burn and destroy our pigs, hogs, cattle, sheep, and crops; it was an emergency when he insisted that Congress give to him the power to stack or pack the Supreme Court; it was an emergency when he insisted that Members of Congress should vote for unconstitutional measures. It was another one of his emergencies when the President forced through Congress the unconstitutional A. A. A., N. R. A., and other acts. It was another manufactured emergency when he embarked on the great folly of buying up all the gold and silver of foreign countries and paying them enormous subsidies and thereby increasing the tax burden and the national debt.

It was another manufactured emergency when he insisted that Congress give to him the power over our money and devalued the dollar from 100 cents to 59 cents when the Constitution as a matter of fact invests this great power in the Congress. By reason of several other manufactured emergencies, a subservient Congress gave to the President more than $22,000,000,000 in blank checks with unlimited powers. It was another emergency when the President increased the deficits by nearly $30,000,000,000, increased the amount of Federal revenues collected from the people more than 200 percent, and increased the national debt from a little over $20,000,000,000 to more than $50,000,000,000 now of direct and indirect debts and obligations of the National Government.

Under the claim of other so-called emergencies, he created more bureaus and commissions than any score of Presidents. He increased the number of Federal officeholders from approximately 500,000 to more than 1,000,000. Due to his emergencies, the cost of the Federal Government annually has increased more than 100 percent.

President Roosevelt denounced Hoover for having $4,000,000,000 of deficits in 3 years; however, by reason of his emergencies, the deficits of this Government for a single year has exceeded that sum, and this fiscal year will perhaps see that sum of deficits doubled. By reason of his emergencies he has forced through Congress one or more tax bills at every session, increasing the taxes of the American people.

The trouble with it all is that one of his emergencies creates several other emergencies. They are as prolific as guinea pigs. We have observed for several years that all of our money, resources, and credit are consumed by the emergencies created by the President and his unwise policies.

HIS NEW EMERGENCY—FOREIGN WAR

Mr. Roosevelt has made a failure of handling the domestic problems of this country. The American people have discovered that his policy to tax and squander, borrow, waste and spend, destroy our stock and crops, and regiment our people has ended up in dismal failure. In order to divert the minds of the American people, he now insists that the great emergency is a foreign war.

If there is a threat of danger from a foreign war and a real emergency does confront the American people, is Mr. Roosevelt the man to head this Nation at this time? Can we rely upon his judgment and wisdom in this hour?

It is urged that we do not have, perhaps, more than one friend among all the nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Is any person in this country more responsible for that condition than Mr. Roosevelt himself? If he had the wisdom of a Washington—who was not an indispensable man—and had followed the policy of the Father of his Country, would we not now have many friends among the nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa?

Mr. Roosevelt's vituperation has created a feeling of resentment against our Nation in many countries. And how much encouragement did he give these various countries to get into war? How much has he contributed by his acts to create another World War? Is there no other American who could handle our foreign policy with as much wisdom as President Roosevelt?

If such an emergency exists, then the important question is cur national defense. It is admitted by the President and we know that we are hopelessly unprepared to defend our own shores. We do not have the guns, planes, tanks, supplies, other equipment, or quarters.

The President says we could supply an army with underwear and shoes and declares to us that these BVD's and shoes could be bought in the stores and factories of our country. While BVD's and shoes are necessary and desirable in equipping an army, they would not be very effective against tanks, dive bombers, and machine guns. We see in the pictures and in the papers that they are using ice-cream trucks for tanks, empty beer kegs for bombs, wooden models and stovepipes for trench mortars and artillery. The President admits that we do not have the equipment and supplies or quarters for our meager Army. He has been telling the American people for 2 years now that we could expect a world war and that we would inevitably be drawn into it. He and Hitler came into power about the same time. He was in a better position to know than any other person in the United States the danger that confronted the country. He had over $8,000,000,000 placed in his hands by the Congress for the special purpose of defense and he had over $22,000,000,000 in blank checks. Much of it was spent for raking leaves, counting trees in cities, and other "boondoggling" projects. He could have used billions of this money to furnish jobs to the unemployed and buy naterials for our defense. He, being the indispensable man, must have known all these things. His assumption of being the indispensable man makes him wiser than Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and our other great Presidents.

A nation fights not merely with men, ships, guns, planes and tanks. Important factors in fighting and winning a war are money and credits, a well-organized and prosperous industry with the workers employed at good wages, an agriculture that is based upon a policy of plenty and not scarcity, and a high morale among the people. Could Mr. Roosevelt have done more to weaken our preparedness and our national defense than to have piled up more than $50,000,000,000 of direct and indirect debts and obligations, to have increased the taxes of the American people more than 200 percent, to have placed on their backs more than 500,000 additional useless officeholders, to have disorganized and discouraged industry, to have given our rich American markets to the cheaply produced products of industry and agriculture of foreign lands, to have built up a policy of scarcity, and to have yet an army of 10,000,000 unemployed with 20,000,000 people needing some form of public relief in this country? That is what Mr. Roosevelt has done—not for this country but to this country; not to prepare us but to make us less able to defend ourselves.

Now, in order to drown out the noise and clamor of 10,000,000 unemployed and 20,000,000 needy and the criticism coming up from all quarters of the land, he proposes to conscript the boys, the young men, and the old men of the Nation, 42,000,000 in all. For what? Is it for defense or to involve us in another European-Asiatic-African war?

How can America believe that a man who has made such a dismal failure of our defense problem and our domestic affairs and thus far in our foreign affairs be the indispensable man to meet the crisis which he says confronts us?

Oh, but it is said you must not change horses in the middle of the stream. The trouble is that Mr. Roosevelt, so far as solving our problems, has never got his feet wet—he is still on the bank where he was in 1933. He has been marching to the rear, toward the land of deficits, debts, unemployment, poverty, and internal strife, and if something is not done we will finally reach war, inflation, and repudiation.

The great emergency before the people of the United States in November 1940 is to defeat the ever-increasing political ambitions of Mr. Roosevelt and his army of officeholders and restore the Government to the people. If Mr. Roosevelt is the indispensable man with the record he has made, God save America!

The article by David Lawrence is as follows:

THE THIRD-TERM SCANDAL

(By David Lawrence)

Sincere differences of opinion on the question of whether a President of the United States should be elected for a third term are understandable. This writer has said again and again during the last 3 years that the issue is one for the people to decide, and they may reverse or confirm any precedent. For the will of the majority is supreme.

But there can hardly be any honest difference of opinion on the proposition that no President of the United States shall use his office or the power of the public purse to bring about either a second or a third renomination. Woodrow Wilson condemned the "illicit means" by which Presidents secure continuance in office and not the indefiniteness of their tenure.

Franklin D. Roosevelt tells us he has searched his conscience and has come to the conclusion that he has been called not by his party but by the people to stand for reelection. Let us concede that he sincerely believes he is needed. What shall we say then of the process by which he has gotten the nomination?

The text of the President's acceptance which appears in full on pages 16 to 19 of this issue should be read by everyone. Then the question one may ask is whether there is a single line in it that could not have been uttered at any time since the outbreak of war last September and the first day of the Democratic National Convention, July 15, 1940.

Why were the American people not told what the President had in mind? Why did the President for several months permit his own Cabinet officers and lieutenants—persons on the public pay roll—to go about the country conferring about his candidacy with the key men and bosses in the various States who pick the personnel of the delegations and what were the high officials of the administration, including members of quasijudicial commissions, doing at the Chicago convention? The press records that they were engaged in controlling the whole action and procedure of the convention itself.

SPIRIT OF HATCH ACT NOT OBEYED AT CONVENTION

True there is no Hatch Act to forbid officials who are of the policy-making group, those who are appointed and confirmed by the Senate, from participating in politics. It is not the letter of the law, however, which has been violated but the spirit of the whole system which has governed the morality of the Presidential office.

Will the President search his conscience again and ask himself whether it was right for him to remain silent as his own employees, the men who are the beneficiaries of his appointing power, actually influenced delegation after delegation and thus prevented any real contest within the Democratic Party?

Was it in keeping with the spirit of fairness and sportsmanship toward the other possible nominees to remain silent about his intentions until the very night when the convention was ready to nominate and when it was obviously too late for the party to agree on any other man?

MUST REPUDIATE METHOD USED TO WIN NOMINATION

The record of history will condemn these sins of omission which persuaded Mr. Roosevelt to refrain from speaking. His argument that to speak out would have been unwise from a policy standpoint internationally has merit only if an expression of disinclination to run were to have been interpreted as meaning that American foreign policy would not be continuous. Everybody who is fair about it has known for months that on foreign policy the American people alone would decide the major points without partisanship.

We are forced to the conclusion that the President yielded to the temptation to use the war situation as an excuse to justify his breaking of the third-term precedent. He now has plunged the Nation into bitter partisanship. He will have caused a partisan debate to be held on the issues growing out of the war. The moment the President, for example, proposes conscription, he will be attacked as defying the Democratic platform and as intending to lead the Nation into war. Extraneous issues will develop. It is a most regrettable state of affairs into which the misguided ambition of one man has led us.

What other inference can we make about Mr. Roosevelt's conception of his own indispensability? In effect, he says no other man in his party was as able, no man in his party could carry on—neither Paul McNutt, whom the convention delegates at Chicago gave the greatest ovation in modern political history, nor Secretary Hull, who has the respect and confidence of all elements in the Democratic Party. Does anyone dare to say Vice President GARNER, who twice won the electoral vote of his party, could not have been counted on to see that the American people's desires on foreign policy were carried out?

What Mr. Roosevelt asks us to infer now is that nobody else in the Democratic Party could have carried on his leadership, and that the Republican nominee is opposed to the principles of the Roosevelt foreign policy. This simply is not true.

If the President really has in mind that he wants primarily to see the New Deal continued in power for domestic-policy reasons, he did not say so forthrightly. Yet few will doubt that this is the fundamental reason for his willingness to accept a third nomination. Had he expressed candidly such a viewpoint instead of by indirection, the position of the Democratic Party in this campaign would have been much stronger. It could have been more readily defended.

For basically why shouldn't the American people elect a man three times if they wish to do so? It is their business and in a democracy the majority wish is law. In this instance there is no constitutional inhibition, moreover, no law against a third term. The custom of two terms is a wise one, to be sure, and should be embodied in a constitutional amendment, but there is no such legal barrier today. It is, therefore, on the firm ground that the third nomination was obtained in a manner incompatible with the American system of fair play and the principles of morality in the conduct of public office that Mr. Roosevelt's nomination must be repudiated by the American people at the polls.

SILENCE GAVE CONSENT SIGNAL TO PARTY BOSSES

There should be a law strictly forbidding the use by any public officers of public money or influence to affect the selection of delegates. The wickedness of Wall Street becomes relatively insignificant compared to the wickedness of the political monopoly in government which we have allowed to grow up as a totalitarian power in American public life.

If the Democratic Party is to survive, the rank and file must reject the action of the acquiescent delegates in Chicago, who were handpicked by the administration and its numerous henchmen in the various States. Every true Democrat must search his conscience and determine now whether government by the politicians, government by men who transgress principles of government sacred to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the party itself, shall be tainted ingloriously with the blot of a selfishness which did not permit them to put their country's tradition above personal aggrandizement.

"THERE IS NO INDISPENSABLE MAN"—WILSON

It would be easier not to write these lines of criticism. It would be easier to assume that the President in his preoccupation with foreign affairs and with the intensity of the whole world situation has honestly felt he alone could carry on. But shall we in the midst of a challenge to democracy abroad confess that democracy does not work at home? Must we yield to the doctrine of the indispensability of a single leader as they do in Germany? It was in 1912 when Woodrow Wilson, referring to Theodore Roosevelt's third-term ambitions, said: "There is no indispensable man."

Mr. Roosevelt has made the major blunder of his whole career. He has repudiated the action of the Father of this Country. When the Republic was scarcely 8 years old, when there was a war raging in Europe and danger of American involvement was great, when everybody agreed that only one man had the united support of all factions, Gen. George Washington laid down the Presidential office after two terms and called for rotation in the Presidency.

Franklin Roosevelt's mistake in judgment can be corrected by the American people on election day next November.

Fortunately the country can turn at the polls to Wendell Willkie—an able man, a patriotic man, a man who saw service overseas in the last war, a man whose ideals are not less passionately American than those of the incumbent President.

Great Britain changed from Chamberlain to Churchill in the midst of battle.

America can change from Roosevelt to Willkie in time of peace.

For, if the war which must come 3,000 miles to reach our shores does come, we do not want in the Presidency any man who resorts to subterfuge to win a nomination. He should not be entrusted with the leadership of the Nation because such a man will not be able to organize either the material or the spiritual resources of America which are so vitally necessary to the effective defense of our liberties and our democracy.

Young Democratic Clubs of Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. CLAUDE PEPPER, OF FLORIDA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] before the Young Democratic Clubs of Pennsylvania on Saturday evening, August 24, 1940, at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, my fellow young Democrats, never in history have young men and young women been so important as they are today. Millions of young men under arms have been fighting the world's war, carrying on the burden of the world's work. In fact, the whole tempo of the modern world is that of youth.

Moreover, young men and young women, more than any other group, are concerned about the future of the world because that future is their inheritance. The future for the youth of this generation is a colossal legacy moving toward us on the wings of time. How that future comes to us, whether it is richly laden with all the good things which should be ours or whether is it a squandered and dissipated trust, or indeed whether it has become a brigand's loot forever denied to us—all this is to be determined by the momentous events now shaking the earth.

Young men and young women of the past have never faced quite the same problems we face now. Ours is a world of transition. The tremor in the social crust is shaking violently all those institutions, those concepts, and dogmas we thought permanent. Principles, faiths, philosophies, which we thought as enduring as the mountains which had lived out the erosion of all the tumultous past, are breaking and crumbling and collapsing fantastically before our very eyes. The things in which we put our security, which were the bulwarks of our safety, behind which we felt immune, have crumbled and broken away and left us exposed to all the horrible dangers that we ever contemplated.

Evils we thought forever crushed, sinister forces we deemed ever allayed, sordid aims we said were stifled forever, even upon the lips of the most brazen of men, are now shouted from chancelries and palaces as aims of great nations and the death words of legions of men. Those virtues which we were taught from infancy, which we deemed the immutable landmarks of civilization, we hear scorned, debased, denounced, as some shibboleth from a decadent past.

Those who dreamed dreams of a better world, a gentler and kinder world, of the brotherhood of man, the universal fatherhood of Heaven's God; those who could hear the anguished voice of the crying babe, the muffled sob of the sorrowing mother; those who needed no guide but the subtle pull of conscience, they now are driven out of the councils of men as unworthy and childish.

What a world! What a life! What a challenge for those who are yet young!

I suppose the whole struggle which is now going on not only abroad but at home, not only in international but in national affairs, not only in military but in political and economical circles, can be summed up in a simple statement—might against right. I suppose history leaves no doubt but that that struggle has been in progress since man raised his head from the ground and beheld the sky and the sun and his God. Stated another way, it is, What is to be the arbiter of man's actions—force or justice? By what standards shall man live? For what things shall men die?

From the time when man first became conscious of his power, since lusts and greed crept into his character and the pull of desire and the urge of want guided his hand, he has had to struggle with himself and men have had to struggle with other men over that issue.

Religion, atonement, sacrifice, penance, instruction, obedience, restraint, self-denial, kindness, generosity have been leavening man's spirit, and man has come more and more to be "one who no stunted ascetic is full of life and fire but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience."

It has been a long, hard struggle. The graves of the martyrs line every mile of its way. The battle waxes and wanes. The tide rises and falls. The struggle has soaked the earth in blood. It has broken countless hearts. It has strewn its wreckage in every fertile valley, by every river bank, by the foot of every mountain, in plain and forest, even in lonely places, of a scarred world.

Anyone who has read history, however, has read it hopefully, for he could see the light growing brighter; slowly, indeed, but considerably brighter, as he turned the pages. Right was gradually raising its head even among those distinctive entities we call nations.

A sense began to develop that what it was wrong to do to one family it was wrong to 10,000,000 families. If it were wrong to steal from one man, it was not right to steal from millions of men. If it were wrong to enslave one man, it could not be right to enslave nations of men. There came about a consciousness that something which was vital to a nation's people, like a nation's course, was to be decided by a nation's people and not by the arbitrary will of one vain man. There was discernible the feeling that amity and comity should prevail among nations as among men. There was evidence that the individual had risen to a new dignity so that even the state served him like a willing servant.

Nations solemnly covenanted that they would renounce war as an instrument of national policy; they would submit their differences to judicial tribunals; they would respect and observe those common principles of decency and fairness which had come to be known as the laws of nations. It seemed for a while as if the old ways were dead, never to rise again. In fact, it seemed they could not rise again, because men had become too sane, too civilized, even too self-centered, to condone their resurrection. Yet not one of you in this sad hour needs to be reminded of how all these temples have been pulled down; the dishonored fragments of those solemn covenants scattered over the earth; these new practices repudiated and scorned. The goddess of right and justice stands ravaged before the monster of might and force. The courts of nations have been disbanded. The tribunals which were the arbiters of wrong driven out and the law of nations has become the law of the jungle—

"Because the good old rule
Sufficeth them, the simple plan,
That they should take, who have the power,
And they should keep who can."

God is dethroned for a pagan Wotan. Christ is spat upon as a despised Jew. Man is enslaved. Avarice, greed, and vanity shape the courses of great nations and despots use men for pawns and women for breeders, while they build towers of Babel.

Young men and young women are not all on one side in that struggle, for such is the plasticity of human character that it can be made to fit almost any mold. There have been sinister forces which reached out while the characters of millions of boys and girls were tender and brought them into the mold of hardness, where the gentleness was crushed out and the sensibilities of ordinary youth destroyed. To such youth the world is held up for exploitation as a great adventure. They are impregnated with the fascinating prospect of the mastery of the lands and the peoples of the world. So vital is the philosophy upon which they are nourished that it is to them no less than a religion. Even to die for it is a privilege.

Other youth, to such youth, can only repeat as sadly as He uttered them, the words of the Master to those who crucified Him, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Young men who dream of another kind of a world, who cherish those humane qualities that others scorn, who revere those principles that others repudiate, who honor those heroic sacrifices that others belittle, they must gird their loins for the long struggle, for they are the champions of right and justice. They wear colors more beautiful than those of any fair lady for whom brave and gallant knights ever jousted in the tournament; their rewards are more satisfying than any of the other experiences of men and those young men and women who fight in the hard contest for those principles though they fight on earth do not fight alone.

In domestic affairs, young men and young women have seen a nation settling into a more rigid economic maturity. They have seen the age of the pioneer, the age of the builder, the age of the exploiter and the buccaneer. They have seen deadly struggle, heartless contest, savage war. They have seen deceit, coercion, theft, robbery, and murder, all moving like ghosts among men who struggled in the fields, in the factories, in the market places, and the counting houses. They have seen the resources of a nation squandered; the inheritance of a rich people thrown away; human life, too, counted cheap, as the virgin forest or the fallow fields. They have seen the haste and the hurry and the heartlessness of our growth, and finally, they have seen the twisted pattern, the torn fabric of a great nation, the spotted security of a great people.

But again the light has grown brighter as the pages of a nation's history have been fingered and turned. The sentiments of morality and religion, codes of decency and ethics, have found their way into men's businesses and professions, into their commercial as well as their cultural contacts with one another. Some sense of obligation has crept gradually into the consciousness of even strong men, and, too, there has been a growing appreciation of what the larger number was entitled to enjoy, even at the hands of the powerful. Men began to be hailed before a nation's judgment, not only for violating their country's laws but God's laws.

Premiums which have honored piracy have fast been disappearing, and through their concerted will, through their only medium—their government—the citizenry of a great nation has been prescribing standards of conduct which the powerful and the strong, as well as the timid and the weak, were required to observe. Moreover, through that medium a citizenry has been striving for that rough justice, that crude right, which men felt in their hearts to be the due of their fellow men.

Some regard has been had for every class. The weak have been strengthened, the strong restrained. Natural resources have been conserved, latent forces have been stimulated, new horizons have been opened, new avenues and channels of opportunity have been dug ahead of those who could not progress rapidly. A new vision has been disclosed as to what a nation could be and men and women and children could have. A new confidence in the destiny of common men has been born. The vistas of a new life to submerged millions challenge and dazzle those whose eyes have been dulled by many disappointments. There is the exhileration that someone does care in the heavy hearts of men upon whom sadness has often fallen. There is the surge of expectant hope through the arteries of our Nation.

Of course, the strong do not like to have their strength impaired. Of course, they do not like the shackles of restraint. Naturally, they do not welcome aid to those whom they might otherwise readily overpower. It is to be expected that they yield reluctantly, if at all, even to the majesty of a nation's voice expressed through a nation's government and withhold their approval to a policy which dares to deprive the capable, the fortunate, and the well-circumstanced of the special privileges which they deem to be their birthright.

When, therefore, a hero rises up to lead the hampered champions of might to a new enjoyment, free and unrestrained, of their noble inheritance of strength, they shout in choruses that echo in the marble halls of business, down the long wings of whirling factories, against the high ceilings of palatial homes their stout approval. From mountain peak to mountain peak of privilege, from cavity to cavity of accumulated wealth, from earth to vaulted dome of vanity and greed, it is wonderful to hear the echoes of their rejoicing. Every Captain Kidd thinks he sees the Spanish Main, heavy laden and unconvoyed, bearing down upon the horizon. Every pirate chooses his cove in which to hide his spoils, and all lay in a full store for the feast when everyone of the favored strong shall eat, drink, and be merry, comforted by the further assurance that tomorrow they shall not die.

So even in your and my America does that age-old struggle between might and right continue. All young men are not on our side. Some of them, too, have been taken up on the mountain top and shown the green valley and they have been told they could satisfy every desire of their hearts. Indeed, it has been made to appear that the world was really theirs to take. That their very power to take it was an evidence of God's will that they should have it. The adventure of taking it has stirred their blood. They sense the thrill there is in riding after the hounds to the kill. It is all a great game, they think, this institution that holds out to men the hope that they may grow as big and great and powerful as genius, strength, and fortuitous fate will allow.

But young men who feel as you and I, who feel that all men, even the strong, have obligations; that all power is delimited with responsibility; that life is not just a game but a noble journey; that human beings are not slaves, either physical, political, or economic; that poor men dream dreams; and weaker men cherish ambitions; and timid men want to progress; and little men strive to grow; and bungling, awkward, slow-thinking, and thick-fingered men want to get above the hoe—such young men must carry on.

Young men and women of our generation are making a great decision as to which side they are on, as to what is going to be written in the book about their lives, of what debt they are going to put their generation under to them—whether they shall die indebted to their age or their age indebted to them. To young men who are strong but gentle minded, able but bred in honesty, tough but capable of being tender, determined but not stubborn, to young men who have an eye to see, to young men who like that coterie of young men, including JOE GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania, who held up the hand of Woodrow Wilson when he was struggling to hold up the hand of little men and just men everywhere; to young men who, like JOE GUFFEY, will forsake their class for their cause and throughout a long and useful life adhere to it against every temptation and the siren call of every intriguing appeal; to such young men and to like young women is given the saving of the future of all men and women, the saving of young people's inheritance, the conservation of the young's incomparable legacy. To such young men and young women is reserved the satisfaction of eventual victory, the consolation of a peaceful conscience, and the exhilaration that comes from having had one's part in a great and glorious battle when the stakes tipped the clouds and from every star and planet falls a divine benediction to the victor's brow.

Signing Investment Company and Investment Advisers' Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT F. WAGNER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement issued by the President of the United States on the occasion of signing the Investment Company and Investment Advisers' Act of 1940, dated August 23, 1940.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have just signed the Investment Company Act of 1940 and the Investment Advisers Act of 1940; legislation which both houses of Congress passed unanimously. These acts give the Securities and Exchange Commission power to regulate investment trusts and investment counselors. They mark another milestone in this administration's vigorous program—begun in 1933 and supplemented in 1934, 1935, 1938, and again in 1939—to protect the investor. As the pressure of international affairs increases, we are ready for the emergency because of our vigorous fight to put our domestic affairs on a true democratic basis. We are cleaning house, putting our financial machinery in good order. This program is essential, not only because it results in necessary reforms, but for the much more important reason that it will enable us to absorb the shock of any crisis.

There is no necessity of reviewing in detail the many unhealthy practices which this legislation is designed to eliminate. It is enough to point out that the investment trusts have themselves actively urged that an agency of the Federal Government assume immediate supervision of their activities. This attitude on the part of the investment trust industry and investment advisers is most commendable.

It is a source of satisfaction that businessmen have at last come to recognize that it is this administration's purpose to aid the honest businessman and to assist him in bringing higher standards to his particular corner of the business community. In the case of this legislation, it deserves notice that the investment trust industry insisted that the Congress grant to the Securities and Exchange Commission broader discretionary powers than those contemplated in the original regulatory proposals. Not only is this a tribute to the personnel of the S. E. C. and an endorsement of its wisdom and essential fairness in handling financial problems, but it serves well to indicate that many businessmen now realize that efficient regulation in technical fields such as this requires an administering agency which has been given flexible powers to meet whatever problems may arise.

This in itself is enough to demonstrate that we have come a long way since the bleak days of 1929, when the market crash swept away the veil which up to then had hidden the "behind the scenes" activity of our high financiers and showed all too clearly the sham and deceit which characterized so many of their actions.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has been established to protect the investor. Looking back at the various acts which have been passed and placed under the jurisdiction of that Commission, the breadth of this administration's program is apparent. In 1933 the Securities Act was passed, preventing misrepresentation and fraud and requiring full disclosure by those who wished to sell securities. In 1934 the Securities Exchange Act was passed, regulating stock exchanges, preventing market manipulations, and placing curbs on excessive speculation. In 1935 the Public Utility Holding Company Act was passed. In 1938 the Bankruptcy Act was amended to enable the Securities and Exchange Commission to participate in corporate reorganizations in order to act as technical adviser to the court and advocate for the best interests of the small and inarticulate security holders. Finally only last year additional legislation was passed requiring corporate trustees under indentures to assume true fiduciary obligations.

No better example of the true meaning of this program can be found than in the legislation regulating public-utility holding companies. During the 1920's these corporate monstrosities had been permitted to pyramid stock holdings on top of stock holdings until a few men at the top, with only a microscopic investment of their own, could control the smallest action of those who ran the far-flung operating companies at the base of the pyramid. Watered stock and high rates to consumers signified holding-company management. Those at the top juggled corporations for selfish purposes. This situation was contrary to the American way of life, and, had the holding companies not been checked, they would have threatened the very existence of our democratic processes. The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 is designed to break down these top-heavy structures to the end that local operating managements will come back into their own and be given an opportunity to serve the immediate community without being subjected to the direction of an absentee and dictatorial holding company management.

In every direction a conscientious and successful effort has been made to require the investment banker, the broker, and the dealer, the security salesman, the issuer, and the great financial institutions themselves to recognize the high responsibilities they owe to the public.

We will continue to push our program for the protection of the investor on all fronts because we are convinced of its essential soundness. I have great hopes that the act which I have signed today will enable the investment-trust industry to fulfill its basic purpose as a vehicle to diversify the small investors' risk and to provide a valuable source of equity capital for deserving small and new business enterprises which the investment bankers have been unable to finance.

Tribute to Hon. John M. Coffee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM COMMON SENSE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask consent to have inserted in the RECORD an interesting article appearing in the September issue of Common Sense concerning JOHN M. COFFEE, Representative in Congress from the Sixth District of Washington.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Common Sense]

JOHN M. COFFEE UNDERSTANDS HIS JOB; THE CHAIRMAN OF THE CONGRESS LIBERAL BLOC

The hue and cry over national preparedness has obscured one of the most significant trends in national politics—the increasing prestige of the liberal bloc in the House of Representatives. War and Presidential politics hold the spotlight now. But the strength of the liberal minority in Congress, and its ability to keep its head in the present crisis, will be an important factor in determining whether or not we are able to stay out of war.

The House liberal bloc has received very little public notice recently. Its size has diminished in the last 2 years; almost half of the progressive Democrats in the lower Chamber were nosed out by Republicans in the 1938 elections, including such leaders as Maury Maverick, Thomas R. Amlie, Jerry O'Connell, John Bernard, and Byron Scott. Several other "liberals"—ALLEN of Pennsylvania, for example—jumped on the conservative bandwagon when they saw how things were going. The reduction of the New Deal forces was devastatingly revealed in the lack of opposition to the Dies committee. In 1939 43 votes were cast against the committee's appropriation; this year only 21 Congressmen registered their opposition to Mr. DIES. The solid core of progressives was cut in half.

Today there are signs of a come-back in the House. In this year's session the progressives mustered enough votes to boost the appropriations asked by President Roosevelt for the C. C. C. and N. Y. A. They rallied support for the President's request that the $975,000,000 appropriation for W. P. A. be spent in 8 months if necessary. Even in the excitement over national defense, the new billion-dollar tax bill showed the hand of the liberal bloc. It may not have been perfect from the viewpoint of the consumer; but considering the sales tax which the N. A. M. and other business groups would like to have fastened on us the new bill was surprisingly fair.

A large part of the revolt against the Woodrum-Taber block, with its false economy philosophy, was traceable to the increasing strength of the Democratic Party and to the fact that this is an election year. But to a considerable degree it was also directly attributable to the hard work and organizing ability of one man—Representative JOHN M. COFFEE, of Washington, chairman of the liberal bloc. In the months to come his leadership will be an important factor in the fight for the retention of New Deal social legislation and against involvement in the European war.

When the liberal bloc was first organized in 1937 Maury Maverick was its acknowledged leader. Colorful and personally popular, Maverick was an effective fighter for social legislation. When he was unseated in 1938 no one was able to step into his place immediately. The liberal bloc continued to meet occasionally, but under a rotating chairmanship its work was poorly handled and the progressives were routed on nearly every issue in the 1939 session.

Then last summer JOHN COFFEE was elected permanent chairman of the liberals. Not such an individualist and showman as Maverick, he has had less national publicity than the ebullient Texan. But for a year now he has been quietly rebuilding the crumpled bloc; the left-of-center House Members have been meeting more regularly under his leadership, and the voting has been more consistent. A new group sponsored by them—the "unemployment bloc," headed by JERRY VOORHIS, of California, and boasting 55 Members, including several Republicans—has made a serious study of unemployment in all its phases, and the reports of its various subcommittees helped to stimulate the growing opposition to the drive against the social services.

TWO DECADES OF ACHIEVEMENT

COFFEE is an exuberant 220-pounder in his early forties. His political career began when he was a student at the University of Washington in Seattle, where, with his debating coach LOUIS SCHWELLENBACH, he organized a Woodrow Wilson for President club. From Washington he went on to Yale, where he took a doctor-of-jurisprudence degree—a rare achievement for a Congressman. Back from Yale, he became a labor lawyer in Tacoma; and also served at attorney for the State Civil Service Employees' League. He wrote the law that gave Tacoma one of the most advanced civil-service systems of any city in the country.

On the side COFFEE dabbled in politics. In 1922 he was a campaign manager for C. C. Dill, one of the shrewdest politicians ever to come out of the West, who served two terms as Democratic Senator from Washington in a period when every other major office in the State was held by a Republican. Later COFFEE went to Washington, D. C., as Dill's secretary, and during 2 years on that job he stowed away a good deal of useful lore on the devious workings of national politics.

He entered politics on his own behalf in 1936, running for Congress in Tacoma. He was endorsed by the Washington Commonwealth Federation, a coalition of liberal-radical groups and a rising force in State politics. He skinned through the primaries, rode into office on the Roosevelt landslide. A week after the votes were counted, when most Congressmen were busily forgetting their pre-election promises, COFFEE voluntarily appeared before the State convention of the W. C. F. He startled the delegates by a forthright statement that he fully realized he would not have obtained a plurality in the primaries and would not therefore have been elected without federation support. "And," he added, "I will promise you that as long as I am in Congress I will represent the principles for which this organization stands."

His record has proved his good faith. He has fought hard for the moderately "leftist" aims of the federation—public ownership of monopolies and utilities, consumer legislation, the protection of labor, civil rights, and relief. One of his first acts was to introduce the Coffee-Pepper Federal arts bill to put the W. P. A. arts projects on a permanent basis. Soon afterward he threw the Coffee pure food and drug bill into the hopper. This was an improved Tugwell bill with teeth in it, some provisions of which were incorporated into the Wheeler-Lea bill.

COFFEE also introduced legislation to authorize Federal purchase and ownership of natural resources—specifically oil, gas, coal, and power. Among his current bills is one prohibiting the use of the National Guard in strikes (which just now is pigeonholed by the Military Affairs Committee), and another making illegal the denial of citizenship to aliens who have been on relief. He is best known, however, for his eloquent battles on behalf of W. P. A.

Sometimes COFFEE has clashed with the administration, but his divergencies have always been in a leftward direction. He was bitterly critical of the neutrality law during the Spanish War. When last year's special session modified the law, he started working for an 80 percent excess-profits tax on war profits. He holds the opinion that the administration's oil policy is one of its greatest mistakes, and he waged a one-man "blitzkrieg" that almost killed the Connally Hot Oil Act last year.

PRACTICAL POLITICIAN PLUS

The portly westerner has an uncanny knack for winning the voters to his side in spite of his consistently left-of-center record. In 1938 when Maverick and so many other liberals were being knocked out of national politics, COFFEE not only got reelected but he got a larger vote than ever before. In fact he received the second largest majority of any Democratic candidate north of the Mason and Dixon's line.

The basic reason for COFFEE'S popularity is his understanding of elementary political principles. "Practical politics," says he, "can be reduced to rules almost as exact as those of medicine and law." His first axiom is to stand firmly for the things he believes in, thereby holding the support of the liberals who put him into office. At the same time, he has the happy faculty for forgiving his enemies once the heat of an election is over, and he rarely antagonizes the conservatives who voted against him. He keeps the liberals posted on public issues nad makes sure they know how he votes on these issues; but he doesn't attack the conservatives directly, and he doesn't flaunt his congressional voting record before him. Incidentally, while it has been charged that the W. C. F. is subject to considerable Communist influence, no such accusations have been made against the Tacoma Congressman.

KEEP COFFEE IN THE HOUSE

COFFEE'S second principle is to keep his political fences mended. It is probably the most important rule in his handbook. He doesn't neglect the pet wishes of his constituents. Within 2 years of his first election he had successfully promoted a number of ingenious improvements for Tacoma. He made friends on the Appropriations Committee. He got a bridge across Puget Sound west of the city, a bridge that the townsfolk had hankered after for 20 years. He got a weather bureau. He secured $12,000,000 to build one of the three greatest Army airports in North America—McChord Field—just outside Tacoma. And he saw to it that the voters knew all about his accomplishments.

COFFEE keeps his political campaigns on a popular level. He discusses international issues, for example, on the basis of how they will affect the average man, and the Capitol postman reveals that COFFEE is among the top five Congressmen in the amount of mail received. One of the best ways of making people feel friendly is to make them smile, and in 1938 COFFEE punned his way into the good graces of thousands in his district by distributing miniature cans of high-grade coffee labeled "Keep COFFEE in the House."

As chairman of the liberal bloc, a hard-headed politician with profound liberal convictions, and a noninterventionists who believes in strong defense, JOHN COFFEE'S voting record in Congress matches that of any progressive you can name.

AUDREY GRANNEBERG.

The Anthem, God Bless America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. MEAD

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE EAST SIDE NEWS, NEW YORK CITY

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article on Irving Berlin's anthem, God Bless America, written by Harry H. Schlacht and published in the East Side News, New York City, issue of August 3, 1940.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the East Side News, New York City]

GOD BLESS AMERICA

By Harry H. Schlacht

"God bless America,
Land that I love,
Stand beside her and guide her,
Through the night with the light from above.
From the mountains,
From the prairie,
From the ocean white with foam,
God bless America,
My home, sweet home."

God Bless America, Irving Berlin's thrilling anthem, has stirred the hearts and hopes of all Americans. It is fearless and courageous, at once a challenge and a covenant, a prayer and a solemn warning.

From every whirling wheel in America, from every factory that turns, from every growing thing that breathes its prayer of plenty; from every quiet schoolhouse, from every crowded market, from every peaceful home goes up a song of praise and thanksgiving to hymn a Nation's tribute to Irving Berlin, East Side immigrant boy who hung the streaming emblazonry of the new national anthem from the very battlements of heaven.

Irving Berlin's immortal contribution epitomizes the majestic role played by immigrants in the establishment of our great Nation. All the races from the Mayflower down the corridor of time have marched to one measure—to one flag. There flashes upon the screen of our memory the embattled farmers at Concord; the barefoot suffering at Valley Forge; the sacrifice at Gettysburg, and the devotion and heroism of the World War. In all the wars of the Republic the immigrants and the sons of immigrants have written a glorious page in American history. They have kept the flag clean and unsullied. These noble men died and bled to perpetuate the American spirit of freedom. No greater dream ever rose in the minds of man than that which came to the founding fathers of the Republic. The basic idea was liberty. The glorious thrill of freedom spread until it attracted people from earth's remotest shores. This picture of consecrated zeal will never fade from the canvas of human memory. And out of this dream was born the American spirit which proved to be neither area nor population. It became the incarnate flame of freedom for the oppressed of the world.

God Bless America. Irving Berlin voices the feelings that are in our breasts. He has rendered an imperishable service to the land of his adoption. He has established a trust fund providing that all royalties from God Bless America be devoted to the youth of the country for patriotic purposes. He deserves a nation's salute.

Let us today fervently rededicate ourselves to the glorious traditions and principles by which our form of government has been consecrated to the cause of individual freedom. Let us give thanks that in this most vicious crucible in all history America has kept the stainless banner of the Republic flying with peace and honor. And let us offer a prayer to that infinite source of watchfulness which greater than all human agencies has been kind to our Nation.

God bless America .

Gloria in excelsis Deo et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis.

The Young Democratic Clubs of Pennsylvania

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by me at the convention banquet of the Young Democratic Clubs of Pennsylvania at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., August 24, 1940.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, distinguished guests, fellow Young Democrats, although I am slightly past the maximum age for membership in the Young Democrats of Pennsylvania, I consider myself a young Democrat, because my beliefs and my political principles are the same as yours. I don't mind telling you that the older I get, the more liberal I become. The Republican Party failed the Nation because it did not stay young. It got old and rheumatic. Its arteries were so hardened and it was so set in its ways that it couldn't meet the new conditions that faced the people. The Democratic Party has kept young because its principles have been young and vital, based upon the needs of a growing, changing America. In fact, some of the things Thomas Jefferson said more than a century ago are still looked upon as a trifle radical and ahead of the times by some of the reactionaries of the Republican machine.

As a young Democrat, I want to take this opportunity to pay my tribute to the new national chairman of our party, an old and good friend of mine, Ed Flynn of New York. Knowing his long and honorable record in politics and public affairs over a period of many years, I am certain that he will distinguish himself in his new position as a real two-fisted fighter for Democratic principles. I know he is going to put on a campaign this year that will bring him national recognition as a political statesman. I am certain that every Democratic leader in Pennsylvania will assure him the utmost loyalty and cooperation, and by that I mean nothing less than Pennsylvania's electoral vote for Roosevelt and Wallace this November.

We have been treated recently to the spectacle of Wendell Willkie, the Wall Street farmer, posing as a "holier than thou" who wouldn't think of working with or through a political organization or machine.

Wendell might as well come out of the cornstalks. We know him. For years he played Democratic machine politics because he thought it would serve his interests. At the same time he was working with and helping to develop one of the most ruthless political machines in America—the public-utility lobby.

Willkie came into public prominence for one reason only—he was the leader, the organizer, the brains behind that lobby. When he found that he couldn't get the Democrats to play the utility game, he went over to the Republicans, where he always belonged.

Don't let anybody kid you that the Willkie crowd was a gang of political amateurs. The utilities and the Wall Street financiers behind them have been playing cold-blooded, ruthless politics ever since Tom Edison invented the electric light. Before that time they were busy with railroad and streetcar franchises; there hasn't been a time in American history that the financial community hasn't been up to its neck in politics. With the development of utilities on a vast scale, with the development of the giant holding company with its complex interlocking directorates controlling from the Wall Street conning towers, it geared together a vast political organization on a Nation-wide scale. It developed some master politicians, and for years it has played a harder and faster game of politics than either Republican or Democratic leaders ever dreamed of playing.

That organization isn't exactly unknown to us here in Pennsylvania. We saw it lick Congressman Driscoll up in Elk County, because he fought for the holding-company bill and exposed the fake telegram barrage. We saw it go after the scalps of the Democratic Congressmen who defied the utilities in Washington. We saw it fight against the new Pennsylvania utility law. We saw it working with the James boys to get control of our own public-utilities commission and we saw the pay-off when the public-utilities commission budget was cut in half to hamstring its operations. If those fellows are amateurs, Babe Ruth was a sand-lot bench warmer.

The Wall Street organizations have always operated the Republican machines by remote control. This time they decided to do the job themselves. Willkie was told off to be the front man, a job he has been doing for years as a Washington lobbyist. When the regular Republican organization leaders objected Willkie was shrewd enough to make a virtue of necessity by publicly repudiating "machines." At the same time his Wall Street associates were busy whipping the machine leaders into line. We have already seen the result of this in Pennsylvania, where all the discredited and corrupt gangs which have been running Republican affairs for years are solidly supporting Willkie. My authority for this is Moe Annenberg's Philadelphia Inquirer, so-called bible of Pennsylvania Republicanism. I quote:

"You read that Mrs. Marion Worthington Scranton, a member of the Republican National Committee, has been assured by Mr. Willkie that he has no intention of 'slighting' the established party organization in this State. Why assurance of this nature should have been necessary is hard to comprehend.

"Regardless of what may be going on in other States, it is known that in Pennsylvania William H. Harman, chairman of the Associated Willkie Clubs, is working in complete harmony with the State organization headed by Jim Torrance and with Jay Cooke's city committee in Philadelphia."

We know what that means. It means that Willkie's political fortunes in Pennsylvania are bound up with those of Joe Grundy, representing the Pennsylvania Manufacturers Association, and its unsavory past record of opposition to every social and labor reform ever proposed, and with those of my opponent, Jay Cooke, head of America's most corrupt political machine. A fine lot of starry-eyed reformers. Just look them over, these "amateur" supporters of Wendell Willkie: Moe Annenberg, now in a Federal penitentiary for cheating the United States Government; Joe Grundy, who wrangled millions in tariff favors under Republican rule; and Jay Cooke, beneficiary of private profits from the Philadelphia gas-works deal his organization engineered. That's just in 2 of Pennsylvania's 67 counties, and doesn't even begin to tell the whole story.

The plain truth is that this Wall Street lawyer and utility lobbyist, in his new masquerade as a simple farm boy, is gearing together two of the most corrupt and unscrupulous political machines ever known in the history of the Republic. One is the political organization owned and operated by Wall Street; the other is its subsidiary operated by regular Republican machine leaders such as Grundy, Cooke, and their henchmen. Behind those machines is the economic might and financial power of the leaders of American industry and finance, the same leaders who are now on a sit-down strike against national defense, demanding exorbitant profits as the price of their help, stalling for time in the hope that they can elect Willkie and write their own ticket as to what taxes they will condescend to pay.

I think we may well warn the American people to look behind the tall corn that hides the real Willkie supporters, for they will find there the potential war profiteers, the politicians for profit, the same type of Fascist-minded reactionaries who led the great democracy of France to its destruction. There is no point in mincing words about Willkie. He is simply a false front. The Wall Street leaders behind him, by their greed, their selfishness, their complete lack of a single patriotic motive, represent the greatest menace that our democracy and our American way of life faces today. Don't be fooled by the American flag they wrap around them. Don't be deceived when they sing God Bless America louder than anyone else.

If anyone thinks Willkie is sincere, let them look at his public utterances. He proclaims that the New Deal falsely follows an economy of scarcity when America needs production to produce jobs and prosperity; yet he endorses in principle the New Deal farm program, an outstanding example of the economy of scarcity. He accuses Roosevelt, almost in the same breath, of being a warmonger and of failing to prepare our country for war. He echoes the appeasement policy of his major supporters by attacking Roosevelt for his anti-Nazi statements, then issues an inflammatory challenge to Hitler to come on and fight. Is this sincerity? Is this honesty? Of course not. It marks the political charlatan, the witch doctor who professes to drive off evils by magic words.

Enough of Wendell Willkie for the present. I'll have more to say about him before the campaign is over. Right now, since all of you are practical workers in the cause of democracy, I want to speak for a moment about the practical problems of political organization.

There are some who believe that political campaigns are won exclusively on the basis of patronage. Their conclusions are largely drawn from the fact that Republican organizations in large cities, such as Philadelphia, seem to maintain themselves in power through their patronage machine, even when the people are utterly disgusted with their record in office, failing to realize that big business finances them most generously. There are others who feel that political organizations are unimportant and that public sentiment is the main thing.

The answer lies between these extremes.

No election was ever won on patronage alone, nor on the other hand can any election be won without some kind of political organization. All of you know that for more than 40 years I have been a worker in the Democratic ranks, interested in advancing the principles of my party. I have always believed, and I believe now, that principles come first and political organizations second—and that both are essential to victory. Principles are the lifeblood of our party. They give it meaning and purpose. They give it a reason for existence as a force in public affairs. The task of a political organization is to educate the people in the principles it represents. That means our organization's job is primarily to enlighten the public, to carry the message of our party to every voter. If that task is well done the business of getting out the vote on election day, although necessary, is secondary. If the people are aroused and sympathetic to our cause, we don't have to fight to get them out to the polls. They will come out of their own accord, without urging—in fact no one could keep them away.

Our party has been very successful without patronage when it had the confidence of the people. Roosevelt carried the country in 1932 because public sentiment demanded his election, although the Federal patronage was entirely in the hands of the Republican Party. Our Pennsylvania victory in 1934 was a victory of public sentiment. The overwhelming Democratic victory in 1936 could not be considered in anyway a victory of patronage. It was a Roosevelt victory.

The Democratic Party is fortunate in having many thousands of supporters who give their efforts and their money as a public service, without hope of return, simply because they believe in the principles of our party. At the same time there are many, just as loyal in their devotion to Democratic principles, who cannot afford to devote their time and contribute of their funds unless the party can find some way to assist them. Insofar as they are concerned, patronage plays a part.

I say to you, frankly, that once a political organization begins to feel that it can win campaigns solely on the basis of patronage, it is headed for a downfall. Patronage all too often is a two-edged sword, for no matter how much many be available there is never enough to go all the way around. That brings disappointments.

This does not mean that I am opposed to the practice followed by political parties of placing their own adherents in political office. When a party's candidate takes office the party itself is responsible for the record he makes. The party can assure the success of the principles it represents primarily by giving the administration of its policies to persons sympathetic with its aims and objectives. To do otherwise is to court disaster—to encourage sabotage. But here again the purpose of patronage should be not to obtain it for itself alone, but through it to assure the proper fulfillment of campaign promises and thereby merit continued public support.

Any political leader who thinks solely in terms of patronage is blinding himself to the lessons of experience. In placing patronage before public sentiment he is placing the cart before the horse. If the people in any district can be educated to believe in the principles of the Democratic Party, the amount of patronage available to that district makes little difference; they will vote Democratic regardless. If you have observed recent Gallup polls in Pennsylvania, you will have noticed that Democratic sentiment has arisen steadily in recent months as a result of Roosevelt's increasing popularity and Governor James' complete failure as an executive. With all the patronage in the State government at his disposal, Governor James and his administration have far less political strength today than they had in the fall of 1938, when they had no patronage whatever.

For this coming campaign we have available two very necessary and valuable things—an important issue and a real candidate. We have the issue—the record the New Deal has made in the Nation, the record Roosevelt has made in foreign affairs. We have the candidate, the most outstanding and courageous defender of democracy in the world today, Franklin D. Roosevelt. In all the world he stands forth today as the greatest of all defenders of human liberty. America isn't just going to elect him; it's going to draft him—and I include Maine and Vermont. It's our job to go out and work for a straight Democratic ticket, for the election of every Democratic candidate high and low, so that Roosevelt will have support in Congress, support in the State legislature, and support in every city, town, and borough in Pennsylvania. The Nation has gone forward with Roosevelt; Pennsylvania has gone forward. Today, more than ever before, we must stand solidly behind him to defend our country and our liberties from aggression, whether from within or without. Pennsylvania will demonstrate to all the Nation at the November 5 election that it stands foursquare with the patriotic and humanitarian creed of our great leader, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Our slogan is "Forward with Roosevelt" in the service of our country.

Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACE'S FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD five editorials from Wallace's Farmer on the foreign policy of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallace's Farmer of September 25, 1937]

HAVE WE LEARNED ANYTHING SINCE 1917?

Twenty years ago, the United States was pulled into a World War which cost us $60,000,000,000, killed and injured thousands of our people, damaged our foreign trade, made a few wartime millionaires and impoverished everybody else, and particularly the farmers.

Today, two wars are going on, one in Europe and one in Asia. Either may involve the United States unless we Americans show more sense than we did 20 years ago.

In Europe, Italy and Germany are unofficially lined up with the Spanish insurgents. Russia and--more mildly—France and Great Britain lean toward the Spanish Government. In Asia, China and Japan are fighting, with Russia sympathetic to China.

The two wars are linked together by the three-fold alliance between Italy, Germany, and Japan, and by the less formal alliance between France, Russia, and Great Britain.

In spite of the fact that no great power probably wants a world war, they may stumble into one. A submarine incident in the Mediterranean, another careless bomb dropped in China, may bring on the conflict.

Can the United States stay out?

Everybody says, "Yes." But some say, "Yes, but."

Among the enemies of neutrality in this country we have the folks who want the United States to punish the aggressors in these wars, to slap the wrists of Japan and Italy. They want us to "make the world safe for democracy" again.

Among the enemies of neutrality are the Americans who went abroad to make 15 percent on their money over there instead of 5 percent at home, and who want the Army and Navy to help collect their profits.

Among the enemies of neutrality are the devotees of "national honor," who want to send 3,000,000 boys to war every time a shell bursts near the Stars and Stripes.

And there are always those who want to make profits out of the war trade. Some of them are farmers.

Can the United States stay neutral, in spite of these influences?

Corn belt farmers can help decide that question. Let them use their influence to get the National Government to withdraw troops and warships from the war zones and to get American citizens out, too. Let them refuse to be excited over "insults to national honor" and over "crusades for democracy." Let them decline to risk their boys' blood for war profits for somebody else.

One more thing. We need to wage neutrality as deliberately as we wage war. The United States can properly compensate those businessmen, those shippers and those farmers who are injured by a policy of neutrality. Let's be willing to pay the costs of neutrality. They are heavy, but nothing to the costs of war.

This year is the anniversary of the entrance of the United States into one world war. Let us not permit it to mark our entrance into another.

We ought to be smarter than we were 20 years ago. But are we?

MEASURE COST OF WAR

The total cost of the World War to the United States would have paid for the following programs:

Thirty-year conservation program at $1,000,000,000 a year, $30,000,000,000.

Thirty-year tenancy program at $1,000,000,000 a year, $30,000,000,000.

[From Wallace's Farmer of March 26, 1938]

NO RETURN TO WARTIME HYSTERICS

As Congress debates the big Navy program and war talk becomes warmer, there can be seen in some quarters a revival of the "patriotic" hysteria of 1917, when everybody who didn't swallow the official propaganda 100 percent was accused of being a traitor to the Nation. It is cheering, therefore, to see two good blows struck just recently for sanity and good temper in public discussion.

In Minnesota, the university board apologized to Prof. W. A. Schaper for his unwarranted dismissal in 1917 on the charge that he was a "rabid pro-German." The board declared: "We cannot suffer a precedent to stand, under which, during periods of hysteria, honorable teachers are humiliated and dismissed in disgrace because their views happen not to coincide with the views of those in power."

In Kansas, Alfred M. Landon opposed a legislative investigation of so-called radicalism in the State educational institutions. He said:

"Freedom of speech must permit a man to say what he thinks, although we may not agree with his views, and academic freedom is essential to free speech. The true test of our belief in freedom of speech comes when we listen to someone who expresses views which we abhor and when we are willing to make the fight to permit the expression of such views. * * * A frank discussion of theories of government should always be free and unrestrained."

These are good words to remember as arguments get hot and as one side or the other attempts to stifle free speech.

[From Wallace's Farmer of February 26, 1938]

TO REPEL INVASION—AND WHAT ELSE?

Before we spend any more money on national defense, let's see what we are going to defend. That is the point Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead has been making about this billion-dollar budget for the Army and Navy.

We are pleased to see that hard-boiled Army officer, Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, now retired, say about the same thing in his testimony before a Senate committee. Listen to this:

"No one today knows for what purpose the land and naval forces are to be used. It seems to me that the time has come when Congress should perform its sacred duty to the people by clearly defining the purposes for which the land and naval forces should be used—to repel invasion, to protect American interests abroad, to enforce the Monroe Doctrine, to make the world safe for democracy, or what not. * * *

"And, so far as the Army is concerned, we could give the country a much better system of national defense at much less cost; that is, if we are to give our entire attention to the problem of repelling invasion and not be diverted by schemes to invade Europe or Asia."

We urge again that Members of Congress from farm districts do their best to get Congress to admit that national defense means just that, and not foreign adventure. If national defense means repelling invasion, then we agree with General Hagood that we can probably make some heavy reductions in our military and naval budgets. But if we insist on being able to lick anybody in the world on his own doorstep, then even a billion-dollar budget isn't big enough.

[From Wallace's Farmer of February 12, 1938]

BIG ENOUGH FOR DEFENSE

How big a navy does the United States, already defended by two great oceans, need to defeat an invading force? Although the chart below does not show the recently increased appropriations for the Japanese and British Navies, it does indicate that, for defensive purposes, the Navy of the United States, operating in its own waters, is much stronger than any possible invading force.

	Tons
France:
Being built	180,816
Already built	546,178
Japan:
Being built	93,907
Already built	754,242
United States:
Being built	336,655
Already built	1,062,878
Great Britain:
Being built	288,215
Already built	1,232,854

The United States has at present 15 big battleships to Great Britain's 15 and Japan's 10, 17 heavy cruisers to Great Britain's 15 and Japan's 12. It is inferior to these 2 nations in aircraft carriers and light cruisers.

[From Wallace's Farmer of February 12, 1938]

THE "NEXT" WORLD WAR IS HERE

With one major war going on in Europe and another in Asia, nobody need ask when the next world war is coming. It is here. Only this time we are getting it in slower installments.

Every Corn Belt farmer wants the United States to stay out of the conflict. It is clear that no possible gains of any war, however successful in a military sense, could make up for the expenditure of lives and money and for the dislocation of economic affairs that such a war would cause.

How can we stay out?

We suggest three courses that the Government of the United States might properly follow, and which would aid in keeping this country out of trouble:

1. Enforce the Neutrality Act with regard to the war between Japan and China. We did this in the case of the Spanish War, but now our State Department is taking the ridiculous position that because war has not been formally declared between Japan and China, war is not going on, and therefore the Neutrality Act should not be invoked.

2. Withdraw our troops and our ships from China immediately. Assist American citizens in getting out of China. If necessary, make arrangements to compensate them for any monetary loss in leaving, but get them out. One of these days an American soldier or sailor or citizen will happen to be in the way of another bomb, and then there will be a new war spirit built up to "avenge" him.

3. Halt the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy until Congress has made a decision as to just what the meaning of "adequate national defense" is. The present regular Budget calls for an appropriation of $991,000,000, as against $600,000,000 in the period of 1923–25. President Roosevelt's special message calls for at least $30,000,000 more, and pledges the start of an $800,000,000 Navy building program. Before we spend any more money, let's decide whether we want to spend it to defend the United States or whether we intend instead to defend American investments all over the world, no matter where they may happen to be.

This is the work of Congress and the President. But farmers themselves have a task almost equally difficult and even more necessary.

Let them keep their shirts on.

Every time a Japanese soldier slaps an American consul or a Japanese bomb injures an American citizen, or some other incident reminds us that a war is not a tea party, all of us feel a natural impulse to strike back.

But why get excited? The fact that Japanese Army discipline is poor and that the high command can't make its soldiers behave is no reason for us to work ourselves into the kind of a passion that leads to war.

The United States bought a large chunk of the last World War. We paid for it in blood, in money, and in depression. Let's not buy any part of this one.

This time we ought to know enough to stay out.

The Hatch Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EARL C. MICHENER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

OPINION OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF MICHIGAN

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago Hon. Frederick B. Elliott, State Banking Commissioner of Michigan, addressed a letter to Hon. Thomas Read, the Attorney General of Michigan, asking for an interpretation of certain language found in the so-called Hatch Act. On August 13, 1940, the attorney general submitted an opinion to the State banking commissioner in compliance with the commissioner's request. Inasmuch as there is much discussion and conjecture in all parts of the United States at this time concerning the interpretation and applicability of the Hatch Act, and pursuant to the privilege heretofore granted to me, I include the Michigan attorney general's opinion, which is as follows:

Re Federal Hatch Act.

DEAR MR. ELLIOTT: You have submitted the two following questions, to wit:

1. May the counsel for the receiver of a departmental receivership, who is employed on a fee basis and who is appointed by the commissioner of the banking department, seek public office while serving as such counsel, assuming that the receivership in question is indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

2. Will employees in general of departmental receiverships which are indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation come under the provisions of the Federal Hatch Act?

The above questions involve the interpretation of the Hatch Act, so-called.

The Hatch Act is known as Public Act No. 252, Seventy-sixth Congress, and is entitled "An act to prevent pernicious political activities."

This is a new law upon a very old subject and usually the title of a legislative act is some indication of the object of the law, the object of the law at all times being the primary purpose to determine in construing a legislative act.

The original Hatch Act, so-called, consists of 11 rather short paragraphs and was approved August 2, 1939. It was amended by adding nine sections thereto, and section 12, subdivisions (a) and (e) of said amendment, is the only part of the Hatch Act that is relevant to the above-captioned subject matter.

Section 12, subdivision (a), as to so much thereof as is pertinent, is as follows:

"SEC. 12 (a). No officer or employee of any State or local agency whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency shall (1) use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or a nomination for office, or affecting the result thereof, or (2) directly or indirectly coerce, attempt to coerce, command, or advise any other such officer or employee to pay, lend, or contribute any part of his salary or compensation or anything else of value to any party, committee, organization, agency, or person for political purposes. No such officer or employee shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Subdivision (e) is as follows:

"(e) The provisions of the first two sentences of subsection (a) of this section shall not apply to any officer or employee who exercises no functions in connection with any activity of a State or local agency which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States or by any Federal agency."

It will be noted that said subsection (a) limits the officers or employees named therein to such officers or employees whose principal employment is in connection with any activity which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States, etc. Principal employment in this instance means that employment in which the officer or employee is engaged and devotes most of his time for or at, at the exclusion of any other permanent employment. It is better illustrated, perhaps, than defined, i. e.: An attorney's principal employment may be that of practicing law, yet at the same time he might temporarily be serving or representing a client whose activities might be financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States Government. But certainly it could not be said that the attorney's principal employment was in connection with any activity that was financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States.

In said section 12, subdivision (e), above quoted, it will be noted that the first two sentences of subdivision (a) above quoted shall not apply to any officer or employee who exercises no functions in connection with any activity of a State or local agency which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants made by the United States Government or by any Federal agency.

Section 12, subdivision (f), subsections (1) and (2), defines what State or local agencies mean, and also states what the term "Federal agencies" means. Section 13, subdivisions (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e), declares what are pernicious political activities, but nowhere in the act does it determine the meaning of the word "functions" as mentioned and quoted in the above subdivision (e) of said section 12. The definition, or rather the meaning, of the word "function" in connection with the activity of a State or local agency is quite important, because the prohibition does not apply to any officer or employee who does not exercise functions in connection with such activities of the State.

Words and phrases do not give any citation or definition of the word "function" except in one instance, which is as follows, and I quote:

"Under the Reorganization Act, empowering the President to transfer 'functions' of any executive agency to any other executive agency, held that this power authorized the President to transfer the right to appeal."

The case of United States v. Paramount Publix Corporation (73 Fed. (2d) 103) is cited for the above authority.

Not much satisfaction is obtained from this opinion in aiding one in interpreting the meaning of functions as used in the above-quoted section. A reasonable interpretation, not only of the meaning of the word "function," but also of the intent of Congress in enacting the law, I think, is that it means to say that only such officers and employees as are acting in conjunction with other employees who are instrumental in carrying into effect the particular activities or purposes of the particular State or local agency which is financed in whole or in part by loans or grants, come within the prohibition. Here again the meaning can perhaps be better illustrated than a complete definition given. In reference to the banking department of the State of Michigan, the young man who runs errands, distributes mail, etc., in some degree functions with the activities of the banking department, but in no sense can it be said that he functions in connection with the activities of the banking department; again, secretaries, stenographers, and typists in the State banking department contribute immeasurably to the carrying on of the activities of the banking department; but neither the young man hereinbefore described nor the secretaries, stenographers, and typists come within the prohibition of subdivision (a) of section 12.

This last amendment was approved July 19, 1940, and from certain newspaper accounts, there may be other amendments between now and when election takes place.

From the above, it is my opinion that a lawyer who is actively engaged in the practice of law and whose principal employment is the independent practice of law wherein and whereby he maintains an office, holds himself out as a practitioner and represents such clients as he desires when given the opportunity so to do, is not barred from seeking public office because he happened to be the counsel for the receiver of a departmental receivership. His employment is no different than when he is employed by some other client. He is paid on a fee basis, but his principal employment is his own private practice of law. He certainly cannot be considered as an employee or officer within the meaning of these words in said above quoted section 12.

Employees in general of departmental receiverships, I take it, are employees who devote their entire working time, or at least the number of hours required by the Government to constitute a day's work, in these receiverships, and they receive compensation for their time. In other words, their principal employment is working for the departmental receiverships and wherever these departmental receiverships are indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, certainly they would come under the prohibition in said section 12 above quoted.

Therefore, I come to the conclusion and it is my opinion that the answer to question No. 1 is, "Yes," and that the answer to question No. 2 is, "Yes."

Yours very truly,

THOMAS REED,
Attorney General.

The Anti-Poll-Tax Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE E. GEYER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

ADDRESS BY MRS. WILLIAM T. GAYLE, JR., OF ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, in a ceremony at a very appropriate place, beside the statue of Susan B. Anthony, I had the pleasure of receiving a document from Mrs. William T. Gayle, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga. Mrs. Gayle, accompanied by a large delegation of southern women, presented to me a declaration signed by 100 outstanding women from the poll-tax States. These women, active in civic, political, and women's organizations, called upon the Congress of the United States to bulwark the women's suffrage amendment by removing poll-tax voting requirements.

As you know there is a petition on the desk, No. 34, which will make it possible for this body to bring to the floor of the House the anti-poll-tax bill. This bill, when passed, will be the first remedy toward alleviating the conditions deplored by these women.

I insert Mrs. Gayle's presentation speech in the Appendix of the RECORD, as follows:

It is my great privilege on this twentieth anniversary of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States to bring from the South is a statement of 100 leading women of those States which yet require payment of poll taxes for voting. These women deplore the fact that although the nineteenth amendment has been in effect for 20 years, millions of women in their States are still virtually disfranchised because of this undemocratic requirement.

In the women's declaration they call on the Congress of the United States to take that step which is open toward remedying this situation—the removal of the poll tax as a requirement for voting in Federal elections. Quite properly this appeal is brought from the South to you, Congressman GEYER, in view of your untiring efforts on behalf of the voteless people of my region.

It is fitting that here beside the statue of Susan B. Anthony, author of the women's suffrage amendment, just 20 years after the proclamation of that amendment, we should meet to consider the appeal of women leaders who believe that the fight for women's suffrage must be carried forward, and that the women's suffrage amendment must be supplemented with legislation repealing poll-tax voting requirements.

The 100 influential women who have, as individuals deeply disturbed by the effects of poll taxes, endorsed this declaration are prominent in their communities and hold positions of leadership in such organizations as the League of Women Voters, Congress of Parents and Teachers, Federation of Women's Clubs, Federated Church Women, Junior League, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Y. W. C. A. The declaration comes as an urgent plea from a group of women who are not themselves disfranchised, for they can well afford to pay poll taxes in order to vote. Their declaration represents a thoughtful and disinterested demand for removal of poll-tax requirements so that the nineteenth amendment can benefit all women of this Nation. From coast to coast there is clamor for removal of poll-tax restrictions on voting, that Representatives to the Congress be elected on the same basis in each State in the Union. The declaration which I hand to you adds the voice of women in the poll-tax States to this Nation-wide demand. In the face of this impressive document no longer can the criticism be leveled that responsible and thoughtful people in these States do not seek this extension of suffrage.

Congressman GEYER, as I place this women's declaration in your hands, may I commend you for the introduction of the anti-poll-tax bill and urge that you persevere in your efforts to have this fundamental piece of legislation enacted into law in order that we may more fully implement the democratic process in this country.

What Goes On in Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. MILLER
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. WILLIAM J. MILLER OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered yesterday over the radio:

Good afternoon. Again it is my privilege to tell you of what Congress is doing, although any broadcast at this time, purporting to be a report of what is going on in Congress, will turn out to be a report of the steps being taken to strengthen our national defense. It is impossible in 30 minutes to adequately cover all the various proposals considered by Congress during the past month. Therefore, I will confine my remarks today to the most important bills yet considered by this Congress in its effort to make the United States strong against military or naval attack.

The Burke-Wadsworth bill, commonly called the compulsory military training bill, is entitled "A bill to protect the integrity and institutions of the United States through a system of selective compulsory military training and service."

If time permits, I will also touch on a proposal, not yet officially before Congress, in which many of my constituents are interested—the proposal to sell United States destroyers to Great Britain. No bill has been thus far introduced to legalize such sale or transfer.

If ever there was a time when frankness on the part of governmental officials was of vital importance, that time is now. Unless the citizens of the United States understand fully the problems faced by our Government, they cannot be expected to arrive at the correct decisions. I regret to state that all the information sent out through the country from Washington has not been as frank as it should have been. For example, on Thursday evening, August 8, members of the National Defense Commission informed the country via radio that the program was proceeding satisfactorily. Mr. Knudsen said that 900 planes a month are now being produced, but he did not say they were being produced for our Army and Navy. Anyone listening to that broadcast would not have realized that contracts cleared does not mean contracts signed or in the process of being fulfilled. The day after this broadcast by members of the National Defense Commission, Secretary of War Stimson painted a decidedly different picture when he testified before the House Ways and Means Committee. At this hearing Mr. Stimson said—I quote: "Congress made available to the Army during the month of June approximately $400,000,000 for airplanes, engines, and accessories. Yet today, almost 7 weeks later, we have been able to sign contracts for the construction of but 33 of the 4,000 or more for which these appropriations were made." It is interesting to note that Mr. Stimson used the words "contracts signed" instead of "contracts cleared."

Before going into the terms of the Burke-Wadsworth bill, I would like to make a definite statement on the question of conscription or compulsory military training in peacetime. A few weeks ago I said that I was opposed to this bill as originally introduced and I want to say now that I am opposed to any proposal which will delay the making of a decision or the solving of this problem until after election. Hearings have been concluded on this bill before both the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees and, as I prepare my broadcast, the Senate was on its eighth day of debate and, as you know, is ready to vote on the bill. Printed reports of the Senate and House hearings are available to every Member of Congress, as well as the Senate debate itself. We have had time to discuss the problem with our constituents, the evidence is all in, and we should be prepared to write into law the necessary details. No one knows just what provisions the Burke-Wadsworth bill will contain after the Senate and House have completed consideration of the proposal. It may be a very different bill from the one introduced by Congressman WADSWORTH on June 21, but whatever it is, I say, very emphatically, that the bill should be voted up or down before election time.

I have spent more time studying the hearings on this particular bill than I have on any other legislative proposal; I have read the hearings on the 1941 Military Establishment appropriation bill, as well as the two supplemental national-defense appropriation bills, including the question of increasing the manpower of the Army by voluntary enlistment or conscription. Also, I have studied the hearings on the Burke-Wadsworth bill itself. My chief difficulty has been in deciding what testimony to believe and in trying to determine when such witnesses as General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army, was giving the Congress his own opinions or when he was being held down to testimony approved by the President and the Budget Bureau. It is tragic but true that the Chief of Staff of the Army cannot ask Congress for increases he thinks the Army should have in either manpower or material. I will prove this statement by quoting from page 69 of the hearings on the supplemental national-defense appropriation bill for 1941 when General Marshall was testifying before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. I quote:

"General MARSHALL. I have no authority at the present time to ask for the increase which, in my opinion, is a present requirement. I would like that clearly understood.

"Mr. WOODRUM. You have no authority from whom?

"General MARSHALL. From the Bureau of the Budget or from the President.

"Mr. WOODRUM. I was not asking you for that."

Just think of it, the Chief of Staff of our Army hasn't authority to ask Congress for the men he needs.

I have come to the conclusion that the sponsors of the Burke-Wadsworth bill have made the mistake of trying to solve two separate problems in one piece of legislation. The preamble to this bill states that it is a bill to set up a system of selective compulsory military training and service. I believe that conscripting men into the Regular Army in time of peace is decidedly different from conscripting men only for military training. Canada, at the end of a year, as a participant in the war has only recently adopted a compulsory military training program. Under the Canadian law a young man selected for training does not take the oath of a soldier in the Regular Army. His enlistment contract assures him that he will not be sent overseas without his consent or until Parliament enacts different legislation. Canada recognizes the difference between conscription for war service and conscription for training.

I have actually received hundreds of letters for and against the Burke-Wadsworth bill. A large number of these letters have come from young men between the ages of 21 and 31, and almost without exception they have said that they were perfectly willing to devote the time necessary, even though it be a year or longer, to preparing themselves for a possible defense of the United States. However, there seems to be a doubt in the minds of a good many of these young men as to whether this proposal will not lead to a great deal more than military training and there seems to be grounds for that fear.

For an example of grounds of mistrust, take the bill recently passed by Congress which was purported to be a bill to provide a year's extensive training for units of the National Guard. There was little or no opposition to that proposal as we all realize that the efficiency of the National Guard should be increased but, when the administration added to that proposal language making it possible to send the guard, after it was federalized, to any part of the Western Hemisphere, opposition did develop. The claim was made—and it was not denied by any proponent of the bill—that under that legislation the President of the United States could send units of the National Guard into Canada to do home duty, thus making it possible for Canada to release more of her soldiers for service in Europe. As I said a few minutes ago, the Burke-Wadsworth bill tries to solve two problems and I think it is admitted by all of those who have studied the present military situation that we face two distinct and separate problems.

Our first problem is, of course, to raise a strong, completely equipped standing Army. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to just how many men we should have in our standing Army, but I am willing to accept the testimony of General Marshall, who recently testified before the Senate Military Affairs Committee. This testimony was given before there was so much apparent hysteria. In response to a question as to how many men he felt we should have in the Army, the general replied that he thought the Army should have 375,000. He then used the figure of 500,000, with the following explanation: "Five hundred thousand is war strength," he said, "and I might inject here a comment regarding the proposal that has been made to increase the Regular Army to 750,000 men. If that were done two things would happen. We would have either to organize units from the ground up, without any trained personnel to leaven the mass, which would require about a year, or we would have to emasculate existing units in the Regular Army in order to provide nuclei for new units. I do not think that we should take such a hazard as this at the present time. Another and still more serious effect would be that we would have to emasculate the National Guard in order to find the necessary equipment for the new units. This would mean a complete alteration of the present system of national defense."

One understands in this connection that General Marshall was referring to wartime strength. I maintain that with the mobilization of the National Guard and making it a part of the Regular Army, as General Marshall has testified he will do, we have a standing Army of more than 500,000 men. To be sure, we do not have all of the needed equipment for this 500,000 men, but, according to testimony of Mr. Knudsen, a member of the National Defense Commission, we will have the completed equipment by January 1, 1942.

This Army of 500,000 men at the present time will be composed of 270,000 men who enlisted in the Regular Army plus the 242,000 men who enlisted in the National Guard and who will soon be federalized. In addition to that number we have approximately 116,000 Reserve officers who can be called into active service under the National Guard mobilization bill plus 38,000 enlisted men who are now in the Regular Army Reserves and approximately 3,700 retired officers subject to call for active duty. All of which means that we have well in excess of 500,000 men declared by General Marshall to be sufficient for war strength. We will also have a sufficient number of officers and enlisted men left over who can be used for training whatever reserve forces we may decide are necessary. It will be apparent to all my listeners that in order to obtain the 500,000 men desired we have not only used the National Guard but also practically every reservist. This certainly makes it necessary, in view of existing war conditions, that we immediately embark on a program to make certain that if we should be subjected to an attack from abroad that we will have the necessary reserve forces to man the billion dollars' worth of equipment that Congress has recently authorized, some of which has already been ordered.

The War Department apparently feels that it is necessary to train these reserve forces in groups of 350,000 and 400,000 which is, after all, the second problem that the Burke-Wadsworth bill seeks to solve. I doubt if any thoughful person will maintain that we can immediately enlist 400,000 men, even though the enlistment period was limited to 1 year, and the pay of the Army increased from $21 to $30 per month. I believe the suggested pay increase in the Army should be approved by Congress as I think $30 per month is really the minimum we should pay to a private soldier. However, I do not believe that the difference of approximately 30 cents a day is going to be the deciding factor as to whether or not a man will enlist in the Army. If the young men of this Nation are convinced that their services are needed, I believe that the difference of 30 cents in the day's pay will not prevent them from offering their services.

I will support a substitute for the Burke-Wadsworth bill that requires the registration of all male residents of the United States between the ages of 18 and 45. At the time of this registration I would have each person give all information that would help the Government to decide just where that person would be most useful in time of a war emergency. In this proposed substitute I should make it clear that those who are selected for military training will be taken into the Army, with a definite enlistment contract limiting them to training and forbidding the War Department from making use of them as part of the Regular Army, and most certainly forbidding the War Department from sending them outside of the continental limits of the United States, its island possessions, and the Panama Canal Zone. At least until such time as Congress has declared a national emergency to exist or until there is a declaration of war by Congress.

One serious objection to the Burke-Wadsworth bill, as introduced, is the fact that the bill gives the President power to conscript men into the active service. That is not necessary or advisable and it is potentially most dangerous, regardless of who happens to occupy the White House. It is not necessary to the purpose of the bill, which is supposed to be a speedy preparation of a sound national defense. Just as a declaration of war must rest with Congress, so should the calling out of all male citizens of the United States rest with Congress, as the true representative of the people. The reason the country puts major issues in the hands of Congress is due to the fact that it most directly represents the people and because such a large body cannot act as suddenly as an individual. In such a tremendous step as either a declaration of war or the conscription of men, a majority of Congress is more fit to speak for the people than is one single individual.

It will be noted that in the proposed substitute bill I suggested the registration age be reduced to 18 years. It seems to me that between the ages of 18 and 21 will be found young men who are fine physical specimens without dependents or important responsibilities. In most cases young men of this age can be better spared from their civil employment than can older men who have assumed greater responsibilities. Judging again from letters I have received, and from the young men with whom I have talked, there would be little or no opposition to a form of selective service if the restrictions I have outlined—and undoubtedly others which would develop during the debate—were inserted in the bill. I also think it is important to limit the operation of even the substitute proposal to a period of 2 years. At the end of that time Congress could review the situation and determine in the light of existing conditions whether or not such a selective-service act should be continued. I want to make it as certain as I can that any legislation of this type be limited solely to the existing emergency.

It is my belief that the suggestion of separating the question of conscription for active military service and conscription for limited military training is worthy of serious consideration. The very essence of our form of government is that the people should know and understand what is being done, and in that sense, act willingly. In order to be effective, legislation of this type must be understood and concurred in by the majority of our people. Where there is misunderstanding, doubt, and objection, there will be passive resistance or grudging service—both of which are bad.

I was disappointed a week ago to hear Gen. William Shedd, Jr., assistant Chief of Staff, while testifying before the House Military Affairs Committee, inform the committee that men called into the service under the Burke-Wadsworth bill would not be called before December 1. This seemed to be another effort to postpone facing the task of securing the needed defense personnel until after election. You can be sure of one thing—that suggestion was not made by General Shedd without the approval of his superiors. The suggested delay brings to mind criticism that has been expressed in many of the letters I have received as well as in many newspaper columns. An effort is being made to accuse Congress of delaying the national-defense program. There may be some justifiable criticism that can be directed at Congress, when one remembers the disgraceful performance of Senators MINTON and HOLT during the first day's debate of the Burke-Wadsworth bill in the Senate, but to say that Congress is "fiddling while Rome burns" is unfair and untrue. If any criticism is to be directed at Congress it should be that things have been moving too fast and that legislation has been adopted, having far-reaching effects, without adequate debate. For example, the bill appropriating $5,000,000,000 for new equipment for the Army and Navy passed the House with only a couple hours of debate and not even a roll call, on its final passage. When General Shedd suggested that the conscription of men be deferred until December 1, he said that that was because of the delay on the part of Congress in passing the Burke-Wadsworth bill. As a matter of fact, the Senate was only then on its third day of debate when he made such a remark.

The hearings in both the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees were held with all possible dispatch; witnesses who had traveled great distances to represent organizations with thousands and, in some cases, millions of members, were limited to 5, 10, and 15 minutes in which to present their testimony. A member of the minority party can do very little toward speeding up legislation—that is the duty and responsibility of the majority party. That certain legislation to speed up the procurement program should be adopted by Congress is certainly true but the blame for that delay must also rest with the administration.

When I make that statement I have in mind the necessity of passing legislation that would provide for the amortization of funds invested in national-defense plant expansions, as well as the necessity of suspending the provision of the Vinson-Trammell Act which relates to the procurement of aircraft and the building of naval vessels. The uncertainty of what Congress will do in this respect has certainly interfered with negotiating contracts. I do not think we can rightfully blame industry. No private industry should be expected to spend from four to ten or fifteen million dollars in building additional factories without some assurance that they will be able to amortize the investment over a period of 4 or 5 years. The request for suspension of the provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act is not because of a profit limitation contained in that act but because of an uncertainty of just what overhead will be allowed in the negotiable contracts.

Under some of the legislation passed by this Congress, we have actually penalized the two most important industries that will contribute most to the success of our national-defense program. They are the aircraft and shipbuilding industries. The President vehemently denied newspaper stories that the placing of contracts for aircraft and other defense material was delayed by legislation passed in June, lowering the profit limitation on aircraft contracts from 12 to 8 percent and by the vague talk of an excess-profits levy. I think my listeners would be interested if I read herewith a part of the testimony of Admiral John A. Towers, Chief, Bureau of Aeronautics, before the House Committee on Appropriations. I quote: "It is a fact that at the present time we are having great difficulty in placing contracts with the manufacturers. There was a law passed recently which greatly reduced the profit limitation on aircraft contracts. It was very materially reduced. Most of the aircraft manufacturers and all of the aircraft-engine manufacturers do a great deal of subcontracting and their contracts are placed, for instance, with a firm which forges crankshafts. That is the business of that firm. They will take a subcontract from an aircraft-engine manufacturer, and that probably represents a small percentage of their total business. This law limits the subcontractors to the same profit, and their new profit when they are working on a limitation of 8 percent gross profit is very small. They are not anxious to get the business, and they can fill up their plants, so they say, with business from other sources, including munition manufacturers which are not subject to the same profit limitations. That, coupled with the uncertainty about amortization of expanded plans and equipment, makes it very difficult to place those contracts."

Admiral Towers said he could cite a specific case in which a contract for 300 planes was awarded by the Navy to a very large, reputable company. Subsequently, legislation was passed cutting the profit limitation from 12 to 8 percent. The manufacturer called Admiral Towers stating that the various subcontractors who had previously agreed to do a part of the work were no longer interested in those contracts so the manufacturer just could not see how he could take the contract. The Admiral declared that this was a firm which had probably made the best record in aircraft production and has shown the most reasonable prices of any firm in this country in the last few years.

Gen. George H. Brett, Chief of the Matériel Division, Office of the Chief of Air Corps, War Department, was even more emphatic in insisting that profit limitations and legislative uncertainties were making it impossible for the Army to buy airplanes. Said the general, in testifying, and I quote: "We had $279,000 appropriated for the purchase of airplanes available the first part of June, and on the 15th of June our contracts were all ready to be signed, under the proposed law which would permit us to negotiate contracts. Those contracts were held up awaiting passage of the law, which was not signed until July 2. On June 29, however, there was a modification of the Vinson-Trammell Act which threw all of our contracts into the wastebasket, and we had to start all over again and negotiate those contracts.

"The negotiation had to be conducted on an entirely new basis. In the meantime, we went to the Treasury and we are getting a decision with regard to taxes on expansion. We are getting a decision with regard to what can be considered costs under the Vinson-Trammell profit limitation. But now another objection has been made because there has been an announcement to the effect that the Vinson-Trammell Act is likely to be repealed and that there will be a tax on profits. Today I am doing my best to have the contracts signed. The industry will not sign contracts because they do not know what the effect will be if they repeal the Vinson-Trammell Act. Therefore, we are now again in a quandary over it. I am ready to buy approximately 4,000 airplanes, and that is the situation."

Congress could and, I dare say, would pass the necessary legislation in a few hours to provide for the suspension of the Vinson-Trammel Act and the amortization of plant expansion investment, if permitted to do so. For some unknown reason, the administration has insisted in tying these two proposals up with the excess-profits tax.

Industry knows that there will be an excess-profits tax law passed this year. No one should or will be allowed to make unfair profits out of this national-defense program. Every responsible official who has discussed this matter has stated that industry has cooperated with the Government as it should.

In the remaining minutes I would like to discuss the proposal that we sell, trade, or give 50 reconditioned United States Navy destroyers to Great Britain. These destroyers are part of a large number we built during the World War and, inasmuch as they are now over 20 years old, they are considered as obsolete due to overage. Recently many of them have been overhauled, while others were made into mine sweepers and other types of service vessels. This expense was authorized by Congress long before anyone suggested that they might be needed by Britain. Representatives of the Navy Department, including Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, urged the reconditioning of these destroyers on the grounds that they were needed for our own defense. Admiral Stark recently said that not only do we need all of the destroyers we have but many more new ones as well.

This is no time for pussyfooting, evasion, or the issuing of statements having a double meaning. To say that you favor giving all possible aid to Great Britain, providing it will not violate international law or weaken our own defense, as an answer to a request urging your approval of the sale of destroyers to Great Britain, if, at the same time, you are convinced that the sale of the destroyers would weaken our defense and violate international law, is an effort to evade the question.

I do favor rendering aid to Great Britain within the limitations I have mentioned, but I am honestly convinced that it would be a violation of international law to make such a sale and that we do need all of our Navy equipment for our own defenses.

The sale of destroyers to a belligerent nation would not be a step short of war—it would be an act of war under international law, as accepted by every nation in the world. The question of sending 50 destroyers is not the real issue. England needs help of the entire Navy, and as much of our air force as we can spare, as well as men to fly the planes. No one would contend that international law would permit the sending of ships, planes, and men.

If, as Ambassador Bullitt says, the United States is going to be attacked by Hitler as soon as he disposes of Britain, should not the sale of destroyers be followed logically by our full and active participation in the present war? I distinctly remember hearing the same threat in 1916 and 1917. We were told then that when the Kaiser defeated France and Britain, we were next.

Rather than debate the question of sending 50 destroyers to Britain, we had better face the real issue and decide now whether or not Hitler can and will attack the United States, if and when he defeats Britain. While it is true that it is to our advantage to have Hitler decidedly defeated, I do not want a situation to go on whereby we are dependent on any other nation's army or navy to protect us. That is the reason I voted for the huge naval expansion prorgam.

Ambassador Bullitt logically contends for American participation in the present war. That he reflects the views of the State Department and the President there can be no doubt. His address was really a plea for our naval participation, at least. The Capitol Parade, a daily column by Messrs. Alsop and Kintner, declares that the Ambassador consulted with the President during the preparation of his Philadelphia speech, and that the President approved it in every detail. It must therefore be accepted as the President's own views. Ambassador Bullitt said, "It is my conviction, drawn from my own experience and from information in the hands of our Government in Washington, that the United States is in as great peril today as France was a year ago." Perhaps he is right, but I insist that it is the duty of the President to make any such information known to the people and to the Congress. We have a right to have such information if for no other reason than that the Constitution places on the Congress the responsibility of providing for the national defense and, if necessary, the solemn duty of declaring war.

As a Member of Congress I demand to know what this information is, and when it became known to the President. It is my sworn duty to support all measures to provide protection for our country. No one can vote intelligently without all the facts.

It is a generally accepted fact that a naval fleet loses 25 percent of its power and effectiveness with each 1,000 miles it goes from its home base. Add to that the fact that we have, today, the greatest navy afloat plus every bit of information or knowledge which I have acquired from the testimony of high-ranking officers of the Army and Navy leads me to believe that successful attack on the United States is very remote. If I believed otherwise, I would vote to throw every resource we possess into the present war to defeat the forces that threaten us and I would do it now.

This issue must be faced in the near future, perhaps in the next 60 days. So far as neutrality is concerned, it has long since vanished, although we keep up the legal farce. We have gone beyond steps short of war; we have gone further than entangling alliances and, I fear, we may have gone into a military alliance in spite of the fact that our citizens, speaking through their elected representatives in Congress, have declared that the United States is neutral. The President still maintains publicly that the United States is a neutral nation.

I am not willing to consider our treaties as mere scraps of paper, no matter what other nations may do. I will not deliberately involve the United States in war until our territory is actually threatened with invasion or attack beyond a reasonable doubt. I believe that Congress and the American people should deal with the question of war or peace as prescribed by our Constitution.

In closing, let me assure you that I feel very humble as I strive to reach the right decisions to the numerous difficult questions now before Congress—questions that may mean peace or war, life or death, happiness or misery, to this generation and to generations yet unborn. I pray for divine guidance, wisdom, and strength during this perilous time.

I would advocate following the words of one of our greatest Presidents, Abraham Lincoln, who said, "Let the people know the truth and the country is safe."

The Defense Program

REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. PITTENGER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, ever so often when things go wrong in the affairs of our Government, the popular procedure is followed of blaming Congress for the mistakes of others. For several days there have been articles in various papers indicating that Congress is to blame for any delay in respect to national defense, and, by the way, it was pointed out on the floor of the House just a moment ago that there has been delay in connection with our national-defense program.

The American Congress is one of the greatest deliberative bodies in the world, and I include in that this body and the other body. Speaking with special reference to the House of Representatives, it is one group of men who respond to the wishes of the constituents and so far as the Congress is concerned, and so far as the House of Representatives in particular is concerned, it has cooperated almost 100 percent with every national-defense plan or program.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that for some time impressions have been given publicity to the effect that Congress has been responsible for any delays in the legislative program having to do with national defense. I think we ought to keep the record straight, and I just want to call attention to some of the headlines which are intended to mislead and to "pass the buck" to the legislative branch of our Government. In one of the newspapers Saturday the National Defense Council is quoted as blaming delays in its program on Congress.

It ought to be a sufficient answer to this incorrect statement to say that the House of Representatives and, so far as I know, the other legislative branch of the Government have taken prompt action on every legislative proposal having to do with national defense.

In connection with pending legislative measures, press releases from the administration put the blame for delay on Congress.

People who want to be fair, of course, will not forget the facts. We have been in session continuously, and for the past 2 months numerous 3-day recesses have been taken in the House of Representatives and also in the other body. These 3-day recesses all represent delays, and this is a delay for which those in control of our Government are responsible.

It is unfair to say that Congress is delaying things when the very administration that has charge of the program is responsible for the 3-day recesses.

A very certain distinguished Senator expressed these facts in much better language that the legislative branch of the Government was marking time because it had no program submitted by the people in charge of national-defense measures.

If there is anyone who needs to speed up, those who are charged with the responsibility for national defense can issue their orders to the party leaders in charge of the legislative program, and quick results will follow. In the interests of straight thinking, it is well to remember that we have a party system of government, and that responsibility for delay rests with the leaders who are in control of the Government.

We ought to resent this campaign that is being carried on which has for its purpose to discredit Congress and to glorify other individuals and agencies in the same proportion that they can shift responsibility for their failure to other shoulders.

Mr. Speaker, I am not without support in the position I take, for a certain distinguished Democratic Senator only yesterday declared that Congress was not to blame for the delays in the national-defense program. He pointed out the slowness in production of war materials, including airplanes, and said that this called for an explanation. He raised the question as to whether or not red tape, or inefficient bureaucratic administration, was to blame. Further discussing the cause of delay, he queried as to whether or not business enterprise had refused to accept contracts from the Government. He pointed out that the country is entitled to know the facts. We all agree, I am sure, that the delays should be investigated, and until that is done there is no room for loose talk that Congress, which has been on the job and ready for business, is the cause of defense delays.

Conscription in the Light of Scripture

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

ARTICLE BY REV. C. O. STADSKLEV

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Rev. C. O. Stadsklev, of Minneapolis, Minn.:

TRUTH AND LIBERTY—CONSCRIPTION IN THE LIGHT OF SCRIPTURE

When Israel rejected the rulership of Samuel as recorded in I Samuel 8 and desired a king or a dictator, God said to Samuel,

"They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them * * * howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them the manner of the king (dictator) that shall reign over them. * * * And he (Samuel) said, "This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: he will take your sons and appoint them for himself (note not for the nation but for himself). And he will appoint him captains over thousands, and captains over fifties. * * * And he will take your daughters * * * and he will take your fields * * * and ye shall cry out in that day because of your king (dictator) which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day."

After the colonists under God had won the Revolutionary War, they established in this land a theocratic constitutional form of government. A theocracy is a rule by God, and, since the Constitution of the United States was patterned after the governmental statutes of the Bible, our form of government is a theocracy. Throughout the entire history of our Nation, a desperate battle has been raging between the internationalists who desire to set aside the United States Constitution and loyal Americans who desire to abide by our God-given constitutional form of government. Alexander Hamilton succeeded in saddling upon this Nation the old Babylonian money system which is unscriptural and unconstitutional. This struggle between the internationalists, chiefly the international bankers and the true American people has now become so intense that many are actually saying as ancient Israel, "Give us a king or a dictator." The first thing Samuel told the people that a dictator would do, would be to take their sons, not for the nation but for himself. Dictatorships are made possible by military rule.

England is the only nation that has ever attempted to invade the United States, and although the Colonies were few and unequipped, they defeated Great Britain. If Hitler should conquer the British Isles, he would have to keep in submission 46,000,000 Englishmen; 42,000,000 Frenchmen; 8,400,000 Belgians; 8,700,000 Netherlanders; 2,700,000 Norwegians; 3,700,000 Danes; 22,000,000 Poles; 9,500,000 Czechs; 6,500,000 Austrians; besides many war-weary Germans, before he could even begin to think of invading the Western Hemisphere. And military experts agree that we cannot be successfully invaded until our Navy has been sunk. Hon. HAMILTON FISH recently said that with the $4,000,000,000 appropriation our Navy will be twice as great as any other navy and larger than all other navies combined. In view of these and similar facts, millions of Americans are asking why conscription in this Nation 3,000 miles away from war-exhausted Europe. There is not a bomber in Europe that can fly 1,000 miles fully loaded, drop its bombs, and return to its base.

If we adopt conscription, then we, as ancient Israel, will have our fields and our property taken away from us by our dictator. The expense of training and equipping 1,000,000 men each year would be so great that we, too, will be made to cry out because of dictatorship and regimentation. We are all agreed that we must be prepared, but is there not a greater danger in applying the so-called remedy than in the evil we are attempting to eliminate? I believe 90 percent of the people of this Nation are in agreement with Hon. HAMILTON FISH when he said, "I am in favor of making America invincible on land, sea, and air, through the largest navy in the world and by increasing and modernizing our Army and National Guard. I am not in favor of copying the European war system of conscription in time of peace, although it may be necessary for defense if we are ever attacked.

A certain well-known writer attempted to prove that conscription was practiced by Moses, citing Numbers 31: iii. In this Scripture God spake unto Moses and said, "Arm some of yourselves." (He did not say conscript all.) This same journalist used Numbers 26: i and ii where God commanded Moses to count all the men from 20 years and upward that were able to go to war. To count the men of the nation and to conscript the men of the nation are two very different things. By knowing the number of able-bodied men in Israel, Moses would know how many volunteers he should have and how many to receive.

True on one occasion when Moses misunderstood the tribes of Reuben and Gad and thought they were refusing to fight for their brethren, he said that your sins will find you out. In other words there are times when it is necessary to go to war, and on such occasion God's laws relative to military service will provide all the fighting men necessary.

Conscription as it is now being introduced is unscriptural. In the twentieth chapter of Deuteronomy we find God's statutes relative to military service. While there were other exemptions, the one given in verse 8 makes military service a voluntary enlistment. Verse 8 says that if a man is fearful and faint-hearted, he should not go with his bretheren in war. Universal conscription at this time can be one of the most vicious attacks ever made on our constitutional form of government. If the money of the Nation was conscripted according to ability to pay and if volunteers were given at least $100 a month, we would have more volunteers than necessary, and as Gideon of old, men would have to be told to go back to their work in field and factory. However, with money conscription there would be no danger of war. Voluntary enlistment which would make a much better army and a much safer army has never been given a trial. One of the most disgraceful things in our history is the fact that while hundreds of men became millionaires in the World War, thousands of nobler men died leaving destitute widows and orphans. The struggle the soldiers had to get their bonus is another black spot which looms up before would-be volunteers.

It is high time that we challenge the propaganda that if a man refuses to be sacrificed by the priests of mammon on the altar of gold he is a traitor and a slacker. Those who are attempting to involve us in war in order to establish their dictatorship are the traitors that should be dealt with as such.

God Almighty has decreed that the gold standard money system which Scripture says is at the root of all evil is going out, and there is no power on earth that can stop it. No army or navy can ever be built that will be able to uphold this system which Scripture calls "Babylon the Great" full of martyr's blood. Speaking of our day in chapter 2 and verse 20, Isaiah prophesied, "In that day a man shall cast his * * * silver and his * * * gold * * * to the moles and to the bats." The gold is already in its grave. The Apostle James was inspired to write the following concerning the gold or the metallic standard, "Go to now ye rich men (that is money manipulators) weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you * * * your gold and your silver is cankered and the rust of them shall be a witness against you and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last day." Perhaps the Apostle James had a vision of the gold buried in the Kentucky mountains. In verse 7 the apostle says, "Be patient therefore bretheren unto the coming of the Lord." And in verse 8 he wrote, "Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The apostle foresaw what terrible distress would be caused by cankered gold and silver and warned us against two extremes. First we were to avoid becoming impatient or bitter, on the other hand we were to avoid grudging one against the other or blaming one another. There is only one who can establish our hearts and that is God. We will be strong and useful today only to the extent that we know and believe the Word of God.

Jesus said that they that take to the sword shall perish by the sword. We do not need conscription we need to return to the Scriptures.

Rev. C. O. STADSKLOV,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Compulsory Military Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. R. POAGE
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

LETTER FROM A CONSTITUENT

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter I have received from a little-business man relative to the effect of compulsory military service. I do not do this as an argument against compulsory military service. The gentleman who wrote this letter has, himself, served in the military service of the United States. I know that he joins me in a common desire to do everything possible to protect America. One important factor in protecting our country is the avoidance of any unnecessary disruption of our economic life. This letter so clearly points out the position of the little man that I insert it in the hope that it may help in the shaping of a fair and constructive selective-service bill.

The letter is as follows:

CORYELL COUNTY NEWS,
Gatesville, Tex., August 18, 1940.

Congressman W. R. POAGE,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR BOB: I wanted to write you about this. The selective-service bill.

I believe it would be better, and I think a lot of others do, to take 'em all, from 18 to 65 or some similar brackets, and have more exemptions.

Too, in reference to the folks getting their jobs back. That's O. K. But listen:

There are probably thousands of corporations who probably, in the East and North, who employ even more thousands of people. They could probably run their businesses without the "head men." Many of these, too, will get large, liberal Government contracts for expansion, housing for workers, etc.

But the single proprietorship, like so very, very many we have in the South and West. Also, there are many small employers in the United States of America, probably tens of thousands, who employ more tens of thousands employees.

These single proprietorships, many of them, are managed by one man, and this one man is in the selective-service age. He may have as many as 50 or 100 employees, but most of them, like our little place, have 4 or 5, or even up to a dozen. If these go to take the training, their businesses will, 9 out of 10, fold up, and their employees will be out of a job. Too, this same bracket of single proprietors or small businesses have no chance whatsoever of getting contracts for anything for the Government, and yet when the high taxes are passed around the bulk of the taxes will be paid by them. Of course, the "big boys" will pay a larger percentage each, but there are fewer of them. Many of them will have Government contracts, will have Government loans, and their profits on war orders will be plenty.

For the little man and for everyone, for that matter, why not have the draft from 18 to 65, and make more exemptions.

Yours very truly,

W. MAT JONES.

The Middle West and Defense Industries

REMARKS
OF
HON. CLYDE T. ELLIS
OF ARKANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, on August 23 much publicity was given through an Associated Press story to a statement of the Pittsburgh Commission for Industrial Expansion charging "that political pressure was being used to obtain Government (defense) plants for nine Midwestern States unsuited to Industry."

Acting Manager Charles E. Robinson, according to the article, even went so far as to write Hon. W. S. Knudsen of the National Defense Advisory Commission protesting the actions of Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oklahoma, North Dakota, and South Dakota in their efforts to obtain that same equitable distribution of new defense industries which they were assured in the beginning would be forthcoming.

Shame on you, Mr. Robinson, and your commission! Fortunately, the good people of Pittsburgh, through their able and esteemed Members of Congress, do not act that way.

Already Pennsylvania has received out of the vast billions we have appropriated for national defense $182,835,551. Pittsburgh alone has received $12,806,480. Arkansas has received exactly nothing.

We love you, Pittsburgh—marvel at your indeterminable industries. We are proud that we of these nine States constitute one-sixth of your domestic market.

You, too, were once a struggling small town "out west." But what have you that we have not? Coal and iron and oil and gas and waterpower. We have them all in unlimited quantities. To these my own State of Arkansas alone can add the strategic materials of antimony, manganese, and mercury and the critical material, aluminum, of which she has 90 percent of the Nation's deposits.

Here are some of the estimates for Arkansas alone:

Coal, smokeless, 1,510,003,844 short tons in 848 years.
Gas, 1,262,626,460 M cubic feet in 245 years.
Oil, 480,496,295 barrels a year, inexhaustible.
Water power, potentially 2,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually.
Antimony, 5,000 tons since its recent discovery.
Bauxite, 25,000,000 long tons in 162 years.
Lead, under 5 counties.
Manganese, underlies 10 large counties.
Mercury, underlies 6 counties.
Asphalt, vast deposits.
Barite, 430 years.
Chalk and chalk marls, underly 6 counties.
Clays, commercial, 13 counties.
Glass sand, throughout the Ozarks.
Gypsum, 2 counties.
Lignite, 44,019,000 short tons.
Limestone, unlimited.
Marble, including only black deposit outside of Belgium, unlimited.
Novaculite, unlimited.
Rutile, vast reserves.
Sand and gravel, unlimited.
Sandstone, unlimited.
Slate, unlimited.
Tripoli, vast reserves.
Zinc, vast deposits.
Forest products, 40,500,000,000 board feet annually.
Cotton, food products, and livestock—rank well among the State.

AGRICULTURAL?

Yes, Mr. Robinson, as you say, we are primarily agricultural. And may I list for you some of the reasons why we are:

Freight rates: Suppose you shipped us a stove on which the freight would be $5. Suppose we shipped the same stove back to Pittsburgh over the same railroad, same distance. The freight would be not $5 but $8.75. Can there be any justice in that? Our freight rates on manufactured products are 75 percent higher than yours over the same roads, same distances. Could any industry survive this?

Power rates: That infernal octopus known as the holding companies is bleeding my people of Arkansas today in overcharges on the electricity they consume; $5,000,000 annually. Can any industry stand this?

Favoritism to special interests: Practices of our Government in past administrations have resulted in unfair accumulations of vast fortunes in such families as your Mellons at the expense of the people of the Middle West. Can we long stand this?

My people have not forgotten how certain interests in New England became fabulously rich at the expense partially of the Middle West during the last war.

Industrial tariffs: We of the Middle West have long helped to pay for the high protective tariffs which most of your industries enjoy. We pay you a profit while making none ourselves. Of course, industries cannot prosper in a territory like this. Can we long survive under this unequal trade balance?

Low farm prices: Our farm prices today are only 79 percent of parity. That means that for every dollar's worth of food which you in Pittsburgh buy from us you give us only 79 cents with which to buy a dollar's worth of what you have to sell. No wonder some of your industries have until recently been running only part time. Can we in the Middle West or even you in Pittsburgh long survive under such conditions?

All this helps to explain the business chart reflecting new passenger-car sales of the Nation which by a strange coincidence appeared in the same papers that carried the Associated Press story. Your increase in Pennsylvania, as compared to the same period in 1939, was 41 percent. The increase for the United States was 28 percent. The increase for Arkansas was 3.6 percent.

MIDWEST STRATEGICALLY SAFER

Suppose we should be invaded. Military experts agree that your section and your industries would be the prize catch. Would not it be far better to take a lesson from France, decentralize our defense factories, and locate at least part of them in the invulnerable and impregnable agricultural areas west?

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE COMMISSION IS SYMPATHETIC

Mr. Gano Dunn, senior consultant for the National Defense Commission, wrote me on August 21 in part as follows:

> The National Defense Commission is in favor of as broad a distribution as possible of powder plants, munitions factories, and other national-defense activities. * * * They [the War Department] assured me that they had well in mind the availability of Arkansas for future plants and the fact that up to the present time none had been located there.

WHO WILL PAY THE BILL?

After all, will not we in these nine States help to pay the bill for these vast expenditures?

KANSAS CITY MEETING

Yes; we are having a little meeting out at Kansas City Friday. Practically every section of these nine States will be represented. Not only will we organize in an effort to convince the Government of the advantages of the Middle West for the location of some of the defense industries, but we are going to see if we can get together also in an effort to eliminate our freight-rate discriminations and to develop our natural water power.

Better pitch in, Pittsburgh, and help us pull. What is good for us is good for you for we are your market.

Importance of Government Stand-By Plants

REMARKS
OF
HON. JERRY VOORHIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times for August 19 published an editorial entitled "The State of Our Defense," which, after pointing with pride to our Navy, goes on to deplore the rate of progress being made in other branches of defense. Among other things the editorial points out with regret that: "Our gigantic 1918 production capacity of explosives has vanished and we must erect new plants altogether." Why? Because that capacity was not Government stand-by capacity; because it was not kept in readiness to meet an emergency like the present; because mistakes were made then as I am afraid they are being made now.

In the next paragraph the editorial states that "Our Government arsenals are the only ones that are ready to plunge ahead," and, overlooking the major conclusion to be drawn from this fact, criticizes the President because the 48-hour week was not instituted sooner.

Then the Times does what we would naturally expect. It says that the failure of Congress to enact amortization legislation is the cause of the defense program not having gone forward more rapidly.

Of course, everyone knows this amortization legislation is going to pass and in cases where it applies to corporations expending their own money for additional plants which is to be useful only during the emergency there should be little opposition.

It is a very different proposition, however, where a company gets a loan from the Government to build the plant, then the War Department adds enough to the price it pays for the material to liquidate the loan, then 20 percent of the cost of the plant is deducted from gross income every year as an amortization allowance, and then finally the company keeps the plant. This seems to me absolutely unjust. In such a case the plant has just been given away to the company and another 1918 experience is in prospect.

But the obvious moral to be drawn from these facts brought out in the Times editorial is that what is needed is more Government arsenals, more Government stand-by plants ready to be used for emergency defense production upon a moment's notice and available to do the kind of short-time peak-demand business which private industry cannot be expected to accommodate itself to unless unreasonable, costly, and time-consuming concessions are made by the Government. There is a clearly right way to meet the problem where additional plant or equipment is required. As a matter of fact, the R. F. C. is ready today to finance for the Government of the United States necessary plants in which immediately we could proceed with this defense program. Such plants or equipment could be leased to private manufacturers, who would run them. But all the fuss about amortization and risk of private capital would be avoided. And we would not be caught this way again. This is not a matter of interference with private business. It is a matter of having Government plants do the job that does not and never can fit with the methods private industry must follow.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the text of this New York Times editorial in order that it may be fairly presented.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

The editorial follows:

THE STATE OF OUR DEFENSE

There are ample grounds for the dissatisfaction expressed by voters in the latest Gallup survey with the progress of our national defense program to date. As a result of a careful and itemized study, Mark S. Watson in the Baltimore Sun arrives at the conclusion that "for fully a year in the future the Army will remain tragically unprepared for any serious defensive endeavor against a powerful foe." The best situation exists with regard to the Navy, which "could go confidently into action tomorrow against a foe of its own size." But this is because the mere existence of the fleet and its constant assignment to sea duty have always compelled it to be fully armed and almost fully equipped, based, and manned. Our present fleet has 397 war vessels (including 15 battleships), with a total tonnage of 1,330,415. But though we are now building 136 more war vessels, totaling 890,690 tons, none of these is now at hand or coming right away. As for any of the ships in the vast 2-ocean Navy which has only just been authorized, few of them exist even on paper, and their construction will require 5 years or more.

Our airplane production is disappointing to those who believed that 1 manufacturer alone could turn out "1,000 planes a day," to those who talk of 50,000 planes a year or even of 25,000 a year—a rate which apparently cannot be reached until 1942. But Mr. Knudsen has made it known that our August deliveries of military and transport planes will total 895, of which 396 will be for our Army and Navy, 236 for Britain, 84 for South American countries, and 179 for commercial companies. The last have a potential military use. By November we shall be getting 1,000 military planes a month; by January, 1,500 a month.

It is difficult to sum up the state of our defense production in a few words because, as Mr. Watson points out, there are 70,000 items of Army supplies, of which no fewer than 1,200 are critical—i. e., not in commercial production and not available except from specifically equipped plants. This means that there are many possibilities of a bottleneck in one direction rendering futile great progress in another. Among the items in which we are far behind are heavy tanks, heavy machine guns, and antiaircraft artillery. We have only a start in the acquisition of 37-millimeter guns (for low-flying planes) and almost nothing in the way of 90-millimeter cannon (for high-flying bombers, particularly).

The difficulties of the problem are evident in connection with the fire-control mechanism, upon the perfection of which depends the precision of the entire antiaircraft gun. There continues a very grave shortage of craftsmen who can work in optical glass. On one of the orders sent through last month deliveries are not expected until 1943. Our gigantic 1918 production capacity of explosives has vanished, and we must erect new plants altogether. This the Government is doing. "But not a pound of powder has come from any new plant in 3 months, and not a pound will come from them until spring."

In view of this, it seems astonishing, as Mr. Watson remarks, that with full knowledge of our backward condition in ordnance, and with our Government arsenals the only ones of importance ready to plunge ahead, these arsenals, at the President's insistence, against the advice of his own Army and Navy officials, clung to a 40-hour week until only a week ago, when finally Secretary Stimson was able to put into effect a program calling for a 6-day 48-hour week and three shifts a day. And Congress has not yet passed essential amortization legislation to protect manufacturers against losses on specially created war plants that may suddenly become obsolete. Such political bottlenecks could easily have been avoided.

One moral stands out in this review of the actual state of our defenses. Time is vital to us to make our defense program a reality, to turn "on order" into "in hand." The one thing that can surely give us this time, against the one threat that brought our whole new defense program into being, is the continued resistance of Great Britain to the onward march of the aggressor nations. To fail to lend promptly to Great Britain the aid which both of our political parties have promised would be obvious folly. It would make our whole new defense effort itself illogical and pointless, for we should be refusing to reduce or delay the very contingency against which we are arming in a race with time.

Community Emergency and Defense Plan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HARRY R. SHEPPARD
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, none is wise enough at this hour to predict with confidence the immediate or future effect of war in Europe and the East on our country and its people. Stark events of the past few months, however, do reveal the rapidity with which a nation may become engulfed in the mad struggle and the tragedy which befalls the unprepared. These same events have written in flaming words against a smoke-choked sky the need for understanding of the destructive forces loose in the world; the need for a direct, personal interest by each of us in the welfare of our own country.

I say this calmly and with resolution, because I am convinced that, both economically and physically, our country must prepare itself now, to meet any threat of these destructive forces. We have no assurance that in all the world we, alone, shall escape the impact of these destroying influences. We hope we shall not be called on to meet such a threat. If we are not, all of us shall rejoice. If we are, we shall be prepared.

This organizing and activating of our strength involves our military forces and our civilian population. Today, when a nation is threatened with war, or goes to war, its sole job is that of war. In the past when our soldiers marched away to battle, the issues were decided in comparatively distant or localized areas and at home life went on in fairly normal manner.

Under modern air attack, every village, every acre of ground is part of the battlefield; each living being is at war. We must realize that now some 75 percent, perhaps more, of our national effort in war would be civilian, leaving only 25 percent to be centered in the operations of our land, sea, and air forces. In the first World War, we needed from 6 to 10 workers at home for each soldier in the trenches. Our problem was increased then, since we were producing not alone for ourselves but for our Allies. The same situation again probably would arise. Whatever the exact ratio may be, we are forced to conclude that success in modern warfare is directly proportional to the morale and productive efficiency of the civilian population.

Our democracy must use its resources in the most effective way. A thoughtful study of economic planning in the last war reveals weaknesses which must be avoided. The problem today is not just economic. The world is smaller now than in 1917. Our shores no longer are invulnerable. We must be prepared not alone to resist economic warfare, but invasion, should it ever come.

The time to plan is before that crisis arrives. And no matter how efficient that plan may appear on paper, its value in operation hinges on the acceptance of it by each of us; our appraisal of its effect on us, on our safety and our civil rights. The surest safeguard against dictatorship, military or otherwise, is an enlightened and organized people.

We must visualize our Nation as a gigantic producing organism, a mighty business engaged in creating and distributing essentials of life at the same time it prepares for or prosecutes war. Because of the complexity of this business, it must be separated into various divisions and these must in turn be skillfully coordinated so that each fits into the other like geared wheels. In this perfect pattern, the organization of industry is a civilian task. The Army and Navy must determine what they require; civilians must see that those requirements are met and at the same time protect the economic life of the country. It was Woodrow Wilson who said, "The highest and best form of efficiency is the spontaneous cooperation of a free people." To get that spontaneous cooperation, the people must be informed and assured of that freedom.

Industrial coordination will demand use of such measures as priorities, classifications, ratings, allocations, licenses, embargoes, permits, warrants, control of prices, control of foreign trade, organization of Government corporations, and like means. Each of those will affect industry and civilian life. It is obvious that the more fully the civilian population is honestly informed, the more closely it is knit together, the higher will be the morale and the more secure the foundation of our Nation under stress.

Destructive forces overseas are centralized and directed. Human beings are utilized by such forces as productive and fighting machines. Every facility—material and human—is directed to the same destructive end. Confusion and horror and suffering come to those helpless civilians who, because they are not organized, were crushed and mangled beneath those juggernauts of war. The way in which valiant defending military forces were held back and handicapped by hordes of fleeing, bewildered civilians—those who have seen that chaos—know how vital is the need for careful, long range, and intelligent civilian planning and organization.

Civilians not only must support the men in the trenches, in the air, or in the sea—they must support and perhaps defend themselves. At the same time they must keep out of the way of military forces. They must leave to them the opportunity to move swiftly, strike hard, and not be hampered by civilian population. They must keep the highways open for military use, the rails free for guns and supplies and yet carry on.

We have never in our country gone through the hazards and horrors of extensive civilian evacuation. It is difficult to visualize the problems which large-scale movement of civilians requires in (a) self-defense, (b) food and water supplies, (c) adequate transportation, (d) mobile communications facilities, (e) policing, (f) routing to avoid conflict with or hampering of military movement, and (g) mobile hospital and medical services, sanitation and the like. These are problems to be met by the smallest village, the most densely populated city.

While the regular military forces are charged with the duty of military protection and action, at times civilians may be forced to protect themselves the best they can. With these regular forces engaged in military function, offensive or defensive, and the National Guard in active service away from their home bases, the necessity for civilian home defense is obvious. The result of the lack of such defense was pitifully and starkly portrayed in France, and the value of it is being proved at this hour on the British Isles.

Patriotic and clear-thinking residents in California have been busily perfecting their plans, under the leadership of a man who by personal experience knows the task ahead of us, a man who with his own eyes has seen these destructive forces in operation in Europe.

Leadership in civilian planning and organization work is valuable. It is a golden asset to our country. Fortunately, our way of life begets such leadership. In my district in California is a typical example of such vision and foresightedness, shown in a community plan which for its clarity, simplicity, and efficiency is outstanding.

In the hope that this work of my constituents may prove helpful to every community of our Nation, I wish to present to you, with the permission of the Veterans Defense Council of Redlands, Calif., and its chairman, Bruce McDaniel, an outline of that plan:

COMMUNITY EMERGENCY AND DEFENSE PLAN OF VETERANS' DEFENSE COUNCIL, REDLANDS, CALIF.

I. ORIGIN

The Veterans' Defense Council was created by Redlands Legion Post No. 106 following careful study and recommendation of its past commanders, some 25 in number, who are engaged in all types of business and professional activities in the community.

II. DIRECTION

Direction of the council is vested in a chairman, authorized to draft a plan and to select personnel from all civic groups to administer it. All reports are made direct to the chairman.

III. CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY

The council has requested each civic organization to designate a person for contact so that each civic group is kept fully informed respecting the purpose and operations of the council.

A coordination leader has the duty to keep this contact file up to date and representatives of the civic groups informed.

IV. OBJECTIVES OF PLAN

A fully informed and solidified community, prepared to act under emergency or defense conditions, is the basic purpose of the plan. It is developed in two phases: First, organization of the community as a unit to meet emergencies other than defense, and, second, for defense action other than by established military forces but in coordination therewith. Both phases of the plan make provision for influx of residents from other areas and for evacuation of local residents to other areas.

V. COUNCIL

The council consists of 20 key men and women to whom specific duties have been delegated.

PHASE 1 (CIVILIAN ACTIVITIES)—VI. PRIMARY PROBLEMS

An experienced person (with authority to select needed assistants) is charged with the duty of being prepared immediately to handle each of the following vital problems:

1. Emergencies

A plan is devised for each separate type of emergency, both as to civilian defense and civilian security and evacuation. Each plan is based on the direction from which the danger arises, its nature and probable extent, and the method most effective to handle the civilian population under it. Since no plan can relate only to this community, adjacent areas must be contacted for coordinate action.

2. Community organization

(a) The community has been divided into precincts; precincts grouped into districts. A leader has been selected for each precinct. He or she is the contact for each precinct, the source of information.

(b) Such leader is charged with the duty to make a detailed analysis of each precinct to obtain the data set out in the attached information sheet.

(c) These data are segregated and consolidated in separate registers for immediate use of the person or persons selected to handle each problem, and for military authorities. It will be noted the data include:

(1) Location of possible gun emplacements.
(2) Reservoirs.
(3) Air-raid shelters.
(4) Strategic utilities.
(5) Special personnel.

(d) An extended map of all precincts, designating the location of the above data and strategic locations.

(e) District leaders are responsible for contact with their precinct residents.

3. Communications

(a) Protection: Plans are made for protection of telephone and telegraph communication, including possible emergency power in event the regular source is eliminated or reduced.

(b) Substitution: In event of disruption of regular channels of communication, provisions are made for courier service and two-way mobile radio communication between a central point and key points for each district.

(c) Communication contacts: Each district leader is a key contact man, must keep residents of his district together and informed, and responsible for courier and radio service for his district. These men must be trained by an experienced radio and signal communications person so that in event of evacuation (together with policing and evacuee registration) the civilian population will be kept informed; properly policed so as to avoid congestion and hysteria, and to keep major highways and strategic points free for military uses.

4. Water supply

(a) Protection: Provisions for policing sources of water for domestic use and power.

(b) Reserve supply: Data showing available reserve supply in event service is disrupted.

(c) Substitute power: Plans to substitute sources of power (such as tractors, etc.) for use on pumps in event power is disrupted. Previous plans to shift from one type of power to another are imperative.

5. Light and power

(a) Protection: Provisions for policing.

(b) Substitution: Substitute sources which are available must be available for immediate use. Previous plans to shift from one type of power to another are imperative.

6. Gasoline and fuel supplies

(a) A record must be made showing the normal supply of gasoline, oil, and Diesel oil which would be available to the community in event the source of supply is curtailed or stopped; plans for utilizing such supply to maximum advantage prepared.

(b) All persons engaged in distributing these products should be requested to keep their tanks filled to maximum volume. In connection with this survey, suggestion has been made that all plane location guides, such as direction arrows and town names, be removed from tanks and buildings.

7. Food supply

(a) Reserves: Analysis of reserve supplies in local stores to determine how long the average supplies will last. Stores are requested to keep inventories as high as possible of basic foods. Available livestock and poultry are noted for emergency food uses.

(b) Family supplies: Each family is being advised of the minimum requirements needed per person per day; of the type of food best suited for use in case a family is required to move, and requested to have available a minimum supply for a 10-day period.

(c) Supplies: Plans for best utilization of reserve supplies. These include policing of stores and food warehouses.

(d) Kitchens: Locations, equipment, and fuel for community kitchens. Trucks for moving and personnel for policing.

8. Registration and billeting

(a) Registrar: A registrar is responsible for registering civilian population in event of evacuation or if outside residents enter the community.

(b) Map: A precinct survey and city building map shows the location and extent of available billeting facilities. Billeting is under direction of the registrar.

9. Medical services and supplies

(a) Personnel: All available medical personnel is registered. They are directed by a medical leader. This includes nurses.

(b) Supplies: Normal available supplies in local drug stores and medical offices and hospitals are recorded as to amount and location.

(c) Hospitalization: Utilization of local hospitals and plans for field stations are under the same direction. Emergency power and light required.

Policing and transportation are assigned from the personnel pool.

10. Roads

Maps showing main and subhighways are prepared. Routes to be followed are numbered so that interference with military operations will be reduced to a minimum. District leaders are kept informed as to routes to be used.

11. Sanitation

(a) Local: In event of disruption of water supplies, instructions for sanitation are ready.

(b) Incoming: In event of movement of residents from other areas into the community, proper sanitation facilities will be available.

(c) Evacuation: Sanitation facilities en route will be directed by the sanitation personnel.

(d) Supplies: Required chemicals, etc., for sanitation use are recorded and available under control of sanitation personnel.

12. Policing

(a) Personnel for policing, in coordination with the regular police force, is registered and assigned to each type of service.

13. Transportation

(a) Civilian: Each precinct and district leader is responsible for the residents of his precinct and district. The number and capacity of automobiles and trucks per district are recorded. Needs beyond the facilities of one district are to be supplied (if available) from the nearest or other district. School busses, etc., are recorded and locations known.

(b) Supplies: Movement of supplies is anticipated and provisions made for assignment of trucks. In this connection, all draft horses in the area are recorded as well as wagons available.

(c) Fodder: Supplies of fodder for saddle and draft horses are recorded.

14. Arms and ammunition

(a) Arms: The number, location and caliber of arms in the community are recorded. This includes arms owned by civilians and available in local stores.

(b) Ammunition: Same as for arms.

(c) Such facilities will be collected and placed in central point for use under planned direction in coordination with military authority.

15. Rail facilities, bridges

Personnel is charged with protection of rail facilities, bridges, and roads.

16. Subversive activities

Residents are requested to submit all data respecting subversive activities to the chairman. Such data are routed to F. B. I. through established channels. Every effort is exerted to avoid independent action so as to have these matters handled by experienced personnel. The cooperation of everyone is solicited in reporting suspects, together with available data.

17. Fire protection

In cooperation with the fire department, personnel is registered for assignment to assist in fire-protection work.

VII. PERSONNEL POOL

All persons willing to serve where needed are registered, together with data showing type of service for which best fitted. Assignments to duty are made from the personnel pool.

PHASE 2 (DEFENSE)

1. It must be recognized that civilian defense must be coordinated with military operations. Utilization of the civilian defense mechanism depends on the conditions arising.

2. Arms and ammunition available should be registered; must be segregated for use of trained personnel and assigned only for specific use.

3. Personnel: Residents registered in the personnel pool are selected for the defense corps. Such personnel is restricted to men of previous experience; unquestioned loyalty to their country. Such personnel will cease to be active in event State or Federal Government furnishes such defense protection.

4. Organization: Local defense corps under direction of the chairman. Experienced men are designated for training and leadership purposes.

5. Plans: Point of defense and nature thereof must be planned for each anticipated type of emergency.

Benefits of the Social Security Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES F. O'CONNOR

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House, it occurs to me that this is an opportune time to take stock and to review the benefits received by the people of the Nation as a whole, and of my own State of Montana, in particular, as a result of the 5 years of operation of what is known as the Social Security Act.

I want to say in advance that no one claims perfection for this humane and necessary program. In addition, I maintain and have maintained that it is inadequate to meet the needs of the people which the program is meant to benefit. However, it is the first attempt—and we must crawl before we can walk—of the Federal Government to provide for Federal old-age and survivors' insurance, unemployment insurance, Federal-State public assistance, public-health services, vocational rehabilitation, maternal and child health and welfare, maternal and child-health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services. You will note that the blind and the unfortunate and the crippled children are included in this program as well as the health of children and their welfare.

FIVE YEARS OF PROGRESS UNDER THE SOCIAL-SECURITY PROGRAM

Increased security for Americans has been the result of 5 years of operation of the Social Security Act. The fifth anniversary of this far-reaching measure, observed on August 14 of this year, saw better than one in every two people in this country directly protected by its old-age and survivors' insurance, unemployment insurance, and public-assistance benefits, and every member of the population receiving indirect benefits in the form of protection of health and welfare and increased stabilization of purchasing power.

Over $3,000,000,000 has been paid out to individuals during these 5 years—$3,000,000,000 that, besides improving individual living conditions, has aided business and the community because it has been piped right back into the stream of business from which it was drawn. These $3,000,000,000 represent modest payments, usually weekly or monthly, that have helped families to pay for the things they must have—food and shelter, clothing, and other every-day household needs. In addition, expenditures made under the health and welfare programs—maternal and child health and welfare services, vocational rehabilitation of physically disabled adults, and public-health services to prevent and eliminate disease—total well over $100,000,000 from combined Federal, State, and local sources. Everybody is the beneficiary of these welfare programs which mean better health, less illness, and fewer individuals who cannot take their rightful place as productive members of society. Health is vital to security—a sick man or woman cannot earn his own support or add to the wealth of the Nation by his efforts; each individual who is kept healthy by these health measures or who is restored to productive channels by vocational retraining becomes thereby an asset to his community instead of a liability.

Money spent under the social-security program consequently not only makes for greater individual and family security but also represents one of the most worth-while investments for its own future that this Nation could make.

Let us examine each of the 10 separate measures set up by the Social Security Act to strengthen and extend social security for the American people. There are, first, two broad social-insurance programs which protect workers and their families against lack of income when loss of a job, death, or old age interrupts a man's earning power.

FEDERAL OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS' INSURANCE

Federal old-age and survivors' insurance, under which 50,000,000 workers have social-security accounts, provides monthly benefit payments for life to qualified workers over 65 when they retire, and their wives of the same age, and for their children while they are young and dependent. It also provides broad insurance protection for the widows and young children or aged dependent parents of insured workers who die. These monthly benefits were begun in January of this year as a result of amendments adopted by Congress last year, and during the first 6 months of payments claims for such benefits had been approved for 102,941 people, amounting to $1,924,000 a month.

In my own State of Montana nearly 200,000 people, or one-half of the residents, have social-security accounts under this system. For each of these 200,000 account holders there is, in addition to individual protection for his own old age, protection for his family dependents. By the end of June 1,279 people in Montana were receiving monthly benefits, amounting to $5,370 a month.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The other insurance program, which provides a family income during periods of joblessness, is a cooperative Federal-State enterprise, now operating on a Nation-wide basis. Unemployment compensation laws in every State under which some 28,000,000 workers have earned wage credits toward unemployment benefits provide weekly out-of-work payments to the unemployed. The Federal Government pays the full cost of administering these State laws. By the end of June, over a billion dollars had been distributed to jobless workers since payments under this program first began, in many States a period of less than 2 years. In combination with the unemployment compensation program, the public employment services in every State which place workers in available jobs, free of charge, constitute an effective method of building employment security. Today, every State has a free employment service which provides placement for workers in all lines of work, whether or not they are insured under the State unemployment compensation law. Federal grants aid States to maintain such offices. These offices have filled nearly 20,000,000 jobs in the past 5 years.

In Montana 105,000 workers are covered by the unemployment compensation law. In the year during which benefits have been payable there, a total of $2,955,000 paid to those who became unemployed has helped to tide them over between jobs.

FEDERAL-STATE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

The public-assistance program provides direct cash payments monthly through Federal-State cooperation to nearly 3,000,000 people—1,983,900 of the aged, 807,900 dependent children, and 48,000 blind. All States and territories now have plans for old-age assistance, and over three-fourths of the States have plans for aid to dependent children and aid to the blind. Total payments under these programs from Federal, State, and local funds, come to $1,899,154,185—$1,502,009,565 for the aged, $46,990,532 for the blind, and $350,154,088 for dependent children.

There has been spent for this purpose in the State of Montana alone $12,350,000. Of this total $10,240,000 went to the old folks, $73,000 to the blind, and $2,037,000 to dependent children. Currently, public-assistance payments are being made to about 18,200 people in Montana, including 12,200 aged, 200 blind, and 5,800 dependent children.

PUBLIC-HEALTH SERVICES

The public-health program provides for Federal grants to States to encourage and aid the adoption and strengthening of State public-health plans. Federal grants alone during this period come to $36,610,000, not including a large amount of money spent in the States drawn from State and local sources.

In Montana, during these 5 years, over $625,000 has been spent to develop and extend State public-health services.

This includes $229,000 in Federal money and $400,000 from State and local funds.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

One of the most important of the programs from a social viewpoint is that for vocational rehabilitation. Also operated on a Federal-State basis, this program includes medical diagnosis and treatment, supplying of artificial limbs, and vocational training for physically disabled adults who can be fitted into normal productive work. Many of those who have received rehabilitation service are today earning more as a result of their training than they did before they became disabled.

Each year some 10,000 individuals are pronounced completely rehabilitated and restored to useful work. In a year between 40,000 and 50,000 individuals are in the process of receiving various rehabilitation services. All told, some 42,000 individuals were completely rehabilitated in the first 4 years after the Social Security Act was passed, and during that period rehabilitation services were provided for a total of nearly 180,000 disabled individuals. To provide these services cost the Federal and State Governments over $13,775,000.

Figures by States show a similar record of service. In my home State of Montana, more than $130,000 has been spent in 4 years for rehabilitation services to nearly 1,000 people. Some 240 physically disabled individuals have been completely rehabilitated during this period and placed in jobs they can do.

MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH AND WELFARE

The maternal and child health and welfare program includes three different services to help mothers and children—maternal and child health services, services for crippled children, and child-welfare services.

MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH SERVICES

The first of these—maternal and child health services—provides health supervision by doctors and public-health nurses for mothers and children, especially in rural areas and in areas suffering from economic distress. This health supervision includes the education of parents and others on the safeguarding of the health of mothers and children. In a few local areas medical care and home delivery nursing service are provided for mothers in families which cannot obtain such care unaided. Federal grants made to the States to foster the provision of these services total over $16,000,000 so far. Montana has received over $223,000 in Federal money under this program.

SERVICES FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

The program for the care of crippled children calls for locating crippled children and providing medical, surgical, and corrective care, diagnosis and facilities for hospitalization, and aftercare. Each State has a plan for providing such care and receives Federal grants to assist it in maintaining and extending its work. Nearly $12,000,000 has been granted to the States for this purpose. Federal grants to Montana for services for crippled children have come to more than $138,000.

CHILD-WELFARE SERVICES

Federal money is also given to the States to help them establish and extend, especially in rural areas, welfare services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children and children in danger of becoming delinquent. Over $5,500,000 in Federal grants has been given to the States for the development of child-welfare work. Under this program, Montana has received $70,000.

This imposing array of millions of people benefited and millions of dollars spent should not obscure the essential value of this program. All this money has been spent and all this activity has been directed toward one major objective: that of protecting and extending some measure of security to American families in all walks of life. The record of achievement in the first 5 years is a praiseworthy one, but we must not forget that continued and increasing effort is required if we are to reach the goal we have set for ourselves.

I might also state that it is our first line of defense to promote the health and welfare of our people. A healthy, strong, and vigorous Nation cannot and will not be overcome. I will at all times vigorously oppose the sending of our young men to fight in foreign wars, but I want to help prepare them from the standpoint of health and vigor to defend our country against all comers. One of my chief reasons for desiring to remain in Congress is to assist in perfecting, extending, and enlarging security to the American people regardless of occupation and also to bring about the enactment of legislation which will provide for a Federal old-age pension that will be sufficiently large to enable our aged people, in their declining years, to have a few of the comforts as well as the necessities of life. I want to assure the people that as long as I am a Member of Congress I will continue my efforts to increase the security and protection for the aged, unemployed, blind, dependent, crippled children, and the health generally of the public.

St. Lawrence Seaway

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BERNARD J. GEHRMANN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

RESOLUTION BY THE SUPERIOR (WIS.) FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I am asking for permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution adopted by the Superior Federation of Labor, urging that immediate steps be taken by our Government to complete an agreement between the United States and Canada which would construct a deep seaway connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean by means of a canal along the St. Lawrence River route.

I have done all I could to bring this about as a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, when I was appointed as a delegate to represent the State at several national and international meetings. Since coming to Congress, I have been a member of a group of Congressmen that has worked untiringly to bring these two North American countries together with the hope that actual work on this most necessary project may soon be started. It seems to me that it is even more necessary now than ever that these two countries cooperate closer than ever for their mutual benefit. I hope that this agreement can be reached and confirmed by the Senate before this Congress adjourns.

The resolution follows:

Whereas for many years an effort has been made to obtain a deep seaway connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean by means of a canal along the St. Lawrence River route; and

Whereas various States not adversely affected by, nor concerned in the construction of the canal, have refused to support us in our desire and need to obtain this means of direct ocean transportation and cheap power therewith; and

Whereas our various Senators and Congressmen have during these many years assisted in or permitted the passage of legislation favoring those States whose Senators and congressional Representatives have wrongfully, willfully, and maliciously refused and denied us, without just cause, this much-needed national improvement and the benefits thereof; and

Whereas such shamefully unjust and detrimental action is now worthy of note and attention on the part of our honorable United States Senators and congressional Representatives, who favor this legislation and the creation of such a canal for the greater good of our country and its people; and

Whereas they have within their power the right to refuse and deny to such unjust Senators and Representatives in Congress, any further assistance in matters affecting the welfare of their States or until such time as such objection to the enactment of legislation favoring the deep seaway is withdrawn and enacted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Superior Federation of Labor, That our various Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to take immediate steps to obtain for our Nation this much-needed improvement; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event of the failure or refusal of Congress to pass or favorably act upon the proposed canal and the required legislation therefor, that our United States Senators and Representatives in Congress, now favoring the same, be requested to oppose any and all legislation favoring States whose Senators and Representatives refuse or fail to cooperate and assist us; and be it further

Resolved, That they be requested to continue such opposition until such time as the proposed legislation for the deep-sea way be passed and the construction thereof assured; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to all parties of interest for consideration, publication, and display thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That a similar resolution be prepared for adoption by the Wisconsin Federation of Labor and presented thereto by our delegate at the next regular meeting thereof, and that the resolution so presented contain a similar provision for proper presentation to the American Federation of Labor at its next meeting.

The South Heard From Again on the Poll Tax

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE E. GEYER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

LETTER FROM MRS. WILLIAM T. GAYLE, JR., OF ATLANTA, GA., AND STATEMENT ON POLL TAX

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert in the RECORD a letter from Mrs. William T. Gayle, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., and a statement on the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting. This statement is signed by 100 prominent southern women from those States which have this voting restriction. We all recognize many of these signatures and are not surprised that these women are out in front working as usual for this extension of democracy even though they are able themselves to pay the poll tax.

Members of the House can assist these women in bringing a fuller democracy to their States by signing the petition, No. 34, on the Speaker's desk.

The letter and the statement with the signatures are printed below.

ATLANTA, GA., August 24, 1940.

Congressman LEE E. GEYER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GEYER: It is my privilege to send to you the statement of 100 southern women who deplore the virtual disfranchisement of countless women in those States which still require payment of a poll tax before voting.

These women, representative of many fields of activity and interest, are outstanding leaders in clubs and organizations in the poll-taxed States.

It is fitting that their expression of deep concern should come to the Congress on an anniversary marking the end of one great struggle to extend suffrage—the twentieth anniversary of the woman's suffrage amendment.

The expression of these thoughtful and influential women indicates the great sentiment rapidly developing in these States for the abolition of the poll tax.

Very sincerely yours,

Mrs. WILLIAM T. GAYLE, Jr.

STATEMENT OF 100 SOUTHERN WOMEN ON THE TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NINETEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Twenty years ago today, the right to vote was secured to the women of this Nation through the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. For years, America's women worked with devotion and courage toward this goal. We now realize that the victory was only partly won. We are gravely concerned that 20 years later countless thousands of women are still, in effect, disfranchised in those Southern States which require payment of a poll tax before voting.

We, the undersigned women of these poll-taxed States, are proud of our States and seek through the removal of this barrier a fuller development of the democratic process. Therefore, we call on the Congress, on this anniversary of the first great step toward woman suffrage, for legislation which will obviate for voting in Federal elections the requirement of payment of a poll tax.

Cornelia S. Adair, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Theodore F. Adams, Richmond, Va.; Ruth A. Allen, Austin, Tex.; Jessie Daniel Ames, Decatur, Ga.; Eleanor Copenhaver Anderson, Marion, Va.; Mary Sanford Ault, Knoxville, Tenn.; Louise H. Ballerstedt, Elgin, Tex.; Mary C. Barker, Atlanta, Ga.; Gladys Boone, Sweetbriar, Va.; Mrs. Carl Brinkman, Lucedale, Miss.; Mrs. Ralph Butler, Dallas, Ga.; Nuwella Calvin, Galveston, Tex.; Mayola S. Center, College Park, Ga.; Louise O. Charlton, Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. James H. Chesnutt, Hot Springs, Ark.; Mrs. Lawrence Coe, Memphis, Tenn.; Lillian W. Collier, Mumford, Tex.; Leny M. Comfort, Durant, Miss.; Clara C. Conroy, Albany, Ga.; Mrs. J. C. Cox, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. Henry W. Decker, Richmond, Va.; Martha Dodd, Round Hill, Va.; Mrs. Wm. E. Dodd, Jr., Round Hill, Va.; Mollie Dowd, Birmingham, Ala.; Virginia F. Durr, Birmingham, Ala.; Josephine F. Eddy, Montevallo, Ala.; Mary A. Elliott, Knoxville, Tenn.; Hallie Farmer, Montevallo, Ala.; Mrs. Laura Davis Fitzhugh, Augusta, Ark.; Bertha M. Fuller, Little Rock, Ark.; Lucy Gage, Nashville, Tenn.; Betty Gray Gibson, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. E. H. Green, Cleveland, Miss.; Evelyn Hanna, Thomaston, Ga.; Mrs. John M. Hanna, Dallas, Tex.; Lulu Daniel Hardy, Gulfport, Miss.; Julia Collier Harris, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Latham Hatcher, Richmond, Va.; Katharine H. Hawes, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Albert E. Hill, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. Claude Hill, Austin, Tex.; Mrs. William H. Hogue, Houston, Tex.; Sarah H. Hood, Knoxville, Tenn.; Gertrude Horsley, Kingsport, Tenn.; Elizabeth Hughes, Houston, Tex.; Mabel Williams Hughes, Arlington, Tenn.; Ellen Atwood Ives, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. Louis Kaufman, Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. Charles B. Kennamer, Sr., Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. C. D. Killebrew, Fairhope, Ala.; Stella McGehee Landis, Mississippi; Stella Lanham, Weatherford, Tex.; Helen M. Lilienthal, Norris, Tenn.; Katherine D. Lindsay, Norfolk, Va.; Jean MacGillivray, Jackson, Miss.; Mrs. Delbert M. Mann, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. Julius Mark, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. John D. Marlin, Tullahoma, Tenn.; Mrs. L. F. Martin, Statesboro, Ga.; Lucy R. Mason, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Devereaux F. McClatchey, Jr., Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. W. P. McDermott, Little Rock, Ark.; Marianne E. Meade, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Wm. Mitch, Birmingham, Ala.; Edwina Mitchell, Montgomery, Ala.; Myra Page, Norfolk, Va.; Medora P. Perkerson, Atlanta, Ga.; Thelma Stevens, Nashville, Tenn.; Anna Perlitz, San Antonio, Tex.; Mary Porter, Newport, Ark.; Martha Ragland, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. Homer P. Rainey, Austin, Tex.; Mrs. Arthur Raper, Decatur, Ga.; Evelyn Raskin, Lynchburg, Va.; Charlotte M. Rhorer, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. C. E. Rogers, Johnson City, Tenn.; Mrs. Wm. Cory Ross, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mary U. Rothrock, Knoxville, Tenn.; Constance Rumbough, Jackson, Miss.; Ina Scherrebeck, Nashville, Tenn.; Elizabeth Cecil Scott, Richmond, Va.; Mirth W. Sherer, Fort Worth, Tex.; Lillian E. Smith, Clayton, Ga.; Paula Snelling, Clayton, Ga.; Mrs. Alex W. Spence, Dallas, Tex.; Mrs. Frank W. Spencer, Savannah, Ga.; Mrs. Carl V. Stafford, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. A. D. Stewart, Jackson, Miss.; Olive M. Stone, Richmond, Va.; Willie Hughes Tarpley, Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. Angus M. Taylor, Birmingham, Ala.; Lucinda Lee Terry, Roanoke, Va.; Mrs. Albert Thomas, Auburn, Ala.; Mrs. J. D. Thomas, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. M. E. Tilly, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. R. L. Turman, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. L. O. Turner, Atlanta, Ga.; Bethann T. Van Ness, Nashville, Tenn.; Florence van Sickler, Atlanta, Ga.; May Cravath Wharton, Pleasant Hill, Tenn.; Josephine Wilkins, Atlanta, Ga.; Margaret D. Yates, Fort Worth, Tex.

AUGUST 26, 1940.

When War Comes—A Study of the Industrial Mobilization Plan

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PAUL W. SHAFER
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks, I include this timely and enlightening study of the industrial mobilization plan.

WHEN WAR COMES

All over the world there are wars and rumors of wars. All over the United States there are anguished appeals to "keep us out of war." All over the United States there is an aroused defensive state of mind—determined to save America's constitutional government and individual liberty from the ravages of war.

With destructive armaments rumbling close to our American shores, the horrible consequences of war—individually, militaristically, and economically—are causing great anxiety in the hearts of American women. They are mindful that twice before European wars involving operations in the Atlantic have, sooner or later, drawn America into them.

It, therefore, is not amazing to find all over the United States a great stirring movement, with one objective—keep us out of war. It is not a sentimental peace-at-any-cost program. It cannot be construed as the hasty handiwork of a professional pacifist. It is supported by devout American women who believe that every effort should be made to prevent the seeming path of peace from leading us again to the field of battle.

The human and monetary costs of war are appalling. They penetrate deeply into the fiber of family life. In the widespread concern about possible American participation in the European conflict, American women cannot help but reflect gravely on the terrific costs of the last World War. Women know well these facts. They have not forgotten that in the last war more than 126,000 of their fathers, brothers, husbands, and sons died or were killed in action, and that more than 234,000 were wounded. They have not forgotten that our bills for medical and hospital care of boys who fought for American democracy 25 years ago still are staggering, and that Uncle Sam has spent approximately $425,000,000 for this post-war item alone. They have not forgotten that the total cost of the war, including all items up to the present time, has exceeded $63,000,000,000.

But the cost of war cannot be measured entirely in terms of either casualties or monetary losses. War's most far-reaching effects are upon the citizen population of a nation.

Involvement in war makes necessary the development of political institutions that inevitably lead to suppression of individual freedom. He who contemplates the possibility of the entry of this country into any form of hostilities must consider not only the losses that will be entailed in physical terms, but the losses of individual freedom that necessarily ensue.

From the history of events in Europe during the past few months, and from analyses of the problems involved, it is evident that the entry of any democracy into war will eventually disrupt democratic institutions. In this day of a complex industrial society, it is practically impossible for a democracy successfully to carry on armed hostilities without, temporarily at least, losing its democratic nature. The need for some form of centralized control of the national economy is apparent, and such control is dictatorship. These facts are not pleasant to contemplate. To disregard them is to close our eyes to realities.

Not only do these two facts obtrude themselves upon our attention at this time, but a further disquieting fact becomes apparent. Once we pass under the rigors and the controls of this absolute military dictatorship in this country, no one can say when, if ever, we would return to constitutional government and the Bill of Rights.

Under these circumstances it has become imperative that the women make a special study of the conditions which, it is now recognized, would obtain if we go to war, in order to determine what would be the situation of women and children in the event of our involvement in another conflict.

So it seems timely that we ask ourselves, if war comes, is dictatorship far behind?

1. WHAT IS THE INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLAN?

It is a study by the military and naval authorities of the financial, industrial, and human resources of the Nation, and a compilation of methods of assembling those forces for concerted effort in event this Nation should become involved in war.

After the last World War had ended, a study of its history revealed that the condition of unpreparedness in which the United States was caught when we went into the war resulted in a serious delay in our actual participation in the conflict; tremendous waste through lack of organization, inexperience, and duplication of efforts; and an enormous amount of graft and corruption due to the lack of any plans or organization for control of the financial, industrial, agricultural, and general civilian activities.

As a result of the studies by the military and naval boards it was seen that some adequate plan for the control and coordination of military and civilian activities would be necessary in advance of another war. The industrial-mobilization plan was the result of these studies. The preparation of this plan included extended hearings by the House Military Affairs Committee, further studies by the Army and Navy Boards until 1928, and the creation of the War Policies Commission in 1931. The Commission began extensive hearings on March 5, 1931. In May, General MacArthur, then Chief of Staff of the United States Army, appeared before the Commission and submitted the War Department's plan for industrial mobilization. As this plan also had the general approval of the Navy Department, and as it is the basis of all subsequent industrial mobilization plans, we may pause to note certain phases of it. The original intentions of the plan should be noted and compared later with certain provisions of the more recent plans.

Referring to the resolution by which the War Policies Commission was set up, General MacArthur said:

> The first objective given in that resolution is the promotion of peace.
>
> As a "practical step, then, in the promotion of peace the War Department strives to assist in impressing upon our own people the serious and terrible nature of modern war and the obligation devolving upon every citizen" and upon every resource to participate equitably in carrying the burdens it imposes. "A widespread knowledge of these fundamental truths," backed by a program to insure a proper distribution of war's burdens, cannot fail to have a sobering influence upon any group tempted from selfish motives to urge the adoption of national policies that might eventually result in international conflict.

The quoted portion of the above paragraph serves to show that the primary purpose of the War Department's industrial mobilization plan was to educate our people to the horrors and hardships of modern warfare in an effort to promote peace.

Among his conclusions and recommendations, General MacArthur listed as follows:

> Educational programs concerning the true meaning of modern war and its certain results in human and economic wastage are conducive to promotion of peace.
>
> The economic burdens must be equalized through: * * * (e) "Prompt resumption of normal peace conditions" upon the termination of war.
>
> Congress should satisfy itself at frequent intervals as to the progress of plans under development by requiring their presentation to appropriate committees of Congress.
>
> The War Department recommends * * * a joint resolution be adopted by Congress which will make public announcements to the Nation of the policies set forth in the following conclusions. It is believed that the announcement of these principles as approved policies of the Government will—(A) Have a serious sobering effect upon every man, woman, and child when he or she contemplates the possibility of war and will assure practical and efficient peacetime preparation for the emergency of war.

These were the purposes of the first industrial mobilization plan of 1931.

The plan was revised in 1933 and again in 1936. All three of these plans are written in great detail and explain fully the composition, scope of operation, and powers of the several boards, bureaus, and commissions to be set up during an emergency due to the imminence of war or in time of war. All three print as appendixes the bills to be rushed through Congress which would put the industrial mobilization plan in motion. The industrial mobilization plan of 1939, however, is not a revision. It is a general summary of the much longer and more detailed plan of 1936. It is a carefully worded summary of the earlier plan, designed to conceal its full implications, and anyone not familiar with the 1936 plan, on which it is based, would feel little interest or alarm. In order to study the provisions of the industrial mobilization plan which will affect the civilian population in time of war we must study the 1936 plan.

II. WHAT ARE THE GENERAL PROVISIONS OF THE INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLAN?

A study of these plans discloses the different methods of control set up under various boards, commissions, and bureaus, to be effective upon the entry of the United States in a war and the enactment of the necessary enabling legislation. Under such circumstances the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, would become in fact a military despot. His orders and proclamations would have the force of law.

Under the various controls provided in the mobilization plan, the control of finance, banking, industry, labor, agriculture, commerce, and the disposition of the persons and the activities of the civilian population would rest entirely in the hands of the Chief Executive and such subordinates as he would designate to carry out his will.

The President would act through or be advised by special boards and commissions, the composition of which in every case is set forth in charts in the mobilization plan. Generally speaking, the major boards and commissions would be as follows:

At the head, the President; subordinate to him, the existing Cabinet; the executive department, the independent establishments, boards, and commissions; the national service corporations; the Advisory Defense Council; the War Resources Administration; the War Trade Administration; the War Labor Administration; the Public Relations Administration; the Selective Service Administration; other administrations when and if necessary; the Price Control Commission; the War Finance Control Commission; the War Department; the Navy Department; the Joint Board; the Army and Navy Munitions Board; and other joint boards.

To reiterate, the President, when war seemed inevitable or after the outbreak of hostilities, would request of Congress the immediate passage of enabling legislation to put the industrial-mobilization plan into effect. The result of this act would be that the orders and proclamations of the Chief Executive would have the status and force of law. Thus the President, as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States, would be clothed with full and complete dictatorial powers.

Not only would those general rights and privileges provided in the constitutional Bill of Rights, so cherished by all Americans, instantly be abrogated, but there would be an impact which completely would change daily life for every man, woman, and child. These constitutional rights would be suspended the moment the Chief Executive of the United States should declare that "an emergency due to the imminence of war" existed, and enabling legislation is enacted.

The anticipated pressure for validating legislation has begun. Congress hardly had convened on January 3 this year when the then Secretary of the Navy, Charles Edison, wrote the Speaker of the House requesting that the President's wartime powers of commandeering and procurement of ships, factories, and war materials be advanced so as to permit their exercise now in peacetime "under a proclamation of national emergency." This request was later withdrawn, but had Congress granted the request it would have meant that powers which the late President Wilson received a month before American entrance into the World War would have been given to President Roosevelt at that time.

Navy Department officials were quoted as stating the legislative recommendation was intended to "avoid confusion" and to serve as a precautionary measure. They went further and said the proposal did not mean that the Navy thought the United States would be engaged in war in the near future. Then why, ask intelligent observers, was there a move to seek wartime powers for the President, if, as he told the country on January 3, "nobody expects such an undertaking" as sending American youth to fight in Europe?

It should be borne in mind that the President is now operating under a proclamation, issued shortly after the outbreak of the European war, but described by him as "limited" in that he did not intend to invoke more than a few of the powers vested in him under the proclamation.

It is not possible in this study to go into all the provisions of the industrial mobilization plan, but the general purpose of the plan, as stated in the draft of 1936, is best indicated by the following paragraph:

The objective of any warring nation is victory, immediate and complete. It is conceivable that a war might be conducted with such regard for individual justice and administrative efficiency as to make impossible those evils whose existence in the past wars is well known. It is also conceivable that the outcome of a war so conducted might be defeat. In all plans for preparedness and policies to be pursued in event of war it must never be overlooked that while efficiency in war is desirable, effectiveness is mandatory.

In this paragraph is to be found the essence of the industrial mobilization plan. In other words, individual rights and preferences can have no place in the scheme of the Government during the emergency of the next war. Every citizen, of course, must subject himself to mandatory decrees of the military and administrative authorities.

The wording of the industrial mobilization plan on the question of which portions of the population will be required to register with the War Department when the enabling legislation should be enacted is not clear. Though all males between the ages of 18 and 45 are required to register for possible induction to the armed forces, it also seems apparent that all members of the civilian population, regardless of age or sex, who directly or indirectly could be used in the conduct of the war will also be required to register.

Though the following passage of the industrial mobilization plan is entitled "Industrial Management Provisions," it does not take much imagination to realize that regulation affecting management would also affect labor, agriculture, and the civilian population generally.

TITLE II. INDUSTRIAL MANAGEMENT PROVISIONS

This title authorizes a draft of industrial management. When in the opinion of the President the successful prosecution of the war requires it, he may establish rules and regulations for the registration of all persons in the management or control of industry. This is intended to apply to persons in executive positions who are unwilling to cooperate in the industrial war effort. In the discretion of the President registered persons in any industrial plant or industry may be brought into the service of the Government for the duration of the war and shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the War Department. However, the Secretary of War is not to interfere with the internal management of the industries. He may, in the public interest, transfer registrants to any civilian service within the jurisdiction of the War Department. The compensation of such persons industrially drafted will be paid by the Government at rates to be fixed by the President, and they may not accept any other compensation from any plant in which they render services during the war. Rules and regulations for the administration of this title would be made by the President, and penalties are provided in the bill for violations of such rules and regulations.

Note also title III:

TITLE III. WAR RESOURCES CONTROL

This title gives the President very broad powers to control all of the resources of the Nation by price fixing, licensing, rationing, requisitioning, priorities, and other measures for directing and unifying the industrial war effort.

The President, by this title, is granted discretionary wartime power and authority as follows: To fix prices; to regulate commodity exchanges; to establish a system of priorities or rationing in favor of users most vitally linked with the prosecution of the war; to provide a system of licenses for organizations or persons engaged in manufacturing, mercantile, or public-service industries; to regulate the sale, use, transportation, manufacture, or distribution of any product; to requisition any product and to sell or otherwise dispose of such products; to enforce regulations against waste, hoarding, speculation, and profiteering; to commandeer any manufacturing plant or other establishment.

III. WHAT ARE THE SPECIFIC PROVISIONS OF THE INDUSTRIAL-MOBILIZATION PLAN AFFECTING WOMEN AND CHILDREN?

These are so important that they will be reproduced verbatim from the plan itself. The bureau of women and minors is one of the 29 subdivision of the war labor administration.

The war labor administration is in turn 1 of the 5 departments of the liaison division of the War Resources Administration. The war labor administration is headed by an administrator and a deputy administrator appointed by the President.

The following passages are reproduced from pages 37, 38, and 39 of the industrial-mobilization plan of 1936:

SECTION I. BUREAU OF WOMEN AND MINORS

1. General: This bureau studies all problems peculiar to the employment of women and minors in industry and recommends regulations regarding their employment.

While the bureau is itself primarily an advisory rather than an administrative agency, the peculiar nature of its work will call for a comprehensive organization to be composed of specialists in their various fields. Both advisory and administrative agencies of the bureau will work in constant, though informal, contact with all other agencies of the War Labor Administration, particularly the employment service and the requirements and statistical bureau.

2. Advisory agencies: a. Council of housing and transportation: The council will keep informed of the progress of infiltration of women into industry and commerce, particularly where the migration of considerable numbers is involved. All migration involving change of residence is to be considered. The council's recommendations regarding the housing and transportation of these workers will consider their families also in cases where the welfare of children is involved.

b. Legal council: For several reasons, the statutes of the various States prescribe certain restrictions in the hours and conditions of employment of women and minors in industry. Other restrictions are brought about through regulations issued by various authorized Federal and State agencies, by agreements with trade unions, and in other ways. Many of these regulations and restrictions are expedient rather than necessary to the well-being of either the Nation or the workers. In a national emergency much of this expediency is lost and the operation of some of these regulations and restrictions may well be suspended.

This division has the double function of recommending in appropriate cases the suspension in whole or part of such restrictions and, with the cooperation of the division of public relations, of securing the approval of public opinion to the action taken.

3. Administrative agencies: a. Women wage earners' division: In normal times there are approximately 10,000,000 women and girls over 16 years of age employed in industry, commerce, and the professions. The specific mission of this division is to divert the greatest possible number of these, particularly those engaged in mechanical and correlated scientific work, to munitions and essential civilian industries. This task will be largely educational in cooperation with the division of public relations. The divison also must be prepared to undertake an active recruiting campaign in cooperation with the employment service for the securing, training, and infiltration of women, not gainfully employed, into industry, commerce, and auxiliary services to fill vacancies caused by the withdrawal of men to the colors and to provide for the labor expansion of many essential industries.

The work of the division will be divided among three sections:

(1) Section of women labor employed in commercial and routine office occupations: This section recommends methods to meet the needs of war and essential civilian industries for trained women. This includes the transfer of women factory workers from plants of lesser to those of greater essentiality.

(2) Section of highly trained women labor employed in administrative, professional, and scientific research positions: This section recommends methods to meet the needs of essential industries for women of exceptional training in highly specialized fields.

(3) Section of woman labor required for service with troops: This section is charged with locating women who comply with the occupational specifications of the War and Navy Departments, and aiding any agencies of these Departments which may be established for the purpose of recruiting women of such classifications for duty with the armed forces.

b. Social and economic welfare division: The accumulation of large numbers of women in restricted industrial areas to meet the labor demands of expanded essential industries presents serious problems in the maintenance of their social and economic welfare. This division through decentralized welfare units working under State organizations maintains social welfare agencies within the various industrial facilities as well as providing for social contact and aid during the leisure hours of employed women.

c. Minors division: While the employment of children under the age of 16 years in industry or agriculture will be avoided wherever possible, it must be recognized from the beginning that the nature of the emergency may require such employment in its later stages. In the earlier stages minors over 18 years of age, and in some cases over 16 years, can be utilized to advantage. The safeguarding of the morals and the physical health of such employed minors is the subject of the particular study of this division. This division further recommends regulation covering the employment of minors and their training for such employment, and lists classes of occupations from which they should be excluded.

The wording of the plan is in most cases so specific as to require no editorial comment, but we should note carefully the following salient points:

The purpose of the woman wage-earners division is to divert the 10,000,000 women and girl workers over 16 years of age from the work they are already engaged in (industry, commerce, and the professions) to work in munition factories and other industries necessary for successful completion of the war.

The woman wage-earners division has a subdivision called section of woman labor required for service with troops whose duty it is to "locate" women and "recruit" them for duty with the armed forces.

The social and economic welfare division, among its other duties, provides "for social contact and aid during leisure hours of employed women."

The minors division would be directed to take cognizance of the fact that the emergency may require the employment of children under 16 in industry or agriculture.

The legal council division of the bureau of women and minors would have a double function.

First. Recommending the suspension of legislation in various States which now restrict the hours and working conditions of women and minors in industry, which are referred to as "expedient rather than necessary."

Second. Securing approval of public opinion for such recommendation.

The Bureau of Women and Minors is one of several bureaus under the War Labor Administration. Its personnel is appointed by the President through the war labor administrator. In the words of the plan, "the bureau is in itself primarily an advisory rather than an administrative agency." Thus the provisions of the industrial mobilization plan which affect women and children will, in all probability, be administered by some other agency.

There is nowhere in the plan any provision that women will administer the details of the plan which deal with women and children, or that they will even act in an advisory manner in connection therewith.

There is no indication that women's organizations, welfare agencies, or individual women have been consulted on the details of the plan which directly affect women and minors.

IV. WHAT IS BEHIND THE SECRECY WHICH RECENTLY HAS BEEN THROWN ABOUT THE INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLAN?

The metamorphosis into a rare document of the original industrial mobilization plan, the purposes of which were to be public, educational, and to promote peace by the Nation-wide dissemination of the details of the plan to the people, has been a singular evolution. The details of the plan were recently refused the press by the Chief Executive (Wm. V. Nessly, Washington Post, Sept. 30, 1939).

On September 30 last, the President was reported in the press to have said that there would be no advantage in publishing the report of the War Resources Board, which had a brief existence following the President's declaration of a national emergency. At that time, he added, according to the press reports, that there would be no advantage in publishing plans that have been discussed for coordinating and making use of the Nation's resources in case of future emergency. In this same statement to the press, the Chief Executive stated that the last industrial mobilization plan he had seen was that of 1936.

Though it was in no way the original intention of the authors of the industrial mobilization plan to make its provisions difficult for the public to learn, there has been an apparent attempt on the part of the War Department, or the present administration, to draw attention from, rather than to, a plan which will vitally affect the daily life of every citizen of the Nation.

It might logically be supposed that there are details in the most recent drafts of the industrial mobilization plan which the War Department or the administration do not wish the general public to know. This would be understandable were the details in the nature of military or naval secrets; but as the industrial mobilization plan deals entirely with the controls which would be exercised over the civilian population, such an explanation is not valid.

V. WHAT IS THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE 1939 INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLAN?

As has been stated, the so-called 1939 industrial mobilization plan, revised, is not a revision. It would appear that the 1939 plan is an attempt on the part of the administration to cover up the alarming details of the earlier plan. But there is one significant addition in the 1939 version which does not appear in the 1936 plan. Whereas the 1936 industrial mobilization plan says specifically:

> The controls and functions under discussion are not and should not be exercised in peace. The emergency organization would automatically terminate after war.

The 1939 version says:

> The War Resources Administrator, as the termination of the emergency is approached, might well study the desirability of proposing the creation of a new and entirely separate agency to deal with the rehabilitation problem. On the other hand, it may be considered advisable, upon the termination of the emergency, to continue the War Resources Administration as a postwar readjustment administration. Decision as to the organization and composition of such an agency will depend upon personalities, the degree of rehabilitation required, and political and economic factors which would then obtain.

We cannot close our eyes to the implications of these paragraphs. Here are laid the foundations for the continuation, for an indefinite period after the war has ended, of these controls. Who is to be the judge of the period necessary for readjustment to a peacetime basis? The Chief Executive. Who is to be the judge of what is necessary for the rehabilitation of the Nation after the war is ended? The Chief Executive. Who will continue to wield these powers until such time as he voluntarily returns them to the Congress? The Chief Executive.

We must never forget that, although it takes only a majority of the Congress to validate the industrial mobilization plan and put it in force, it would take a two-thirds majority of the Congress, if the President chose to veto an act, to repeal the industrial mobilization plan.

The difference between a simple majority and a two-thirds majority in the Congress, or either House thereof, might very easily spell the difference between a return to a constitutional republic or the continuance of an American dictatorship.

VI. SHOULD THE WOMEN OF AMERICA QUESTION THE INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLAN?

The experiences of the last war in which the United States was engaged clearly show the necessity for prewar planning. No one should condemn the War and Navy Departments for their foresight in bringing to the attention of the Nation the first industrial mobilization plan, nor can anyone deny that a degree of centralized control is necessary for the successful prosecution of war. Whether or not it is likely that we will become involved in a war in the near future, it definitely is desirable to plan for such a possibility. There is need of an industrial mobilization plan; and for any such plan to be successful there is need, to a limited extent, for the exercise of emergency centralized control. But there are many features of the present industrial mobilization plan to which women of America should give careful thought and study.

It is highly desirable that everyone consider carefully what is involved in these mobilization plans so that they will be fully aware of the effects of a war on the national economy and on individuals not actually engaged in hostilities. These consequences are practically inevitable in a highly complex industrial society.

This analysis is not intended as a criticism of the industrial mobilization plan, as a whole. It is background material for the information of women. There are two features that require searching review. One is the efforts at secrecy that have shrouded the plan during the Roosevelt administration. War planning, originally, was conceived as an educational measure for making the population conscious of the consequences of war, but the New Deal apparently believes secrecy is more advisable. Secondly, it is now contemplated that the comprehensive plan of industrial control foreseen in the industrial mobilization plan will not terminate with hostilities, but that the President would continue to exercise such powers after the end of a war, and that he would be in a position to do so, so long as he desires.

The question then is Should the industrial mobilization plan as now proposed, be accepted as is, or should it provide definitely and conclusively for an end to such Executive powers when the reason for them no longer exists? That is a question to which women should give much thought.

To repeat, if war comes, is dictatorship far behind?

BIBLIOGRAPHY

United States Army and Navy Munitions Board. Industrial Mobilization Plan. Revised 1936. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1936.

United States Army and Navy Munitions Board. Industrial Mobilization Plan. Revision of 1939. A study of methods for the effective and equitable utilization of the industrial resources of the United States in time of war—October 24, 1939. Washington, Government Printing Office, 1939.

United States Congress. Senate. Special committee to investigate the munitions industry. Report on War Department bills S. 1716, S. 1722, relating to industrial mobilization in wartime. Washington, 1936. (74th Cong., 2d sess. S. Rept. 944, p. 4.)

Inaccurate and Unfair Criticism

REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the heading of "Words of Gold, or How Congressmen Waste Your Money Printing Political Material," the Washington News on its editorial page charges that Congressmen waste taxpayers' money by inserting in the RECORD articles which the News characterizes as "political material having nothing to do with business before Congress."

Evidently the writer of these editorials assumes that his judgment is infallible, for he states as a fact what is nothing more than an expression of his own opinion.

Mr. Speaker, if a Congressman were so unfortunate as to be married to a nagging, faultfinding wife, to a traditional "fishwife", and I am sure no Congressman is so joined, but if by any stretch of the imagination a Congressman had that kind of a wife and she were away out on the west coast or in the Philippine or Hawaiian Islands, the Congressman could not possibly feel lonesome here in Washington so long as our daily newspapers continue their present practice in their editorial columns.

Scarcely a day goes by but these editorial writers not only advise us and give us the benefit of their opinions; not only act as a monitor over Congress, but assume the role of commander in chief.

Perhaps it is regrettable from their viewpoint that they do not have the selection of Congressmen from all over these United States within their power. They are clamoring for representation in Congress but, as matters stand, through their commendation or their condemnation, through their opportunity each day, of which they frequently take advantage, to characterize Congressmen as nitwits, men of no standing, of little if any ability, and of being motivated usually by self-interest, they not only perform like, but have much of the influence of, a Simon Legree.

And please note that I have not the slightest intention of referring to the able and distinguished gentlemen who are members of the other branch of the legislative department as Eliza tripping lightly across the ice cakes.

Nevertheless, the comparison is not as farfetched as it seems, for none of us enjoy ridicule, the questioning of our motives, references to our lack of intelligence. Perhaps, too, we are susceptible to the flattery practiced by these eminent writers, even though, in our contemplative moments, we discern the hook only partially concealed beneath the bait.

This is a two-party Government. Since when has the business delegated to Congress under the Constitution been other than partly political? Whether the Nation follows one political theory or another is an issue always before Congress. It is an issue on which editors, especially those of the four principal dailies in Washington, day after day attempt to tell Congress what should be done. This, under our theory of government, guaranteeing the right of a free press and free speech, is their right. Would it not be charitable for them to exercise that right without mud slinging, which they so often condemn when employed by those who differ with them? Let them concede to Congressmen, who, after all, are chosen in most instances by more than 300,000 people, at least an average degree of intelligence and patriotism.

One day praising Congressmen who agree with their at-the-moment political views, the next day damning them when they disagree, these editors should be not quite so cocksure that they are always right; that they alone are the possessors of a desire to serve the people. The attitude smacks altogether too much of the arbitrary left-wing New Deal theory. It leans toward the I-am-the-indispensable-man point of view.

Much of the material inserted in the RECORD by Congressmen is a reprint of editorials from various publications, inserted sometimes because the Congressman endorses the thought advanced in the editorial, sometimes to show the absurdity of the position taken by the editorial.

Editors do not hesitate to print their political opinions; and if subscribers would get news in which they are interested—as, for example, baseball scores or war news—the subscriber is forced willy-nilly, to pay for the printing of the editor's opinion, or for an article by Lippmann, or the carrying charges of My Day.

People at home, paying for the RECORD through taxation, have the right to political material, nor should they be forced to depend wholly upon private correspondence or the newspapers. They elect their Representative, pay him $10,000 a year, because they have confidence in his integrity and his judgment, and it is a little farfetched for the editor of a Washington newspaper to state, as a fact, that the Congressman is inserting in the RECORD material which has nothing to do with the business before Congress.

Some of us wonder what the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would be like if the editors of the Washington papers had the exclusive right to determine what went into it.

At the present time the business before Congress is not only national defense, the many domestic problems which confront us, but also the question of whether we shall subscribe to the theory that there is in this Nation of more than 130,000,000 people but one man who can safely be trusted with our national destiny.

With the President traveling at public expense and making speeches advocating his own reelection, failure to give to the people, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in every other possible way the other side of the issue would indicate that a Congressman was remiss in his duty.

A question now before Congress is that of amending the N. L. R. A. That question is also a political one. No doubt about it. Several times editorials from the News bearing on this question have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Here is another one. It reads as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of August 22, 1940]

THE CERTAIN WAY

The term of J. Warren Madden, Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, will expire on August 27. President Roosevelt is being urged, from some directions, to reappoint Mr. Madden.

We hope the President will not do that. Sixteen months ago, Mr. Roosevelt made good use of another vacancy occurring on the Labor Board to appoint Dr. William M. Leiserson, who had demonstrated his fairness and ability as a member of the National Mediation Board, which preserves peace between the railroads and their employees. It was hoped that Dr. Leiserson would be able to pull the Labor Board out of the morass of unfairness and incompetence into which it had sunk.

Dr. Leiserson has made valiant efforts, but they have been blocked by the other two members, Chairman Madden and Edwin S. Smith. These two men are responsible for the misguided zealotry which has brought the Labor Board into disrepute, infected its entire organization, and warped the National Labor Relations Act into an instrument of industrial disruption.

If the President will appoint a new member, as able and as fair-minded as Dr. Leiserson, the Board will then be controlled by a majority determined and competent to protect the rights of labor and to make the Labor Act serve the fine purposes that inspired it.

But what Mr. Roosevelt will do is uncertain. Therefore, we repeat what we have said many times before: The Senate should vote, at this session, on the proposed Smith amendments to the Labor Act. These amendments, passed in the House by a two-to-one vote many weeks ago, would abolish the present Labor Board and create an entirely new one, also of three members. They also would separate the prosecuting and judicial functions, which the present board has combined and misused. We believe the adoption of these amendments would accomplish certainly what we can only hope the President may accomplish when Chairman Madden's term expires.

Is it a waste of money to reprint what the erudite editor of a great national daily like the Washington News has to say on that subject? May not some wavering Senator, reading this editorial, be moved to patriotic action and follow the editor's suggestion?

If the editor has no influence on Members of the Senate, Members of the House, or on people throughout the country, he certainly has wasted a lot of good print paper and black ink.

Fledgling Pilots

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRED BRADLEY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do considerable flying around the country and I contact a great many pilots. Some of the stories that come to me about our airplane-pilot-training program lead me to wonder whether or not we are proceeding a bit too rapidly and whether perhaps we might not pay a bit of heed to that old adage that haste makes waste.

For instance, I talked to a veteran pilot the other day who had just returned from a number of weeks spent in Texas as an instructor in a long-established commercial air school. This was one of the number of commercial schools which has a contract with the Army to train Army fledgling pilots, and to give them the entire primary course of training, the acceptable graduates from which would qualify for the Army sceondary training schools. Under the terms of their contract, the Army agreed to supply them with the necessary training planes. This school at which he was stationed was running boys through in groups of 240 in a class, and each flight instructor had 5 boys under him. Some of these young boys, when they reported for training, had never even seen an airplane at close hand, and most of them had no previous aviation experience. The alarming thing to me was the fact that the Army had furnished this school with 14-year-old training planes commonly known in the Army as PT–1—primary training No. 1. The original engines with which these planes had been equipped had been removed and the old J–5 motor installed. These heavy craft have a speed of about 80 miles per hour, which is no faster than these small low-powered light planes which we see buzzing around every airport in the country today. The fabric was old and, if he wanted to, any 10-year-old kid could put his finger through the wings any place he desired.

Were they cracking them up? Of course they were, and I charge now, Mr. Speaker, that not one of those planes if owned by a civilian could pass the safety inspection of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. They are not safe airplanes in any sense of the word, and should be destroyed before they destroy some of the flower of American manhood. These planes are not only used to teach these boys the fundamentals of flight but they are used to teach them aerobatics as well. About the only way that an instructor could teach these boys to loop these planes or to perform a simple Immelman turn, the elementary maneuver designed to avoid an opponent riding on your tail, was to teach the boys to roll them over on their back and dive them straight down until they gained sufficient momentum to make the necessary loop. These old crates cannot stand that punishment with any degree of safety. Mr. Speaker, these kids and these instructors are at least entitled an even chance to save their own necks.

Facilities on the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

STATEMENT BY THE UNDER SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, yesterday's newspapers carried the announcement that the President of the United States had made available the facilities of the Bonneville Authority for the transmission and sale of electric power to be generated on the upper Columbia at Grand Coulee. This action is of extreme importance at this time when electric power is such an important factor in national defense. We in the Pacific Northwest feel that we can make an important contribution to the cause of national defense. Not only can we produce the necessary electric energy at a cost much lower than in the rest of the country, but we have the basic strategic minerals available which are so necessary in the construction of defense materials.

Because of these facts the statement issued Saturday by Under Secretary of the Interior Wirtz, jointly with Bonneville Administrator Raver, is of utmost interest to those engaged in the national-defense program.

I ask consent that this statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Large quantities of power to be available from the huge power facilities of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams in the Pacific Northwest have been offered to the National Defense Advisory Commission in a conference at Washington with Defense Commissioner Edward J. Stettinius and Mr. Gano Dunn of the Commission.

Under Secretary Alvin J. Wirtz of the Department of the Interior and Bonneville Power Administrator Paul J. Raver informed the Commission that the rapid completion of transmission and generating facilities will make large blocks of power available for defense industries any place in the region.

The Defense Advisory Commission representatives told the Bonneville Administrator that large blocks of cheap power are essential for defense production. The Bonneville-Coulee ultimate power capacity will approach 2,000,000 kilowatts. During 1941 alone 540,000 kilowatts of capacity will be installed at Bonneville and Grand Coulee. The transmission and substation capacity is keeping pace with these installations.

Under Secretary Wirtz and Administrator Raver also discussed with the Commissioner the various deposits of strategic minerals in the Northwest available for exploitation, describing the increasing demands for power by important national-defense industries such as those for the production of aluminum, magnesium, ferro-alloys, nitrates, and other related products.

Administrator Raver told Commissioner Stettinius that approximately 300,000 kilowatts of capacity will be available on the transmission network within 12 months. This timely contribution to the power supplies of the Nation, he said, has been made possible by the recently completed interconnection of Bonneville with the huge Grand Coulee Dam, by the acceleration of the installation of additional generating capacity at both Bonneville and Grand Coulee, and by the speeding up of other transmission line and substation construction.

Under Secretary Wirtz and Administrator Raver also pointed out that the Federal Government's investment in power developments on the Columbia River has become an important investment for the Nation's security. The expenditure of public funds for these projects provides power that can be harnessed for defense industries and for the normal development of the natural resource wealth of the Pacific Northwest. The Federal Government now is in a position to obtain direct benefits from these expenditures, they said.

A complete study made by the Bonneville Power Administration of industries feasible of Northwest establishment and importance to the national defense was discussed with the Defense Commissioner by Administrator Raver at the conference. Administrator Raver emphasized the importance of the availability at this time of large blocks of continuous power for the immediate development of electrometallurgical and electrochemical industries. He reported that the Aluminum Co. of America would start aluminum operations west of the Mississippi in its new plant at Vancouver, Wash., powered with Bonneville electricity the first week in September. The aluminum thus produced will be available for defense airplane production in west coast factories.

The School Safety Patrol

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES O. ANDREWS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. CHARLES O. ANDREWS, OF FLORIDA

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, the School Safety Patrol is an organization of over 300,000 youngsters throughout the Nation.

The American Automobile Association sponsors and stages in Washington each year a great School Youth Patrol of around 15,000 members from throughout the United States. In the short life of this organization, the death rate for the 5 to 14 age school children has decreased 31 percent, while in the same period the rate for all age groups has increased 79 percent.

Last Sunday I spoke from New York over the N. B. C. red network on the program entitled "Sunday Drivers" sponsored by the National Broadcasting Co.

I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Over a long period of time the program Sunday Drivers has consistently endeavored to secure public cooperation in the traffic safety movement. They are to be congratulated on what they are doing to bring about better traffic conditions.

In sponsoring this program, the National Broadcasting Co. gives new evidence of the high order of public service being rendered by radio. The alertness of the radio industry to public affairs and its willingness to cooperate in movements in the public interest have done much to establish high traditions for this comparatively new means of public expression.

Today this program entitled "Sunday Drivers" is dedicated to the school safety patrols. This vast organization of some 300,000 youngsters in all parts of the country is sponsored by the American Automobile Association and its affiliated motor clubs in cooperation with schools and police. Organized primarily to safeguard school children from traffic hazards, the school patrols have also become units in a great national youth movement. It is a movement offering fine training in civic responsibility to many thousands of young Americans. It sets a fine example for many millions more.

The school year ahead will open under trying world conditions. No matter what may come in the way of new developments as a result of these conditions, it is already evident that we, as citizens, must face greater responsibilities. Our children must be given a better insight into our institutions and our ideals. They must be given a better understanding of what our institutions and our ideals mean in a democratic form of government. Our youngsters must learn the true meanings of sacrifice and discipline. Thus, organizations such as the school safety patrols have more than ordinary significance.

Since the first school patrol units were formed about 20 years ago, around 2,000,000 youngsters have seen service in this movement. Many thousands of these fine young Americans have now reached the age when they are taking part in civic activities of all kinds. Many of them are in the military branches of service and others are ready to respond if and when they are needed. It goes without saying that the discipline, the respect for authority, the lessons in cooperative effort which they learned during their school days, will be valuable now and in the years to come.

At a time when the resources of our country are being mobilized for an emergency, we should not overlook what is being done in real youth training. I want to commend the American Automobile Association and its affiliated motor clubs for the great public service being rendered through the steadily expanding school patrols.

Aside from the civic training feature, which is doubly important under current conditions, the school safety patrols have made a real contribution to child safety. Since 1922 the motor-vehicle accident death rate for the 5 to 14 age group has decreased 31 percent. In the same period the rate for all age groups has increased 79 percent. It is evident, from these figures alone that the patrols have been instrumental in saving the lives of many thousands of school children. This protection to young Americans is the finest kind of public service.

Each year in Washington there is staged a great youth spectacle. It is the annual parade and demonstration of around 15,000 school patrol members from widely scattered States, including my own State of Florida. It has been my privilege on several occasions to review this parade. Each time I have been impressed with the spirit and the purpose of the school safety patrols. I have seen in this movement an undertaking which merits the gratitude of everyone. Gratitude not only for the quieting of fears of parents for their children in traffic; gratitude not only for the protection of schoolmates from the hazards of moving vehicles; but gratitude also for the splendid training being given these boys and girls in an organization of real service. The cooperation of youth and police officers in a common cause is in itself worth-while training for our citizens of tomorrow.

On the basis of the experience of the last 20 years, the school-patrol movement is well organized for the future. It will continue to have a far-reaching part in the protection of school children. It will also continue to give millions of youngsters new appreciation for individual care and caution. This, in turn, means the formation of valuable life-long habits.

It is a real opportunity to speak to you briefly on this interesting and entertaining radio program. I want to commend the American Automobile Association for its fine work in sponsoring the school patrols. I want to thank my friends, the "Sunday Drivers" and their sponsors, the National Broadcasting Co., for inviting me to appear on this program.

In conclusion, I urge parents everywhere to take a new interest in the school safety patrols, to see in it as a means of protection for their children and as a means of building real citizenship. With this new interest, I am confident that the 1940–41 school year will reach new peaks in public cooperation and enlarging the school-patrol movement and in attaining its fine objectives.

Sale of United States Naval Vessels

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN C. SCHAFER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

LETTER FROM HON. JOHN C. SCHAFER, OF WISCONSIN, TO WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter written by me recently to Mr. William Allen White:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 19, 1940.

Mr. WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE,
Chairman, Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies,
8 West 40th Street, New York City, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. WHITE: I acknowledge receipt of your propaganda in favor of active participation in the European war by sending the British a part of our Naval Establishment.

Please be assured that I do not look for the advice of old generals and admirals who have been retired because they are of no further use to our War and Navy Department.

If these destroyers are good enough to be used by a foreign country 3,000 miles across the sea, they are good enough to be used by the United States Navy.

Since those in charge of the United States Navy have indicated that it is too small to properly defend our country and requested the expenditure of additional billions of dollars from our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to pay for a Navy expansion program, it is treason for anyone to advocate that we impair the effectiveness of our inadequate Navy at this time by selling or transferring a portion of it to any foreign nation.

The record seems to indicate that if President Roosevelt and his Department of Justice is sincere in their desire to apprehend members of a "fifth column" they should make a call at 8 West Fortieth Street, New York City, N. Y., where they will find the real "fifth column" aces who are operating in the United States today.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN C. SCHAFER.

No Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM AMERICA

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the August 24 issue of America, one of the leading religious weeklies of the country, entitled "No Conscription."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NO CONSCRIPTION

At a recent press conference the President said that the chance of the National Guard being sent on service outside the United States is not one in a hundred. In that case, it is proper to inquire what crisis faces this country, and makes the President insist upon authority to order the guard to the Virgin Islands, for instance, or to Peru, or the Philippines. As Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick remarked before the Senate committee, if the administration knows when war is going to strike, and at what point, Congress should also know.

When the proposition is made to call our young men to military service it is dangerous to rely on "chance," or the assurance of some official that this or that step will never be taken. If this military service is to be conscription, our vigilance must be redoubled. We do not know in detail what adaptations in our social and economic life will be compulsory under conscription, but what these may be we can conjecture from the experience of other countries. In England, for instance, the changes necessitated have completely destroyed democracy, and made that country as totalitarian as Germany.

In any case, "the present conscription plan before our legislators at Washington means the beginning of a regimentation such as our country has never known," writes the archbishop of Cincinnati. "Whether we like to admit it or not, compulsory military training is the beginning of a totalitarian form of government in our country." The reason for this statement, which will not seem in the least exaggerated to those who know the hunger of all politicians for power, is adduced by the learned prelate. "Once the Federal Government, especially Federal bureaucrats, experiences the thrill of controlling the youth of this country, reasons will always be found not only to continue but to extend that control." Archbishop McNicholas speaks the conviction of millions of Americans.

Fortunately, the vigorous opposition to conscription which exists all over this country will certainly oblige Congress to review the Burke-Wadsworth bill thoroughly. As former Secretary of War Harry Woodring wrote not long ago to Senator VANDENBERG, until the voluntary system of enlistment has been given a fair trial and found wanting, no need for conscription can be shown. In the pending bill Mr. Woodring sees "the influence of increasing tendency toward paternalism," which, if not soon checked, will make the young American "a regimented atom rather than a free being." Debate on this letter in the Senate indicated that the War Department had not given the voluntary system a fair trial, and that under the new Secretary it would not.

Were the enemy at our very gates, the demand of the administration for peacetime conscription could not be more imperative. New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa, component parts of the British Commonwealth of Nations, have not found recourse to conscription necessary, even in wartime, and our neighbor, Canada, has not gone beyond a system of mobilization for home defense only. When we, a Nation at peace with all the world, must perforce adopt conscription, while peoples at war need not, the reason must be so compelling and immediate that we ought to be permitted to know it.

Senator Wheeler's suggestion that conscription be submitted to the vote of the people is not without great merit. Since it is the people who must pay, and their sons who must die, it is altogether proper that the people should be permitted to decide. Conscription is urged in the name of "democracy." It is dinned into our ears that democracy can be saved only by regimenting the whole country. But the warmongers will listen to no proposal to let the people rule on conscription. Their "democracy" does not go that far.

If the people wish to be in this European war up to their necks before many weeks have elapsed, they have only to permit the American war party to continue unchecked. One step to war is to put the National Guard at the disposal of the President for service in any part of the Western Hemisphere, or in Hawaii, and the Philippines. The next step is to provide him with an army, of a magnitude to be stated by him, picked from 10,000,000 American youths.

When that is done there will be no further step to war. We shall be in the war.

Keynote Address Before National Colored Democratic Association

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ELMER THOMAS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESS BY ROSCOE DUNJEE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the National Colored Democratic Association recently held a national convention in the Eighth Regiment Armory in Chicago. The keynote address before this convention was delivered by Mr. Roscoe Dunjee, editor of the Black Dispatch and a highly respected citizen of my State of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I understand that Oscar DePriest, a distinguished citizen of this community, has done us a great honor. I am advised he says that Negro Democrats are "foolcrats." I come today to beard the lion in his den. I want to devote a lot of my time today to the Negroes in America, who, like Oscar DePriest, assume the philosophy of Lot's wife, looking backward at the Republican ruins of Sodom and Gomorrah.

VOTE IN OKLAHOMA

I come from Oklahoma, that fair State where the Indian and the coyote used to roam. I come from a State where 40,000 Negroes now vote in the Democratic primary, and I come from below the Mason and Dixon's line to fling this challenge in the face of Oscar DePriest:

The 40,000 "foolcrats" down in Oklahoma, who have sense enough to be Democrats, are the black men and women who by their vision and good fellowship among the citizens with whom they live are going to politically liberate the millions of beleaguered members of our race now disfranchised in the far reaches of the Southland.

NEGRO ASLEEP

For 60 years the Negro laid down and went to sleep in the back yard of the Republican Party. He asked for nothing and got nothing; but we who are assembled here today have discovered the power in the ballot. We were dissatisfied with the crumbs that fell from the Republican table. Practically all of the older men of this convention are former Republicans and we left the Republican Party immersed in that philosophy expressed by the immortal Frederick Douglass when he said:

"Men have in their own hands the peaceful means by which they may put all of the moral, political, and economic enemies to flight, if they will faithfully, courageously, and valiantly use them."

L. K. WILLIAMS IN OKLAHOMA

Once before I have had to correct the thinking of one of the distinguished citizens of this fair city. He came down to Oklahoma during the last Presidential campaign admonishing an old colored lady whom he said symbolized all of the Negro Democrats in America. He said there was an old colored lady up here in Chicago who was singing a song entitled "Jesus Leads Me and Roosevelt Feeds Me."

Well, I am glad to come to Chicago today to say that in spite of the Reverend L. K. Williams, the great Republican leader, Jesus, still leads and Roosevelt still feeds the great American Nation.

Parties are nothing except that they represent principles in government. The principles for which the Republican Party first stood have my approval, but when parties change their principles we should forget party and follow principle. This is the grave error made by Negroes who belong to the Republican Party.

"LILYWHITE-ISM"

I was once a Republican. For 18 years down in Oklahoma I was the undisputed head of the Negro wing of the Republican organization. I sat in the Republican convention in Kansas City in 1928 where "lilywhite-ism" was florescent. I shall never forget that memorable and despicable scene when, in spite of the truth and the facts, the Republican Party sold the Negro down the river.

"Lilywhite-ism" drove me out of the Republican Party. I was wounded in the house of my friends. I was present when Gooseneck Bill McDonald, of Fort Worth, and Ben Davis, of Georgia, were given their walking papers, and I lived long enough to see that same "lily white" organization send Mable Willibrandt from the department of "injustice" down to Mississippi in an attempt to put Perry Howard behind prison bars. Perry Howard happened to be one of those fellows spoken of in the Bible.

Perry has eyes but sees not. He has ears but hears not. Perry was trying to and is still trying to stay in Sodom and Gomorrah. Perry Howard was still looking back toward Lincoln and to Frederick Douglass who said, "The Republican Party is the ship, all else the sea."

TOOK FRENCH LEAVE

Well, I come to Chicago today to say that the Democratic Party is the ship, all else the sea. I think I proved that rather conclusively to the Reverend L. K. Williams when he came down to Oklahoma 2 years ago. I think I'll take time out to tell you how I forced Reverend Williams to take French leave from our parts. I heard State Senator King and Reverend Williams were coming down to explain to us the "whereforeness of the which." I decided that Reverend Williams was one who needed an intelligence test, so I prepared examination papers for him.

I knew what Hoover prosperity had done for the American people and I thought that if Rev. L. K. Williams and State Senator King had not heard about it, I would treat them to a little information. You know there are still some mountaineers up in the hills of Tennessee who have not found out Lincoln is dead, and who come down into the valley each election to vote for him.

So with this in mind, and with the hope that these deluded individuals would see the light, I prepared a list of 13 questions and registered them special delivery to the temporary residence of Reverend Williams. I asked this distinguished churchman to answer these questions when he spoke to his Oklahoma City audience. I am here to say that he never answered a single one of those questions. He called me up and said he would prepare a statement regarding same when he returned to Chicago. Apparently, Lacy Kirk Williams has never gotten back home, for he still owes me a letter answering my questions.

Now here is the list of 13 questions I asked Dr. Williams:

QUESTIONNAIRE

1. Did you know that during the 10-year period ending with the Hoover administration, Negro farmers lost their rural holdings in the amount of 2,748,619 acres—an area almost twice the size of the State of Delaware? This happened under the Republican "old deal," did it not?

2. Did you know since President Roosevelt inaugurated the New Deal and organized the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Negro farmers have been able to purchase 4,046 individual farms, representing more than 400,000 acres? Tell the audience how you account for this. (Negroes voted down South.)

3. Where are the mile-long soup lines and the hungry hordes who were breaking into food stores bequeathed to the Democratic Party by Herbert Hoover's "old deal"? Do you remember?

4. Why have the daily papers ceased to carry stories which tell of rich men jumping out of 20-story windows? (Even a few Negroes jumped.)

5. Did you know that the New Deal you lambast is furnishing money in the United States to give 5,057 Negro youths a college education; keeps 21,331 in high school and is giving 128 graduate work?

6. Did you know that more than 400 Negro youths are being educated by the New Deal in Oklahoma today? This is the direct result of assistance coming from the National Youth Administration. Do you oppose this Government aid?

7. When Republicans shout "constitutionalism" today, are they not in fact advocating State rights, the principle which in the South has given birth to Jim Crow, disfranchisement, and segregation?

8. Does not the Roosevelt New Deal seek to centralize government and give uniformity to national laws, which would rid the United States of sectionalism and finally southern prejudice?

9. Where are the highjackers and kidnapers of 1933? Do you feel that President Roosevelt's C. C. C. camps had anything to do with this?

10. Do you know that the C. C. C. camps removed from the highway that leads to lawlessness and crime 50,000 young Negroes, and that out of their Government checks these black boys are sending back home slightly more than a million dollars each month? Do you condemn this New Deal program? Did Republican administration ever attempt anything similar?

11. Why have the Liberty Leaguers and members of the anti-New Deal crowd sought to traduce and malign the wife of President Roosevelt? Is it because she has been friendly to Negro development and progress, or is it because she is an enemy of black folk? (I'd like to make Mrs. Roosevelt President).

12. Is it not true that the Republican Party "sold the Negro down the river" in the Kansas City convention, which nominated Herbert Hoover, when the "lily whites" ousted "Gooseneck Bill" McDonald of Texas, and the Georgia delegation?

13. What do you think of a remark made by Congressman Oscar DePriest, of your city, in the church where you now stand? Congressman DePriest said in that statement: "If I were a Negro and lived in Oklahoma, I'd be a Democrat." (Oscar himself would be a "foolcrat" if he lived in my State.)

NOTHING CONSTRUCTIVE IN REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

If you listened in on the Republican National Convention the other day, you noticed that the boys who gathered in Philadelphia were against something and for nothing.

Not alone in politics, but in all life we find people who knock every constructive program, and many people think knockers are extremely smart because they oppose what is being done. Usually, the only thing one has to do to expose such individuals is to ask them what they have to offer as a substitute for the present order.

BE HONEST WITH VOTERS

You hear Republicans orating against the New Deal, and the terrible expenditures being made in our relief set-ups. But why are they not honest or intelligent enough to tell the American people what it is they would cut out? Do the Republicans want to get rid of W. P. A.? Do they want to get rid of C. C. C.? Do they want to get rid of N. Y. A.? Do they want to scrap-heap the housing program or the farm-security program? What is the definite and positive change these fellows would make in the present governmental function?

Why great day in the morning! When my father died he left my mother and me in a dilapidated old house with which I was very much dissatisfied. It was an old unpainted structure, had no porch or foundation under it, and the ceiling was made of cheap canvas. I was utterly disgusted with that home, but I am here in Chicago today to tell you that I never moved out of that home until I was able to build a better one in which to live.

It seems to me that the Republican Party wants the American people to move out into the rain. I have read the speeches of Taft, Dewey, Vandenberg, and Willkie, and in each instance it is a statement of negation. I think that the greatest creation of the mind is expressed in the radio. One can back a $2 jackass up to the finest radio in the world and that jackass can kick the radio all to pieces, but the jackass cannot reconstruct this monument to man's superb mentality.

WARNING TO NEGROES

There is just one thing that has been said by Republican speakers that is perfectly understandable. I want to stop right here and call attention to it. I think Candidate Alf Landon expressed it very clearly 2 years ago during the campaign in a speech at Wichita.

Here is what Candidate Landon said:

"The Republican Party as a major reform proposes to return the administration of relief to the States. It will be possible for the communities themselves to determine just what form relief would take. They will determine what, if any, work-relief project will be started and continued."

I know every one of my listeners can understand that the Republican Party wants to take the administration of W. P. A., C. C. C., N. Y. A., and A. A. A. out of the hands of the Federal Government and place it in the hands of the State.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

I ask you in all sincerity whether or not you believe that the millions of black folk who live south of the Mason and Dixon's line would fare better or worse under such an arrangement. What would happen in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, and Louisiana? I stand here today shouting from the hilltops that age-old expression, "Am I my brother's keeper?" If you want to rescue and help the black men and women south of the border you'll never allow the Republican Party to reconstruct agencies of relief in any such manner.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT SAYS

At the same time that Alf Landon was making his memorable address at Wichita, President Roosevelt uttered this very significant statement:

"I do not believe that Kansas would have pulled through the difficult problems of the past 4 years as splendidly as it has, had it not been for Federal cooperation, and Federal assistance in many fields of your endeavor. If you think we were wrong to give this assistance, then, to be logical you must ask in the day to come every State in the Union shall set itself up as an individual entity for the solution of all the problems of the inhabitants."

PARTY CHANGES

I said a while ago that the Negroes in the Republican Party had gone to sleep in a political back yard. A man asleep is like Rip Van Winkle; he wakes up finally in a new environment and bewilderment. If the Negroes in the Republican Party had not been asleep, they would have known long before now that both the Republican and the Democratic Parties have swapped their party principles and that the Democratic Party and the New Deal now stand for centralization of authority and uniformity of laws.

In the days of federalism and antifederalism the same line of demarcation between political parties existed then as now. State rights was the rock upon which the Democratic Party rested and the Republican Party marched under the banner of central control.

STATE RIGHTS ISSUE

It ought to be perfectly clear to every Negro in America that State rights has been the vicious principle in government from which all our woes emanate. Jim Crow, segregation, disfranchisement, and mob violence are all made possible by special legislation and special sanctions in State-rights States. Central control and uniformity of laws would make it possible for America to have an even spread of democracy. There is no better way to identify Negroes asleep in the Republican Party than when we see the time-honored principles of the party abandoned and the party of Lincoln embracing the idea and notion of government as expressed by the Republican grass-roots convention held at Springfield, Ill., 2 years ago and the later statement of Alf Landon at Wichita.

CONSTITUTIONALISM MEANS SAME THING

Of course, the Republicans do not use the term "State rights." They shout about constitutionalism, which, when reduced to its meaning, is equivalent to the same thing. When President Roosevelt wanted to reorganize the Supreme Court the Republicans shouted "constitutionalism," even though they knew that the Constitution of the United States provided for the President doing everything he was attempting to do regarding the Supreme Court.

The remarkable thing about this changing of the Supreme Court rests in the fact that the Negroes in the Republican Party were imbued with the same thought and idea as their constitutional shouting white colleagues.

SACRED COW

Every Negro I met at that time in the Republican Party seemed to think that the Constitution of the United States is a sacred cow of some sort. They do not recall that the American people have written 21 amendments to that document, every one of which recognizes delinquencies and lack of vision on the part of those who first drafted it. Why the Constitution in its originally adopted form did not have a Bill of Rights, and I say here and now that without the Bill of Rights America would not have a democratic form of government. The truth is we are going to have to write a number of new amendments to the Constitution of the United States before democracy is more than a gesture at human rights in this country. But the most ridiculous position taken by the Republican Party results from attempts to prevent the President from reorganizing the Supreme Court. To kick men off and put new men on was characterized by Republicans as outraging that venerable document. They argued that it was not the American way and belonged to a Hitlerized form.

SUPREME COURT

Negroes who endorsed such views do not realize that Abraham Lincoln had to constitutionalize the emancipation of the slaves in identically the same manner as President Roosevelt attempted to make legal the various New Deal agencies of government. Lincoln knew when he wrote the Emancipation Proclamation the same was unconstitutional, but Lincoln did not stop there. In a conversation with members of his Cabinet he discussed the social and political outlook of members of the Supreme Court whom he was sure would declare unconstitutional the freeing of the slaves. Here's what Lincoln said:

"I must change the membership of the Supreme Court in order that I may constitutionalize the Emancipation Proclamation."

Lincoln had to do the same thing regarding paper money that is in circulation now. The Constitution of the United States does not provide for the making of paper money. But Lincoln put paper money in circulation during the Civil War. After the war, Lincoln had to change the complexion of the Supreme Court in order to have a judicial body that would declare paper money constitutional.

JUSTICE HUGO BLACK

Unquestionably about the dumbest human I know is the black man who will today follow the Republican Party in its mad witch hunt for a type of constitutionalism which if it had been followed in Lincoln's time would have reinslaved all black men. One thing we can thank President Roosevent for is that when he did get a whack at the Supreme Court he went out into the citizenship of this great Nation and found Justice Hugo Black.

For years I have berated the order of the Ku Klux Klan, but President Roosevelt has taught me that "good can come out of Nazareth," and I come to Chicago to say that if all klansmen are like Justice Hugo Black, let us have more and more klansmen.

DEMOCRATIC VIRTUES

And the Democratic Party under the New Deal has been busy with its searchlight finding the gold within the ranks of the Negro race. The Democratic Party located and found for the American Negro that incomparable statesman and valiant fighter for race rights, Congressman ARTHUR W. MITCHELL.

The fight that Congressman MITCHELL has made against lynching; his single-handed fight against the evils of Jim Crow transportation facilities and his ceaseless vigilance the past 4 years in the halls of the Federal Legislature should forever endear him in the hearts of America's largest minority group.

The Democratic Party reached out upon the broad prairies of Missouri and found that able leader who heads their organization, Dr. William J. Thompkins. Surely those of us who have watched the movements of Dr. Tompkins in the office of Recorder of Deeds are proud that the great prairies of the West could offer to the Nation this unselfish and outstanding black man.

The New Deal located and found that diplomat and polished statesman from the great State of New York, who has made a distinguished record in the Republic of Liberia. I speak of none other than the Honorable Lester Walton, another boy who comes from the great plains of the West.

The New Deal reached out to find that spotless, matchless woman, who, as the bard sang, "is pure as the icicles that hung in the Temple of Diana and as chaste as the vestal virgins." I speak of none other than Mary McLeod Bethune.

I might go on and on to prove that the New Deal has placed emphasis upon intelligence and integrity within the ranks of Negroes. I might add to the list such brilliant sons of Jethro as Edgar Brown, Ambrose Caliver, Dr. Robert C. Weaver, Eugene Kinckle Jones, Joseph H. P. Evans, Maceo Smith, Lawrence W. Oxley, and many others too numerous too mention.

I don't know why they started designating the Roosevelt administration as the New Deal, but I will say for the American Negro that the selection of this vast array of eminent and prepared black men for administrative responsibility is unquestionably a New Deal for Negroes in America.

THE NEW PROGRAM FOR WHICH WE SHOULD FIGHT

Nothing I have said should cause the delegates assembled in this convention to feel that there is nothing left for which to fight. In fact the battle for the black man has just begun here in America. We must teach greater solidarity in voting and destroy vicious individualism that crops out every time an election is held. Unselfish leaders, interested in the common weal, is the crying need of the hour.

QUELL THE MOB

We should join the struggle for passage of antilynching legislation. I am proud to say that the present bill now before the Congress was drafted and introduced by Democrats. The Republican Party in its Philadelphia convention devoted three lines to a general statement against lynching, but that convention, in line with the attitude of the Republican Party through all of the years while in power, refused to declare itself for a definite proposal. The Republican Party lacked the moral courage to say it favored and endorsed the Wagner antilynching bill.

POLL TAX

We must join in the protest against the vicious poll tax which now strangles millions of poor whites and blacks in the Southland. I want to say here and now that if the unqualified right to the ballot is ever given to the black man in the South, there will be no need of an antilynching bill. Sheriffs and courts are unwilling to identify and prosecute members of mobs because the mob votes but the victims of mob and their relatives and friends do not vote.

We should battle within our party ranks for the right of the Negro to be integrated into every branch of the combat units of the American Army and we should insist upon a program that will in its finality deliver into the hands of every citizen of this Republic his civil rights.

Our ballots should secure for black men and women occupational opportunities, and the right to achieve in every avenue of life in our dynamic American society. If these are our objectives, if we struggle in this direction, we shall some day win our place in the sun, and this will indeed be a nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

I want to insist here and now that as American citizens we demand the right to be integrated into every branch of the American Army. Recently I appeared before the resolutions committee of the Oklahoma Democratic State Convention. White men who spoke before that body were in utter frenzy, asking that the convention virtually declare war on Germany. From what they said one would think that Hitler was going to sweep over the ocean and invade America within a few months.

When I did get an opportunity to talk I told that committee about the obvious discriminations in the American Army. I told them how Pat Hurley, from my State, who when Secretary of War under Herbert Hoover had practically demobilized all of the Negro combat troops of the Army. I told them that at Fort Sill, in my State, and at Fort Riley in Kansas, Negroes were nothing more than manure handlers. I told them that if Hitler was going to come over here, Negroes wanted to be armed with something else other than a mop and a broom.

The Republican Party under Herbert Hoover struck at the Negro's right to fight for this country and we want to ask our party convention this year to put a gun in the black man's hands. We want the right to fight in the Army, Navy, the air, and the National Guard. The Oklahoma Democrats wrote such a plank into our State platform and I believe the time is ripe for such a plank in our national platform.

LABOR

The most important fight which I believe we should launch during this convention is in relation to the problems of labor. I would be derelict in my duty here were I to paint a picture of satisfaction in which no account is taken of the toiling masses. Much has been done in New Deal legislation in the interest of the workingman, and many black men and women have benefited thereby.

But wage and hour laws exclude outside workers, agriculturists and domestics. I think we should insist that all such laws be amended in recognition of the fact that practically all Negro workers come within the classifications excluded from the wage and hour laws. We must cease emphasizing that a few Negroes get big jobs and remember that Booker Washington said, "We shall rise in proportion as we raise the standard of the common masses."

WE WANT ROOSEVELT

And finally, in the last analysis, we want this convention to nominate for the Presidency of the United States Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He is the only man who today seems to see the "sparrows" in American life. We want Roosevelt to continue as President because his social outlook has meant more to the downtrodden, and especially the American Negro.

Refugees De Luxe

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM MAGAZINE FRIDAY

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article from the August 30, 1940, number of the magazine Friday, entitled "Refugees De Luxe." The article contains numerous pictures which, of course, may not be printed in the RECORD, but I ask that the titles of the pictures be printed.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the magazine Friday]

REFUGEES DE LUX—THE TITLED ELITE FLEE THE RUINS OF THE OLD WORLD FOR SAFETY IN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

"Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore,
Send these, the homeless, the tempest-lost to me."

These are the words carved at the base of the Statue of Liberty. They were written by Emma Lazarus. They have greeted newcomers for 150 years.

When the Duchess of Athlone, sister of Dowager Queen Mary of England, visited Palm Beach back in the happier days Mrs. Edward Townsend Stotesbury refused to curtsy to royalty.

"After all," said the queen of Palm Beach society, "this is America."

If the widow of Ned Stotesbury, self-made millionaire, still refuses to bend the knee, this is the year in which she can be adamant many times over. Europe's nobility is surging toward safety. There are so many titles on these hospitable shores that the social register might do its exclusive clientele a service by appending an Almanach de Gotha, directory of royalty.

Time was when every society writer blithely typed out "Countess Laszlo Szechenyi" without having to look up the spelling for Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt's sister-in-law, the American-born Gladys Vanderbilt. But today the society reporters and readers grapple with a whole new string of foreign names and genealogies. The House of Hapsburg, the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, the Principality of Liechtenstein, Poland, France, and, of course, England—all are sending us their refugees. Like the millions they left behind in the war areas, they fled their homes. Unlike those others, they have no difficulty in finding wide-open doors here.

To many this is a home coming after years of lavish life abroad. Lady Mendl (Elsie de Wolfe, one time New York actress, international hostess and exponent of beauty-through-standing-on-one's-head), told reporters: "Through it all I didn't shed a tear until I felt my feet touch the ground at LaGuardia Field. Then I found myself sobbing."

"All" referred to the hungry children she saw sleeping in fields and roadsides at the Spanish frontier before she and her husband, Sir Charles, got to Lisbon for an American plane; to the flight from their Versailles home, the luxurious villa Trianon, with a stop at Biarritz; to 2 days of living on sardines and tea, sleeping in the two cars they drove; to the landing in New York with a triple strand of pearls about her throat and runs in her stockings.

At the field, before leaving for the St. Regis Hotel, she said: "It's so foolish to cry for a home when so many are suffering. It's really so little to lose."

Like Lady Mendl, Lady Ribblesdale has come home. Vincent Astor's mother had renounced American citizenship in 1919 when she dazzled international society by her second prize catch. She had divorced John Jacob Astor in 1909 and 10 years later married Thomas Lister Ribblesdale, former lord in waiting to Queen Victoria, and master of Her Majesty's buckhounds. She had given up a career as queen of Newport society, but London more than made it up. Only once she was so deeply hurt that she left England for America "for good." That was in 1911 when Queen Mary, shocked at the close-fitting gown the dashing divorcee wore to a court ball, cut her dead in Hyde Park next day. Humiliated, the American expatriate decided to go to Philadelphia.

But she went back, married Lord Ribblesdale, lived to see both husbands die (Astor went down on the Titanic) and to see royalty shudder in a new era. Now, in her seventies, she is an American again. A month after she fled the war she took the oath of allegiance with 250 others in a hot, crowded naturalization bureau in New York. There was little red tape since she had been born an American, but she, of all the 250, had to take an extra oath renouncing a title of nobility.

The wealthy Earl of Carnarvon, who married dancer Tilly Losch last year, insisted that his countess go back where she came from for safekeeping. Because England restricts outgoing cash the countess said on arriving that she might have to dance again. She did, in a Lewisohn Stadium ballet. One gathers that dancing is a relief compared to living with the 100 evacuated children who shared Highclere, her husband's magnificent castle. She confided to reporters what a time she'd had teaching them to sleep in pajamas instead of underwear.

While the large-scale evacuation of children was held up by the cry of "no ships to spare," England's little lords and ladies who weren't sent to Canada find generous hosts here. J. P. Morgan took time off from international finance to receive the Earl of Rosebery's son, 11-year-old Lord Primrose (still clutching a gas mask), and George Vivian and Ann, two youngsters whose father, Baron Bicester, is a partner in the Morgan London banking house. They're at J. P.'s Locust Valley, L. I estate. Mr. Morgan also sponsored the visit of Queen Elizabeth' niece and nephew, Davina and Simon Bowes-Lyon, whose father is Her Majesty's brother.

Patricia and Pamela Mountbatten, daughters of the King's very wealthy cousin, Lord Louis, have, as patronesses, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, a sovereign in her own right—acknowledged queen of Newport. Cholly Knickerbocker, Hearst society gossip, suggests, however, that she was "done out of" one set of royal visitors. When former Empress Zita, who has spent a quarter century trying to put her son, Archduke Otto, on the nonexistent Austrian throne, came over with a squad of her children, most of the family went to "The Columns," a handsome estate at Royalston, Mass. This had been turned over to them by Calvin Bullock, president of the Nation-Wide Securities Co., and his wife.

Gleefully Knickerbocker wrote this of the Bullocks (who have been in the Social Register only since 1931): "They certainly put one over on Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who is rather inclined to think all visiting royalty are her special property. * * * I've tied a string around my finger so I won't forget to mail Mrs. Vanderbilt an auto road map showing the way from Newport, R. I., to Royalston, Mass."

Zita is a sister of Prince Felix, of Nazi-held Luxembourg. Felix, who has issued delighted statements on American hospitality, has had every reason to do so. Only portions of the press muttered when a warship, the United States cruiser Trenton, became a refugee boat for him and his six children, two retainers, and a nurse. They landed in Annapolis, received a 21-gun salute and four band flourishes, lunched in state with President Roosevelt, and then went to Hillwood, the Long Island estate of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies. Mrs. Davies, who was Marjorie Post, heiress to breakfast food millions, and her husband, once Ambassador to Belgium and the Soviet Union and Minister to Luxembourg, hadn't occupied Hillwood for 5 years.

The press, incidentally, has been doing a bit of muttering on other aspects of the refugee problem. An editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch complains that "English and French race horses, refugees from Europe's war, are winning handsome prizes on American tracks" while children wait their chance to come here. They can't be expected to win races.

And a tale, attributed by the New York Post to Edmond Taylor, former C. B. S. European reporter, relates that Lady Astor sent a dozen horses (passage $400 each) at a time when Britain said she had no ships to transport children. This, the story goes, was kept a secret by the British Government.

Among those who did make the crossing were various branches of the Rothschild family of bankers, en route from the ruins of international power to the havens of Canada and the United States. Baron Edward, once a director in the Bank of France, came on the Yankee Clipper with his wife and daughter, and a little black satchel holding a million dollars' worth of jewels.

As for the others nestling in American security, this is but a partial list: Count Haugwitz-Reventlow, Barbara Hutton's former husband; Lady Yule, who inherited some one hundred millions made by Sir David in India; Mrs. Joseph Beck, wife of Poland's pro-Fascist foreign minister, with their son; Countess Susanna Potocki, whose husband, Count Jerzy, Polish Ambassador to the United States, is a scion of an old land-owning family; Baroness Lili Hatvany, the literary beauty whose family for years controlled Hungary's beet-sugar industry.

An American frontier farmer named Creveceour wrote shortly after settling in this country in 1759: "The rich stay in Europe, it is only the middling and the poor that emigrate. In this great American asylum, the poor of Europe by some means have met together. * * * To what purpose should they ask one another, what countrymen they are? Alas, two-thirds of them had no country. Can a wretch who wanders about, who works and starves * * * can that man call England or any other kingdom his country? * * *."

But now the story is a new one. America's newcomers today have had a country, have owned a country, and have left.

[Captions on illustrations]

Britain's propaganda contact man and a favorite of Park Avenue, Noel Coward, is shown at a war benefit tea in England between visits to the United States of America. Actress Evelyn Laye is with him, signing autographs (center). Answering criticism in Parliament of the playwright-composer's presence in America because he does not "appeal to democracy in America and does not represent democracy here," the Ministry of Information said: "He possesses contacts among certain sections of American opinion which it is difficult to reach by ordinary means." Coward, now in New York City, is frequently mentioned in gossip columns.

Lady Yule, widow of Sir David, reputed to be England's wealthiest woman. She had nothing of interest to say to reporters on her arrival. She inherited a fortune said to total $100,000,000, which her husband made in Indian enterprises. It was increased recently by the sale of the yacht Nahlin to King Carol of Rumania. The Duke of Windsor used it for his Mediterranean cruise in 1936.

Count Kurt Haugwitz-Reventlow's latest trip to America was as a refugee instead of as husband. He has been divorced from Barbara Hutton, Woolworth heiress. Shown with Mrs. Margaret Drayton Vanlear, a divorcee, the handsome Danish nobleman denied the possibility of reconciliation with his ex-wife, denied also a romance with Mrs. Vanlear, being welcomed at pier.

Sir Charles and Lady Mendl, former American Elsie de Wolf, toppled from Hitler's French conquest from her throne as hostess to international society at the luxurious Villa Trianon in Versailles. With a full schedule of trips to the seasonal meccas planned, Lady Mendl hopes to forget the nightmare of her dash from Paris to Lisbon along refugee-packed roads where hungry children slept in ditches and fields. Lady Mendl herself lacked the usual conveniences in her flight, suffered great discomfort when runs developed in her only pair of stockings and when she had to live on sardines and tea for 2 days, but the three strands of pearls around her neck came through unscathed.

Patricia Mountbatten, believed to be England's "richest little girl," and her sister, Pamela, have been entrusted by their parents, Lord and Lady Louis Mountbatten, the King's cousins, to Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt during their wartime stay in this country. They will serve as consolation guests to Mrs. Vanderbilt who, according to Cholly Knickerbocker, Hearst society gossip, looked forward to entertaining Empress Zita and her royal brood, only to lose them to the Calvin Bullocks (in the social register "only" since 1931).

Former Empress Zita came, after 25 years of international scheming to restore the ancient Hapsburg rule in Austria, with her children, including Archduke Otto, pretender to the nonexistent throne and possessor of 17 names. Also with her are Archduchess Elizabeth and Archduke Felix. Zita and her 8 children now occupy the Royalston, Mass., estate of a broker. The royal prediction on war's victors: "Why, the democracies, of course."

Lady Ribblesdale is plain Mrs. Alva Willing Ribblesdale now, having regained her citizenship and renounced her title on returning from embattled England, where she spent 31 years. Widow of Lord Ribblesdale, and the farmer Mrs. John Jacob Astor, she came back only after urgent appeals from her son. She can, however, still pursue her British way of life at his Bermuda villa. Back in 1909 she was queen of Newport society.

With jewels worth a million dollars salvaged from one of the largest French fortunes, Baron Edward de Rothschild came with his wife and daughter. The baron, head of the French branch of the once powerful 140-year-old European banking family, pleaded ignorance when asked by reporters to discuss economic questions. A dozen other Rothschilds have found sanctuary from war in the United States and in Canada, where they may reunite.

J. P. Morgan took a morning off from his Wall Street banking house to greet three children of nobility for whom his Locust Valley, Long Island, estate is serving as a refuge. In her nurse's care is Ann Smith, daughter of Baron Bicester, a member of the Morgan London branch. Lord Primrose, II, son of the Earl of Roseberry, J. P., incidentally, was prevented by the war from going to Scotland for his annual grouse shooting. He is also sponsoring visits of other English nobles.

Prince Consort Felix and his six children far from the war-torn Duchy of Luxembourg, are sheltered on Long Island in a luxurious mansion lent them by Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Belgium and the Soviet Union and Minister to Luxembourg. The children are Crown Prince Jean, Princess Alix, Princess Marie-Adelaide, Princess Elizabeth, Princess Marie-Gabrielle, and Prince Charles. Grand Duchess Charlotte-Adelgonde did not come.

Use of Food Stamps for Liquor and Race Bets by Persons on Relief

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STYLES BRIDGES

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Monday, August 26 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an article from the Washington Times-Herald of today, entitled "Reliefers Using Food Stamps for Liquor and Race Bets, Coast Officials Learn." This is a disgraceful proceeding. This money and these benefits were made available to aid the poor people of this country and their families. I certainly am shocked to find these funds going for liquor and betting on race tracks. I am glad those cases are being investigated, and I hope the persons involved will be punished.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 26, 1940]

RELIEFERS USING FOOD STAMPS FOR LIQUOR AND RACE BETS, COAST OFFICIALS LEARN

LOS ANGELES, August 26 (C. T. P. S.).—Federal investigators here are making an extensive inquiry into reports that reliefers who buy food stamps are using the stamps illegally to place bets on the races and buy liquor and tobacco. Some even sell the stamps to friends who buy automobiles with them, it was alleged today.

Already eight arrests have been made, and at least four more cases are to be placed before the grand jury after its recess. One woman, who represented herself as destitute bought $40 worth of stamps the day after she received her first relief check for $11.04, officials said. In her first month on relief she allegedly purchased $58 worth of the stamps, although $58 is the maximum possible dole for a month.

Officials also quoted the case of a man who received his first relief check of $29, and the following day bought $40 worth of stamps. Other similar cases are said to be under investigation.

Two former relief administrative employees, Boyd Robbins and Charles Thomas, said they believed persons who spent an unusually large proportion of their dole for food stamps were furnished the money by someone else, unless they had sources of income concealed from relief officials.

"A person on relief can get a $15 book of stamps for $10," Robbins said. "The $15 book is accepted by some bookmakers at face value. This enables a reliefer to place a $15 bet with a $10 outlay.

"While the stamps are supposed to be good only at groceries and for designated foods, some grocers accept them for liquor, tobacco, and even some poolroom operators accept them. All dispose of them by arrangement with some friend in a grocery."

Thomas stated that some used-car dealers accept the books at face value, making it "good business" for prospective purchasers to get reliefers to buy $15 books for them at $10 each.

School Teachers of Louisiana Are Patriotic

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOACHIM O. FERNANDEZ

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

LETTER BY HON. J. O. FERNANDEZ, OF LOUISIANA

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Throughout my public career I have always been interested in, and have demonstrated at every opportunity my friendship for the school teachers of Louisiana, particularly those in the teaching corps of the Orleans Parish schools. It has recently been my privilege to defend a cowardly attack made upon the school teachers of Louisiana in a radio speech by Mr. F. Edward Hebert, candidate for Congress, endorsed by Governor Jones. In my opinion this attack comes with bad grace from Mr. Hebert at a time when the school teachers are fighting for a living wage which they, until recently, had been led to believe by Mr. Hebert's chief backers would be assured during the next school term.

Mr. Hebert, in a radio address on Monday, August 5, announced as the ninth plank of his platform "No 'ism' but Americanism" and, in explaining this plank, made the following statement:

"I believe that the education taught in our schools should be based on the Constitution our forefathers fought to give us. I believe that legislation should be enacted curbing the teaching of some of our teachers in our public and parochial institutions."

As your Congressman, I could not but defend the honor and integrity of the many teachers who give up their lives for other people's children, and in my radio speech on August 6, I challenged Mr. Hebert to cite one instance in which there had been taught any "ism" but Americanism in the public schools in this district, and I called upon him to retract his false charge against the patriotic men and women who form the teaching corps of our public schools.

I had thought at that time that, if not through conviction, at least for political reasons, Mr. Hebert would retract his statements, but instead in his speech on August 9, Mr. Hebert reiterated his former statements and further aggravated his unjust attack by stating that he has no apologies to make to the teachers.

I believe I have correctly represented the views of the public-school teachers in the defense I have made in their behalf against Mr. Hebert's attack. However, I would appreciate your communicating to me your views in the matter so I can govern myself in accordance with them in my further activities.

I wish to assure you at this time that you may count on my assistance in any manner that I may effectively serve you, to insure the payment to you of the salary for which you are now fighting, and which you so richly deserve.

Sincerely,

J. O. FERNANDEZ, M. C.

Foreign Policy of the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, August 27 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACE'S FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD 5 editorials from Wallace's Farmer, a periodical with a circulation of more than 260,000. These editorials are all remarkable for their clearly stated foreign policy, and are quite surprising in these days of interventionism.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallace's Farmer of May 6, 1939]

WE HAVE TO PAY TO STAY OUT OF WAR

As the Nation and the world hold their breath to hear the first shot that may plunge Europe into war, Iowa farmers may find it wise to consider two fairy tales that are likely to mislead us as we try to protect the welfare of our own Nation.

One fairy tale is that the United States cannot stay neutral in case of a European war, that it is bound to be dragged in. This is cowardly nonsense, of course.

We can stay out if we want to badly enough. Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Spain, Switzerland, the Netherlands—all on the edge of the era of conflict in the World War—stayed neutral successfully. The United States, an ocean away, can do as well.

In the Napoleonic wars, early in the nineteenth century, the United States was finally dragged into the conflict, but we stayed out successfully for nearly 12 years. That's longer than the next war will last.

The second fairy tale is that all we need to do to stay neutral is to mind our own business and go on as usual. Though it comes from the other side of the argument, this is just as pitiful nonsense as to say that we can't stay neutral at all.

The fact is that neutrality requires a policy almost as complicated and as expensive as that of war. We'll have to limit our freedom of action, keep our ships off the seas at danger spots, compensate shipowners and crews, suffer loss of exports, and work out ways of minimizing the losses to exporters and producers. Staying neutral is a hard job. We won't stay neutral just by saying we want to stay out of trouble. We'll have to sacrifice the things that lead to a loss of neutrality.

We hope farmers remember this: The United States can stay neutral in a world war if it is willing to pay the price in money, in self-control, in the use of brains in national affairs.

Don't believe anybody who tells you we can't stay out or anybody who tells you it will be easy to stay out.

[From Wallace's Farmer of June 17, 1939]

SHOULD WE SELL ARMS OVERSEAS?

The debate over neutrality legislation appears to be boiling down to one issue: Should the United States refuse to ship arms and munitions to nations at war, or should it sell such goods on a cash-and-carry basis to anybody who can pay for them and carry them home?

Both Secretary Hull and the isolationists seem to be fairly well agreed that we should keep American ships out of combat zones, keep American travelers out of combat zones, insist on a cash-and-carry basis for sales of goods to nations at war, and prevent loans to warring nations.

Where they differ is on supplying arms and munitions to fighting nations. Secretary Hull suggests that the cash-and-carry provisions apply to arms as well as to other goods. His opponents say that munitions should not be sold at all.

The arguments go something like this: Those who want this country to sell arms say that France and Great Britain are handicapped as against Germany and Italy unless they are permitted to buy here, that refusing to allow sales of arms will encourage Germany and Italy and make war more likely to come, and that for our own defense we need to build up an armament industry that can be shifted to produce airplanes, tanks, and other war material for our own Army and Navy, if needed.

Those who object to selling munitions claim that we got into the last war at least partly because we permitted an armament boom to develop and were afraid to risk depression by cutting it off, and that we would run the same risk if we permitted the munitions makers to run wild now.

Both sides have good arguments. It is largely a question of which course involves the lesser risk.

By permitting munitions sales we would strengthen our own defenses by having more factories ready to turn out goods for the use of our own Army and Navy. On the other hand, we would risk starting an armament boom that would make us want to help our customers rather than to see the boom end through their defeat.

Which risk is the greater? Wallace's Farmer and Iowa Homestead feel that the plan with the lesser risk is to prevent shipments of munitions to anybody. But we admit that the other side can make a pretty strong case for its beliefs, too.

[From Wallace's Farmer of August 26, 1939]

HOW MANY WANT WAR WITH JAPAN?

An American businessman in China is quoted as saying: "If Japan wins the war, we will be thrown out of China in 3 years. If China wins, we will be thrown out in 5."

He is probably right. No matter which crowd wins, the day of special privilege for the foreigner in China is over. Yet the United States still keeps warships and soldiers in war territory in China, has just ended a commercial treaty with Japan, and is generally trying to bump its nose into somebody's fist.

If we want to stay out of an Asiatic war, we had better get our sailors, soldiers, and civilians out of the fighting zone.

[From Wallace's Farmer of September 9, 1939]

WE CAN STAY NEUTRAL IF WE WANT TO

The United States has a far better chance of staying neutral in a new war than we had in the war that started in 1914. Or at least, we have a better chance if we retain and strengthen the present neutrality law.

That law is the product of experience in the 1914–17 period. It tries to remove some of the banana peels that made us slide into hell in 1917.

Those mistakes in 1914–17 policy which shoved us into war can be summarized as follows:

1. Loans to Great Britain and her Allies by American citizens. American banks pushed the sale of these foreign bonds and gave investors a stake in the success of the Allies.

2. Sales of munitions to the Allies. This helped the war boom and gave the whole Nation a stake in the continuance of sales abroad.

3. American citizens on ships of warring nations. The Lusitania, a British munitions-carrying ship, had Americans aboard when sunk. Indignation over this and other similar events helped bring the United States into war.

4. American ships took chances in trying to get shipments through blockades. When sunk or captured Americans were indignant.

We're in better shape now. No foreign nation at war can try to sell its bonds in the United States, and American citizens are barred from travel on belligerent ships. Sales of munitions are blocked.

We still need a cash-and-carry provision. If warring nations want our goods, let them come here, pay cash, and tote the goods home.

We still need a law authorizing the President to point out combat zones into which our citizens will not be permitted to go. And it is to be hoped that the President does a better job on that than he has done in getting Americans out of the danger zone in China.

The present neutrality law, with the improvements noted above, can do a great deal to keep us out of trouble, if we are sensible enough to remember that both sides are going to fill us full of propaganda and that nine-tenths of the "news" from abroad will be lies.

There is danger that some Americans who insist on meddling with European affairs will try to get Congress to repeal the Neutrality Act or to weaken it. Farmers might as well serve notice now on their Congressmen that anybody who weakens our chances of staying out of war might just as well cut his own political throat at once and be done with it.

[From Wallace's Farmer of November 4, 1939]

WHEN CASH RUNS OUT, THEN WHAT?

Congress and the Nation are apparently determined to keep war trade on a cash basis. If anybody wants to buy from us, let him put cash on the barrel head. Otherwise, no trade.

How much cash is there? Great Britain and France hold from three to four billion dollars' worth of American securities. If these are traded to us for goods (probably some will go elsewhere), it should keep the war export business going for from 1 to 2 years.

Then what? Late in 1915, when the Allies had come to the end of their cash, President Wilson was warned by Secretary Lansing that unless we allowed foreign nations to float loans here "they will have to stop buying and our present export trade will sink proportionately. The result would be * * * industrial depression * * * numerous failures * * * and general suffering."

In other words, the United States had let the Allies start a war boom here with their own cash buying, and then was afraid to end the boom when the cash ran out. So we began to lend money.

If this war turns out to be a long one, the real test will come when Great Britain and France begin to run short of cash. Then we shall be told that we have a war boom, that we dare not permit it to end, and that the only way to continue it is to lend money to Great Britain and France.

And if we do lend money, we shall be told later that the only way to make the bonds good is to see that Great Britain and France win. That was the story in 1917. We were urged to go to war, in part, to be sure of payment of a two-billion debt. We came out with those same countries owing us over ten billions. They still owe almost all of it.

Any kind of a war boom runs the risk of getting us into war and of getting us into a shell-shocked peace after the war is over. The less we can rely on exports now and the more we can rely on bigger business with our own people, the better we are going to feel when the shooting is over.

Aid Furnished by W. P. A. to Southern Negroes

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES F. BYRNES

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, August 27 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY LAWRENCE M. PINCKNEY

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, recently there was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article written by Mr. Archibald Rutledge and published in the South Atlantic Monthly which deplored the aid furnished by the W. P. A. to Negroes in the South. I ask to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a reply to that article written by Mr. Lawrence M. Pinckney, State administrator of W. P. A. in South Carolina.

There being no objection, the reply was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 24, 1940.

The EDITOR, THE STATE,
Columbia, S. C.

DEAR SIR: I read with much interest the article appearing on the editorial page of your issue of Sunday, August 18, entitled "The Negro and the New Deal" by Archibald Rutledge in the South Atlantic Monthly.

It was rather amusing to note the different attitudes that Mr. Rutledge appears to take toward the W. P. A., because the records of W. P. A. which I will mention in detail in this letter, disclose that from September 1939 through May 1940, his attitude was one of applying to W. P. A. for assistance to Negroes in his rural section. In his article of the 18th he criticizes the W. P. A. for giving employment to Negroes in South Carolina. Then, on August 22, his attitude has changed again, for we received a letter from him again requesting us to give employment to Negroes in his rural section; yet he states in his article: "While I am not in a position to discuss this question in its broader and more general aspects, yet I do know what the New Deal is doing, not for the Negro, but to the Negro, in my region of the rural South."

I am quite sure that in view of this statement of Mr. Rutledge, and the conflicting attitudes as expressed in his letters to the W. P. A., and his article of August 18, that it will be interesting to the public to read these letters in full—as well as a letter addressed to Mr. Rutledge under date of May 23, 1940, by our district manager at Charleston. These follow:

HAMPTON PLANTATION,
McClellanville, S. C., September 14, 1939.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICER, W. P. A.

DEAR SIR: James Frazer and Arthur Lawrence, who have been with you and have been temporarily laid off, came to me for work.

I was able to employ them here for a week, but now the job is completed, and I have nothing further to offer them.

These two good men have been known to me since boyhood. They are thoroughly reliable. Moreover, as they have large families they suffer great hardship when they cannot find employment.

Trusting that you will be able to reinstate them at an early date, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

HAMPTON PLANTATION,
McClellanville, S. C., December 20, 1939.

GENTLEMEN: James Washington and Johnson Green, Negroes of the Collins Creek settlement near here, have asked me to beg you to reinstate them by January 1. They have been out of work since September.

They are worthy fellows, and in dire need.

I do not know that I am doing the proper thing in thus writing you, but promised them to call the matter to your attention. As you know, so many of the Negroes are helpless without the aid of a white man.

Very sincerely,

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

HAMPTON, May 3, 1940.

DEAR MRS. LESESNE: Can you do anything for Will Alston, George Boykin, John Small? All these are from Hampton, they have no work, and in the case of Will, his wife is dead, and he is trying to raise two children. These men are willing to go to Santee-Cooper.

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

HAMPTON PLANTATION,
McClellanville, S. C., May 10, 1940.

MY DEAR MISS BERKMAN: Thank you for your kind note, which I am returning for the convenience of your reference.

James Kelly is worthy of your consideration. If, however, it is a question of putting one man back to work, Will Alston is the more needy. This is because he is a widower, with two babies to feed.

Would you consider making me your official agent in the region from Awendaw to the Santee? I know everyone, and I know individual needs. I now give a lot of my time to this work, but I should like to be able to cooperate with you in a more official capacity.

Would you mind calling Mr. Grice's attention to my proposal?

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

[Post card]

MAY 23, 1940.

MRS. HARLESTON LESESNE,
W. P. A., Old Citadel, Charleston, S. C.:

Can you possibly lend a hand to Will Alston at Germantown? He is a widower with small children. This is a case of urgent need.

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 23, 1940.

Mr. ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE,
Hampton Plantation, McClellanville, S. C.

DEAR MR. RUTLEDGE: Your letter to Miss Berkman under date of May 10 has been referred to me for the reason that Miss Berkman has been away from the office and will be away for about 10 days.

The spirit that motivates your offer of service to the W. P. A. is thoroughly understood.

Inevitably, where selections are to be made, and only some of those eligible for work can be worked, charges of partiality are almost inevitably made, and therefore I do not think that the Government should put you in that position with your neighbors.

The ramifications of accusations are really marvelous to behold.

Knowing of your sympathy with those, particularly the Negro race, in your vicinity, we would like to have the privilege of having our social worker discuss with you from time to time the real needs of those in the Awendaw-Santee section.

Unfortunately, at this time we have drastically reduced the number of those that we are employing, and until we get some work as to the provisions of the bill now pending in Congress effective July 1, we cannot make any definite plans for the future.

Yours very truly,

E. P. GRICE, Jr.,
District Manager, District No. 2, W. P. A.

HAMPTON PLANTATION,
McClellanville, S. C., August 22, 1940.

DEAR MRS. BERKMAN: The bearer of this letter is Sue Alston, the widow of Prince Alliston, who used to be my foreman.

Sue has three sons, Prince, Will, and Samuel. Prince, Jr., is now my foreman, and he is the only person now living on Hampton. I give him work and him alone. Will is a widower with two babies, one of them being blind. Sue is trying to raise them. Both Will and Samuel have long been out of work.

All the members of this family live at Germanville, adjacent to Hampton. From several of the families there, two members have gone to the Santee-Cooper. Yet in no case do I know a more needy family than the Alstons; a more worthy family also. And they have not been able to get one member to work.

I respectfully recommend that you give Will or Samuel some kind of work somewhere, and immediately, so that this widow may get some food and clothes for her grandchildren.

Sincerely,

ARCHIBALD RUTLEDGE.

I would like to emphasize some statements made by Mr. Rutledge in the above letters. Under date of December 20, 1939, he states: "As you know, so many of the Negroes are helpless without the aid of a white man," and again in his letter of May 10, 1940, he then goes further and asks: "Would you consider making me your official agent in the region from Awendaw to the Santee? I know everyone, and I know individual needs. I now give a lot of my time to this work, but I should like to be able to cooperate with you in a more official capacity."

These two statements, in my opinion, contradict his principal criticism of W. P. A. and what he feels it is doing to the Negro in his rural section.

In the above letters it will also be noted that Mr. Rutledge was seeking employment on the W. P. A. for the following Negroes: James Washington, Johnson Green, Steve Boykin, Arthur Lawrence, James Frazier, Will Alston, James A. Kelly.

Our records disclose that James Washington was employed on the W. P. A.; left W. P. A. to accept private employment and, when that was over, returned to W. P. A. and was reemployed. He left again, however, so we can only presume he has found employment elsewhere. The rest of the names mentioned are now working on W. P. A.

Mr. Rutledge mentions in his article a Steve Boykin. Our records disclose that Steve Boykin, whose address was Germanville, is working on W. P. A.; therefore, I presume it is the same Steve Boykin to whom he refers and whom he uses as a source of information to make charges against W. P. A.

One of the statements made is about pressure brought to bear upon him at certain stores. W. P. A. does not operate, nor has it any interest in stores. All W. P. A. workers are paid by the Disbursing Officer of the United States Treasury Department, whose office is located in Columbia. The checks are mailed direct to these workers at the addresses which they give as their proper addresses and which are shown on the pay roll.

Mr. Rutledge also states that Steve told him of suggestions being made that he contribute to the Democratic campaign chest. If Mr. Rutledge will advise me who made such suggestions, I shall be glad to have it investigated. I have never heard of any such suggestions being made to workers in any part of the State of South Carolina.

I think it was rather amusing for Mr. Rutledge to use Steve Boykin as his authority. If Steve Boykin is unable to count his own children and seemed to be only mildly interested in what had become of them—as related by Mr. Rutledge in his story about the alligator eating his children—Boykin would appear to be rather a poor witness.

Mr. Rutledge laments the fatal undermining of the Negro character which, from his article, he feels is being done by W. P. A. and charges that the Negro is losing his independence and with it his self-respect.

Does Mr. Rutledge object to the Negro working for his living? I think it is commendable in the Negro, when he is told by a plantation owner, or anyone else, that he has nothing for him to do, to go out and endeavor to get work elsewhere, where he can earn money to provide the necessities of life for his family.

The census of 1930 showed that South Carolina had the greatest percentage of illiteracy of any State in the Nation. Since W. P. A. took over the educational program, which was in January 1936, W. P. A. has taught over 60,000 adults to read and write, over 33,000 of these being Negroes.

Does Mr. Rutledge object to Negroes in South Carolina being taught to read and write?

Since the inception of the W. P. A. program in South Carolina, we have constructed in this State 479 new schools and have repaired and made additions to 1,442 schools. These schools are schools for both white and colored. Does Mr. Rutledge object to this work by W. P. A. because it will mean giving Negroes an education, which should enable them to take care of themselves in the future?

The accomplishments of W. P. A. in South Carolina are so numerous and diversified—both from the standpoint of greatly needed physical improvements and new facilities in the State—and from the standpoint of intangible benefits to the individuals by providing self-respecting work to the unemployed, that I shall not ask you, Mr. Editor, for space to list them in this letter, but if Mr. Rutledge desires to know what W. P. A. has done for the State of South Carolina as a whole, or in any part of it, I shall be glad to advise him on receipt of such a request.

I recall the incident that Mr. Rutledge relates when he requested the W. P. A to clear some land on his plantation to permit the Negroes to plant. Mr. Rutledge was not rebuffed but was informed that it would be a violation of the law for W. P. A. to clear his private property.

Mr. Rutledge makes the following statement in his article:

"Almost to a man, every able-bodied Negro man and boy of my acquaintance is on relief. The countryside is empty of its laborers. The little farms and gardens, the fences and the fields, the chicken yards and hog lots, the crops that would sustain life through the winter even though things from stores could not be bought—these are gone."

The W. P. A., under the regulations, can only give employment to one member of a family provided that family is in need, and then within quota limitations assigned to the State, and every available study—every known authority—points to the fact that there is considerably more food (crops, livestock, and poultry) produced in South Carolina now than before the W. P. A. began in this State in 1935.

I would appreciate your giving space in your paper for publication of this letter.

Yours sincerely,

LAWRENCE M. PINCKNEY,
State Administrator.

This Nation, of the People, by the People, and for the People, Shall Not Perish From the Earth

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ARTICLE BY CHARLES G. SAMPAS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Charles G. Sampas, which was published in the Lowell Sun for August 24, 1940:

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Sun of August 24, 1940]

SAMPASCOOPIES

(By Charles G. Sampas)

THIS NATION, OF THE PEOPLE, BY THE PEOPLE, AND FOR THE PEOPLE, SHALL NOT PERISH FROM THIS EARTH

This Nation, of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from this earth.

Shine, O brave sun, upon this great land of ours, pour your blessings on this America of ours, pour down on New England, old and ever new, radiate over the West and the Midwest's plains, beneficent sun.

You are the world's resurrection, America—the hope of the world.

Humble and proud America—strongest of them all—America.

Tyrants across the seas, America, say you shall die. They say, America, that the grave is ready for you, that the sun has set on America, that America is a tombstone over a decadent, dying people.

You are not afraid, America, because you know, America, that you have just been born, that you have just started to live. Laugh at tyrants and autocrats, America, because you are all there is to the world. There is nothing else left in this world—just you, America—the gladsome liberty and freedom and eternal democracy.

I sing and celebrate you, America, because I am one of your sons, and there are 130,000,000 more sons and daughters, America, who sing and celebrate you—who know that you will carry on, the greatest democracy the world has ever known, long after other nations have been buried, long after tyrants and dictators are dust, long after this current madness which has seized the world has subsided.

Land of energy and productivity, land of wheat fields unending, land of Virginia and Pennsylvania, land of the Mississippi, the Arkansas and the Missouri, land of California and Nevada, land of Manhattan and Chicago—America.

America, you are beyond European fakeries and phantasms—you are beyond secret diplomacies and chaotic madnesses; you, America, are not a skeleton of a nation France and all those European nations have been; you, America, are stoic, endurable, non-European; you are fresh and new and sincere.

You are America; you are our life, our liberty, our pursuit of happiness; you are the dawn's early light; you are land that we love; you are the home of the Pilgrim's pride; you are the land God shed His grace upon; you are Dixie, and land of the golden West.

This Nation, of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from this earth.

You are master of your machines, America—they are not your master; you are America, continent indissoluble; you are a land which cannot be undone, broken, or dissolved; you are the whole world, America; you are sleepy towns along the Mississippi; you are wide-awake metropolitan cities by Lake Michigan; you are a brotherhood of men, free and equal.

You are man's heaven on earth.

You are the average man, America! You are free-born, free-willed.

You are Thomas Jefferson, Thomas Paine, Adams, Washington, Lincoln, Lee.

You are "all men are created equal." You are humanity's conscience. You are, O America, sweat and toil.

You are American revolutionaries with bare feet in worn-out shoes. You are they, at Delaware, who cried out: "We are sick; our feet gone; our legs are sore; our bodies covered with torments; our clothes are worn out; we are broken, exhausted, thirsty, hungry; we are dying," and then went on, nevertheless, to win freedom from Europe.

You are the Constitution, America! "This is a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon the principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and their fortunes."

You are alive, breathing that pure air of democracy, O America. You are the new, the brave, the honest world.

You are just beginning. Europe's hour of death has struck. The Four Horsemen have come upon the Old Continent. They will not come to the new.

You are afraid of no one, and you are humble at the thought of your God.

You are not terrified, America, by the solid click of marching feet; you are afraid of no dictators.

You are the land God has been bountiful to, America.

Brutality has not secured a foothold upon you, America. You know no hate; you breed no contempt; you are not animated by spirit of revenge, lust, and selfishness. You are clean, O America!

You, America, are "of the people, by the people, and for the people," and you, America, shall not perish from this earth!

The dictators, America, say you must die; that the twilight of American civilization has come; that your day, O America, is over.

Envious are they of your happiness, America! Envious they are of your glory, America! Envious are they of your towering Rockies, your sweeping Kansas plains, your southern cotton fields, your Texas oil fields.

Those dictators, America, believe that no nation must live free; they believe that no nation is entitled to belong to its people; that democracy must no longer endure upon this world.

Those death-dealers, America, those scavengers, those carrion birds, want to eat you up, America. They are hungry for you.

But you, America, are not afraid of them; because, America, greater than all your natural resources, greater than your guns and your cannons, your airplanes, and your battleships are your own people. They are your greatest asset, because they are people born in freedom, ready to die for freedom.

It is your spirit, O America, that they cannot touch or approach. It is that spirit which came from blood and tears of revolution and civil war and a first experience with a European war.

It is the spirit of a George Washington, who, in the darkest night of adversity leaned in solemn faith on Him who is mightier than the mightiest. On Him who has been mightier than Hitlers, Mussolinis, Stalins, and Napoleons.

It is the spirit of a Thomas Jefferson, who said: "I want a bill of rights to guard liberty against legislative as well as the executive branches of government; to secure freedom in religion, freedom of the press, freedom from monopolies, freedom from unlawful imprisonment."

Yes; it is the spirit of a Thomas Jefferson writing, "Men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights governments are instituted among men."

Hitler and his ilk cannot stand for any such beliefs: They are the megalomaniacs who set themselves above God, above all mankind; who would tear to shreds the dream of freedom for men upon this earth. They cannot stand, Hitler and his pack of wolves, the existence of men of good will upon this earth.

But this Nation of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth.

No, America, you shall not die. As long as you have that spirit of your great men you shall live on—unto eternity and beyond eternity and forever.

The tread of the goose step, America, does not set up fears in your heart. It only serves to gird your spirit.

The guns are plowing the earth—this is the red dawn's birth—and sowing a terrible seed and reaping the crop with speed: Why are the guns so greedy, why are the reapers so needy?

No, America, the guns are not going to plow America, the red dawn will not come upon you, there is no cannon fodder here for Hitler, he cannot touch us.

Because, America, you are great, you are the greatest nation the world has ever known; and, God willing, you will continue to be the greatest nation the world has ever known.

Because, America, you are decent and civilized and imbued with the spirit of liberty and justice and equality.

And those things are stronger than all the world's guns and cannons and planes, because the right shall always be stronger than might.

And so today, America, I sing and celebrate you. I am one of your sons, and all your sons and all your daughters sing and celebrate you: Because they know you, America, and they love you; because you, America, are 130,000,000 human beings who believe in God's will, and God's will is their will.

As long as we live and breathe, America, our dream is you; you are the guide of the world, America, you are the last beacon, you are the light of civilization, and your radiance, like that of the sun, beams down upon the whole world, the one hope, the one salvation.

They know, America, that the hope of the world is you, and they die with that thought in mind; with their guts shot out they dream of you, America, and your people; because, America, you are the one thing left in a world where all decency and conscience has gone.

They die with that little dream in them:

That America, a nation of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth!

You will keep faith, America!

Another Plea for an Investigation of War Propaganda Activities in the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS D. THILL

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, on March 1, 1940, I introduced House Resolution 410 which proposes the appointment of a special committee to investigate war propaganda activities in the United States. Up to the present time the Rules Committee has not taken any action on this resolution. It is imperative that immediate steps be taken to squelch the activities of paid war propagandists. Many agents of foreign governments are registered with the Secretary of State under the alien-agent registration law. The activities of these individuals should be checked and examined. If their influence is inimical to the best interests of our country these agents should be summarily dealt with.

The mail of Members of Congress is filled with war propaganda of various sorts. Nazi propaganda is spread by the German Library of Information, 17 Battery Place, New York City. British propaganda is disseminated by the British Library of Information, 51 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City. Communistic propaganda is distributed and sold by Bookniga, Inc., 255 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It seems to me that the American people should not be subjected to Nazi, Fascist, Communist, and British propaganda which is deliberately used to distort the thinking of the citizens in the United States. Congress should proceed at once to investigate the dissemination of war propaganda in the United States.

Railroad Interest in Competing Water Carriers Through the Panama Canal and Elsewhere

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE F. LEA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, the Panama Canal Act, enacted August 24, 1912, preceding the opening of the Canal, contained provisions against destruction of water competition by competing rail carriers. These provisions amended section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act and are carried in the present law as paragraphs 19, 20, and 21 of section 5.

In substance, these paragraphs provide:

First—An absolute prohibition against railroads having any interest in competing water carriers operating through the Panama Canal; and Second—A qualified prohibition against railroads dominating competing water carriers other than through the Panama Canal.

The law leaves it to the Commission to determine the facts as to whether or not such competition does or may exist.

Applications to the Commission are authorized for an order permitting (a) the continuance of vessels already in operation, or (b) the installation of new service.

If the Commission is of the opinion that the water service, other than through the Canal, is operated (a) in the interest of the public, and (b) is an advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and (c) that the extension will not exclude, prevent, or reduce competition on the route by water, the Commission may extend the time for operation of such services.

If such service is extended, the rates of the water carrier must be filed with the Commission, and are subject to its regulation.

AMENDED PROVISIONS

These provisions, as amended by the conference agreement on S. 2009, are renumbered as paragraphs 14, 15, and 16 of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Paragraph 14 strengthens the present prohibition by extending it "to any person controlling, controlled by, or under common control with" a rail carrier.

Under the conference agreement, the absolute prohibition as to the Panama Canal remains as under the present law.

Under the conference agreement, the power of the Commission to permit the continuance or extension of service, or the acquisition of interests would be as follows:

First. The prohibition applying to water service elsewhere than through the Canal applies where the railroad "does or may compete for traffic."

Second. The Commission has power after hearing to determine the facts as to competition or possibility of competition.

Third. The Commission, after hearing, has authority to authorize a railroad to continue to hold an interest or to acquire an interest in a competing water carrier, or to install new water service if the Commission finds that the continuance or acquisition of such ownership, or interest, or the installation of such service will not prevent the water carrier from being operated (a) in the interest of the public, and (b) with advantage to the convenience and commerce of the people, and (c) that it will not exclude, prevent, or reduce competition on the water route.

It will be noted that on the enactment of the conference agreement into law, all but exempted water carriers will come under the regulation of the Commission as to rates without an order such as these paragraphs authorize.

The effect of the conference provisions is to clarify existing law. The changes made are in line with the actual operation of existing law since its enactment, and with the interpretations heretofore placed upon it by the Interstate Commerce Commission. See Steamship "Great Northern" (37 I. C. C. 260); Ashtabula-Port Maitland Car-Ferry Service (40 I. C. C. 143); Southern Pacific Co.'s Ownership by Atlantic Steamship Lines (77 I. C. C. 124); Investigation of Seatrain Lines, Inc. (206 I. C. C. 328). These interpretations of the Interstate Commerce Commission have not been reversed by the courts.

The administrative interpretation of these provisions is controlling unless overturned by the courts. The courts will not disturb such interpretations except for cogent reasons. See McLaren v. Fleischer (256 U. S. 477); St. Paul M. & M. R. Co. v. Phelps (137 U. S. 528).

The provisions of the present paragraphs contain ambiguities and uncertainty of language which, it is believed, are substantially clarified by the provisions of the conference agreement.

It will be noted that the power of the Commission to extend service elsewhere than through the Panama Canal remains as under existing law. The standards that are to control the determination of the Commission are the same in every case.

The standards under which new service is permitted are the same as applied to the continuance of existing service. The Commission has authority to make an order to install new service under the existing provisions. The extension of service under the conference substitute does not go beyond the present law as previously interpreted.

The existing service referred to, of course, applies to service existing at the time the order is made and not at the time of the enactment of the original act. There was no such service at that time, as the canal was not open.

Whether it be the continuance of existing service, an extension of service, the installation of new service, or the acquisition of new interests in water carriers the Commission has the same duty to determine the facts necessary for the protection of the public before the order of approval is made. In each case the dominating consideration is the protection of the public against the destruction of water competition by rail carriers. The provisions are logical, just, and equally applicable to their fundamental purpose.

The conference agreement makes no change as to the water service to which the prohibition and the power of the Commission apply.

The power to protect the public against the destruction of water competition by the rails under this law is dependent upon the action of the Commission. In a long course of years, during which the Commission has exercised that power, there is no known case in which it is claimed an abuse of such authority has been charged.

Conscientious Objectors

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, August 27, 1940

LETTER AND RESOLUTION FROM CHELMSFORD (MASS.) POST, AMERICAN LEGION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the adjutant of the Chelmsford (Mass.) Post of the American Legion and the resolution referred to therein:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
CHELMSFORD POST, No. 212,
Chelmsford, Mass., August 26, 1940.

Mrs. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS.

MY DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN: Here is a resolution that we of Chelmsford Post, No. 212, have accepted, and would like to have you put it on record. Thanking you for what attention you will give it.

I remain your servant.

NAPOLEON T. MANSEAU, Adjutant.

Whereas we American Legionnaires, both wartime and peacetime defenders of our Constitution, sponsors of the one "ism," "Americanism," find the story existing now as in 1917, namely, Excuse the Conscientious Objectors from the Draft.

Whereas there are certain individuals, cliques, religious sects, etc., who would not bear arms in defense of their country, but readily reap of its numerous benefits, and

Whereas there being at present a visible threat to our national independence necessitating the present draft law, where national unity must take its preeminent place, and there being no room in unity for objectors, therefore be it

Resolved, That Chelmsford Post No. 212, American Legion, go on record as opposed to objectors of the draft, conscientious or otherwise, that if there must be such reluctant patriots, they be made to serve their country as common laborers, road and airport builders, etc. Be it also

Resolved, That the so-called conscience of these objectors be thoroughly examined, and if found wanting, the holders of such conscience be placed in concentration camps or be deported.

War, Poverty, and Chaos for the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ADDRESS BY VIRGIL JORDAN

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Virgil Jordan, president of the National Industrial Conference Board, on the economic consequences of the war for the United States, before the Foreign Policy Association, Philadelphia, February 24, 1940:

In trying to discuss the economic consequences of anything these days I shall probably trespass freely on Mr. MacDonald's political territory, so I want to excuse it at the outset and assure him I shall not mind if he retaliates. If he says as much about economic consequences as I shall about the political I am sure we both will have done our duty by both subjects, and everyone should be satisfied. After all, there is something reassuring in the picture of the Foreign Policy Association neatly slicing chaos into two parts—the economic consequences and the political consequences—and assigning one to each speaker. It is good to know that there is at least one tidy mind like that in this messy world; but that is the only comfort we can get out of it.

In our time, at least, economics and politics are Siamese twins, and it is hard to imagine marrying one without becoming pretty familiar with the other. Politicians have become intensely economic, though not very economical; and economists have become quite political, though not always politic, as you will see before I finish. The reason is, of course, that both have become primarily concerned with ideology as an instrument of power, and are concerned to secure the acceptance of ideas by the largest possible groups of people, quite regardless of the facts and their consequences. This common purpose and its pursuit are quite all right if the ideas happen to be in accord with the facts, which is seldom the case. It is safer to leave the economist to pursue the facts as a check on the politician's pursuit of power, but this is no longer possible today. We now have only a vast political struggle for power in which ideas are weapons and the economist a conscript, and hence the economic and political consequences of anything are inseparable.

We see this more clearly when we ask ourselves what is this war whose economic-political consequences we are discussing today. We obviously can't even tie this war up in any neat package. We don't even know precisely whom it is between, who are the combatants or the neutrals from day to day, what it is about, when or how it started or will stop. Everything about it is shrouded in an impenetrable cloud of words which convey no meaning. There has never been an event in modern history about which the millions of people involved have been permitted to have so little information. Yet hour by hour men are dying in this mysterious shadowland, dying at the command and for the defense of the omnipotent states to whom they have given the power to plunge the minds of all their fellow men into practically complete darkness. One recalls the Biblical legend of the blind Samson, shorn of his strength, tearing down the pillars of the temple.

At least we all sense in some way that what is happening is no isolated event in our time or our world. We feel the universality of this mysterious tragedy, the fact that it ineluctably embraces the minds and hearts of millions beyond its immediate actors and their stage, on which they move so obscurely. We are aware, too, that it can no more be isolated in time than it can in space. We know that it is continuously linked with the ignored or forgotten past and with the unknown and unrealized future. Its roots reach back into the errors, weaknesses, and follies of years and generations that are gone, and its fruits must be eaten in bitterness by millions yet unborn. We can hope to understand the events that we call this war—or any of their consequences—only as an aspect or phase of the organic social life of our time, comprehensive in its scope and continuous with the past and future.

In this sense, the epidemic of systematic and mechanized murder, pillage, and destruction which has spread over Europe and Asia is the latest phase of the persistent process of social disintegration which has been under way in every important country during the quarter century since 1914. This process is another 30 years' war, on a larger stage and in modern dress. It is the inevitable expression of the expansion in the power of the State and the submergence of the individual which began with the World War. It marks the relapse of a civilization from the spirit of liberal humanism to a mechanized feudalism, which is the kind of social organization, based upon the ownership and exploitation of men and resources by political gangs—religious, dynastic, ideological, or military—under which, except for a few brief periods, the human race lived from its beginning up to the nineteenth century.

This process of social disintegration always begins within each community, in those qualities, capacities, attitudes, and relationships of individuals which are the basis of the way in which peoples make their living and which we call their economic system. When people are persuaded by their political leaders to abandon their unconscious cooperative effort to produce and exchange their services among themselves or other peoples for what they are worth, and begin to depend upon promises of achieving prosperity and security by using the power of the state to rob, oppress, injure, or kill other people in their own community or other countries, they take the first step in the easy descent to the Avernus in which Europe lives today. Thus is forged the first link in that fatal chain of events which ends in the cold-blooded extermination of millions of people in Poland and China by machine guns and bombs. Once the political delusion of economic struggle between the "have nots" and the "haves" within and among nations is established, murder and pillage, or expropriation and persecution are legitimatized internationally and domestically.

The idea of prosperity by expropriation has infinite gradations and variations between, say, the principle of the progressive income tax and the systematic slaughter or starvation of Polish peasants and Czech citizens by German or Russian troops; but they are all of a piece. In their ultimate significance and consequences there is little essential difference between robbery by ballot and robbery by bayonets or bombs, though we may dignify and disguise one by calling it democracy and damn the other by calling it dictatorship.

The concept of economic or social progress as a process of aggression by those who haven't much or any property, or feel they haven't enough, against those who have more, or think they have, is much older than Alois Schickelgruber and his Third Reich. Mr. Hitler did not invent it or give it its wide currency. He only applied it to international affairs in a specially spectacular, painful, and shockingly frank way. Even in that field he had several distinguished practical predecessors; and the way has been unconsciously prepared for him by many academic disciples among the exegetes of international economic justice at Cambridge, Geneva, and elsewhere, who have expounded the doctrine of maldistribution of raw materials and preached the gospel of their redistribution for many years.

This extension of the root idea into international affairs is not so important in understanding the consequences of the war as its penetration of internal politics in every country, including our own. We need only remind ourselves of the currency of Marxian slogans about the class struggle in European countries and of the semantic manipulation of phrases about the underprivileged classes and the low-income groups by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Roosevelt and their academic acolytes in our own to appreciate how persuasive the idea of "gleichschaltung" by expropriation has become in political thought.

Messrs. Hitler and Stalin have been applying in Poland, Bohemia, and Finland an economic ideology which has become the key principle of gang politics in every important country. The exploitation of human and natural resources by political gangs maintained by manipulation of aggressive mass emotion has not been going forward only in Europe. The same degenerative disease has infected the economic and political life of America as well. During the past 25 years the fundamental feudal principle of the use of political force for the exploitation, expropriation, and persecution of part of the community by the rest has gradually become an established part of American life for the first time in our history. In both domestic and international policies humanitarian impulses have been progressively mixed with political aggression. And, in fact, in recent years personal and group malice, envy, and vindictiveness embodied in governmental aggression have become the characteristic mode of expression of humanitarian purpose. According to this political principle, the only possible, or at least the preferable way to help the poor and protect the helpless is to harry, persecute, and rob the rich, the prudent, thrifty, industrious, or ingenious members of the community. This is called liberalism—perhaps the most amazing inversion or perversion of a political concept in history.

Let me emphasize that in the ultimate outcome of this process it makes no difference whatever from which direction the aggressive impulse emanates or by what political group it is mobilized. The events of the past year should have made it clear that aggression from the right and aggression from the left meet in the middle, on common ground, and come to the same end. The aggression of the many against the few is the same in its consequences as the aggression of the few against the many. Democratic aggression is just as destructive as any other kind. Ballots can destroy as many lives and waste as much wealth as bombs.

Written constitutional guaranties designed to safeguard all individuals against the state were the unique contribution of American society to the humanist movement in western civilization and represented its supreme achievement. These have been substantially destroyed in this country during the past 7 years through the subvention of voters by public funds, the delegation of lawmaking powers to bureaucratic agencies, and the degradation of the Supreme Court into a political-party instrument. The fact is that government in America has become an accepted agency of internal aggression. It is no longer expected, and it can no longer be depended upon, to perform its primary and essential function of protecting the life, work, and property of all individual citizens against attack by any of them. Though not yet expressed in military terms and in international action, the essential impulses which underlie the German ghettos, the Polish mass exterminations, and the Russian and Japanese devastation of Finland and China are already implanted in American life and need only the stimulation of circumstance and political cultivation to be developed in the same direction and to the same end. Aggression is the essential spirit of the modern state. It animates the atmosphere, morals, manners, and customs of every government today. Its character is most clearly expressed in the personalities in whom its power is embodied—all uniformly in every country warped, twisted, psychopathic personalities whose every word and deed is animated by malice, vindictiveness, hatred, and destructive impulse toward individuals and groups who disagree with or oppose them, and who in every official action and utterance are in one sense or another bombing and machine-gunning their enemies and seizing their property. Shocking as the realization may be to us, these things are as true in America and England today as they are in Germany, Russia, Italy, and Japan. They are the dominant factors that mold the internal economic life and international relations of every country.

The economic consequences of the war for this country can be comprehended only in the light of this background. All war is the ultimate and supreme expression of group aggression, stimulated, mobilized, and manipulated by political gangs, and based upon the disintegration of those processes of unconscious voluntary cooperative production and exchange of goods and services which normally sustain community life. Wars are therefore always a reflection of the internal social, economic, and political condition of the countries involved in them, and are always employed as an instrument of domestic policy of the political gangs that constitute the modern state.

Whatever their immediate and superficial effects may be, they are always ultimately destructive to the economic prosperity and progress of all groups and nations, whether engaged in them or not. External or internal aggression can never be a permanently successful way for any nation or any group to make their living in the modern world. Though, as in the case of Russia and Germany, Japan and Italy, enormous investments of capital secured by internal confiscation of social resources may be made in expectation of profit from the seizure of territory, the conquered populations can only be slain, supported, or enslaved by the conquerors. But slavery is no longer a paying institution, and both the labor and natural resources thus captured must be exchanged or validated in trade with other peoples before they can be of much use in supporting either the conquered or the conquerors. War thus inevitably involves an enormous wastage and dissipation of community resources, whatever the outcome, and impoverishes the whole world, victor, vanquished, and neutral alike.

In the case of our own country, our relationship to the war must be regarded as an expression of the internal situation and as an instrument of the internal political aggression which has developed during the past 7 years. Whatever the form and extent of our active participation may ultimately be, we are already inescapably involved in the war because what has happened in the United States is merely a part of what has happened in Europe and Asia, and our economic and political life are dominated by it today. We are, in fact, participating in the war now, and we will inevitably share its consequences, with special features arising out of our internal situation.

My personal opinion of what these consequences are may best be put in the form of the following forecast of events in the next few years, as I see them. I do so because when anyone discusses the consequences of anything now happening he is forecasting; and if one undertakes to forecast at all he should forecast. Everyone understands that the possible consequences of anything in human affairs are infinite, and any discussion of them must be a selection of those which seem to one most likely or probable in the light of all the facts one has. It is in accord with the indolence of human nature to select the easiest and most pleasant possibilities and to ignore or discount the facts with them. The American and many other people have been doing that since the World War, and that is why the facts have relentlessly overtaken them and why they are now finally faced with the difficult and painful possibilities which they have persistently ignored. On this basis, and in this sense, therefore, I say I think the following things will happen in consequence of the war, unless the war stops before the middle of this year, and unless a tremendous effort is made to prevent them from happening.

Within the next month the total phase of the war will begin in western Europe, with unrestrained bombing of civilian populations in the principal cites, and with efforts of Germany to flank or break the Allied lines, and of Russia to overrun and pillage the Baltic Peninsula, the Balkan States, and the Near East.

These expected events, which Mr. Sumner Welles has been sent abroad to confirm, will determine the President to announce his decision to run for another term on a platform of national emergency, hemisphere defense, and pacification of Europe. He will be renominated, and by November the situation of England and France will appear to the American people to be so serious that the present administration will be reelected. Within a year from now our Army, Navy, and air forces will be actively engaged in hostilities in Europe, Asia, and South America against Germany, Russia, Japan, and Italy.

Such a war will continue through the forties under the present administration. Until we are actively engaged the Allies will be supplied through Government selling agencies and financed by Government loans. In the course of the war, after active participation begins, all manpower will be conscripted for domestic labor, as well as military purposes; the banking system will be fully nationalized; our gold reserves will be repeatedly revalued; the currency will be progressively depreciated; liquid private property will be confiscated by successive capital levies; all voluntary private saving and investment in enterprise will cease; prices and wages will be fixed; and the operation of all basic industries and of power transportation and communication systems will be conducted by political agencies. There will be increasing internal disorder due to sabotage and resistance by alien groups, unemployables, strikes, pacifists, political dissenters, and groups of property owners and taxpayers, which will be suppressed by armed force, espionage, censorship, and suspension of civic rights and civil processes.

This part of my forecast is fairly easy and obvious because all of the more immediate economic consequences which I have just mentioned have already occurred in some measure during what we have called peacetime. The production and sale of airplanes, and possibly other military supplies abroad, is now conducted by the Secretary of the Treasury. The resistance of China and Finland is already, or is about to be, financed through loans by Government agencies. The voluntary hiring or discharge of most employees is now subject to Government regulation and taxation. Our gold reserves have already been revalued and Executive discretion in revaluing them has been continued by Congress. The extent to which one believes the currency has already depreciated depends upon one's view of the normal price level; but, though so far unsuccessful, a primary purpose of Government policy in the past 7 years has been to raise the price level and reduce the purchasing power of the dollar; and I have no doubt that this will take place rapidly when the active phase of the war begins. Extensive capital levies on liquid private property have already been made by reducing the interest return on small savings, and by taxation which has continuously confiscated capital and depreciated property values. Voluntary investment in productive enterprise has already practically ceased and the securities markets have been killed. Wages, the prices of basic commodities and services, the financial management, administration of personnel, and the marketing practices of all basic industries, electric power, transportation and communication systems are already controlled by political agencies.

I have no doubt that the extension of these processes in consequence of the war will be justified, like the changes made during the past 7 years, as indispensable for the defense of democracy and the preservation of the enterprise system; and it must be admitted that one sure way of protecting both against the possibility of further damage is to kill them promptly and completely.

At the end of this period every important nation, including the United States, will be hopelessly insolvent and will have dissipated its private capital resources and repudiated its public debts. Most of Europe will be physically devastated; an enormous part of the population will have been killed by explosives, disease, and starvation; the rest will be ruled by the armed gangs upon which they will be dependent for a living, and which will control all economic resources and conduct all industry and trade. In this country all free enterprise of any importance will have disappeared; the standard of living of most of the population except political jobholders and dependents will be lower than it was at the beginning of the century; and our economic organization and political institutions will have been transformed into the current European form of mechanized bureaucratic feudalism.

I hope that these things will not happen, but I think they will because there are so few people in this country who now realize that they can happen and are happening, and who are now willing to make any personal sacrifice or take any risk to try to prevent them from happening. Most of the American people since the World War have become very sheepish in face of the increasingly aggressive trend of government. If they are fed and amused by their political gangs they are willing to be sheared and even occasionally slaughtered.

The proportion of private citizens who regard the conduct of their public employees with the relentless vigilence and persistent suspicion which has always been imperative in the preservation of human liberty has diminished almost to a vanishing point; and to the great majority the latter have become an indispensable source of entertainment and reverent awe, second in importance only to the transient stellar constellations of Hollywood, and equally worth paying any price for. Until some substantial part of our people regain through bitter experience a little of the profound distrust and aggressive resentment toward political power which was traditonal in American life for two centuries we need expect no great change in their taste for the gladiatorial games which their Government conducts in domestic and international affairs. Most of them will continue to feel that it is better to be a live sheep than a dead lion.

We need not believe that these consequences of the war will be necessary or permanent, or that they will be the only or final consequences, either for the United States or other countries. The chaos and suffering which the forties will certainly bring here and abroad in consequence of the war will evoke and stimulate the constructive and conservative resources of the community life which lie in the creative capacities and courage of individuals. These resources, latent and relaxed through a long period of political demoralization, are always very great, and are always ultimately revitalized and increased by danger and hardship. Though some of us will not be here to see it, we may be sure that before the last half of this century is far advanced, they will reassert themselves somewhere in the community life here and abroad, and begin the work of rebuilding what a half century of governmental aggression has destroyed. When this revitalization of the individual will come, I do not presume to prophesy. In these matters the wind bloweth where it listeth, and the spirit of men does not move according to the plan of any man.

Prepare for Peace

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. COLGATE W. DARDEN, JR., OF VIRGINIA, BEFORE THE VIRGINIA STATE CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN LEGION, NORFOLK, VA., AUGUST 26, 1940

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of my colleague from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN]:

Members of the Legion, it is with genuine pleasure that I also welcome you to Norfolk.

I am especially sorry not to be here tomorrow to listen along with you to one of the ablest men in the House of Representatives, my colleague on the Naval Affairs Committee, the Honorable MELVIN MAAS, of Minnesota. MEL MAAS is not only a fine person, he is unselfish and patriotic. With a district far removed from naval activities he has rendered invaluable service in developing the sea power of our Nation.

These are dark days in which we assemble, days in which great decisions must be made. There are in truth powerful currents underrunning these times, currents of such force and of such magnitude as to make it impossible for us to judge accurately of their direction or of their power. It is probable that in spending themselves they will reshape world history. It may be that tney will recaste western civilization. Whatever is done will depend to no small extent upon the toughness of the human fiber and the iron will of those who wish to live unshackled and untrammeled under free institutions rather than enslaved and oppressed under the bitter tyranny and despotism of those who seek to make themselves masters of the world.

I have no fear for human liberty over the broad reaches of time. The struggle for freedom is as old as mankind. Liberty may be abridged—it may be darkened for a time by the ominous shadows of dictatorship—it may even be eclipsed by the cruel oppression of a tyrant but it will not be destroyed.

So vital and so vigorous is this spirit in the breast of man that like a mighty torrent at full flood rushing on to the sea it will break asunder and sweep aside the shackles forged by those who would enslave it.

It is about the present that I am concerned because while human liberty may survive it is of vital importance that it not be lost to us. We must not run the risk nor have our children subjected to the hazard of living in the darkness of absolutism. This problem is one which we face today as we assemble here. In its solution all of us will play a part. It is on this difficulty that I desire to be heard very briefly.

Certainly there is nothing in recent years which would lead any impartial observer to believe that we desire anything other than peace. The history of this great democracy of the West, as in fact does the history of the other democracies of the world, points with an unerring finger at the efforts which have been made in the interest of world peace.

The guns had hardly grown silent on the western front in 1918 when we set about demobilizing our Army of over 4,000,000 men—and so rapid was the demobilization that in a comparatively short time it had dropped to approximately 125,000.

In 1916 under the pressure of events abroad the Congress authorized and appropriated for the greatest fleet ever laid down. Its construction was started and the powerful units which were projected for our fleet would have made it upon their completion the most formidable naval force afloat.

In 1921 President Harding called a conference in Washington to consider the possibility of limiting naval armament. To this conference Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan were invited and all of them accepted.

Notwithstanding the fact that we were incomparably the most able, both on account of natural wealth and great industrial power, to maintain a powerful fleet, we offered to scrap most of our great ships provided the other powers would join in a disarmament program.

It was finally agreed that there should be a 10-year holiday in capital-ship construction and a tonnage limitation on capital ships and aircraft carriers. Time does not permit me to set forth these categories. It is worthy of note, however, that no agreement could be reached on land armaments and light naval craft. We broke up and destroyed our magnificent ships, many of them nearly completed.

In the years that followed all the signatories, so far as I know, adhered to the terms of the treaty, but while the other powers continued as was their right to construct cruisers, submarines, and other light craft, we did not add to our naval forces. Relatively we became weaker.

In addition to the naval agreement the nine-power treaty was signed. This treaty guaranteed the territorial integrity of China. It was signed by Japan and eight other powers, including Great Britain and the United States.

In 1930 the same naval powers met again in London in an effort to further limit naval tonnage. Meanwhile a parley held at Geneva in 1927 at the invitation of President Coolidge had failed to accomplish anything.

The London conference accomplished little. France and Italy withdrew because they could arrive at no acceptable formula to cover naval strength in the Mediterranean. The agreement finally signed by Great Britain, Japan, and the United States provided for a very small reduction in naval strength in certain categories but in each situation escape was provided by means of an escalator clause which permitted any of the three to increase armaments in each category, should it be felt that building by a nonsignatory power endangered the national security of the signatory power.

Again, in 1935, the powers met in London, but already naval disarmament was on its deathbed, and the conference adjourned without agreement, and on December 31, 1936, the Washington and London Naval Treaties expired and the naval building holiday was over.

In 1925 at Locarno in Switzerland the Treaty of Mutual Guaranties was signed by Germany, France, England, Italy, and Belgium.

The treaty stipulated that the boundaries of Germany, France, and Belgium be safeguarded by mutual agreement, all disputes were to be arbitrated, Germany was admitted to the League of Nations and she renounced her claims to Alsace-Lorraine. France abandoned plans for a Rhineland buffer state.

Nineteen hundred and twenty-eight saw the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact concluded at Paris in August by the delegates of 15 nations. By 1933 62 nations had subscribed to it. It provided for the renunciation of war as a national policy. It obligated the signers to arbitration and conciliation in the settlement of international disputes.

The economic collapse which swept the western world, starting in the United States in 1929, probably contributed to the failure of the London Naval Conference in 1930 and the World Disarmament Conference of 1932. General deterioration in both Europe and the Far East marked the close of the 1920's.

In the fall of 1931, notwithstanding the Nine Power Treaty, Japan struck in China, and tore away Manchuria, setting up a puppet government in March 1932. The other nations protested but they were not strong enough to make their protests effective. Since that time Japan, as you know, has made itself master of the richest area of China, including the sea coast. War still rages there. The Chinese resistance is stubborn and effective.

So much for the efforts which have been made in the interest of world peace—efforts which depended upon disarmament and treaties of mutual assistance. One by one they have failed. Unfortunately, in their failure they left the democracies weaker, and to this tragic weakness can be added the failure of the democratic peoples and their leaders to appreciate the catastrophe toward which they were drifting.

Free government was in retreat, abandoning in that retreat the only instrument which could effectively guarantee its survival—armed power. Notwithstanding the fact that they were without question the masters of most of the industrial machinery of the world, notwithstanding the fact that most of the strategic raw materials lay within their frontiers, they dropped asleep while ambitious militarists armed for their destruction.

We forgot that for centuries mankind had been forced to carry on trade behind fortified barriers and that only the democratic systems had attempted with any degree of success to sweep away the barriers of trade in the hope that disarmament might follow.

We did not grasp the necessity of arming speedily once we saw that our efforts for world peace were going for naught. We desperately hoped that another trial would bring success, and we failed to understand that only in our strength could we hope to succeed. Weakness in front of armed strength only invited disaster.

The early days of October 1935 saw Italy plunge into Abyssinia. While the League of Nations attempted to apply sanctions its effort was not effective, largely because the attempt did not have the wholehearted support of those involved.

In 1935 Germany remilitarized the Rhineland and in the spring of 1938 crushed Austria, notwithstanding the treaty of 1936 wherein Germany specifically recognized the independence of that country.

The fall of 1938 saw the Prime Ministers of France and Great Britain meet with Hitler in Munich, where the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia was agreed upon in an effort to avert war in Europe. Hitler, upon the conclusion of these conferences and on the eve of the occupation of the Sudeten area, announced that he had no further territorial ambitions in Europe. A few months later, in 1939, his armies overran the remainder of that gallant nation.

These melancholy developments on the Continent aroused both France and England to the necessity of speeding up the production of the materials of war. To a lesser extent the impact of those developments was felt on this side of the Atlantic and we began military preparations which have now reached gigantic proportions. The only question is how much time will be allowed us. This rests in large part upon events over which we have but little control.

September 1939 saw the outbreak of war in Europe. Hitler invaded Poland; and France and England, pursuant to their guaranties, declared war upon Germany.

The events of recent months are, I know, too familiar to all of us. The collapse of Poland; the overrunning of Denmark, Norway, Holland, and Belgium laid the foundation for the destruction of France with a suddenness that struck terror into the hearts of the world.

These swift-moving events have brought us as a nation into a position of great peril. Our problem must be faced with courage and decision.

We must, it seems to me, have done with appeasement and retreat. Peace and security for our people lie in strength—overwhelming strength—not in weakness and petition for consideration at the hands of the most ruthless militarist of our age.

Make no mistake about either the strength or the ability of the leaders of the great military machine which today dominates continental Europe. Its effectiveness has been demonstrated. The dream of world empire on the part of its leaders is as yet partly hidden by protestations and declarations wholly false and designed merely to lull us into an unwarranted sense of security against the day when we can be dealt with effectively.

Our only hope of survival is in armed power based upon an industrial machine capable of supplying our needs in any emergency.

We must be prepared to deal with enemies from without and on constant guard against enemies from within.

No surer method of making available the manpower needed for our defense can be found than in the selective-service legislation now pending before the Congress. The defense of America should not rest alone upon volunteers. It is a duty that falls with equal weight upon the shoulders of all of our citizens. This legislation which has for long had the active support of the Legion should receive early and favorable consideration. It is needed, desperately needed, not for tomorrow, but for today. It is at this very hour that action can be taken that may enable us to ward off effectively a catastrophe in the future.

No government has the right to subject its citizens to the dangers of modern war without affording them the training that at least will give them the chance of surviving in a struggle in which machinery now plays so dominant a part.

In these days of preparation we shall expect the support and loyalty of those within our borders. There is no room in the United States for either a party or an individual in the pay of a foreign power, where the party or the individual is engaged in attacking our institutions or conceptions of government.

We expect with every means at our command to protect individual liberty, but we shall not permit those who seek to destroy us to hide behind guaranties which they neither cherish nor respect.

At this critical hour in our history, we cannot permit the citizens of other lands to abuse the hospitality of our people.

I know of no group in America more interested in the welfare of our people than is the American Legion. Certainly at no time in our history are we more in need of our loyal and patriotic citizens. I am sure that you will meet the difficulties which confront us with courage and determination.

If we are to have the peace which all of us so genuinely desire, we must demonstrate to conquerors beyond the seas that we are prepared and willing to protect by force if need be our land and our people.

Slum Clearance

REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 20, 1940

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the slum-clearance housing bill has been pending in this Congress now for over a year. Much has been said on the floor by Members, but it seems that not much has been done. Whether the fault lies with the Rules Committee or with the committee having jurisdiction, I do not know, but having started a program of slum clearance it is my opinion that we should continue it. Something should be done to awaken Congress to the importance of this problem. [Applause.]

Some time has now passed since our Government entered into a large-scale program of slum clearance and housing. When the program was launched it was for the purpose of enabling the underprivileged one-third of our Nation to find adequate housing.

By now, while the United States leads all the nations in homes for every purse and condition, nevertheless we have as yet barely scratched the surface. While housing has been provided for a large number of people and while we have eliminated some of the slums which were such a eyesore to the inhabitants of the hundreds of cities in this country, nevertheless much more remains to be done. Slum clearance has resulted in better landscaping and a more adequate system of parks and public playgrounds, so that we can say now without fear of contradiction that our American cities have the finest system of public parks ever assembled together in any community in the world.

The one outstanding name, whenever housing is mentioned, is that of the senior Senator from New York [ROBERT F. WAGNER]. It was the enlightened vision of this eminent statesman which first translated into action the Nation's demand for adequate low-cost housing.

Having started this program of slum clearance and adequate housing, it would be folly to close the doors to any further developments and pat ourselves satisfactorily on the back with the conviction of duty well done. Slum clearance is a continuous process, and as has been shown in a dramatic sketch entitled "One-third of a Nation," slums have a tendency of developing after they have been cleared. The creation of better districts in the cities, districts which were heretofore on the marginal line, may revert to a slum condition; and if the tendency is not checked we shall have two slums where one grew before.

As a result, Congress must still proceed with its program of slum clearance and low-rent housing as established under the Housing Act of 1937. There is a proposal now pending before the Senate to assist in the undertaking of additional slum-clearance and low-rent housing projects through loans and annual contributions to the public housing agencies. The bill also seeks to create a comprehensive program for the assistance of farm and other families of low income living in the rural areas.

By the United States Housing Act of 1937, Congress initiated a program for providing financial assistance to States and their political subdivisions under which they could eradicate their slums and provide safe and sanitary housing for those who live in the slums and whose incomes are so low that private enterprise cannot provide them with decent housing. Under the act, the United States Housing Authority was created, and was authorized to issue its own bonds and to lend the proceeds thereof to public housing agencies to finance not more than 90 percent of the cost of slum clearance and low-rent housing projects. The United States Housing Authority was further authorized to make annual contributions to such agencies so that the rents in the projects might be reduced to an amount, which would be within the reach of the low-income families living under unsafe and unsanitary housing conditions. The locality was required to make local contributions equal to at least 20 percent of the Federal annual contributions.

Under the act as it was initially passed and approved in September 1937, the United States Housing Authority was authorized to issue bonds in an amount not to exceed a total of $500,000,000, $100,000,000 of which was to be available the first year and $200,000,000 the second and third years. That act also authorized annual contributions in an aggregate amount of $20,000,000, $5,000,000 to be available the first year and $7,500,000 the second and third years. In June of 1938, amendments were adopted which increased the bond authorization to $800,000,000 and made the full amount immediately available. The amendments increased the annual contribution authorization to $28,000,000 and made the full amount immediately available. This annual contribution authorization has, however, been sufficient to cover projects involving only about $650,000,000 in Federal loans, plus the 10-percent local capital participation, and the necessary allowances in estimates to cover possible contingencies.

It is now proposed to issue another series of bonds to the extent of some $800,000,000, the proceeds of which to be used in loans to local housing agencies for the purpose of enabling these agencies to launch into adequate housing slum-clearing projects. These loans, of course, will be simply advances to the local housing authorities, and it is proposed that these loans be repaid in annual installments over a period of 30 to 50 years. Eventually, the United States Housing Authority will not only receive back this money, but will be paid back with interest, so that the Federal Government by issuing these additional bonds is not going to increase our national debt by 1 cent.

In addition to these loans, the United States Housing Authority will be permitted to contract for the payment of annual contributions to housing agencies in a total sum of $45,000,000. These contributions will be necessary, since otherwise the housing agencies will not be in a position to establish low rents in their several projects. These annual contributions are intended to make up the difference between the rent which would be properly chargeable for such new construction and the rent which these poor families now living in slums will be able to pay. After all, it will be of no material use to any poor family living on a low income in slums to have good housing for which such family will be unable to pay. In the city of New York housing projects the average rent is at the rate of $5 per week for a unit consisting of four rooms, which of course, is far below the figure charged for similar "housing" by private landlords.

The principal extension of the Housing Act will be for rural areas. The sum of $200,000,000 is to be appropriated for the purpose of enabling rural districts to share in the benefits of low-rent housing, and it is expected that this sum will adequately meet the needs of rural communities. Again this is a loan and not a contribution, so that eventually this money will be repaid with interest.

To make it possible for the housing program to proceed in an orderly and continuous manner, more funds must be made available now so that the United States Housing Authority may continue its program and local public-housing agencies may be enabled to begin their planning and work on additional projects. In the construction of a project, there is of necessity a substantial period of time between paper planning and actual construction. Because of the lapse of time—which is necessarily involved as part of any program of permanent municipal improvements—between the availability of funds for housing, and the effect of these funds on reemployment and volume of business, it is necessary that additional funds be provided this year for the normal continuance of the program throughout the coming year, without any substantial interruption in employment and construction. The enactment of the bill is necessary to continue an effective attack on the problems of eliminating American slums and rehousing families in the lowest income groups.

It will therefore be seen that the interest which the Federal Government is taking in low-income housing projects is a very comprehensive one. The desire to aid families, who otherwise would have to live in slums is the principal consideration for this far-reaching proposed legislation.

Representing, as I do, a district where slum clearance should be undertaken on a very large and comprehensive scale, I shall do everything in my power to aid and assist in any project which will result in affording to the millions of our people adequate housing. New York City has always been in the forefront of giving advantages of good housing to the masses of the people. The present administration, ever since President Roosevelt made his classic pronouncement about one-third of our Nation being ill-housed and underprivileged, has done everything in its power to reduce this condition. Thanks very largely to the close cooperation which exists between our national administration and the enlightened government of the city of New York, under its brilliant Mayor LaGuardia, which has been doing more than its share toward this goal. But more remains to be done. We must reach the situation where eventually there will be no slums and no person living in substandard dwellings. We cannot, however, expect any material success unless Congress, realizing its responsibility, will promptly act upon the bill. The bill will alleviate conditions to a very large extent, and while it will not completely solve the housing situation in our large cities it will be a tremendous step forward and a forerunner to the eventual solution of this grave problem for the benefit of the masses of our people and to the elimination of this stumbling block to progress.

Washington Affairs and National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. VORYS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 15, 1940

ADDRESS BY CATHRINE CURTIS

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address, entitled "Washington Affairs and National Defense," by Cathrine Curtis, national director, Women Investors in America, Inc., before a mass meeting of the Mothers of the United States of America at Detroit, Mich., June 13, 1940:

On my way here from Washington I passed through New York, where my home and our national headquarters are located. I learned there yesterday Wall Street is betting 8 to 1 we will be in Europe's war within 6 months. What information does Wall Street have, unknown to the rest of the country, that makes them willing to give 8-to-1 odds? Why did one of Wall Street's most capable men say to me yesterday, "Miss Curtis, the sooner we get into this war the better I'll like it"?

Most of my time is spent in Washington, where I have an opportunity to confer with Capitol Hill leaders, Democratic and Republican leaders, but not those of the new war party. These men are alarmed at the rapidity with which we are being pushed, step by step, into this European conflagration. They inform me without hesitation that, if this country keeps out of Europe's latest—her thirty-second—war, it will be due to the clear thinking and influence of the Middle and far West and deep South and because our women refuse to allow minority groups, no matter how loud-voiced or well-financed, to involve us, thereby taking not only our sons and resources, but also our liberty and constitutional Republic.

Make no mistake. If we become involved in this alien war it means just one thing for us—a military dictatorship. The more quickly our people realize that the more quickly they will be able to protect themselves from dictated destruction.

Some may ask why I, as national director of Women Investors In America, Inc., a nonprofit, educational, membership organization, formed primarily for the defense and protection of women's property rights and the free enterprise system, should be concerned over the possibility of our present form of government, a republic, being replaced by a military dictatorship. It is the combination of that form of government and the free enterprise system that has given our women their great spiritual and financial stake in our country, has made them the world's greatest capitalists and the envy of their sisters throughout the world.

True, once we are forced into this alien war, we will be told the military dictatorship will be only for "the duration of the emergency." But what of the unending stream of emergencies of the past 7 years? Have you heard anyone now in power declare any of those ended? Do you realize that, if we had a military dictatorship now, I would not be permitted to speak to you as I will tonight? That, under such a dictatorship, you could not discuss national problems—even among yourselves in your own homes—without danger of arrest for treason?

Do you know that in England today people are arrested without warrant—detained without charge—held incommunicado indefinitely? That one's home there can be entered and searched without even a search warrant? That authority for all this was provided in legislation passed quietly about 2 months before the present war was declared? One cannot help but wonder with all this demand in Washington to rush legislation without time to study it, if the same thing might not be happening here?

Women played a major role in establishing our Republic. But there never has been a time when they could serve her as they can and must serve her now. I am convinced that upon the shoulders of our women rests the grave responsibility of whether we will be forced under a military dictatorship by allowing ourselves to be pushed into this war.

Most of you recall the World War only too well. Some of you sent your sons to "make the world safe for democracy." Well, they made it safe for democracy—for dictatorships. For always in the wake of the march of democracy follows the dictator. It has happened in Russia, Mexico, Austria, Hungary, Italy, Germany, and Spain.

Always in that march comes a serious change in the position of women—a loss in the security and supremacy of the home and the protection of its children. In all those countries, youth is practically owned and controlled by the state and, from early childhood, trained to look on war as the great adventure—to consider their lives of value only if given to the state.

Those countries solved their unemployment problems by first creating a war economy, through which the blunders of government were concealed. Then the unemployed were drafted from government dole lists either into army training camps or munitions plants, or, if they objected, sent to concentration camps.

Think back to August 1914, when European politicians again had so muddled the economic affairs of their nations they could only hide their mistakes behind the smoke screen of belching war guns and battle. By 1915 England and France had declared they did not want us in that war. They wanted us to remain neutral, so that our productive machinery could supply them with war materials. We all remember the huge foreign war loans that private bankers floated here, to be repaid them later by funds raised in the first Liberty Loan. Although those countries had large amounts of their own money immediately available in this country—as they now have—it is apparent they not only wanted us to act as producer but also as banker.

You remember the 1916 Presidential campaign, when Mr. Wilson campaigned for reelection on the slogan, "He kept us out of war; reelect him to keep us out of war." We believed and did reelect him that November to "keep us out of war." Yet 5 short months later, at his request, Congress declared war on Germany. In 5 short months propaganda changed the majority of our country from believers in peace to seekers of war.

Why? You undoubtedly recall the collapse of Russia began in the early winter of 1916. Was it because, with the loss of Russia as an ally, England and France knew they must have another ally to supply the manpower they would need to win that war? All I can say in answer to that is what men now on Capitol Hill who were there during those memorable days of late 1916 and early 1917 have told me:

"The envoys of England and France told us it was not money, not munitions, they wanted; that they must have men or they were lost."

How many of you appreciate that those brave men and women who came to this country some 300 years ago preferred to brave the dangers of the broad Atlantic in their frail sailing craft to face the hardships of a new and unknown world rather than remain in the Old World and be forced to take part in its recurrent political and trade wars, with their continual destruction and resultant starvation? How many remember that those brave pioneers came here and founded this country so that we might know real freedom and liberty by keeping free of Old World intrigues, entanglements, and alliances?

George Washington and those other great Revolutionary heroes who helped found this Republic knew that. But, 23 years ago, when the propaganda machine was forced into high gear and we were told we must send our men to Europe to "make the world safe for democracy," we broke faith with those brave pioneers. Falling victims to Old World intrigues, we sent our men to Europe—returned to its political wars—and what did it cost us?

Three hundred and fifty thousand of the flower of our youth killed and wounded, many of them armless and legless, blind, or demented, still lingering in our Government hospitals.

Approximately $30,000,000,000 of our money spent to prosecute our part of that war, and approximately another $30,000,000,000 already paid out in bonuses, disability payments, operating and administrative overhead in caring for veterans, their hospitalization, and so forth.

And in addition we loaned our Allies billions of dollars. Today, they still owe us about $14,000,000,000, not considering the debt reduction we allowed them under the Coolidge debt conference. Yet, there are those among us who are agitating for repeal of the Johnson Act, so that our nonpaying debtors can borrow more of our money.

We emerged from that war not as a trusted friend or ally but with the nickname of "Uncle Shylock." Newspapers now inform us it is already being said in London: "We'll hold out in this war as long as we can, then we'll let the two yellow races, Japan and the United States, fight it out."

What else did we get from the World War? A depression, the like of which this country has never seen before and directly traceable to the wholesale destruction of life and property during that war. This depression gave us our unemployed, our starry-eyed experimenters who would make America over, and that greatest socialistic experiment of all time, our New Deal.

France also was handed a new deal as a result of the World War, for Premier Leon Blum, on taking office in 1936, declared, "I am going to give France the Roosevelt New Deal!" Within a few months after taking office he had laws passed similar to our Wagner Act, Wage and Hour Act, A. A. A., and W. P. A. He also promoted centralized planned economy, assumed that prosperity could be achieved by heavy governmental spending, introduced controlled prices, gave France an unbalanced budget, and kept it unbalanced, revalued the currency, harassed and restricted private industry, and destroyed its morale by making it a public whipping boy to conceal the failures of his own administration—all resulting in lowered production, less jobs, and a lowered standard of living for his country.

In other words, Mr. Blum gave France the New Deal prosperity formula of less work, more pay, less production, more debt, and less liberty. Although France always had been basically nationalistic, he adopted internationalism—continual meddling in other nations' affairs—as the principal plank of his foreign policy. He courted Soviet Russia, gave aid to the Spanish Communists, and to the Communists and left-wing elements in his own country the right to operate openly under Government protection. In addition, he gave them Government jobs and furthered the communistic doctrines of worker-control of industry, riotous Government spending, and unbalanced budgets.

The Blum new deal gave the world the sit-in strike, which shortly thereafter raised its communistic head in this country as the sit-down strike—condoned and protected by our New Deal. I need not tell you what a sit-down strike means—you know only too well in Detroit. You saw it—and saw our Government refuse to protect property rights—saw the man that condoned that communistic practice here later awarded a place on our Supreme Court.

This is not the only parallel we find between the French new deal and our own. When facts began to leak out, as they will, relative to the weakening of France's national-defense forces and its economy, Mr. Blum went to the people and declared his new deal was giving France the best defense force it ever had in peacetime—particularly in airplanes and tanks. But in May of this year Premier Reynaud declared the rapid German invasion of France could only be attributed to his nation's pitiable weakness in air force and tanks.

The World War also gave England a "New Deal" where it was known as "Political and Economic Planning," commonly called there "P. E. P." It was introduced to England in March of 1933 by Israel Moses Sieff, vice president of the English Zionist Society, who announced that England's "political and economic machinery was breaking down and planning was necessary to eliminate waste and bring about prosperity for all." Doesn't that sound familiar?

Sieff and his associates gave England its Milk Marketing Board, Pig Marketing Board, Electricity Grid, Reorganization of the Electric Supply Committee, Import Duties Advisory Committee, Town and County Planning Board, Committee on National Housing, Retail Trading Standards Association, National Labor Committee and other similar groups—all of which you easily recognize as new names for our N. R. A., T. V. A., A. A. A., W. P. A., and so forth.

At the time this war was declared, Mr. Sieff and his "P. E. P.," associates were drafting legislation to give the Government control over all private investing, similar to our S. E. C. With the advent of the war, this was unnecessary, since the English Government almost immediately assumed control of practically every phase of that nation's economic life. In view of all this, one cannot help but wonder if England, having had its new deal and joined the march of democracy, also will have to pay the same price other nations have paid for joining that march.

While it is not widely publicized, we also have had our own "P. E. P.," since 1934—financed for the most part, I am reliably informed, by Whitney money and operating under the name of the "National Economic and Social Planning Association," with headquarters in Washington. This group states its objective to be "to bridge the gap between fact-finding and policy-making!" According to available information, it is almost completely manned by individuals trained in England and has played a major behind-the-scenes role in writing new deal must legislation.

However, I came here not to talk of European affairs, but of our own problems—particularly our economic situation and national-defense program. We all believe in national defense and certainly the United States could and should have the finest in the world—but do we have it?

Since it is evident there are among us some who would push us into Europe's latest war, we must give thought to the actual state of our national defense. While guns in Europe belch forth flame and destruction, our air waves crackle with belligerent words and our press is filled with pleas for aid to England and France. Last Monday, June 10, a great number of newspapers throughout the country carried a full-page ad titled, "Stop Hitler Now." It was sponsored by the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, and was signed by William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans.

We do not know yet what this advertising campaign cost, but you may be sure someone has given this group thousands of dollars for it. Would that someone would give our women funds to finance a similar campaign to "Save the United States, Now."

In considering this appeal to strip ourselves of our few airplanes, guns, and ships to aid England and France, it should be remembered that William Allen White who signs this appeal has been publicly listed as treasurer of the American Society for Cultural Relations with Russia, an organization described by the Dies committee as a Communist transmission belt group. That he is the William Allen White who, in writing under the title, "Moscow and Emporia," in the radical New Republic magazine for September 1938, declared:

"When anyone, for any reason, was forming any sort of society looking to a cultural alliance with Russia, or a group to promote the recognition of Russia, I joined. As a member of a small subcommittee on resolutions at the Republican National Convention of 1920, Senator Borah and I and two or three liberals on the subcommittee wrote in a phrase which justified America's recognition of the Soviets."

Mr. White and his two or three liberals may have written into the 1920 Republican platform that phrase "which justified America's recognition of the Soviets," but the bloody Soviet Government was not recognized by us until 1933.

What of this "fifth column" of which we hear so much today—the Communists, Nazis, Fascists, and the agents of other foreign governments secretly at work in this country? What is its objective? The Dies committee recently states a major part of "fifth column" activity has been to keep us soft—to see to it that we are economically unsound and—above everything—unprepared to defend ourselves. Can it also be that part of its objective is to prevent us from defending our Republic here at home by sending our troops off around the world defending some other form of government? Is it also to strip us of our few defense weapons and turn our eyes across the Atlantic in order to lay bare our backs for the dagger thrust by the enemy already within our gates?

But we are told we can afford to give away our "old" defense weapons, because we now have a real defense program with billions appropriated to put it into speedy effect. Therefore, we are urged to give away the "old" equipment to aid in "the defense of democracy." Blum and his followers made similar statements to the French people and they believed. They allowed their government to send "old" airplanes, tanks, artillery, and rifles to aid the Spanish Communists "defend democracy"—only to have that equipment captured by General Franco, turned over by him to Hitler and Mussolini and later used by them in their invasion of France!

The news already has leaked through the European censors that Hitler is using planes against France and England that were built in the United States for the Allies, shipped to Norway for their use—only to be captured there by the Germans! If there is any truth in the claim that we are facing danger of invasion—do we not also face the danger of having our own defense equipment used against us if we continue to ship it to Europe?

We have spent more than seven and one-half billion dollars on our national defense in the past 7 years. It would now appear that for this amount we did not get even the equivalent of a good 5-and-10-cent store. When Congress recently raised questions as to the actual state of our national defenses, the Chief Executive went to the people in a fireside chat and announced that under his leadership we have achieved the best defense force we have ever had in peacetime.

In attempting to prove that statement, he detailed the weapons we have on hand and the "paper" weapons we have on order. What a deplorable situation. The Commander in Chief of our armed forces publicly informing the entire world, including all possible aggressors, the pitiable condition of our national defense.

Let me say that if I know the women of this country as I believe I do from my continual contact with them over a period of many years, then I know they want every bit of national defense we need for the defense of these United States. But we women insist on knowing whether our New Deal is misleading us as Blum's new deal misled France. And, if that is the case, will we have to pay the same price the women of France now are paying?

Devising plans for national defense is one thing; coordinating our productive machinery so that it will produce our defense needs speedily, efficiently, and economically is another. Some may claim this is being done and point as proof to the recently named National Defense Commission. Does this newly named board have the power and authority to really coordinate our productive machinery? Let's look at the law under which it is created and ascertain its duties. It was named under a law passed in 1916, which sets forth the duties of the Council as follows:

"SEC. 3. Duties of the Council: It shall be the duty of the Council of National Defense to supervise and direct investigations and to make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments."

In other words, all this Commission legally is empowered to do is "supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President," who will—or will not, as he sees fit—carry them out!

You have read the names of the individuals named to this Board, but two of them deserve your particular attention—Leon

Henderson and Sydney Hillman. Mr. Henderson formerly was secretary of the Temporary National Economic Committee, commonly called the monopoly committee, of which Senator JOSEPH O'MAHONEY, of Wyoming, who introduced the Federal licensing bill to place all private industry under a Federal license, was chairman. Mr. Henderson, formerly a director of the radical-supporting Russell Sage Foundation who entered Government service by way of the N. R. A. and W. P. A., is reported to have stated on various occasions that our capitalistic system is dead and we must develop a new economic system. He is in charge of raw materials and their prices for the defense program and since industry cannot function without a sufficient supply of raw materials, I ask you, if he is in control of raw materials and their prices, is he not actually in control of private industry, an integral part of our capitalistic system?

Now consider Sydney Hillman, who has been placed in charge of the labor supply and apprentice training for industry's needs in our national-defense program. Born in Lithuania, he came to this country when he was 20 and almost at once became associated with Leon Trotsky, cofounder with Lenin of Russia's bloody Soviet. He later married Bessie Abramovitch, protege of the Anarchist-Communist Emma Goldman, and quickly worked his way to the head of the clothing workers in this country.

He visited Russia to assist Lenin and Trotsky organize the clothing industry there, then went to Italy, which was under "worker control" at the time. On returning to the United States, he reported to his union, according to the official record of the 1922 Amalgamated Clothing Workers' convention, as follows:

"In Rome I was doubly welcome; the secretary of the metal workers' union gave me a letter, the only key to open the factory gates. With my Italian comrades, I landed in front of the factory, which looked attractive because of the fine 'red' flag which adorned the building and the 'red' sentinel who was keeping watch."

One cannot help but wonder if Mr. Hillman's appointment to control labor for the national-defense program eventually will mean that "the only key to open the factory gates" here will be a letter from some union secretary that "fine 'red' flags" will fly over our factory buildings and they will have "'red' sentinels" guarding their gates.

Considering this—and the present talk of aid to Europe and defense of the Western Hemisphere—there is one point the people of the Central and Northwest should carefully consider. That is the danger of invasion of our country by way of Alaska. Many do not realize that Russia's latest military and naval bases in the Pacific are but a few short miles from Alaska's coast. If our defensive forces are dissipated—first by sending our "old" planes, tanks, guns, and ships to Europe and next by shipping our troops to Mexico, South America, or elsewhere—what would happen to our North and Central West if an invader suddenly swooped down by way of Alaska?

It is time we faced the facts! I find our women are alarmed at the antagonistic attitude and belligerent words coming from some in our Nation—a Nation supposedly at peace and seeking the good will of all. We now realize our defense forces are woefully weak and if we send our few weapons out of the country, we will be unable to defend ourselves not only against external invasion but also internal "fifth column" attack. Yet many people here today seem concerned with but two things—sending money or other aid to Europe and electing a President in November! I have found but few who consider what will happen if martial law is declared here!

Do you realize that—under martial law—constitutional and statute law cease to exist—that you have a military dictator who may suspend elections if he so desires? But—you say—what situation could arise that would permit declaring martial law here. Suppose Harry Bridges—well-known west coast alien and citizen of Australia, a country now at war—who is in control of our shipping labor, should foment shipping strikes and simultaneously, strikes should occur in the steel and motor industries? Would not that be sabotage requiring drastic steps, such as martial law, to put through the defense program we are told we need for our protection?

Let me add this. I know many are looking forward avidly to war economy profits, but—mark my words—there "just ain't going to be no profits!" If we enter this European war, all there will be is taxes—then more taxes—then confiscation and finally regimentation under a military dictatorship!

Where do we stand? Apparently, whether we wish it or not, we are being pushed pell-mell along the road to war! Why? Does someone in this country desire to become "Dictator of the Americas?" Or is this drive toward war simply in keeping with the old European custom of making wars conceal political mistakes?

What can we do to halt this Washington "blitzkrieg" toward war that is threatening our Republic? Here are a few suggestions for the women of the country:

1. Petition Congress, as our elected Representatives under our republican form of government, to remain in continuous session representing us during this "war emergency."

2. Petition your Representatives in Congress immediately to adopt a policy of no more meddling by our Government in the affairs of other nations and to return at once to the policies set forth by George Washington in his Farewell Address, which may be briefly summed up as: "Minding our own business; solving our own problems first."

3. Petition Congress for immediate repeal of all laws contrary to the principles of our Republic that now are on our statute books, even if some term them "social-reform laws of democracy."

4. Insist there shall be no repeal of the Johnson Act.

5. Dedicate yourselves to preventing any other form of government being substituted for our Republic.

Can these things be accomplished? I say they can, by the women of the United States—united.

The organization which I head was founded 5 years ago on the slogan: "1 woman can be forceful; 100 women can be helpful; 1,000 women can be powerful; but 1,000,000 women, united, are invincible."

I say to you these United States can be preserved and our Republic saved by 1,000,000 women, united, in 1 mighty national campaign to save the United States now. Will you do it?

Public Versus Private Ownership of Electric-Power Facilities

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

SPEECH DELIVERED BY HON. JOHN E. RANKIN, OF MISSISSIPPI, OVER RADIO STATION WOL AND THE MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM ON THE AMERICAN FORUM OF THE AIR PROGRAM AUGUST 18, 1940

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert an address which I made over the radio on August 18 in reply to Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, on the subject Public Versus Private Ownership of Electric Power Facilities, which reads as follows:

Mr. Chairman, the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is one of the most amusing to which I have ever listened. [Laughter.] If the people I represent paid the exorbitant rates for electric lights and power now paid by Senator BRIDGES' constituents in New Hampshire, the annual overcharges alone would amount to the value of 2,000 bales of cotton, on an average, for every county in the district I represent.

The generation and distribution of electricity is a public business, and one in which the Government has the right to engage. Especially is this true when it comes to developing and distributing the hydroelectric power in our navigable streams, which is public property belonging to all the American people and should be used for the benefit of all.

Instead of the Government being engaged in the private power business, we have the private power companies engaging in a public business and attempting to monopolize it. They are exercising governmental powers by imposing taxes upon the unprotected users of electricity throughout the country in the form of overcharges that now amount to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year—wringing from the unprotected users of electricity every penny the traffic will bear.

As I have said before, electricity is the lifeblood of our advancing civilization. The cheaper the rates the more freely it flows, and the more freely it flows the greater are its benefits to mankind. It is now a necessity of our modern life, and it must be handled through some form of monopoly, since it would be too expensive for a half dozen or a dozen concerns to supply electricity to one community.

Since it is a necessity and controlled by some form of monopoly, it is essentially a public business in which the Government or the municipality not only has the right but the duty to engage.

Everyone who uses electric energy is entitled to receive it at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution. There is only one way in which this has ever been accomplished, and that is through some form of public ownership—governmental, municipal, or cooperative.

During the years immediately preceding the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority there was very little reduction in light and power rates. But since the creation of the T. V. A., and the publication of its yardstick rates showing what electricity should cost, we have forced reduction in light and power rates throughout the country to the amount of $580,000,000 a year. I wish I had time to break those reductions down by States. The T. V. A. is the greatest development of ancient or modern times; it will take the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt down the centuries long after his present critics are gone and forgotten.

Users of electricity are saving more money every year as a result of the T. V. A. yardstick than the Tennessee Valley Authority will ever cost them. Everyone who turns an electric switch is receiving a part of the benefits. Out of the T. V. A. has grown our rural electrification program that has electrified millions of farm homes for the first time, and through which we hope to finally electrify every farm home in America, at the T. V. A. rates.

We should develop every navigable stream in America, as we have the Tennessee, the Colorado, and the Columbia Rivers, in order to control floods, improve navigation, conserve the soil, protect our growing timber, and generate electricity to be distributed to the people in every nook and corner of the Nation at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission, and distribution.

That would force further reductions in light and power rates amounting to approximately $1,000,000,000 a year, add billions to the Nation's wealth, and bring to the masses of the American people comforts, conveniences, and relief from drudgery such as they have never enjoyed.

During the year 1938 the people of this country used 94,832,867,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which they paid $2,146,443,233. Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $1,257,050,486—which shows that they were overcharged $889,392,747, according to the T. V. A. rates.

Tacoma, Wash., has one of the finest public power systems in America. Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $1,016,142,175, or a difference of $1,130,300,661.

Under the rates charged by the public power system in Ontario, Canada, the cost would have been $1,139,286,874, which shows an overcharge of $1,007,156,359, according to the Ontario rates.

Here are the residential rates, paid by the people in the T. V. A. area, in Tacoma, Wash., and throughout the Province of Ontario. I hope everyone who is listening will take these rates down and compare them with last month's canceled bill, and then he can tell how much he was overcharged.

Here are the T. V. A. yardstick rates:

First 50 kilowatt-hours per month, 3 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 150 kilowatt-hours per month, 2 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Next 200 kilowatt-hours per month, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month, 4 mills a kilowatt-hour.

Here are the residential rates in Tacoma, Wash.:

First 20 kilowatt-hours, 4½ cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 400 kilowatt-hours, 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Over 420 kilowatt-hours, one-half cent per kilowatt-hour.

Here are the average residential rates prevailing throughout the Province of Ontario:

First 60 kilowatt-hours per month, 3.3 cents a kilowatt-hour.
Excess, 9 mills a kilowatt-hour.

I am going to use the Tacoma, Wash., rates to make my comparisons; for the reason that the opposition is constantly bringing up the argument that these overcharges are absorbed by the taxes paid by private power companies.

The report of the Federal Power Commission for 1936 shows that the private power companies throughout the United States paid in taxes, cash contributions, and free services, only 13.2 percent of their gross revenues, while the Tacoma Electric System paid a little more than 16 percent of its gross revenues in taxes, cash contributions, and free services. Remember, the Tacoma system gets no subsidies from any source.

This record of the Federal Power Commission shows that during the year 1936 the private power companies and the public systems combined, throughout the United States, paid in taxes, cash contributions, and free services a total of $303,734,000. Although Tacoma pays a greater percentage of her revenues in taxes, cash contributions, and free services than the private power companies, let's just take this entire amount of $303,734,000 from the overcharges of $1,130,300,661 in 1938, according to the Tacoma rates, and it will still leave an annual overcharge of $826,566,000—after giving the private power companies credit for double the amount paid in taxes, cash contributions, and free services. I am conceding that they paid as much in 1938 as they did in 1936.

After deducting the amounts paid in each State for taxes, cash contributions, and free services by both private and public power systems, the net overcharges paid by the people of each State for electricity for 1938 were as follows:

In Alabama, $6,985,000; Arizona, $4,062,000; Arkansas, $5,561,000.

I wish I had time to translate the overcharges in every State into terms of the commodities upon which that State depends.

For instance, the overcharges in the State of Arkansas for 1 year equaled the value of 123,000 bales of cotton, or an average of 1,600 bales for each one of the 75 counties in the State. That is a fair sample of what these overcharges mean to the people in every one of the cotton-growing States.

In California these overcharges amounted to $35,552,000, and in Colorado, $7,921,000.

These overcharges in Colorado equaled the value of more than 13,000,000 bushels of wheat, or more than 200,000 bushels on an average for every one of the 63 counties in Colorado.

These overcharges in Connecticut amounted to $17,344,000; Delaware, $2,051,000; District of Columbia, $2,871,000; Florida, $12,429,000; Georgia, $9,886,000; Idaho, $2,743,000; Illinois, $60,313,000.

These overcharges in Illinois equaled the value of more than 100,000,000 bushels of wheat at the prevailing price that year. There are 102 counties in Illinois. It would have taken an average of more than 900,000 bushels of wheat to the county to pay these overcharges for electricity in Illinois for that 1 year.

These overcharges in Indiana amounted to $20,876,000. It would have taken more than 39,000,000 bushels of wheat, or an average of more than 420,000 bushels to the county, to pay these overcharges in Indiana during that 1 year.

These overcharges in Iowa amounted to $13,799,000; in Kansas, $9,841,000; Kentucky, $8,746,000; Louisiana, $7,695,000; Maine, $6,177,000.

Maine is one of the greatest potato-growing States in the Union. Potatoes sold that year for an average of 55 cents a bushel. These overcharges for electricity in the State of Maine in 1938 amounted to the value of 11,200,000 bushels of potatoes, or an average of more than 700,000 bushels to each one of the 16 counties in the State of Maine.

These are staggering figures that ought to bring to the minds of the American people the magnitude of the overcharges they are now paying for their electric lights and power.

These overcharges in the State of Maryland, after making these deductions, during the year 1938 amounted to $12,309,000; in Massachusetts, $34,697,000; Michigan, $38,769,000—or the value of more than 700,000 bushels of wheat on an average for every county in Michigan. In Minnesota, $15,200,000. It would have taken an average of more than 280,000 bushels of wheat for every county in Minnesota to pay these overcharges for that one year.

These overcharges in Mississippi amounted to $4,260,000. The annual overcharges in Mississippi, outside of the T. V. A. area, equaled the value of 1,500 bales of cotton to the county, on an average.

In Missouri these overcharges amounted to $21,034,000—or the value, on an average, of 360,000 bushels of corn to the county. In Montana, $6,231,000; Nebraska, $6,765,000; Nevada, $922,620; New Hampshire, $3,738,214; New Jersey, $24,488,000; New Mexico, $2,002,000; New York, $131,720,000; North Carolina, $10,318,000; North Dakota, $2,426,000; Ohio, $46,636,000.

It would have taken 77,726,000 bushels of wheat to pay these overcharges in the State of Ohio alone during the year 1938. Spread out over the whole State, that would have averaged more than 700,000 bushels to the county.

These overcharges in Oklahoma amounted to $7,971,000; in Oregon, $5,921,000; Pennsylvania, $81,478,000; Rhode Island, $8,152,000; South Carolina, $4,246,000; South Dakota, $2,909,000; Tennessee, $7,069,000; Texas, $35,147,000—or the value of more than 780,000 bales of cotton, an average of more than 3,000 bales of cotton to every county in Texas.

These overcharges in Utah that year amounted to $4,510,000; in Vermont, $2,340,000; Virginia, $10,737,000; Washington, $10,050,000; West Virginia, $9,643,000; Wisconsin, $17,960,000.

These overcharges in Wyoming for the year 1938 amounted to $2,083,000.

Wisconsin is a great cheese-producing State. Cheese sold in Wisconsin that year at a little less than 15 cents a pound. It would have taken more than 110,000,000 pounds of cheese, or an average for more than 1,500,000 pounds to the county to have paid these overcharges for electricity in Wisconsin in that one year.

By developing the hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and their tributaries in every section of the country, and distributing it at rates based upon the cost of generation, transmission and distribution, we can remove this burden of approximately $1,000,000,000 a year from the shoulders of the American people, electrify every farm home in America, and make our country a richer, a brighter, and a better place in which to live.

Refugee Children

REMARKS
OF
HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 21, 1940

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I was hoping to be here when the bill H. R. 10213 was under consideration. I refer to the bill known as the Hennings refugee children bill. I wanted to be here for the purpose of offering two amendments. It seems to me that under the present set-up the Hennings bill would permit no children except English children to have the benefit of admission to the United States if and when clearance is obtained through the Department of State.

To overcome the situation my committee reported out a bill which, in my opinion, would give adequate protection not only to British children but to all children who are victims of the totalitarian war in Europe. This bill is H. R. 10323 and appears on the Union Calendar as No. 1046.

Under this bill it would not make any difference whether the children are refugees from Great Britain, France, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Finland, or any other European country which has been invaded by totalitarian aggressors and would save them from the fury of war and attacks from the air.

It is inconceivable why, if we are going to save human lives, distinctions should be made amongst children of European countries and why children of all countries should not be admitted to the United States instead of admitting and caring for British children only.

In the report which was made to the House of Representatives on H. R. 10323 this matter was gone into in great detail. The committee thought that Congress should be impartial on the question of the admission of children, particularly since there are enough homes in the United States to take care of all of these children.

Before the bill was reported out by the committee elaborate hearings were held and we had before us statements from representative citizens of the United States giving details of how this evacuation of these children is to proceed.

These children are to be found all through Europe and some of them have already been refugees from military invasion. They have lived through the tragedy of the destruction of Poland. They fled, without having any definite place of destination, to Rumania and Hungary, and then when they finally reached France in the hope to find a place of refuge the same story was repeated and the children are now along the border of Spain and Portugal.

Under the Hennings bill, these children are left positively stranded. No aid is given to them, and nothing is being done to bring them to the United States. I think that all these children should properly be made the object of our care and attention. They should not be left unprotected while Congress is passing legislation to protect British children. The important thing is to save victims of totalitarian invasion, and I do not believe it comports with the spirit of America to single out British children or children whose parents are wealthy instead of rescuing all children, irrespective of their origin, particularly when there are about 500,000 American homes which are suitable and willing to receive refugee children. It is pathetic to know that, under the Hennings bill, we would be helping only one group of children and that others like Belgian, Dutch, and Polish children, who happen to be in that area will not be able to be taken up because the present language of the bill does not cover them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Pittsburgh District Has Men, Plants, and Materials

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS E. GRAHAM

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE PITTSBURGH POST-GAZETTE OF AUGUST 24, 1940

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of August 24, 1940:

[From the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of August 24, 1940]

PITTSBURGH DISTRICT HAS MEN, PLANTS, AND MATERIALS

It is unthinkable that log-rolling and pork-barrel politicians should be able to convert the necessity of national defense into an excuse for the forced redistribution of manufacturing areas so that their particular States will profit by new industries which the force of logic and of circumstance would locate elsewhere.

At a time when speed is essential, the place where private industry has elected to put its plants, on the basis of sound economy and availability of materials and labor, would seem to be the place to which Washington should first look for expansion. As Charles E. Robinson, head of the Pittsburgh Industrial Commission, wrote to Mr. Knudsen, our national-defense program will suffer if "we are unable to decide whether factories should be built in cornfields or where the natural facilities indicate."

Mr. Knudsen, chairman of the National Advisory Defense Commission, is not the man to be stampeded, even by 63 Congressmen bent on getting their States further industrialized, into sacrificing efficiency and speed for political expediency. It may be wise ultimately to scatter some key defense plants across the country, but the present need is for quick production, not for realinement of industries to make them safe from bombing attacks. And quick production can only come from productive areas each doing that, as Mr. Robinson says, for which it is best suited.

Western Pennsylvania is the region chosen by private enterprise for heavy industries. Labor is here, plant capacity is here, raw materials are close at hand, shipping facilities are ready. The value of manufactured goods produced in western Pennsylvania is greater than that of six of the nine States where the Government has been urged to establish new plants. The Pittsburgh district has more employees than seven of these nine States and a bigger pay roll than eight of them. It is the heart of the territory where the "fundamental requirements for low-cost production are located."

Those arguments, cited by Mr. Robinson, should carry weight with the authorities in Washington. Speed and efficiency in manufacture of defense equipment is a national necessity and is not to be hampered by local demands for preference in the spending of Federal cash.

Espionage, Its Detection and Prevention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES KRAMER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. CHARLES KRAMER, OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me over the radio on August 24, 1940:

During the past 7 years we have seen civilization crumble, freedom become enchained, and the lust for power become dominant. The events of the past year have made the issue confronting mankind unmistakably clear. The ultimate conflict of our day is a struggle between democracy and dictatorship, between enlightenment and humanity, on one hand, and darkness and despair on the other.

The dictatorships are one united menace to the civilized world. The American people, neutral though they should be and are in political action, cannot and will not be neutral in thought. They stand arrayed against aggression, eager to uphold the sacred obligations of preserving humanity and freedom. The majority of our people are strong in their opposition to our country making any move that is liable to expose us to conflict. Our people do not want war, and they shall not have it as long as we can stand and think as one people, the American people. Our people are determined to treat the present war in Europe objectively. They are refusing to become bewildered, confused, and misled by the devices and opportunities of those who wish to see this country participate in war. Our people are wary of foreign entanglements and insistent upon a real neutrality, and their sentiment shall reflect on the Congress of the United States, and with all high Government officials.

Congress has been quick to respond to this logical and patriotic sentiment of our people.

In my own humble capacity as one Member of Congress, I have urged many measures to stifle foreign propaganda.

The American people were apprehensive about the activities of a so-called Japanese fishing fleet, operating near the coast of California. We had good reason to believe that this fishing fleet was used by a foreign government for espionage and "fifth column" activities. Therefore I introduced a bill to so regulate the conduct and the ownership of these fishing fleets that they could not be of any dangerous import to this country. Due to conferences which I have held with the heads of our investigating agencies in connection with this bill, I have good reason to believe from confidential information which I cannot divulge, that the dangerous activities of the Japanese fishing fleet have been checked.

Congress, sometimes by simply calling attention to a danger, and bringing it out in the open, can end it. This is again evidenced by my resolution concerning the conspiracy to destroy by sabotage the power and reclamation project at Boulder Dam. As soon as I first heard of this dastardly plot, I introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of State to report to Congress any information in the State Department concerning the same. Of course, the resolution was made public by our alert press and radio and the conspiracy was immediately abandoned.

Back in 1934, when Congress was in the forefront in the realization that there were dangerous organizations at work in America to undermine our democracy, other Members, and I, fought for the creation of a committee to investigate un-American activities. The committee was created, and I was appointed a member by the Speaker of the House.

The active part of the investigation as far as the most dangerous and insidious of these un-American organizations were concerned, was assigned to me. Many days were spent with the investigators of the committee to run down the obnoxious and poisonous organization known as the Silver Shirts, and so aggressive was our committee in pursuing this investigation throughout practically every State in our country that we brought about, through evidence secured by our committee the indictment and conviction of the national leader of this outfit by the State courts of North Carolina. This not only liquidated the national organization but brought about the complete demobilization and destruction of the storm-troop division of the Silver Shirts which was set up in San Diego and Los Angeles.

As a result of the study which was made by the Committee of un-American Activities, I introduced a bill which is now in principle on the statute books of the United States of America, to make it illegal for any person or organization to advocate the overthrow of our Government by force and violence. That Congress has been constantly alive to the menace is shown by many of the bills introduced by other Members and laws passed by the entire body.

Lately among other constructive legislation is found a bill which I introduced as chairman of the Committee on Patents and Copyrights, to remove any possibility of agents of foreign countries obtaining certain information from patents in this country which are necessary to our own national defense.

This bill has since been passed by the House of Representatives, also passed by the Senate, and the President has recently signed the bill which puts it into effect as existing law. The act is for the purpose of preventing publication by issuance of a patent in the United States on any invention, the information concerning which might be of assistance to the enemy.

One of the important activities of foreign agents residing in this country is to closely watch and make a report concerning all new inventions which might be utilized in time of war. Naturally our inventors should be protected, and it is believed the new law adequately protects their rights, while at the same time the patent does not immediately issue and thereby the information concerning the invention does not become available to the foreign agents. It is reported that in the past the issuance of patents has been carefully watched by agents of foreign governments and through the lead furnished by the issuance of the patent the foreign agent has endeavored to obtain more detailed plans and descriptions of our new inventions. It is reported that this has even gone so far as to encourage foreign agents in making visits to our industrial plants, seeking out the inventors, and endeavoring to purchase the invention by offering the inventor an attractive proposition in order that the full details of the invention might be learned. The new law contains a provision whereby the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may enter into negotiations with the inventor to purchase the invention and thereby keep it secret for such period as may be necessary.

There has been considerable talk which has little or no foundation in fact concerning limitations on our Government with respect to using inventions which are allegedly in the control of foreigners. As a matter of fact, the present law is quite clear that our Army and Navy can purchase any materials they may desire regardless of who has the patent, and no one, whether a foreign government or a foreign nation, can prevent our Army and Navy from using what they desire to use. It often happens that some particularly effective invention used in warfare is made less effective or even rendered obsolete by a later invention. I am sure that our country has learned much from the present conflict and that our inventors are aware of their responsibilities.

The secret inventions contained in the files of our Army and Navy would indeed surprise some foreign agents in this country if they had the least idea what they were about. I believe that the inventive effort of our people should be stimulated and I do not hesitate to say that Yankee ingenuity will meet any so-called "secret" weapon about which any foreign nation may boast.

To encourage and protect the inventions made in our country is a very vital step in the direction of preparedness. It is possible for a consular officer in this country to transmit in his own confidential mail, information to his superior residing abroad, and it is our duty to see to it that he does not become aware of our inventions that are useful in national defense. The bill which I recently introduced and which has now become law, takes a necessary forward step in the right direction, but there is still more to be done. When the names and addresses of all foreign agents become known to us and in turn to the people of this country, I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe our industrial plants will be in a better position to cooperate with our Army and Navy and to keep our secrets for ourselves.

The dictatorship countries have been increasing the staffs of their consular officers here, to an extent which I believe is entirely out of line with the normal requirements of their consular offices. We well know this device of increasing personnel has been employed in other countries for the purpose of espionage and "fifth column" operations. On Thursday of this week, I introduced a resolution asking the Secretary of State to furnish to Congress information as to the increase in numbers of foreigners appointed in America to the consular staffs of the dictatorship countries. The report from the Secretary of State will, undoubtedly, startle this country.

When I learned that foreign consuls here were carrying on a private and secret mail service, I made certain inquiries concerning their other activities, and came across the dangers involved by the increase in the staffs of the consular agencies.

I also have been given reason to believe that the dictatorship countries have not only pooled their economic resources, their military strength, their naval forces, and their air fleets, but that they have as well pooled, as far as this country is concerned, their diplomatic and consular services, so that their consular services here have become a general intelligence service for all the dictatorship countries, and that information obtained by the consular staffs of any of them is cleared through Germany, which controls the combined services, although they are financed by contributions from all these countries. The German Foreign Office turns over to their allies such information as is gathered by this spy system as Germany thinks is necessary.

I am for spending billions for national defense and preparedness, not as a prelude to war, not for aggression, but as an insurance against invasion by any hostile nation, and a protection against sending any of our American boys to Europe. By being prepared to defend ourselves against a menace that overshadows and threatens the world, it will not be necessary to sacrifice a single life, nor will we suffer the fate of the people of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Finland, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and France, all peace-loving citizens whose courage alone was insufficient to safeguard and protect them against aggression.

Let us band together in driving out the inner forces here that want us to sacrifice our freedom and liberty. "Isms" have no place in this land—the land that has been built by Americans, for Americans, shall ever be the shining beacon of democracy and liberty in the world.

We must follow a prudent and sensible course. We all desire world peace. We have shown evidence of that, since the close of the last war. Our Government stands ready to assist in attaining a just and enduring peace.

Our fathers have built our country well and have established therein the blessings of a free society and a productive economic system. It is our noble task to defend what has been reserved for us, and to go forward and keep building for those who are to follow.

Let us pray each day for the restoration of peace throughout the world. Let us pray for a thorough and everlasting peace. American democracy is our heritage; we are proud of its freedom, its rights, its sovereignty. These precious rights shall be preserved and we shall not become the subjects of dictators.

Let us thank God that we are Americans, and let us guard ourselves against any efforts to destroy or weaken our faith in the future of our country.

John T. Flynn and the Oil Prosecutions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. COFFEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ARTICLE BY JOHN T. FLYNN

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herein an article entitled, "Plain Economics," by John T. Flynn, as published in the Washington Daily News of August 19, 1940.

Mr. Flynn ably discusses the pending civil prosecutions of major oil companies for conspiracy to violate Federal anti-trust laws.

I commend the reading of this article to those interested in breaking up monopolies, an objective sought to be obtained by planks in both Democratic and Republican national platforms.

[From the Washington Daily News of August 19, 1940]

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, August 19.—The Justice Department is all ready to go after the big oil companies for violations of the Sherman antitrust laws. Powerful interests insist the Department should not do this as it will prevent the oil companies from doing their bit in national defense. And now Senator GILLETTE jumps on the Department a little for not proceeding.

It is certainly a little early to criticize the Department. After a long slumber it has waked up to its responsibilities as an eforcement agent of the antitrust laws as well as all others. If it did nothing for nearly 6 out of its 8 years that was probably not the fault of the Department but rather of the President, whose administration began by sterilizing the antitrust laws.

But during the last 18 months Thurman Arnold has proceeded with vigor on as broad a front as his limited resources permit. If there is a law violation among the big oil companies it is difficult to believe that the Department will shrink from action on that sector.

Of course, it is natural, that the oil men themselves should use every influence they can command to block a legal attack. And, of course, now national defense is the favorite cloak for everybody who has an ax to grind or a position to maintain. However, this defense will hardly avail the oil people, assuming that they have broken the law.

What the Nation wants in its effort for national defense is production—and more production. The one contribution the oil industry can make to national defense is to produce all the oil the Army and Navy need. If the oil companies have violated the anti-trust laws it is not through combination to increase production. Their combinations are invariably to limit production, to keep down the flow of crude and refined oil in order to keep the price up.

If the Justice Department has a case against the oil companies it must be on the ground that they are in illegal combination to make gasoline scarcer and prices higher. Nothing could be more injurious to national defense than this. The way to aid national defense is to compel these gentlemen to compete with each other—to increase the flow of oil, to keep the price down, to enable the Government to buy it abundantly and cheaper, while at the same time enabling the citizen motorist to buy it more cheaply, which will increase national gas taxes.

In most other industries involved in national defense the great effort is to push production up as quickly as possible. That's what all the industries are attempting—seeking funds for new plants, battling for more machinery, etc. But in the oil industry the big companies have got all the plant capacity needed, and all the oil needed—and more—is there. They by agreement keep it down, is the charge. If the Justice Department does not push this prosecution it will not be its fault. The pressure will come from some higher force, we may be sure.

An Address to and for the Foreign-born

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. T. V. SMITH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. T. V. SMITH, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I insert a speech which of late I made over the Mutual Broadcasting System to and for the foreign-born, as follows:

Foreign-born citizens and alien guests of America, a word now for the foreign-born, a word which I want native Americans to hear. A word also to native Americans, a word which I want the foreign-born to hear. We should be one people, not two. To both groups alike, therefore, I say this at the very beginning, if we be alike devoted to freedom, it makes little difference under what skies we were born. To bring Tennyson up to date—

"Howe'er it may be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And kindly faith than Aryan blood."

As President Roosevelt once put it, we Americans have come down from immigrants and revolutionists. Mr. Wendell Willkie, in his acceptance speech, also made himself of the greatest of these by linking himself with the immigrants who came here as refugees from earlier German tyranny. If all Americans had this spirit of Willkie and Roosevelt, no plea would be needed for native tolerance of the foreign-born, nor any friendly advice to the alien of loyalty to this land. But, unfortunately, there are Republicans less generous to the weak than is Mr. Willkie, and Democrats less tolerant of the different than is Mr. Roosevelt. And, alas, there are some aliens among us who sneaked from tyranny elsewhere to establish tyranny here.

AMERICA IS RICHER FOR ALL FRIENDLY VARIETY

I would not myself have my country less variegated in population, but I would have it more unified in spirit. Unity in variety, that's the kind of oneness we want from our manyness. E pluribus unum. The color, the difference of outlook, the richness of culture—it is these that any lover of mankind would proudly celebrate as a major glory of this free nation. All these together go to make America still the hope of the world. Ours is from of old a land in which all differences can live together and like it, or can live apart and like it. I celebrate you all; you, the sturdy Norwegians; you, the methodical Germans; you, the freedom-loving Greeks; you, the romantic Italians: All of you I celebrate. I salute you all; I honor you all; for it is your multitudinous presence which renders this formal federation of States a living league of precious peoples. For this prime reason America is the model of what the world must come to be, if peace is not utterly to perish from the earth.

Nearly all of you who are foreign born are here because, for one reason or another, you like this land better than the one from which you came. We like you, like you all, if that's the reason you came and the reason you stay. That's the reason that we are native born, the fact that our fathers liked this land better than other lands. If you daily demonstrate that liking which makes us one, you yourselves will have done more than we can do to guarantee to you the protection of fair treatment. We native born came by our loyalty the easy way; we inherited it. You came by your loyalty the hard way; you have created it by choice and labor. Prize your loyalty the more for what it has cost you.

To those of you who are alien guests rather than foreign-born citizens, I add this: Certain it is that you would not in any other land today be allowed such freedom as we have allowed you as guests. We have been a land of such reaches of space and such roominess of character that we have allowed all, have welcomed most, and have tolerated even enemies of our own way of life. But now we draw the reins upon our roominess, for a reason that you hardly need me to tell you. The nations that have allowed so little have taught us not to allow so much. If you have come here from a land that still tries to see how much liberty it can allow, you will be little touched by our new atmosphere of national discipline. But if you come from a land which seeks to see how little liberty it must allow, you will have to renounce that land or suffer growing inconveniences here. Homelands that specialize in enmity make enemies for their nationals. If you approve of their cruel outlawry of race or of their equally cruel liquidation of class, you'd better return and be friends with our enemies rather than remain here to be enemies among friends. This minimum we expect of all our guests, that they be friendly with our friendly way of life.

THE REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

I assume that only a small fraction of our foreign born merit such words of caution, and so I know that native loyal Americans still do well to assume innocence until disloyalty is proved. This is our ancient way of justice, and it ever adorns the fringes of mercy. For this reason I was myself one of the four Members of the House of Representatives who of late voted against the registration and fingerprinting of aliens. Since we are all in the boat together on a stormy sea, I preferred to treat us all alike as long as possible. But the majority decided otherwise, and it is our way here to abide by the majority decision. You will, of course, obey this law, and you may well submit in full confidence of secrecy and in fair expectation of justice.

This registration was brought upon you by a small minority of aliens who have not behaved themselves as either citizens or guests. It is necessary that I speak frankly to you, as a friend who is willing to speak fairly for you. You ought not to allow yourselves to be thus compromised by an unworthy minority among you. Nor ought we native-born Americans to make you suffer for what others do to you and to us alike. That's the right and wrong of it; but we are rapidly heading for a national state of mind in which you can ill afford to rest upon what is merely right. You are going to need all the commonsense and courage we both can command, especially if you come from nations that now glory in teaching the world the superior rightness of might. This teaching, alas, works both ways, and always works for ill. In this knowledge, I would now make a more systematic suggestion to both groups, to offset such odious teaching.

FRIENDLY ADVICE TO THE NATIVE-BORN

And first to my own group, the native born. You are worried about the "fifth column"? You think you ought to do something about it? You've appealed to me and to other Representatives to know what you can do. Let me now give you double advice, both negative and positive. Negatively, don't follow out your natural impulse to take it out on every foreign looking person you meet.

The probability is a thousand to one that you'll wrong a person as innocent as you and much more helpless. You don't want to be a bully. I know you don't, because you are an American. Those who make public excitement a personal excuse to take it out on aliens, legally our guests, will be among the first to show their hinderparts when the real enemy gets in sight; for vigilantism is mobocracy, and those who stoop to persecution of the weak are mostly individual cowards, however brave in the mob they may whoop themselves up to feel. They have already in heart joined the Nazis against the helpless Jews, they are already imitating the Fascists with castor oil and rail, they are already at one with the Communists, making themselves feel great through the drug of this or that cowardly collectivism.

But you still don't want to let the one guilty out of a thousand innocent get away. You love your country and you want to save it from the "fifth column," and from all alien influences. So far so good. But, honestly now, which has the better chance to get the one without injuring the thousand, you or J. Edgar Hoover? He has a big staff, you know. He's a clever fellow, you know, with long and wide experience in numbering enemies and in tracking them down. He's paid to distinguish between suspicion and proof, you know. All right, then, notify Mr. J. Edgar Hoover at Washington, and don't you yourself do anything more about it. If he doesn't act, take that as your best proof that you were merely jittery and let it go at that. You don't want to jump onto those more weak than you merely to relieve your jitters.

Of course, there's some danger that even Mr. Hoover might make the innocent suffer, through mistaken identification. But this danger is much less than that of your making the same mistake. The danger from him is greatly decreased by the full awareness of it on the part of him himself and of men high placed over Mr. Hoover. Attorney General Jackson in welcoming the Hoover staff into his Department, recently concluded with the statement that "protection of the legitimate rights of aliens may become as important a duty of this new unit in the Department as the enforcement of the law against them." Those words certainly narrow the opportunity for any scoundrelism that finds its first refuge in the prostitution of patriotism. Let this be such reassurance of justice to the aliens as their conduct permits.

FRIENDLY ADVICE TO THE FOREIGN-BORN

And now my word of advice to foreign-born friends of our democratic way. You can help repay the native-born for their abstention from action if you will. You are not in a position to help yourselves directly; but by helping their forces of caution, you can help yourselves indirectly. We can handle the criminal end of the matter through the Department of Justice as indicated. We can handle the more important civil end of sabotage best through you. Why do you not personally and collectively undertake the cautioning of your own more irresponsible members? Public opinion is a great corrective of extravagancies, and you command the public opinion most likely to be effective against your own unruly. To allow organizations with which you do not sympathize to get you into trouble is not the best that you can do on your own home ground. There are things which are not actually against the law but which so offend good taste as to lead to repression. These things you ought to be able to do something about. At least dissociate yourselves from all such and do it as publicly as they proclaim their offense to good taste.

I for one am surprised, for instance, how seldom I see in "Voices of the People" columns Italian names praising American institutions. I am pained, for instance, at how infrequently I hear voices with German accent lifting themselves over the radio against their organizations that misrepresent all that's gentle and good in the German character. That's a type of job for you, the foreign-born citizens to do, to divorce the noisy minority of renegades from your great majority of patriotic men and women. If you aren't afraid to do it, then do more of it—for your sake and for ours. If you are afraid of reprisals upon your relatives abroad or upon yourselves here, then turn confidentially to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover with such secret information as you have against those who would terrorize you even in this free land. Foreign-language groups, you know the renegades among you; and you ought to expose those who otherwise will bring you yourselves into disrepute. This is surely not expecting too much of you as the price of patriotism for this land so large with liberty.

A WORD OF WARNING FOR THE RECALCITRANT

For such as will not take their stand fully and finally in defense of our American way of life, hard days are justly ahead. We are done with irresponsible tolerance. When we were free of danger we could be free with the dangerous. But now we propose to seize the dagger before it stabs us in the back. All that's dear to us is at stake, all from decent trade relations to what most men count as the sacredness of their religion. Dr. M. Whitcomb Hess gives me permission to quote from the magazine, Spirit, four of her noble lines on the Christ of the Current Crossroads:

"Three ways His fearful followers flee:
One leads to Rome as Caesar's page,
The second to a hermitage,
And the third climbs to Calvary."

Now, frankly and finally, we native-born Americans do not propose to become Caesar's page nor yet to retire to a hermitage; and on the road up the steeps before us, those who are not for us will be put down as against us. We welcome all the foreign-born to go with us like brothers through toil and sweat, and if it must be so, through tears, up this Calvary not of our own choosing.

As Credo for that climb, I propose to substitute for Senator REYNOLD'S five-daggered program, written in the ink of suspicion, this three-pointed combination of common sense and sympathy:

1. Don't nobody do nothing mean against the foreign-born, not even a native-born United States Senator.

2. Don't nobody abuse the hospitality of no free land, not even German consuls.

3. Don't nobody spare no effort to insure through peace if possible a victory in which enemies at last can be friends rather than a victory in which friends must forever be enemies.

Small Business and the Democratic Platform

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. COMPTON I. WHITE
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, August 27, 1940

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, it is notable that for the first time in the history of this country, small business has received recognition in a plank in the platform of a major political party. At the recent National Convention of the Democratic Party in Chicago it was my privilege and pleasure as a member of the resolutions committee to submit for the platform the following provision which was adopted:

We recognize the importance of small-business concerns and new enterprises in our national economy and favor the enactment of constructive legislation to safeguard the welfare of small business. Independent small-scale enterprise, no less than big business, should be adequately represented on appropriate Government boards and commissions, and its interests should be examined and fostered by a continuous research program.

The welfare of small business is of great importance to the Nation; the survival of small business is especially significant in those areas where there is a paucity of population. The State of Idaho, with only 7 cities having more than 10,000 people, offers a striking example of the problems which face small business and demand a solution.

Agricultural prices affect the turn-over in the mercantile establishment of the small operator; wage and hour laws give him grief in arranging schedules, ever-raising tax rates eat into his earnings. In the mining and lumbering sections the 40-hour-week provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act has had the effect of the operators cutting production thereby decreasing the total amount of salaries paid; in the farming sections, the low price of the commodities the farmer has to sell leaves him without parity benefits for the manufactured articles which he must buy, so he buys less.

Small business is neither effectively organized nor adequately articulate. Without complaint "the butcher, the baker, the candlestickmaker" transfuses his earnings into the building of his community through the employment of local labor, the payment of his taxes, contributions to his civic clubs and charities, and promotion of the welfare of his locality. He does not discuss his altruistic endeavors, says little of his concept of a citizen's duty, and does not mention the insomnia he suffers from dwindling profits and threatened bankruptcy. In fact, it may be said that the small-business man does less bellyaching than any other class and he receives the least attention.

When economic advisers confer on the alleviation of ailments in the national structure, they diagnose capital's complaints but fail to look far enough into the case to find that the anemia of business on Main Street contributes to hysteria on Wall Street. Small business is that artery of our national life that functions while stock markets sicken, while credits contract with spasms, while depressions plague the body politic. The doctors of national economy know that the severance of this artery would so quickly sap the lifeblood of our democracy that no stimulant could shock it into activity or restore its heartbeat, yet they do not prescribe for the economic diseases that affect the welfare of small business.

Private enterprise is inseparably linked with liberty in our history and it is of great importance in a democratic way of life. Small business has a part in the American way of life which represents the dominating ideals of democracy and its security must be recognized if a stabilized economic condition is to prevail in this country.

Who Owns the Federal Reserve Banks?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

EXCERPT FROM HEARING ON THE BANKING ACT OF 1935

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, frequently I have been asked whether it is really true that the 12 Federal Reserve banks are privately owned banks. People find it difficult to understand how this can be true, since these banks exercise the power of issuing the money and controlling the credit of this Nation. A careful reading of the following colloquy between Senator GLASS and Secretary Morgenthau will leave no doubt on this point:

[From Banking Act of 1935, U. S. Senate hearings, pp. 507 and 508]

Senator GLASS. Do you think the Government, without one dollar of proprietary interest in the Federal Reserve Banking System, should be authorized, without restraint, to loan the money of the System in open-market operations?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Senator, I happen to belong to that school that thinks that the Government should own the stock of the Federal Reserve System; and then it would have that right.

Senator GLASS. That is a different proposition. I am asking you if the Government, which does not own a dollar of pecuniary interest in the System, with the assets acquired over a period of 20 years by the exercise of banking skill—that the Government which has no pecuniary risk at stake should be permitted to spend other people's money without any restriction?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Well, Senator, I am very timid about putting myself up against your opinion, because you have lived with this thing——

Senator GLASS. I am asking you your opinion.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I think that the Government has got everything at stake in this. This gets right down to the whole question of credit. After all, as I understand it, the Government is the people. And we have got everything at stake.

Senator GLASS. Does the Government own a dollar of pecuniary interest in the Federal Reserve System?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No; but I think it should.

Senator GLASS. You are for a central bank owned by the Government, then?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. If I may put it this way: I would like to see, if Congress could work it out somehow, that the Government owned this stock and would surround the trustees of it with every possible protection and precaution; that they should not be subjected not only to political pressure but to that of private business and banking interests as well, and that they should keep just as independent as possible, and serve the financial and business interests of the country with only one motive in mind, and that is to serve them well.

Senator GLASS. And to absorb all of the individual banks?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. No; oh, no.

Senator GLASS. What does your central bank amount to if it does not absorb all the individual banks and use them as branches?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. You see, I came up to this position through Farm Credit, which is a pretty big institution, and we have a somewhat similar situation there, I believe. We have strong regional banks with directors. But the question of interest is fixed here in Washington. The question never has been raised that the control of the Farm Credit should be held by anybody else but the Government, and I honestly believe that the trust that the Farm Credit had for the farmers and the millions and millions of dollars which they handled have been handled without outside influence.

Senator GLASS. That was an emergency measure, was it not?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I would not call it that.

Senator GLASS. I am not talking about the land-bank system.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I consider farm credit a permanent institution.

Senator GLASS. I know you gentlemen consider everything that has been done as permanent, but it started out simply as an emergency.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I look forward to farm credit as an institution which I hope will live to serve the farmers for a long time.

Senator GLASS. I can readily understand how one might advocate a central bank owned by the United States Government. We have had them. But I would like to get more definitely your judgment as to whether a government should have the right to loan somebody else's money without restraint or restriction.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I think it should have that same supervision over the credit of the country that it has over inspecting the banks or anything else. After all, I cannot make a distinction between the Government and the people.

Is the National Defense Program Being Used as an Excuse for Postponing Prosecutions for Violations of Antitrust Laws?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. COFFEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

STATEMENTS BY HON. JOHN M. COFFEE, OF WASHINGTON, AND HON. JERRY VOORHIS, OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herein press statements issued at the offices of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] and myself relative to a resolution recently introduced by me which directs an investigation by Congress as to the reason for any delay in prosecuting violations by the oil industry of Federal antitrust laws. Attached to the statement is a copy of the resolution.

PROTEST DELAY IN OIL ANTITRUST SUIT; PROPOSES SWEEPING INVESTIGATION

WASHINGTON.—Congressman JOHN M. COFFEE, of Washington, chairman of the "liberal bloc" in the House of Representatives, has today introduced a resolution calling for a sweeping investigation by a select committee of Congress into the interference by any Federal agency, official, or employee with the enforcement of the antitrust laws, particularly with reference to the petroleum industry. With the introduction of such resolution, the following statement was authorized:

"Congress has appropriated substantial funds for the enforcement of the antitrust laws. Without doubt, there is something radically wrong when the drive to enforce these laws is stopped immediately after many labor unions have been indicted and on the eve of a drive to bring the real monopolistic offenders before the bar of justice.

"It is the purpose of the proposed investigation to determine and disclose to the public the mysterious forces or persons that are meddling or scuttling the antitrust enforcement drive, which is the mandate of Congress by both regular statutes and appropriation measures.

"I fail to see anything in national defense which would seem to necessitate or require the dropping of civil actions against the oil monopoly, or any other industrial monopoly.

"If anything the pipeline and marketing-divorcement suit is in the direct interest of national defense. The suit should be instituted and pressed vigorously against the major oil companies on the Pacific coast and elsewhere. If there are 22 major oil companies leagued in conspiracy, as is indicated by the Attorney General's press release of August 1, just what are we waiting for?

"War-material manufacturers have recommended the conscription of youth for a peacetime army at $30 a month or less, yet they have urged committees of Congress to eliminate the Vinson-Trammell Act limiting profits to 10 percent, an act that was enacted to prevent profiteering in just such an emergency as this. Hence they would make the sky the limit. On top of this they have interceded for an amortization plan that in effect gives war profiteers a 'money-back' guaranty. Competitive bidding requirements have been waived.

"As to antitrust suits once instituted against industrial monopolies I am opposed to consent decrees and private and secret arrangements for 'no contest' pleas between the Government and defendants in either civil or criminal cases whereby large concerns may pay a nominal fine of $5,000 or less, and then repeat or continue their monopolistic practices. Any collusion between the defendants and prosecutors is to be frowned upon. In enforcing the antitrust laws the 'deals' should be made in the presence of the district judge."

When asked for comment on Congressman COFFEE's resolution to inquire into the reasons for the delay in prosecution of antitrust suits, Congressman VOORHIS of California had the following to say:

"Price fixing and restrictions on production and distribution of important products are not going to help any with the national-defense program. On the contrary, it is now more important than ever to maintain the fullest possible production, the readiest distribution, and the freest market.

"Therefore it appears to me that abandonment or postponement of such antitrust actions as that in the case of the ownership and control of petroleum pipe lines by the major oil companies will retard the achievement of a strong, well-balanced defense program. To enable consumers to buy in a really free market and independent producers in this or any field to operate on a basis of full equality with the 'big fellows' would seem to be a distinct national asset.

"If consumers are overcharged for industrial products, they must, as a rule, reduce their food budgets to meet those charges. We need a well-nourished Nation and as full a market for our farm products as we can get. As I understand it, the Anti-Trust Division has no intention of instituting action in any cases where industrial combination contributes to the efficiency of production and distribution. Its work is aimed to prevent monopoly control from throttling competition, interfering with full production and distribution, or boosting prices. On this basis, the work of the Anti-Trust Division should certainly go forward vigorously."

[H. Res. 575, 76th Cong., 3d sess.]

Whereas the enforcement of the antitrust laws of the United States is of paramount importance to the general welfare; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has appropriated substantial funds to the Antit-Trust Division of the Department of Justice for the purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws; and

Whereas the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice on July 24, 1940, has recommended that the Attorney General of the United States authorize the commencement of a comprehensive civil suit against 22 major oil companies and their subsidiaries and affiliated companies comprising a large part of the oil industry of the United States; and

Whereas the purpose of such suit is to compel these major oil companies to divest themselves of certain types of properties, such as pipe lines and tankers and marketing facilities, and to change the status of such companies so as to separate transportation and marketing from the production of oil; and

Whereas the filing of such suit is reported to have been abandoned or delayed: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker is authorized to appoint a select committee of five Members of the House of Representatives and such committee is hereby authorized and directed to take testimony, investigate, and report to the House (1) whether the antitrust laws have been fully, adequately, and impartially enforced by the Department of Justice as to the petroleum and other industries; and (2) the extent of, and the persons responsible for, interference by any employee, official, or agency of the Government with the enforcement of the antitrust laws as to the petroleum and other industries.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Speaker of the House if the House is not in session) the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

For the purpose of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, August 27 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940, entitled "Blocking the Draft Is Blocking Defense."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940]

BLOCKING THE DRAFT IS BLOCKING DEFENSE

President Roosevelt warns Congress, warns the Nation.

Further delay—a polite word for what has become serious obstruction of the draft bill—can only imperil the defenses of this Nation and thereby imperil the security of our people.

It might have been politically wise for Mr. Roosevelt to let the debate in the Senate over the draft bill run on until it was halted by public disgust and indignation.

But again the President puts patriotism before politics, assumes leadership of the forces dedicated to arming America while America has time to arm.

The conscription bill has been under congressional consideration for 63 days. France was conquered in much less time.

Strangely, there are men in Washington who seem utterly incapable of comprehending the time element in modern warfare—and the vital relation of success in such warfare to the time element in the governments behind the armies.

No army can move more rapidly than its government will permit.

The defense of the United States of America will move no more rapidly than the Congress of the United States of America will permit.

We are not at war. But much of the world is. And we live in the world, which means that we live under the constant threat of war.

Yet Nero's fiddling was no more contemptuous of stark reality than the present senatorial talking.

If we speak harshly, it is because the time has come to do so.

No one has sought to cut off or limit debate on the draft bill. To the contrary, from the extended sessions of the Senate and House subcommittees, at which all shades of public opinion were given hearing, to the present debates in the Senate, there has been free rein for free expression.

During the early days of debate, important points were brought out on both sides. But now the debaters are merely repeating themselves, hashing over the same old arguments until the tactics begin to take on the appearance of a filibuster.

We are confident that the draft bill will be enacted, as the President requests. In our opinion, the Maloney amendment to delay the draft until January is viciously unrealistic because it naively assumes that the tempo of world events will slow up accordingly.

The Record believes, with the President, that the time has come to take a vote to settle the issue—and move swiftly to build an army to defend our country.

We say again, in all earnestness, that the ability of Congress to meet the challenge of defense is one of the greatest tests democracy has had to face.

It may even be the test of democracy's survival.

Most of the success of Adolf Hitler to date has resulted from arming while his foes were content to talk. Necessity taught Hitler the value of time.

Observation should be enough to teach us.

Conscription is not something we want. It is something forced upon us by world events. Most Americans realize that, as the Gallup polls show. Most Americans understand that conscription is both the most efficient and most democratic way of building an army—in time.

The Senate obstructionists represent a small minority. They have had their say. The vote is long overdue. America must begin to prepare.

Let it never be said that America's defenders went down—talking.

Willkie and Real Americanism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE AMERICAN JEWISH WORLD

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, no matter how violently one may disagree with some of the policies or principles for which Wendell Willkie stands, as gathered from his recent utterances, there is one statement to which every real American can subscribe, and that is the one condemning anti-Semitism.

He is editorially quoted with much approval in the weekly American Jewish World, issue of July 12, which I append hereto, and to their statement might also be added that the preamble and creed of such organizations as the American Legion and other similar ones condemn the prejudice of race or color. Not only that but it is contrary to the principles originally enunciated in our great United States Constitution and forever jealously guarded since its adoption by millions of thoughtful, patriotic, and loyal Americans. The American Jewish World article is as follows:

[From the American Jewish World of July 12, 1940]

AN AMERICAN SPEAKS

That Wendell L. Willkie, Republican Presidential nominee, would condemn anti-Semitism, was to be expected. Not because he is a candidate for office. As he frankly stated, "I have spoken on the radio and clearly asserted my position against race hatred, bigotry, and Hitlerism. I did this long before I even thought of being a Presidential candidate. I did it solely because I wanted to express my protest against Hitlerism and against all fascistic persecution methods."

Mr. Willkie condemned anti-Semitism because he is a representative American, and the representative American is not fond of the Nazi-inspired Jew-baiting. In this respect Willkie expresses the will of the average American, and it is because it believes him to have this ability to express the will of the average American that the Republican Party nominated him for the Presidency. Anti-Semitism, thank God, is not an issue between the leaders of our great national parties. Both sides condemn it as un-American.

But when Willkie states that he considers "anti-Semitism in America as a possible criminal movement and every anti-Semite as a possible traitor to America," he is understating the dangers of this vicious movement. As he himself states in the same interview, "If anti-Semitism should spread its roots in the United States as it has done in most of the countries in Europe, then it would definitely be a calamity for the United States. It would mean that the main foundations on which our country has been built are beginning to shake."

If that be so—and those familiar with the history of the European countries know that it is so—then every anti-Semite is not a possible traitor; he is a real traitor. Some of them may not be conscious that they are undermining the very foundations of our country and our free institutions, but they are helping to betray their country just the same, and their ignorance of the consequences of their activities is in itself a result of a prejudice which is criminal in the critical times in which we live.

Anti-Semitism is not a partisan issue in America. It is not a mere Jewish problem. It is an American problem which all loyal Americans must face and fight. The survival of a free America depends on it.

Wendell Willkie

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Tuesday, August 27 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940, entitled "Dr. Wendell and Mr. Willkie."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940]

DR. WENDELL AND MR. WILLKIE

Champions of Wendell Willkie say that whatever you think of their man you simply must admit that he is a personality.

We admit it, cheerfully. We go even further. We admit that Willkie is at least two personalities, perhaps more.

As the campaign develops, indeed, the split personality of Willkie becomes its most remarkable phenomenon. For example:

Willkie is both a conservative and a liberal.

He says he is the hope of conservatism and writes paeans to conservatism in the conservative Saturday Evening Post. He also says he is the hope of liberalism and writes liberal articles for the liberal New Republic.

Willkie is a farmer in the Midwest. In New York, he is what Ickes called "a simple barefoot Wall Street lawyer."

Willkie has a home near the Wabash where he's "just folks"; another home along the Hudson where he's "somebody," and he says his heart really belongs way down upon the Swanee River, or at least in Ten-Ten-Tennessee, where no doubt he's just a humble hillbilly.

Willkie says he is a champion of power consumers and boasts of lowering rates in his old Commonwealth & Southern territory (without mentioning how T. V. A. prodded him along), and up No'th, where the bankers and brokers are wont to congregate, he tells tall tales of how he got bigger profits for good old C. & S. out of those selfsame consumers.

So it goes.

Willkie wants to give England everything she wants to win—and insists that the United States keep strictly out of the war.

Willkie is 100 percent for peace—and 100 percent for licking Hitler.

Willkie praises the New Deal—and promises to tear it up.

Willkie is, he says, a Democrat—and also a Republican.

This record betters that of the god Janus, porter at the pearly gates, who was given two faces the better to catch people going and coming. Indeed, it is matched only by the speech of that venerable candidate who got his juleps mixed with his metaphors and shouted:

"Folks, I am neither on the one hand partial, nor on the other hand impartial, but, like Caesar's wife, all things to all men."

Mr. Willkie's Campaign

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PATRICK J. BOLAND

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Walter Lippmann, from today's issue of the Washington Post:

[From the Washington Post of August 27, 1940]

TODAY AND TOMORROW—MR. WILLKIE'S PROGRAM

(By Walter Lippmann)

Although a number of Democratic Senators, chiefly Mr. WHEELER, of Montana; Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and Mr. WALSH, of Massachusetts, are the advertised leaders of the opposition to conscription and to helping Great Britain, they draw their practical influence from the Republican Party organization in Congress. There are no signs as yet that Mr. MCNARY, the leader of the Republicans in the Senate and also Mr. Willkie's running mate, or that Mr. MARTIN, the leader of the Republicans in the House, and also Mr. Willkie's campaign manager, are prepared to carry out the pledges of Mr. Willkie's acceptance speech. Both Mr. MCNARY and Mr. MARTIN have, as regards foreign policy and national defense, consistently opposed the spirit and the letter of the Elwood speech, and on the record votes they have alined most of the Republican Party in the opposition.

It is from this Republican opposition that the small minority of Democratic objectors derive their effectiveness in delaying and obstructing the measures which both Mr. Willkie and Mr. Roosevelt have asked for. It is from the Republicans that the congressional opposition obtain most of the votes. But what is even more important, the fact that the official Republican organization in Congress takes an isolationist and more or less pacifist line, enables a minority of Democrats to frighten the Democratic majority with the continual threat of a party schism. Because the Republicans under Messrs. MCNARY and MARTIN do not support the national policy as formulated by the leaders of both parties, a relatively small group of insurgent Democrats are able to control the balance of power in Congress and thus to exercise and influence out of all proportion to their real strength. Their influence would decline and their power of obstruction would dissolve the moment Mr. Willkie was able to induce his running mate and his campaign manager to follow his leadership.

And so, until Mr. Willkie brings his own party to the support of his own pledges, he is plainly in no position to challenge the President on any issue or to criticize the efficiency of what is now being done for national defense. The first condition of leadership is to be able to lead one's own followers. We live under a system of party government, and before a Presidential candidate can challenge the other party he must have established himself as the leader of his own party.

For if he is unable to lead his own party and has quarreled with the other one as well, just how is he going to translate into reality all his excellent personal pledges, hopes, and ideals? A President without a party is, as we know from the sad histories of President Taft and President Hoover, hopelessly and helplessly stalled.

Nothing is to be gained, certainly not by those of us who hope to be able to support him, in concealing the fact that although Mr. Willkie was nominated as the result of a popular rebellion against the Republican Party machine, 2 months have passed without his becoming the actual leader of his party, for leadership does not consist in making speeches and giving out interviews. It consists in inducing other men to act. And there is as yet no indication that the Republican Party leaders in Congress have paid the slightest attention to Mr. Willkie's views on any great issue. The Republicans who are supporting conscription and help to Britain were supporting these measures before Mr. Willkie was nominated; the rest, and they include the official Republican leaders in Congress, either remain in opposition or are passively, like Messrs. McNARY and MARTIN, not giving their support.

In the fact that Mr. Willkie has let the summer go by without establishing his leadership of the Republican Party there is to be found, I believe, the real explanation for his failure to gain ground since his personal triumph at Philadelphia. The latest Gallup poll confirms what most experienced observers had already noted, namely, the momentum of the popular movement behind Willkie has become bogged down, and that, if he has not actually lost votes, he has not been gaining them. Gallup polls are not infallible, of course, and they do not measure the intensity of the support behind a candidate. But it is surely the fact that since June the enthusiasm for Willkie has been noticeably chilled as week after week, in the midst of the most critical period of modern history, Mr. Willkie remained remote from the scene of action, reserved on the great controversial issues, and personally isolated from the critical decisions which are shaping the destiny of the country. Crusades cannot be led by anyone reclining in an easy chair on the veranda of a summer hotel, and popular movements cannot be put in cold storage for 2 months and then be set moving again. It is especially difficult to do that when the leader of the crusade is running against a President who day after day is actually dealing with the real issues of the proposed crusade.

There is no use pretending, it seems to me, that the first 2 months of the Willkie campaign have not been worse than wasted owing to a fundamental misconception of the political situation. Mr. Willkie was nominated by a popular movement which overwhelmed the existing Republican Party organization. The vitality of the movement required that Mr. Willkie should at once translate his personal victory into effective leadership of his party. This required immediate action—with no time out in which the defeated party machine could recover and reestablish itself. The action required was to make the party leaders in Congress, especially Mr. McNARY and Mr. MARTIN, bring the party organization into line. This action would have been an immediate and decisive intervention by Mr. Willkie in the real events of the day. He would have been from the start of the campaign a principal participating as a statesman in events. But instead of recognizing his responsibility as the Republican leader and fulfilling it, which would have made him at once a great figure, he became bemused with the idea that he did not need to act and that he could win by talking. He forgot that he had not yet shown his prowess as a party leader and he founded his campaign on the notion that he could "outbox the champ."

But this is a radical miscalculation. For as long as Mr. Willkie is conducting a merely personal campaign, without loyal and wholehearted support from his party, he has no way of convincing the country that he can accomplish any of the things he says he means to do. His claim to be elected—and it is at bottom a substantial claim—is that he can do better the things that Mr. Roosevelt is doing. But that claim cannot be demonstrated by smart speeches, and it will be ruined entirely if the people come to feel that Mr. Willkie thinks he can run the country before he has shown that he can run his party.

For this is not a talking contest, and words have no credit unless they are issued against a reserve of acts. Mr. Willkie has not yet done anything. So Mr. Willkie's campaign has not been flourishing. For it has been based, thus far, upon an avoidance of those acts of party leadership which the practical situation requires. Until these acts have been performed, all the rest of the campaign will seem unreal because it is unreal, being, in fact, so much personal rhetoric and private oratory.

"Fifth Columns"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSH LEE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESS BY IRA M. FINLEY

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD what I consider to be a very fine speech made by Ira M. Finley, president of the Veterans of Industry of America, to the Twenty-fifth Annual Conference of the Veterans of Industry of America, Oklahoma City, June 30, 1940, and printed in the Oklahoma Union Farmer of Monday, July 15, 1940.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Oklahoma Union Farmer of July 15, 1940]

"FIFTH COLUMNS" ABOVE AND BELOW

[Address of Ira M. Finley, president of the Veterans of Industry of America, to the Twenty-fifth Annual Conference of the Veterans of Industry of America, in Oklahoma City on Sunday, June 30, 1940]

Greetings: We have met here again today in the interest of better government, a more equitable, social, and economic order. We are here as sovereign rulers of a great republic. For 8 years it has been my duty from time to time to restate our aims and purpose.

The leaders of this organization throughout the State are not only trained and educated as to their duties and rights, but our committees and leaders are as well disciplined as a well-trained army—not disciplined by force—but it has been self-discipline.

THE "FIFTH COLUMN"

We are adding a new committee to each of our more than 300 local chapters. This committee will be known as a citizens' committee. It will be their duty to report to the proper authorities evidence of un-American or disloyal activities. It will likewise be their duty to see to it that no one is persecuted or embarrassed by false charges of disloyalty.

The recent Spanish revolution brought about the phrase "The fifth column." The "fifth column" was those who were undermining the very structure that they were supposed to support. The Veterans of Industry of America, the "VIA" (The Way), has pioneered in making the voiceless masses articulate. For 8 years we have waged a war for good government. From the beginning we have had a clause in the constitution of our organization that has barred "fifth columnists" from membership and a clause to expel any member who was unpatriotic enough to falsely accuse any public official, high or low.

A RELIEF POLITICAL MACHINE

While we have had to wage a continuous war against communist front organizations, we have at the same time opposed laxity, or corruption in our Government. We fought the use of W. P. A. as a political machine until we lost almost everything we had except our patriotism and self-respect. We took the position that those who used W. P. A. and other relief agencies as a political machine through which they coerced and intimidated our unemployed citizens were not one whit better citizens than a Communist or German bundist.

Those who used the State relief funds to purchase, intimidate, and otherwise control the votes of pauperized people along with the other gang who coerced the unemployed through control of W. P. A. should be compelled to take the oath of allegiance to our Government that they would have destroyed.

Then there are the leaders of so-called special interests. These leaders admitted that they could not win an election where the V. I. A. and farmers' union were taking the lead for economic and social reforms. By their own admission they have used their money and power to prevent the exercise of a free ballot.

WHEN NO ONE IS SAFE

Members of the State supreme court have allowed the leaders of special interests to interfere with the constitutional rights of the sovereign citizens of this great State. We will continue to fight the "fifth column" whether it be misguided, unthinking, ragged workers, marching to the tune of communism, or whether it be the hireling of special interests or a corrupt judge in his ermine robe.

Yes, we will continue to urge the masses to organize into the V. I. A. in order that they might know more about their rights as citizens; understand the blessings bestowed upon us by the Divine hand of Providence and that they might help to preserve and improve the greatest Government ever conceived by the minds of men. Let us not permit self-appointed bigots to use the charge of "disloyalty" against innocent people. When such things are done, we revert to the mob and no one is safe.

The man or woman who does such things is unworthy of communion with free people and should be locked behind prison walls or committed to a hospital for the criminal insane. It is only natural that this patriotic organization, composed for the most part of men and women who belong to the one-half of the population who are "ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed" should lead the fight for genuine democracy and unadulterated Americanism.

A SURE WAY TO A REMEDY

There is a sure way to kill communism. Let the Federal Government provide a work program that will give steady employment to every willing worker at decent wages. Provide adequate Federal pensions for the aged, dependent children, widows, and those incapacitated for work.

Make it unprofitable for anyone to own a lot of land that they don't use, but make it highly profitable for those who actually till the soil.

Yes; this would cure the cancerous sore of communism; but there are two other divisions of this "fifth column" that are probably more dangerous than the threat of communism—the special interests and their political henchmen. Let us, my coworker, keep our eyes upon the fundamentals that distinguish a free people from a slave people.

It is not enough to merely salute our flag or mumble our prayers; it is not enough to sing praises to our founding fathers. Our day calls for action and sacrifices as much as theirs. If we cherish free speech, free assemblage, freedom of worship; if we cherish the right of the writ of habeas corpus; if we love the right as sovereigns where, in this Nation, every man is a king and every woman a queen, we must be willing to sacrifice, to fight for their preservation.

THE WORST TYPE OF CRIMINAL

We must bring into our organization others who are willing to help keep a watchful eye upon our glorious democracy. We must understand that the scheming scoundrel who manipulates the markets, impoverishes and debases our citizens, is as much a dictator as the ones who have raped the democracies of Europe. Through our widespread committee system we should warn others that an unfaithful public official is the worst type of criminal; that waste of public funds is the most despicable of all thefts.

Today democracy is stumbling along toward Gethsemane with a battered cross upon her shoulders. I have heard the adept propagandists as they have asked the despondent unemployed worker, "What would you lose if we had a dictator of the proletariat?" "Just what does democracy mean to you?" Oh, yes; that question has been asked of millions in the past 10 years, and while the answer has not been audible, it has been answered, "I have nothing to lose" or "Democracy means nothing to me."

ONLY DEMOCRACY CAN SAVE

The bewildered, destitute citizen needs us to point out the fact that democracy only can save him, and that these subtle agents of destruction are employing democracy's strength (free speech) with which to destroy her. In this struggle no one has more to lose than the underprivileged poor. Under a dictator their economic lot would be no better; their bodies, yes, the very soul of themselves and loved ones, would be in chains.

Today they have the ballot; today they have the remedy in their own hands. Let no one fool you; democracy must be preserved by the toiling masses or we perish. I want to congratulate you for your patience, for your devotion, which has enabled you to surmount every obstacle. We must organize, organize, and organize or else all these blessings will soon be denied us.

In conclusion, let us repeat, the fight against the "fifth column" cannot be made by public officials or by those in high places. It must be made by the plain people, from whence every ray of liberty and freedom has sprung since the dawn of time.

West Point

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS LUDLOW

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 22, 1940

ARTICLE FROM COLLIER'S

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent of the House, I submit for printing in the RECORD extracts from an interesting article on the West Point Military Academy which appeared in Collier's for August 24, 1940, as follows:

[From Collier's for August 24, 1940]

WEST POINT?

(By Henry F. Pringle)

The United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., is one of the most beautiful institutions in the world. Its graduates have engraved their names high on the honor rolls of peace as well as war. Its cadets are youths of scrupulous honor, and they are intelligent as well as brave.

And yet, West Point elementary military training emphasizes greatly the formal parades and guard mountings. These require—for perfection of performance—that too much of the cadet's time be spent in shoulder-to-shoulder marching in ranks on foot. Emphasis on such training was necessary in Frederick the Great's day. But are not matters greatly altered now? Should not all the cadets spend much less of their 4 years in formal close-order marching? Should not the time thus made available be devoted to learning the simple elements of piloting an airplane, practice in simple parachute work and the use of other modern engines of war? Should not the exhibition during the graduating week show that the cadets about to graduate and become officers are proficient in the practical elements of such matters?

Look at one of the programs of exercises for graduation week at present. They consist of horse shows, formal close-order infantry parades on foot and drills in which horses are used. Necessarily the cadet maneuvers are elementary and mostly include only the 1,200 or so cadets. Also, the local terrain is not sufficiently extensive to permit much firing of modern artillery.

* * * * * * *

The high-ranking men of the graduating class—possibly 25 in all—are permitted to enter the Corps of Engineers, which is regarded as the most desirable arm of the service. About half the class enrolls in the Air Corps for a year of training, but only 50 percent of them qualify. The rest of the graduates are assigned to troops. After the young officer has obtained additional practical experience for, say, 2 years he is sent to one of the Army postgraduate schools, where he gets special training in cavalry, infantry, or whatever his branch happens to be. There, probably for the first time, he learns the details of modern warfare. In due course, if the officer is able enough, he will be sent to the General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. A few years later, if he has shown still additional competence, he will take the course at the Army War College in Washington, which is the final postgraduate school. But that, if he is a West Pointer, will be 15 or 20 years after he has left the quiet campus of the United States Military Academy.

* * * * * * *

Naturally, West Point leans upon tradition and the past. The mission of the academy, the freshman cadets are informed, is primarily to "instill discipline and a sense of honor." Thus it has always been at West Point since the institution was founded in 1802. The system of instruction at the academy is, in its broad aspects, still the one established by Col. Sylvanus Thayer, the "father of West Point," when he became superintendent in 1817.

"We have made changes, of course," a high-ranking officer of the academy told me, "but we teach the same fundamentals—honor and integrity and discipline."

The honor and integrity of West Point men may be assumed. There isn't the slightest question about that. Doubt has been cast, however, on whether the West Point elementary discipline is the best for war of today, when nothing happens according to schedule.

* * * * * * *

In the face of these admitted facts the question is now being raised whether such luxuries as a 4-year course with hours upon hours devoted to English composition, English literature, French, Spanish, and ancient history can be afforded. The hours given to "cultural subjects," so-called, at West Point are greater than at such civilian technical colleges as the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the engineering schools of Cornell University. For graduation from West Point 131 semester hours are required; that is, classes of 1 hour given a stated number of times each semester. Of the total of 131 during 4 years, hardly a third are courses directly related to being an officer in the Army. The rest are "cultural subjects," science, and engineering.

In the summer months, it is true, classes are suspended and the cadets learn something, at least, about work in the field. They go out on what are called cavalry hikes, expeditions of 20 to 25 miles a day on which cavalry problems are studied. They study such engineering problems as the building of pontoon bridges and they get some practical field-artillery training. Infantry maneuvers are also staged. A West Point cadet knows how to deploy troops. He knows the rudiments of infantry tactics.

* * * * * * *

A few West Pointers have themselves recently suggested some changes, and have been brushed aside on the ground that they are not familiar with the West Point of today. Occasional outsiders have had the temerity to suggest that radical changes should be made. Would it not be wise, they have asked, to make West Point a graduate school with enrollment limited to men with college degrees? Then the academic work could be curtailed, a thorough military education substituted, and commissions as second lieutenants awarded after 2 years. Twice as many cadets could thereby be graduated into the Army.

* * * * * * *

OUTSIDE CRITICISM MIGHT HELP

West Point might benefit from outside inspection. The United States Naval Academy at Annapolis is inspected annually by a Board of Visitors on which habitually serve such distinguished men as the presidents of Northwestern University, the University of California, the University of Wisconsin, and of Lafayette College. Also on the Board of Visitors are members of the House and Senate. To Annapolis journeys this distinguished body of men each year. It spends about a week in exhaustive inquiry and drafts a comprehensive report.

West Point, too, has a Board of Visitors, made up of a dozen or more Members of the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees. Two years ago three Members of the Senate appeared for the annual inspection and last year three Members of the House. They were tendered a luncheon by the superintendent, watched the glamorous dress parade and went home at the end of the day. A report of a few hundred words was drafted and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where nobody saw it. The truth is that West Point has no desire for stringent outside supervision. A proposal by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, to add five educators to the Board of Visitors was opposed by the then superintendent, Maj. Gen. William D. Connor. Brig. Gen. Jay L. Benedict, now the superintendent, has said he would welcome investigation by any specially drafted commission, but that he has small faith in routine boards. Anyway, nothing is done. West Point still runs itself.

In theory, the academy is run by the Superintendent and his staff under the supervision of the War Department. Actually, I am convinced, it is run by a permanent group of officers called the academic board. This is composed of the heads of the various collegiate departments, the Superintendent, and two or three other officers. Their devotion to West Point is sincere and complete. So, I suspect, is their control. I don't think any superintendent, whose assignment to the institution is normally for 4 years, would cross swords with the academic board. I doubt that the War Department would oppose its will.

* * * * * * *

It is not unusual for men with 2 and 3 years of college to be admitted to West Point. College graduates sometimes become cadets. But so rigid is the academy system that men with degrees are forced to take the identical courses with boys who have just left high school. They must go back over all their French, their Spanish, their elementary English composition, and their mathematics.

German, incidentally, is not taught at West Point. Its authorities admit, somewhat lugubriously, that instruction in German might be a good idea and it is being considered.

AN EXPERT SPEAKS

I have encountered no West Point graduate, nor any outsider familiar with the academy, who casts the slightest doubt on the sincerity of its administrative officers.

The criticism of West Point rises from its distaste for change when warfare has changed. Modern warfare demands in young officers the highest development of personal initiative and resourcefulness. A method of training the cadets in excessive accuracy in shoulder-to-shoulder marching is not conducive to developing the type of officer now demanded.

Among the leading critics of some features of West Point's elementary training in discipline and in military affairs is Maj. Gen. William C. Rivers, now retired, who graduated with the class of 1887. General Rivers fought in the later Indian wars, at Santiago, and in the Philippines, and in France had a line-of-battle command in all our major combats.

When the name of General Rivers was mentioned at West Point there was a discernible tendency to belittle his knowledge of the academy and to discount his suggestions for change. But it seems to me, on the contrary, that the general has made a thorough and intelligent study of the institution, and that he is scrupulously fair. Before making any of his suggestions for changes at the Military Academy, General Rivers spent 10 days at West Point, in a quiet season, in order to freshen his knowledge of the school. He then went to Annapolis and spent a fortnight in detailed and careful study of the Naval Academy. General Rivers had the unusual privilege of being, as a young officer, twice ordered from the Indian country for duty at West Point. He has, therefore, passed 10 years of his life at his alma mater.

"Some things about West Point I believe we all agree on," he told the House Committee on Military Affairs a few years ago. "Among these are that it is one of the noblest and most valuable assets of America * * *."

But General Rivers believes, as he told the House committee, that the cadets "are too closely confined." He thinks they are not given enough vacations. The midshipmen at Annapolis "have perhaps double the vacation time in 4 years—aside from the cruises." Greater freedom "would result in better work and in better physical and general development."

"Too much segregation and too many rules and regulations," General Rivers added, "do not aid the development of character, in my opinion. These merely add unnecessarily to the nervous strain and to the minor frictions of cadet life. The best means for developing personal initiative and personal resourcefulness are of paramount importance since the World War."

In short, war had changed even in 1918 and West Point had not—or too little. General Rivers went on:

"Many of us graduates—who have had extended battle work in war—believe that it is important gradually to modify and rationalize West Point's method of elementary disciplinary training in order to meet the modern demand for officers possessing the highest degree of personal initiative."

It was "disturbing," he said, to see that none of the graduating cadets could execute "simple maneuvers with a training airplane, and that the chief daily military exhibition in June week remains the formal dress parade. Why not release the seniors from the ranks after 2 years shoulder-to-shoulder training, some of which is suited for mass maneuvers and for attacking hollow squares at close quarters?"

* * * * * * *

Abroad, the military schools are far more closely geared to the art of war. At England's Royal Military College (Sandhurst) and Royal Military Academy (Woolwich) the course is only 18 months and the education is strictly military and professional. It is idle, naturally, to speak of French schools today. They are doubtless what the Nazis have ordered. But until the collapse of France, the cadets spent only 2 years at the famous L'Ecole Spéciale Militaire at St. Cyr or at L'Ecole Polytechnique in Paris. Germany had five academies just before the war. Candidates for admission had to show, besides "proof of Aryan descent," that they had the equivalent of 2 years of college. The courses at all of them last about a year and a quarter. Italy has a 2-year course. West Point, as far as I can learn, is the only military school except the Royal Military College of Canada which gives a full collegiate education. At Sandhurst, indeed, the desperate exigencies of war have forced a reduction of the normal 18-months course to 16 weeks.

It was late afternoon as we prepared to leave West Point after our final visit and crowds were gathering to watch the dress parade, famous throughout the world. The sun was still hot. It was a warm day. I wondered, as the magnificent parade began, how the cadets could stand it in their high, tight collars and stiff uniforms. These, too, were a symbol of a day that has passed. They are fit young men, however. They gave no sign of discomfort or fatigue. Their ranks were mathematically precise. Near me stood an elderly couple who had obviously driven in from their farm to see the spectacle.

"How do they ever learn to do it so well?" I asked the man.

"I dunno," he answered. "The Rockettes at the Music Hall in New York are just as good, though."

IT DEPENDS ON WHAT YOU WANT

That, too, was an unfair crack. The Rockettes' precision dancing may be as accurate in its way as the dress parade at West Point. But the dress parade is only an outward symbol of what is wrong at the United States Military Academy. Is West Point any good? That depends on what you want. If it is an institution which turns out men of honor, men of intelligence, men who believe in tradition, men with cultural background, men who will do their duty, men who are brave—why, then, West Point is very good, indeed. West Point doesn't pretend to train for today's war. Possibly it doesn't even build men for tomorrow's war. It sends out men who, in the course of further training and years of service, will become competent officers.

"Every war," to quote again the official history of the institution, "has brought some disturbance to the normal tenor of the Military Academy's activities." If you want a West Point tuned up to immediate combat, to tanks and parachute troops and totalitarian efficiency and lightning thrusts and mechanization and horror and death—why, then, West Point is not much good.

Some statistics: The total number of the graduates of West Point from 1802 to date is 12,238. From 1802 until the Civil War the Academy turned out but 1,887 graduates. About 1,250 of these, of all ages, were living in 1861. There were about 100,000 officers on both sides in the Civil War. However, during the 4 years of conflict there were 445 general officers, on both sides, from the small number of West Pointers living in 1861. At the close of the Civil War all the armies on both sides were commanded by graduates of West Point. Also, the commanders of nearly all the corps and divisions in the Union Army and in the Confederate Army were West Point graduates. The above is a truly remarkable record of men who had no sort of political influence or prestige to aid them in being given army commands.

Appropriations for National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK B. KEEFE

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, current discussion of national-defense problems has resulted in much misinformation as to the amounts appropriated and expended for the Army and Navy. In order that the Members of Congress and the country may have accurate and authentic information on the subject I have had a consolidated statement prepared of appropriations and expenditures for the Army and Navy for the fiscal years 1933 to 1941, both inclusive.

This statement will disclose, among interesting facts, that in the years 1933 to 1939, both inclusive, the Army and Navy were given $381,128,033.35 more than was expended in those years.

The entire statement follows:

Consolidated statement of appropriations and expenditures for the Army and [1] Navy, fiscal years 1933 to 1941, both inclusive

	Appropriations	Allotment of emergency funds	Total	Expended
1933:
Army	$304,961,492.00		$304,961,492.00	$295,111,986.89
Navy	347,152,220.89	$238,000,000.00	585,152,220.89	342,176,417.52
Total	652,113,712.89	238,000,000.00	890,113,712.89	637,288,404.41
1934:
Army	277,050,381.00	96,688,252.00	373,738,633.00	272,652,668.63
Navy	324,755,626.68	39,098,924.00	363,854,550.68	303,639,404.62
Total	601,806,007.68	135,787,176.00	737,593,183.68	576,292,073.25
1935:
Army	280,848,897.00	8,857,678.00	289,706,575.00	364,859,410.07
Navy	314,567,433.52	40,993,440.00	355,560,873.52	440,604,669.56
Total	595,416,330.52	49,851,118.00	645,267,448.52	805,464,079.63
1936:
Army	355,523,020.00	9,551,451.00	365,074,471.00	339,598,167.79
Navy	496,572,848.78	252,356.42	496,825,205.20	518,625,222.14
Total	852,095,868.78	9,803,807.42	861,899,676.20	858,223,389.93
1937:
Army	388,244,859.00	18,069,820.00	406,314,679.00	362,005,183.59
Navy	597,567,939.89		597,567,939.89	539,030,790.85
Total	985,812,798.89	18,069,820.00	1,003,882,618.89	901,035,974.44
1938:
Army	415,263,154.00	74,939,334.00	490,202,488.00	431,410,612.14
Navy	535,172,626.98	740,173.71	535,912,800.69	587,945,491.91
Total	950,435,780.98	75,679,507.71	1,026,115,288.69	1,019,356,104.05
1939:
Army	460,201,254.00	31,097,625.00	491,298,879.00	495,671,698.17
Navy	642,511,999.27	35,984,134.05	678,496,133.32	660,206,184.96
Total	1,102,713,253.27	67,081,759.05	1,169,795,013.32	1,155,877,883.13
1940:
Army	923,142,603.00	17,511,716.00	940,654,319.00
Navy	943,363,289.78	9,999,995.00	953,363,284.78
Total	1,866,505,892.78	27,511,711.00	1,894,017,603.78
1941:
Army	[2] 3,982,725,786.00
Navy	[2] 2,439,377,748.00
Total	6,422,103,534.00

[1] Navy figures exclude Works Progress Administration funds. For the period commencing with the fiscal year 1935 and ending June 30, 1940, Navy allocations of such funds totaled $73,061,837.70, and expenditures totaled $71,712,224.45.

[2] Includes second supplemental national defense appropriation bill as passed by House.

Straits Bridge Financing

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE ADRIAN (MICH.) DAILY TELEGRAM OF AUGUST 19, 1940

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Adrian (Mich.) Daily Telegram of August 19, 1940:

[From the Adrian (Mich.) Daily Telegram of August 19, 1940]

STRAITS BRIDGE FINANCING

A bill is moving through Congress giving permission for the construction of a bridge at the Straits of Mackinac. It has been approved in the House and sent to the Senate for concurrence in some minor amendments and will then go to the President for his signature. All this does not mean that the bridge is a Federal project. It simply means that Federal permission to cross navigable waters under Federal control is being granted.

Bridges cost money and the engineers estimate that the one proposed at the straits will cost $26,740,000. This money presumably would be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or raised through a bond issue. In any event interest payments would have to be met and some provision made for retiring the principal of the loan.

Assuming that 4-percent revenue bonds were issued, the interest costs the first year would be $1,069,600. The engineers estimate that administrative, operating and maintenance costs would be $160,000. Thus $1,229,600 would be needed the first year to pay interest charges and operate the bridge without making any provision for reducing the loan. The bridge proponents are talking about 40-year bonds. If such bonds are issued there would have to be provision made for raising $668,000 a year over the 40-year period to retire them.

The bridge would not be ready for use until 1947, and the engineers estimate that by then the traffic would have increased so that a revenue of $925,000 would be available. That sum, however, would be $304,000 short of the amount needed to pay the interest and operating charges without taking into consideration any payment on the principal of the debt.

It appears obvious that the bridge's revenues as estimated by the engineers would fall around a million dollars a year short of the requirements to pay interest and retire the bonds. Unless the State wants to take that amount out of its general revenues or highway funds, default on the bonds is inevitable. Of course, toll charges might be increased, but such a move defeats the very purpose for which the bridge is being built. Besides, increases high enough to make up the probable deficit would be altogether too high.

Approximately 280,000 vehicles used the ferry service last year. The charge for the average car and its passengers is about $1.75 a crossing. For 280,000 vehicles to raise $1,229,600 (the interest and operating charges of the bridge in its first year) the rate would have to be $4.39 a vehicle. To provide the $668,000 for the yearly installment on the sinking fund to retire the loan, the toll for the average car would have to be about 50 percent more than $4.39. Such tolls are out of the question; the traveling public simply would not pay them. Proponents of the bridge argue that the growth of Michigan's tourist business into a $400,000,000 industry makes the bridge necessary. Such tolls as are cited above would practically destroy that part of the tourist business crossing the straits.

The tourist business between Michigan's two peninsulas has grown under a system of ferry service across the straits. That service represents an investment of about $3,000,000 that is earning dividends. The service is capable of expansion. No conclusive proof is offered that the traffic across the straits is going to grow to such an extent that ferries cannot handle it. The growth between 1937 and 1939 was less than 5,500 vehicles. That growth in 2 years means only 91 trips across the straits for the smaller ferries carrying 60 cars and 55 trips for the larger ones carrying 100 cars.

But the men who want the bridge built propose scrapping a $3,000,000 investment that is earning dividends for one of $27,000,000 that is bound to operate in the red. It does not make sense.

The Third-Term Issue

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STYLES BRIDGES

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

STATEMENT BY JOSEPH LEIB

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the text of the 1928 anti-third-term resolution adopted by the Senate and a reference to the Senators now in the Senate who voted for the resolution. It is in the form of a statement issued by Joseph Leib, founder of the first Roosevelt-for-President club in the United States.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THIRD-TERM ISSUE

(By Joseph Leib, founder of first Roosevelt for President Club in the United States)

On February 10, 1928, the Democratic United States Senators listed below, voted against a third term for any President of the United States, and approved the following Senate Resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions."—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 10, 1928.

The following Senators voted for this resolution: ALBEN W. BARKLEY, Kentucky; HENRY F. ASHURST, Arizona; ROBERT F. WAGNER, New York; PAT HARRISON, Mississippi; WILLIAM H. KING, Utah; PETER G. GERRY, Rhode Island; MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Maryland; GEORGE W. NORRIS, Nebraska; KENNETH MCKELLAR, Tennessee; MATTHEW M. NEELY, West Virginia; MORRIS SHEPPARD, Texas; ELMER THOMAS, Oklahoma; BURTON K. WHEELER, Montana; KEY PITTMAN, Nevada; ROBERT M. LAFOLLETTE, Wisconsin.

But, where do these great patriots and legislators stand today?

If the third-term principle was bad in 1928, why is it good in 1940?

Engineering and Architectural Service Contracts, United States Navy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CARL VINSON
OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

STATEMENTS FROM NAVY BUREAUS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statements:

NEGOTIATED CONTRACTS

Contracts awarded by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis

Location, character, and cost of project	Fee		Contract officer	Contract dated
Kaneohe Bay, Oahu; Midway Island; Johnston Island; Palmyra Island; Pearl Harbor, T. H.; Pacific naval air bases; Hawaiian Dredging Co., Ltd., Raymond Concrete Pile Co., Turner Construction Co., 420 Lexington Ave., New York City. Estimated cost, $14,607,500.	$898,000	6.57%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-3550, Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-3550, Naval Air Station, Alameda, Calif.	Aug. 5, 1939
Kodiak and Sitka, Alaska; Alaska Naval air bases; Siems Spokane Co., Puget Sound Bridge & Dredging, Johnson, Drake & Piper, 2929 16th Ave. SW., Seattle, Wash. Estimated cost, $14,960,000.	850,000	6.02%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-3570, 2929 16th Ave. SW., Seattle, Wash. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-3570, 2929 16th Ave. SW., Seattle, Wash.	Aug. 29, 1939
San Juan, P. R.; naval air base; Arundel Corporation, Consolidated Engineering Co., Inc., 608 Mercantile Trust Bldg., Baltimore, Md. Estimated cost, $8,475,000.	450,000	5.6%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-3680, naval air station, San Juan, P. R., P. O. Box 3944, Santurce, P. R. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-3680, 608 Mercantile Trust Bldg., Baltimore, Md.	Oct. 30, 1939
Coco Solo, C. Z.; breakwater; Frederick Snare Corporation, 114 Liberty St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $2,840,000.	160,000	5.6%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4080, 15th naval district, Balboa, C. Z.	June 17, 1940
Naval air station, Corpus Christi, Tex.; air station; Brown & Root, W. S. Bellows Columbia Construction Co., post office box 866, Corpus Christi, Tex. Estimated cost, $23,318,000.	1,200,000	5.4%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4090, naval air station, Corpus Christi, Tex., P. O. Box 66.	June 11, 1940
Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va.; Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; shipbuilding dry docks and accessories; Spencer, White & Prentis, Inc.; Foley Bros., Inc.; Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corporation; care of Dry Docks Associates, 10 East 40th St., New York City. Estimated cost, $17,000,000.	825,000	5.1%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4100, Navy Yard, Norfolk, Va. Officer in charge, contract NOy-4100, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.	June 26, 1940
Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.; aviation facilities; Hardaway Contracting Co., Columbus, Ga. Estimated cost, $4,000,000.	165,000	4.3%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4130, Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.	July 11, 1940
Naval Air Station, Miami (Opa Locka), Fla.; aviation facilities (Fred Howland, Inc., and Jack Quinn, Inc., of Miami, Fla., 1113-14 Postal Bldg., Miami, Fla). Estimated cost, $3,500,000.	157,500	5%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4131, Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla.	June 28, 1940
Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla.; aviation shore facilities; Duval Engineering & Contracting Co.; George D. Auchter Co.; Batson-Cook Co., P. O. Box 1859, Jacksonville, Fla. Estimated cost, $12,786,000.	525,000	4.3%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4132, Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla.	Do.
Naval Proving Ground, Dahlgren, Va.; hangar, etc.; Jeffress-Dyer Co., 1719 K St. NW., Washington, D. C. Estimated cost, $235,000.	10,500	4.7%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4134, Naval Air Station, Anacostia, D. C.	June 27, 1940
Naval Hospital, Norfolk, Va.; hospital wards; E. E. Weddle & Co., 207 Board of Trade Bldg., Norfolk, Va. Estimated cost, $175,000.	6,750	2.5%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4154, Naval Hospital, Norfolk (Portsmouth), Va.	June 29, 1940
Naval Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.; explosive-manufacturing building and storehouse; Tredennick-Billings Co., 10 High St., Boston, Mass. Estimated cost, $585,000.	22,500	4%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4157, Naval Training Station, Newport, R. I.	Do.
Naval Air Station, Norfolk, Va.; aviation shore facilities; Virginia Engineering Co., 330 28th St., Melson Bldg., Newport News, Va. Estimated cost, $13,700,000.	575,000	4.38%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4158, Naval Air Station, Norfolk, Va.	Do.
Naval Air Station, Guantanamo Bay; defense and aviation facilities; Frederick Snare Corporation, 114 Liberty St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $5,190,000.	225,000	4.74%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4162, Naval Station, Guantanamo, Cuba. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-4162, care of Frederick Snare Corporation, 114 Liberty St., New York City.	July 1, 1940.
Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.; storehouse and accessories; Turner Construction Co., 420 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $4,000,000.	155,000	4.03%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4163, Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.	July 11, 1940.
Coco Solo, Canal Zone; aviation facilities; Lindgren & Swinerton Inc., Hegeman-Harris Co., Tucker McClure, 220 East 42d St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost $11,050,000.	550,000	5.24%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4164, fifteenth Naval District, Balboa, C. Z. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-4164, care of Hegeman-Harris Co., 220 East 42d St., New York City.	July 2, 1940
Naval Air Station, Alameda, Calif.; additional aviation facilities; Johnson, Drake & Piper, Inc., 1415 Lathem Square Bldg., Oakland, Calif., also 1138 Baker Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn. Estimated cost, $9,800,000.	410,000	4.37%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4165, Naval Air Station, Alameda, Calif.	July 3, 1940
Naval Training Station, Newport, R. I.; barracks and mess hall, Platt Contracting Co., Inc., 169 Bridge St., Cambridge, Mass. Estimated cost, $400,000.	15,500	4%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4166, Naval Training Station, Newport, R. I.	July 1, 1940
Western Pacific: (Pearl Harbor and islands in Pacific); aviation facilities, buildings, fuel storage, dredging, etc.; Hawaiian Dredging Co., Raymond Concrete Pile Co., Turner Construction Co., Morrison Knudsen Co., J. H. Pomeroy & Co., 420 Lexington Ave., New York City. Estimated cost, $30,870,000.	1,600,000	5.46%	Officer in charge, contract, NOy-4173, Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, T. H. Resident officer in charge, contract NOy-4173, Naval Air Station, Alameda, Calif.	Do.
Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, R. I.; aviation shore facilities; Geo. A. Fuller Co., Merritt-Chapman & Scott Corp., 57th St. and Madison Ave., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $24,204,000.	1,050,000	4.54%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4175, Naval Air Station, Quonset Point, R. I., P. O. box 230, East Greenwich, R. I.	Do.
Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; battery charging and overhaul building; Hughes-Foulkrod Co., 809 Schaff Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa. Estimated cost, $75,000.	4,000	5.6%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4186, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.	July 3, 1940
Naval operating base, San Diego, Calif.; Marine Corps barracks, temporary housing; H. M. Hodges & Karn, partners, 4816 W. Pico Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. Estimated cost, $1,630,000.	70,000	4.5%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4187, eleventh naval district, San Diego, Calif.	July 6, 1940
Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.; extensions of machine-shop buildings; Rust Engineering Co., 902 Penrike Bldg., Washington, D. C. Estimated cost, $720,000.	32,500	4.7%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4188, Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.	July 3, 1940
Naval operating base, San Diego, Calif.; additional aviation shore facilities; M. H. Golden and Walter Trepte, care of M. H. Golden, 531 Bank of America Bldg., San Diego, Calif. Estimated cost, $3,666,000.	145,000	4.3%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4205, eleventh naval district, San Diego, Calif.	July 6, 1940
Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.; building ways and facilities for armored docks; J. Rich Steers, 17 Battery Pl., New York. Estimated cost, $1,775,000.	88,000	5.2%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4206, Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.	July 8, 1940
Puget Sound area, Wash.; aviation, ammunition, and fuel storage facilities; The Austin Co., 16112 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio. Estimated cost, $7,300,000.	305,000	4.4%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4210, Naval Air Station, Seattle, Wash.	July 11, 1940

Contracts awarded by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, on a cost-plus-fixed-fee basis—Continued

Location, character, and cost of project	Fee	Contract officer	Contract dated
Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C.; storehouse, cafeteria, locker facilities, and extension of pipe shop; Simons-Mayrant Co., 16 Broad St., Charleston, S. C. Estimated cost, $390,000.	15,750 4.2%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4211, Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C.	Do.
Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.; Iona Island, N. Y.; power plant improvements; The J. G. White Engineering Corporation, 80 Broad St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $740,000.	37,000 5.26%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4216, Navy Yard, New York, N. Y. Officer in charge, contract NOy-4216, Third Naval District, 90 Church St., New York, N. Y.	July 10, 1940
Navy Yards, Philadelphia, Pa., and Charleston, S. C.; Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.; improvement of power plants; United Engineers and Constructors, Inc., 1401 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. Estimated cost, $1,325,000.	65,000 5.15%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4217, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa. Officer in charge, contract NOy-4217, Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C. Officer in charge, contract NOy-4217, Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.	Do.
Navy Yard, Boston, Mass.; Submarine Base, New London, Conn.; improvement of power plant; Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, 90 Broad St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $1,325,000.	65,000 5.15%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4218, Navy Yard, Boston, Mass. Officer in charge, contract NOy-4218, Submarine Base, New London, Conn.	Do.
Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va.; aviation and Marine Corps facilities; John McShain' Inc., 3 West Franklin St., Baltimore, Md. Estimated cost, $1,460,250.	66,000 4.7%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4229, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va.	July 11, 1940
Submarine Base, New London, Conn., general improvements including waterfront, buildings, and new marine railway; F. H. McGraw & Co., 780 Windsor St., Hartford, Conn.; Spearin, Preston & Burrows, Inc., 50 Church St., New York City. Estimated cost, $2,303,000.	115,000 5.4%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4230, Submarine Base, New London, Conn.	July 12, 1940
Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.; water well; Layne-Atlantic Co., Norfolk, Va. Estimated cost, $40,000.	$2,000 5.27%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4232, Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.	July 12, 1940
Navy Yard, Portsmouth, N. H.; shipway, barracks, extensions of buildings; Aberthaw Co., 80 Federal St., Boston, Mass. Estimated cost, $1,085,000.	45,000 4.2%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4236, Navy Yard, Portsmouth, N. H.	July 18, 1940
Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; additional pier; Kaufman Construction Co.; J. E. Brenneman Co., 1505 Race St., Philadelphia, Pa. Estimated cost, $800,000.	36,000 4.7%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4242, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.	July 19, 1940
Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.; subassembly shop, improvements of shop buildings, and steel storage runways; Walter Kidde Constructors, Inc., 140 Cedar St., New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $1,520,000.	70,000 4.9%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4243, Navy Yard, New York, N. Y.	July 18, 1940
Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; additional buildings and accessories; McCloskey & Co., 1620 Thompson St., Philadelphia, Pa. Estimated cost, $1,210,000.	50,000 4.31%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4250, Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.	July 31, 1940
Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.; temporary housing and storage and aviation facilities; Charles W. Angle, Inc., Greensboro, N. C., P. O. Box 1749. Estimated cost, $2,394,750.	110,000 4.8%	Officer in charge, contract NOy-4251, Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C.	Do.
Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; shipfitters shop and shipways Nos. 2 and 3 including runways, electric shop, and extensions to dispensary; Hughes-Foulkrod Co., 809 Schaff Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa. Estimated cost, $855,000.	37,500 4.58%	Officer-in-charge, contract NOy-4264, Navy Yard, Phila., Pa.	Aug. 3, 1940
Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill.; improvement of power plant; Gibbs and Hill, Inc., Pennsylvania Station, New York, N. Y. Estimated cost, $450,000.	23,000 5.38%	Officer-in-charge, contract NOy-4277, Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, Ill.	Aug. 16, 1940
Naval Operating Base, San Diego, Calif.; Fleet operating base, San Pedro, Calif.; George Pollock Co., Sacramento, Calif.; Guy F. Atkinson Co., San Francisco, Calif. Estimated cost, $18,012,500.	800,000 4.65%	Officer-in-charge, contract NOy-4279, Naval Operating Base, San Diego, Calif.	Aug. 14, 1940

Engineering and architectural services contracts

Location	Character of project	Approximate construction costs	Approximate fee	Approximate percent	Contract No.	Date	Engineer or architect
New York	Turret and erection shop buildings	$2,571,000	$89,985	3.5	NOy-3523	June 26, 1939	Lockwood Greene Engineers, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City.
Newport, R. I.	Extension of assembly shop	390,750	14,000	3.5	NOy-3524	July 10, 1939	Chas. T. Main, Inc., 201 Devonshire St., Boston.
Norfolk	Relocation and modernization of switchboard for power plant.	400,000	16,000	4.0	NOy-3525	July 14, 1939	Arthur L. Nelson, 31 St. James Ave., Boston.
Pensacola	Aircraft storehouse, ground school building, and gymnasium building.	1,060,054	45,000	4.25	NOy-3539	July 29, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Do	Seaplane hangar building	383,000	13,400	3.50	NOy-3540	do	John F. Reynolds, Post Office Box 4442, Jacksonville.
Do	Design officers' apartment building	(1)	300		NOy-3557	Aug. 14, 1939	Do.
Mare Island Pearl Harbor	Graving drydocks	3,412,033	119,400	3.5	NOy-3561	Aug. 17, 1939	Frederic R. Harris, Inc., 27 William St., New York City.
Annapolis	Relocation of organ, changes—chancel	45,000	[2] 2,500		NOy-3592	Sept. 5, 1939	Paul P. Cret, Architects' Bldg., Philadelphia.
Pearl Harbor	Administration building, dispensary, and bachelor officers' quarters.	535,000	18,750	3.5	NOy-3593	Sept. 9, 1939	C. W. Dickey, Damon Bldg., Honolulu, T. H.
Pensacola	Boilers, wells, outside services, etc	90,900	[2] 9,500		NOy-3615	Sept. 25, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Do	Administration and operations building and recreation building.	131,250	4,725	3.6	NOy-3616	Sept. 22, 1939	Yonge & Hart, Thiesen Bldg., Pensacola.
Hawthorne	Additional magazine building and accessories.	(3)	[2] 500		NOy-3636	Sept. 7, 1939	Wm. P. Neil Co., Ltd., 4814 Loma Vista Ave., Los Angeles, California.
Black Point Mayport, Fla.	Naval air base and carrier base	(3)	25,000	(4)	NOy-3651, Supp. 1.	Oct. 17, 1939	Robert N. Angas, 420 Hildebrant Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.
Quonset Point	Improve personnel buildings, etc	340,000	12,920	3.8	NOy-3692	Nov. 8, 1939	Jenks & Ballou, Industrial Trust Bldg., Providence.
Black Point, Fla.	Officers' quarters	125,000	4,375	3.5	NOy-3699, Supp. 1.	Nov. 10, 1939	Marsh & Saxelbye, Hildebrant Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.
Do	General storehouse, aircraft storehouse, and procurement and ordnance storehouse.	654,564	18,300	2.8	NOy-3701	Nov. 15, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Banana River, Fla.	Aviation-patrol facilities	305,840	10,710	3.5	NOy-3702	Nov. 13, 1939	John F. Reynolds, Post Office box 4442, Jacksonville.
Charleston	Riggers and laborers shop, field offices	148,294	5,769	[5] 3.75 [6] 4.0	NOy-3713	Sept. 21, 1939	Simons & Lapham, 7 State St., Charleston.
San Juan	Temporary aviation patrol facilities	225,000	9,500	4.25	NOy-3724	Nov. 24, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Washington	Ward building, Nurses' quarters, Hospital Corps quarters, and officers' quarters.	980,500	[2] 42,500	4.35	NOy-3734	Nov. 27, 1939	Paul P. Cret, Architects Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.
Key West	Naval aviation patrol facilities	340,000	12,500	3.6	NOy-3743	do	Russell T. Pancoast, First National Bank Bldg., Miami.

[1] Design change. [2] Lump sum. [3] Survey. [4] Cost plus 3 percent—salaries. [5] Rel. [6] F. O.

Engineering and architectural services contracts—Continued

Location	Character of project	Approximate construction costs	Approximate fee	Approximate percent	Contract No.	Date	Engineer or architect
Quonset Point	Dispensary	$50,000	$1,250	2.5	NOy-3763	Dec. 13, 1939	Chas. A. Maguire and Association, 630 Turks Head Bldg., Providence, R. I.
Do	Topographic and hydrographic surveys	Survey	[2] 12,575		NOy-3764	do	Chas. A. Maguire and Association, Providence, R. I.
Pensacola	Officer of the day building	30,000	[2] 1,200	4.0	NOy-3801	Dec. 27, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Newport	Rearrangement and extension yard service facilities.	110,000	4,400	4.0	NOy-3839	Jan. 12, 1940	Arthur L. Nelson, 31 St. James St., Boston, Mass.
Pensacola	Laundry and bakery buildings	64,000	2,000	3.1	NOy-3845		W. F. Jackson Co., Inc., Red Rock Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.
Kaneohe, Midway, San Juan, Kodiak, and Sitka.	Air bases	19,000,000	[7] 142,500 [8] 550,000	[7] .75 [5] 2.75–3.0	NOy-3560	Sept. 19, 1939	Albert Kahn, Inc., Detroit, Mich.
Various	Air bases (neutrality hangars)	1,500,000	[7] 5,625 [8] 30,000	[7] .375 [8] 2.0	NOy-3560	Oct. 20, 1939	Do.
Banana River, Fla.	Bachelor officers' quarters, barracks, and mess hall, etc.	165,000	5,800	3.5	NOy-3699	Nov. 13, 1939	Marsh & Saxelbye, Hildebrant Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.
Do	Naval air station	Survey	[9] 10,000	(4)	NOy-3651	Dec. 16, 1939	Robert M. Angas, 420 Hildebrant Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.
Jacksonville, Fla.	Assembly and repair shop	1,000,000	30,000	3.0			Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

[1] Lump sum. [4] Cost plus 3 percent—salaries. [7] Net. [8] Gross. [9] Supplemental.

Engineering and architectural services contracts with percentage completed by Aug. 31, 1940

Location	Character of project	Approximate construction costs	Approximate fee	Approximate percent	Contract No.	Date	Engineer or architect	Percent completion, Aug 31, 1940.
New York	Turret and erection shop buildings.	$2,571,000	$89,985	3.5	NOy-3523	June 26, 1939	Lockwood Greene Engineers, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City.	100
Newport, R. I.	Extension of assembly shop	390,750	14,000	3.5	NOy-3524	July 10, 1939	Charles T. Main, Inc., 201 Devonshire St., Boston.	100
Norfolk	Relocation and modernization switchboard for power plant.	400,000	16,000	4.0	NOy-3525	July 14, 1939	Arthur L. Nelson, 31 St. James Ave., Boston.	100
Pensacola	Aircraft storehouse, ground school building, and gymnasium building.	1,060,054	45,000	4.25	NOy-3539	July 29, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100
Do	Seplane hangar building	383,000	13,400	3.50	NOy-3540	do	John F. Reynolds, post-office box 4442, Jacksonville.	100
Do	Design officers' apartment building.	(1)	[3] 300		NOy-3557	Aug. 14, 1939	do	100
Mare Island, Pearl Harbor.	Graving dry docks	3,412,033	119,400	3.5	NOy-3561	Aug. 17, 1939	Frederic R. Harris, Inc., 27 Williams St., New York City.	95
Annapolis	Relocation of organ, changes; Chancel.	45,000	[3] 2,500		NOy-3592	Sept. 5, 1939	Paul P. Cret, Architects' Bldg., Philadelphia.	100
Pearl Harbor	Administration building, dispensary, and bachelor officers' quarters.	535,000	18,750	3.5	NOy-3593	Sept. 9, 1939	C. W. Dickey, Damon Bldg., Honolulu, T. H.	100
Pensacola	Boilers, wells, outside services, etc.	210,615	(2) 9,500	4.5	NOy-3615	Sept. 25, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100
Do	Administration and operations building and recreation building.	131,250	4,725	3.6	NOy-3616	Sept. 22, 1939	Yonge & Hart, Thiesen Bldg., Pensacola.	100
Hawthorne	Additional magazine building and accessories.	(3)	[3] 500		NOy-3636	Sept. 7, 1939	Wm. P. Neil Co., Ltd., 4814 Loma Vista Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.	100
Black Point, Mayport, Fla.	Naval air base and carrier base	(3)	25,000	(4)	NOy-3651 Supp. 1	Oct. 17, 1939	Robert N. Angas, 420 Hildebrandt Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.	100
Quonset Point	Improve personnel buildings, etc.	340,000	12,920	3.8	NOy-3692	Nov. 8, 1939	Jenks & Ballou, Industrial Trust Bldg., Providence.	100
Black Point, Fla.	Officers' quarters	125,000	4,375	3.5	NOy-3699 Supp. 1	Nov. 10, 1939	Marsh & Saxelbye, Hildebrandt Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.	100
Do	General storehouse, aircraft storehouse, and parts and ordnance storehouse.	654,564	18,300	2.8	NOy-3701	Nov. 15, 1939	Robert & Co. Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100
Banana River, Fla.	Aviation patrol facilities	305,840	10,710	3.5	NOy-3702	Nov. 13, 1939	John F. Reynolds, post office box 4442, Jacksonville.	100
Charleston	Riggers and laborers shop-field offices.	148,294	5,769	[5] 3.75 [6] 4.0	NOy-3713	Sept 21, 1939	Simons & Lapham, 7 State St., Charleston.	100
San Juan	Temporary aviation patrol facilities.	225,000	9,560	4.25	NOy-3724	Nov. 24, 1939	Robert & Co. Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100
Washington	Ward building, nurses' quarters, hospital corps quarters, and officers' quarters.	980,500	[1] 42,500	4.35	NOy-3734	Nov. 27, 1939	Paul P. Cret, Architects Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.	95
Key West	Naval aviation patrol facilities.	340,000	12,500	3.6	NOy-3743	do	Russell T. Pancoast, First National Bank Bldg., Miami.	100
Quonset Point	Dispensary	50,000	1,250	2.5	NOy-3763	Dec. 13, 1939	Charles A. Maguire & Associates, 630 Turks Head Bldg., Providence, R. I.	100
Do	Topographic and hydrographic surveys.	(3)	[3] 12,575		NOy-3764	do	do	100
Pensacola	Officer-of-the-day building	30,000	[3] 1,200	4.0	NOy-3801	Dec. 27, 1939	Robert & Co., Inc., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100
Newport	Rearrangement and extension of yard-service facilities.	110,000	4,400	4.0	NOy-3839	Jan. 12, 1940	Arthur L. Nelson, 31 St. James St., Boston, Mass.	90
Pensacola	Laundry and bakery buildings.	64,000	2,000	3.1	NOy-3845	Jan. 17, 1940	W. F. Jackson Co., Inc., Red Rock Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	100

[1] Design change. [3] Survey. [5] Rel.
[2] Lump sum. [4] Cost plus 3 percent—salaries. [6] F. O.

Engineering and architectural services contracts with percentage completed by Aug. 31, 1940—Continued

Location	Character of project	Approximate construction costs	Approximate fee	Approximate percent	Contract No.	Date	Engineer or architect	Percent completion, Aug. 31, 1940
Kaneohe, Midway, San Juan, Kodiak, and Sitka.	Air bases	$19,000,000	[8] $142,500 [9] 550,000	[7] .75 [9] 2.9	NOy-3560	Sept. 19, 1939	Albert Kahn, Inc., New Center Bldg., Detroit, Mich.	100
Various	Air bases (neutrality hangars)	1,500,000	[7] 5,625 [8] 30,000	[7] .375 [8] 2.0	NOy-3560, supp. 2	Oct. 20, 1939	do	100
Banana River, Fla	Bachelor officers' quarters, barracks, and mess hall, etc.	165,000	5,800	3.5	NOy-3699	Nov. 13, 1939	Marsh & Saxelbye, Hildebrandt Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.	100
Do	Naval air station	(3)	[9] 10,000	(4)	NOy-3651	Dec. 16, 1939	Robert M. Angas, 420 Hildebrandt Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.	100
Black Point, Fla	Dispensary, commissioned officers' quarters and gatehouse.	215,000	6,000	3.5	NOy-3944	Mar. 22, 1940	Marsh & Saxelbye, Hildebrandt Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.	100
Do	Overhaul and repair shop, bachelor officers' quarters, administration building, roads and services.	2,668,848	83,000	3.11	NOy-3945	Mar. 25, 1940	Robert & Co., Bona Allen Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.	90
Parris Island, S. C	Mess hall and galley building	270,000	10,800	4.0	NOy-4005	Apr. 29, 1940	Simons & Lapham, 7 State St., Charleston S. C.	95
Torpedo station, Newport, R. I	Explosive manufacturing building and accessories.	360,000	14,400	4.0	NOy-4091	June 12, 1940	Charles T. Main, Inc., 201 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.	100
Fifteenth District, Balboa, C. Z.	Headquarters building	223,750	7,650	3.42	NOy-4092	do	Delano & Aldrich, 126 East Thirty-eighth St., New York, N. Y.	95
Hawthorne, Nev	Ammunition storage facilities		5,000		NOy-4101	June 10, 1940	Austin W. Earl, 51 Lopez Ave., San Francisco, Calif.	90
Navy yard dock, Norfolk, Va.	Extension of machine shop and relocation restaurant.	720,000	19,800	2.75	NOy-4155	June 4, 1940	C. A. Handeyside Co., General Motors Bldg., Detroit, Mich.	50
Naval air station, Coco Solo.	Breakwater	2,840,000	60,000	2.11	NOy-4156	June 26, 1940	Frederic R. Harris, Inc., 27 William St., New York, N. Y.	25
Naval ammunition depot, Hawthorne, Nev.	Surveys, additional ammunition storage facilities.		4,000		NOy-4161	June 7, 1940	Wm. P. Neil Co., Ltd., 4814 Loma Vista Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.	50
Naval Air Stations, Miami and Jacksonville.	Aviation facilities	8,982,000	315,000	3.5	NOy-4212	June 15, 1940	Robert & Co., Inc., Atlanta, Ga	70
Naval Training Station, Newport.	Extension of storehouse and accessories.	325,000	12,350	3.8	NOy-4213	July 8, 1940	Charles A. Maguire & Associates, 603 Turks Head Bldg., Providence, R. I.	40
Navy yard dock, Norfolk and Philadelphia.	Construction of shipbuilding docks.	15,421,000	350,000	2.27	NOy-4224	July 9, 1940	Frederic R. Harris, Inc., 27 William St., New York, N. Y.	25
Corpus Christi	Aviation facilities	13,028,000	450,000	3.46	NOy-4233	July 1, 1940	Robert & Co., Inc., Atlanta, Ga	25
Do	Floating docks ARD-2 and ARD-3.		10,000		NOy-4227	July 9, 1940	Frederic R. Harris, Inc., 27 William St., New York, N. Y.	40
Navy yard dock, New York.	General storehouse and office building.		50,000		NOy-4228	June 8, 1940	do	80
New London	Supplemental department annex, repair shop, Diesel laboratory, etc.	640,000	25,600	4.0	NOy-4234	July 9, 1940	E. L. Scholfield & Arthur Deimel, Mercer Bldg., New London, Conn.	30
Charleston	Extension pipe shop	160,000	6,400	4.0	NOy-4249	July 10, 1940	William L. West, Jr., Myrtle Beach, S. C.	25
Naval Air Station, Norfolk.	Aviation shore facilities	3,680,000	120,000	3.25	NOy-4254	July 20, 1940	Giffels & Vallet, Inc., Detroit, Mich	20
Marine Corps Base and Naval Air Station, San Diego.	Post exchange, dispensary, overhaul.	390,000	21,000	5.38	NOy-4255	July 17, 1940	Kistner, Curtis & Wright, 665 Spreckels Bldg., San Diego, Calif.	20
Pensacola	Power plant, engine storage, A. and R. shop, roads, and services.	950,000	28,500	3.0	NOy-4258	July 25, 1940	Wyatt C. Hedrick, Fort Worth, Tex	15
Quantico	Bridge, extension of transport building, overhaul shop, etc.	700,000	32,459	4.5	NOy-4259	July 27, 1940	Francis P. Sullivan, Marshall & Gongwer, and Weschler & Cleary, Washington, D. D.	15
Charleston	Cafeteria building	125,000	5,000	4.0	NOy-4268	July 26, 1940	Simons & Lapham, 7 State St., Charleston, S. C.	15
Balboa and Coco Solo	Additional aviation shore facilities.	5,187,000	[7] 27,500 [8] 125,000	[7] .53 [8] 2.4	NOy-4281	Aug. 8, 1940	Jaros, Baum & Bolles, 415 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.	10
Naval air station, San Diego.	Seaplane hangar	750,000	30,000	4.0	NOy-4285	do	Roberts & Schaefer Co., 307 North Michigan Ave.	20
Pacific-Jack. Alaska-San Juan.	Air bases, distribution systems.	2,000,000	[7] 15,000 [8] 50,000	[7] .75 [8] 2.50	NOy-3560 Supp. 1	Sept. 19, 1939	Albert Kahn, Inc., Detroit, Mich	100
Mare Island and Pearl Harbor.	Graving drydocks (increase in depths).		33,150		NOy-3561 Supp. 1	Jan. 27, 1940	Frederic R. Harris, New York, N. Y.	90
Quonset Point	Additional surveys		3,200		NOy-3764 Supp. 1	Feb. 24, 1940	Charles A. Maguire & Associates, Providence, R. I.	100
Pearl Harbor	Shipfitters' shop, electrical shop, P. and C. shop, etc.	2,200,000	[7] 16,100 [8] 36,000	[7] .75 [8] 1.64	NOy-3560 Supp. 3	June 12, 1940	Albert Kahn, Inc., Detroit, Mich	100
Key West	Topographic and subsurface surveys.		2,500		NOy-3743 Supp. 1	May 22, 1940	Russell T. Pancoast, Miami Beach, Fla.	100
Quonset Point	Additional surveys		2,100		NOy-3764 Supp. 2	June 29, 1940	Charles A. Maguire & Associates, Providence, R. I.	80
Naval Air Depot, Iona Island.	Improvement of power plant	740,000	37,000	5.0	NOy-4216	July 10, 1940	J. G. White Engineering Corporation, 80 Broad St., New York, N. Y.	25
Navy yard dock, Boston, and submarine base, New London.	do	1,325,000	65,000	4.9	NOy-4218	do	Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation, 90 Broad St., New York, N. Y.	25
Navy yard dock, Mare Island.	Extension administration building, steam test plant, electric shop, extension building 382.	850,000	39,382	4.63	NOy-4297	Aug. 13, 1940	Austin W. Earl, 51 Lopez Ave., San Francisco, Calif.	15
Torpedo Station, Newport, R. I.	Administration building and extension to dispensary.	460,000	16,100	3.5	NOy-4307	Aug. 26, 1940	Charles A. Maguire & Associates, Providence, R. I.	10
Do	Torpedo assembly plant	700,000	24,500	3.5	NOy-4308	do	Charles T. Main, Inc., 201 Devonshire St., Boston, Mass.	10
Vallejo, Calif	600 low-cost housing units	2,000,000	32,500	1.62	NOy-4309	Aug. 17, 1940	Albert F. Roller, First National Bank Bldg., San Francisco, Calif.	15

[4] Cost plus 3 percent—salaries. [7] Gross. [8] Supplemental. [9] Net.

The Notification Ceremonies at Elwood, Ind.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY JAY FRANKLIN

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Jay Franklin, published in the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940, under the heading "Willkie ceremony at Elwood held by courtesy of New Deal."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of August 24, 1940]

WE THE PEOPLE—WILLKIE CEREMONY AT ELWOOD HELD BY COURTESY OF NEW DEAL

(By Jay Franklin)

As this column is written there is no reason to feel confident that Wendell L. Willkie may not be the next President of the United States.

Personally, I do not believe that he will be elected next November, but the issue can be decided only at the ballot box and in the minds of the voters, and until that issue is so decided it is my intention to regard him as our second most important public official—the man who, together with or in opposition to Roosevelt, has it in his personal power to determine our national destiny.

All I wish is that he will have the courage to sing bass, face the facts about the New Deal, and drop that tenor aria about candystick philosophy and the perils of big government.

After all, these high notes of opposition to social reform, however desperately needed, chiefly reflect the craven fear of taxes on the part of the upper bracketeers and the desire to treat labor as a commodity on the part of big business. This is not an issue which can be discussed in a vacuum. We face a world revolution as well as a world war, and any nation which depends on such motives is doomed in advance.

W. P. A. IN ELWOOD

Let us take the Willkie ceremonies at Elwood, Ind., on August 17.

That there was anything left of Elwood to stage the acceptance speech is due to the New Deal, to W. P. A., and to the methods of big government. Here I do not refer to the reports that 20 percent of Elwood's population is on W. P. A. or relief. I refer to the physical set-up of the city itself, on which the New Deal government has spent $500,000. The Willkie committee should have printed on its program and literature "By Courtesy of the New Deal" to do an honest job.

The streets, alleys, and sidewalks on which the Willkieites drove and parked their cars or strolled, represent a W. P. A. investment of $311,532, according to the official figures available at Washington. The very park where the acceptance speech was delivered was landscaped by the W. P. A. at a cost of $8,702, and the candystick theory also is responsible for repairing and beautifying and developing many of the other facilities which awaited the visiting Republicans: The armory ($12,841), the school (P. W. A. granted Elwood $43,536 for the purpose of building a new school).

It may be indelicate to mention water-supply and sewage systems in the presence of Republicans, few of whom needed to take baths in Elwood, but W. P. A. looked after that little detail, too, at a cost to Mr. Willkie's taxpayers of $71,730. The pleasant little creek that runs through Elwood was developed and beautified by big government at a cost of $10,651, school and playgrounds, recreation projects ($12,645), sewing projects ($14,784), and so forth, and so on.

KEPT TOWN ALIVE

To sum up, the fact that Elwood had the facilities (and the cash) to stage the Willkie acceptance speech is due to the New Deal.

Otherwise, when the Grand Old Party candidate revisited his boyhood home he might well have found it a ghost town like some of those desolate played-out mining cities which he visited in the high Rockies of Colorado. For big business picked up Elwood, used it, and then moved on, leaving behind a litter of aging houses and stranded people, and when Willkie was old enough to do so, he moved on, too, on the trail of big business and seems only to have remembered Elwood when he discovered that the fifth floor of a Fifth Avenue flat in New York City lacked the facilities for a front-porch campaign.

If, as he says, the story of Elwood is the story of America, the new city hall park ought to contain an inscription: "Used up by big business; restored by big government."

The time has passed when it is safe or honorable for the Republicans to say: "Oh, the W. P. A.—softens our moral fiber, a political racket, wastes public money, America wants jobs, not relief." The time has come for them to admit that the New Deal has saved the American people and that they want more, not less of it.

Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE POLITICAL DIGEST

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial entitled "Goodbye, America!" from the Political Digest, published in New Jersey.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Political Digest for August 1940]

"GOODBYE, AMERICA!"

What's the great rush? Why all the hurly burly? Has the heat got them, or are they just plain scared to death?

We ask these questions about the state of nerves of the owners of our hired Brass Hats. They should sit down in the cool of their expensive Army posts and have the orderlies bring in the high, ice-filled glasses and think about Eskimos and igloos and polar bears.

The compulsory military service bill is an indication of an alarming national fever as plain as a chart hung at the end of the hospital bed of a delirious patient. It marks the triumph of panic, the victory of stampede.

That it should be seriously proposed to throw a million or more of our kids into uniform and barracks before the snow next flies and then "process" them, as "Colonel Twaddle," of the General Staff, who helped write the bill, so strikingly puts it, sends sanity shrieking to the cellar. That the bill should go on with provisions for militarizing 40,000,000 Americans within the next 3 years—well, that's so fantastic that we must have dreamed it. But no. Here it is in black and white, rushed through the committee and now being debated in the Congress.

The boosters for the bill have been yelling, "Wake up America." We say, "Goodbye America."

Good-bye to the America which until yesterday regarded with a lively and justified suspicion the boots and spurs of the military, preferring to trail with Madison when he groaned over an appropriation for army supplies: "This damned Army will be the death of us."

Good-bye to the America of men and women who still knew how to laugh at the absurdity of the military mind with its puerile worship of guns and battleships.

Good-bye to the America which so long served as sanctuary for the best men of Europe coming here to escape the bestialities of regimentation which this hateful measure imposes on all of us.

Good-bye to the America where democracy has at least a fighting chance for survival unringed by the bayonets of its own conscripts.

Good-bye to the ordinary decencies of American life if this sinister measure becomes law.

When you folks say good-bye to that boy who has had the bad luck to be called up in the first draft, say good-bye at the same time to the country you loved. Because once we hand over our youth to the tender mercies of the strutting "processors," the "Colonel Twaddles" and the rest of the bellowing herd of jingoes now running rough-shod over Washington, we are all washed up as far as any such "impractical" matters as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are concerned.

And when you have said good-bye, listen a moment to the sound of distant laughter overseas. It comes from the tight and twisted lips of the dictators rejoicing over their first major triumph over the people of the United States.—McAlister Coleman.

1936 Gallup Presidential Poll

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSH LEE

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

LETTER FROM THE ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a letter containing the Gallup poll of 1936, a week-by-week report. The letter is from the assistant attorney general of Oklahoma, addressed to the State chairman of the Democratic Central Committee of Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FRANCE PARIS,
Chairman, Oklahoma Democratic Central Committee, 30 East Woodrow Place, Tulsa, Okla.

DEAR SIR: The Daily Oklahoman, and probably many other newspapers of the State, have just started running the current weekly Gallup Presidential poll. The August 4, 1940, poll shows 24 States for Roosevelt and 24 States for Willkie, with the electoral vote slightly in favor of Willkie and the popular vote slightly in favor of Roosevelt. In connection therewith reference is being made to the supposed accuracy of the 1936 Gallup Presidential poll and, by comparison, an effort is being made to convince the voters that Willkie is the likely winner this year. This studied propaganda is probably having considerable effect not only on the voters but on the small-town newspaper editors of this State, who are naturally in favor of a humanitarian and a Democrat for President rather than a public-utility corporation lawyer and a Republican. It is to combat this propaganda that the following suggestions are made:

As you know, the Republicans have their convention about 3 weeks to a month earlier than the Democrats, and hence get their campaign started about 3 weeks to a month earlier than the Democrats. This, taken in conjunction with the fact that approximately 80 percent of the metropolitan press and of the newspaper columnists writing in the same are Republican, naturally gives the Republicans a head start. However, during recent campaigns, especially since the radio has been in vogue, the Democratic Party, with its immeasurably better record and campaign speakers, have been able, in the latter part of the campaign, to offset the Republicans' earlier advantage, and thus to win.

With this in mind I examined the 1936 Gallup Presidential poll, as set forth in the Sunday issues of the Daily Oklahoman, and found the same as follows:

1936 Gallup Presidential poll

	States for Landon	States for Roosevelt	Electoral votes for Landon	Electoral votes for Roosevelt
Aug. 9	20	28	276	255
Aug. 16	20	28	276	255
Aug. 23	19	29	257	274
Aug. 30	19	29	257	274
Sept. 6	20	28	275	256
Sept. 13	20	28	275	256
Sept. 20	19	29	239	292
Sept. 27	19	29	239	292
Oct. 4	17	31	225	306
Oct. 11	17	31	225	306
Oct. 18	13	35	141	390
Oct. 25	12	36	141	390
Nov. 1	7	41	42	489
Actual poll	2	46	8	523

You will note that the August 9, 1936, Gallup poll, same being the proper comparative poll with the August 4, 1940, Gallup poll, gave Landon 20 States when he actually got only 2, and also gave Landon 276 electoral votes while he actually got only 8. Therefore, the 1936 Gallup poll gave Landon 10 times too many States and 34 times too many electoral votes. The above table shows that said advantage was held in August 16, 1936, poll, lost temporarily in the August 23 and August 30, 1936, polls and regained in the September 6 and September 13, 1936, polls. It was not until September 20, 1936, that the Gallup poll began to favor Roosevelt. By that time, of course, the Democratic radio and speaking campaign was in full swing and the tide had begun to turn.

It will be noted that the August 9, 1936, Gallup poll gave Landon 18 more States than he actually obtained. Therefore, if the August 4, 1940, Gallup poll is true to form—that is, equally excessive—Willkie will only carry 6 of the 24 States now given him by the Gallup poll. It will also be noted that the August 9, 1936, Gallup poll gave Landon 266 more electoral votes than he actually obtained. If the August 4, 1940, Gallup poll is equally excessive, Willkie will only receive a handful of electoral votes.

The August 2, 1936, Gallup poll stated that 55 percent of the voters throughout the country were of the opinion that President Roosevelt was leading the country into a dictatorship, but in November of the same year the people reelected him by the overwhelming vote of 27,476,673 to 16,679,583. The August 9, 1936, Gallup poll indicated that Landon would receive 59 percent of the vote of the State of Kansas, while Roosevelt would receive only 41 percent, but Roosevelt carried Kansas in November 1936 by 66,793. The August 9, 1936, Gallup poll also indicated that Landon would receive 51 percent of the vote of the State of New York and Roosevelt only 49 percent, but Roosevelt carried the State of New York by a vote of 2,041,347 to 665,951, or by a majority of more than 3 to 1.

The Daily Oklahoman in July, August, and September 1936, gave much space to the fact that many Landon Democratic clubs were being formed in this State and throughout the Nation, to the admitted fact that Landon was not only a man of great personal magnetism and charm but from a neighboring State, and to the fact that Al Smith, Bill Murray, and other so-called Democrats were supporting the Republican nominee. The leaders of said clubs in Oklahoma, as now, were wealthy oil men. However, the November 1936 vote clearly showed that said club members as now, were largely Republicans, who, for the sake of participating in Democratic primaries, had merely registered as Democrats.

It is my thought that a newspaper story, properly setting forth the above data and the comparisons made therein, might be profitably published, as soon as possible, in the Democratic small-town press, and hence I am submitting the same for your consideration.

Yours very truly,

FRED HANSEN,
Care Attorney General's Office.

Acceptance Speech of Hon. Charles L. McNary

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HOMER D. ANGELL

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable CHARLES L. MCNARY, recently selected by the Republican Party as its vice presidential nominee, is the leading citizen in my native State of Oregon. Senator MCNARY is not only beloved in our own State, which he has served so faithfully for many years on our own Supreme Court bench and as our Senator from Oregon, where he has served with great distinction for 23 years, but he has equally endeared himself to all of the people of the West and Middle West. He has been the spokesman through the years for fair treatment for our farmers.

Yesterday he delivered his acceptance speech in our capital city, Salem, and made an outstanding contribution looking toward a solution of our political, economic, and social questions confronting us today. I ask leave to include his acceptance address as a part of my remarks. The address is as follows:

I accept the nomination for Vice President so generously bestowed upon me by the Republican National Convention last June. I endorse the platform and renew my loyalty to the candidate for President, the able, magnetic, and forceful Wendell L. Willkie.

This is no ordinary campaign. The impact of the wars raging beyond both our oceans, together with our urgent concern for the peace of this hemisphere, surround the political decision we are about to make with a heightened gravity. Domestic issues, linked as they are with preparedness and foreign relations, take on enlarged significance in our present mood.

For more than 7 years we have lingered in a backwater, denying our destiny; neglecting our defenses, both spiritual and material. The great energies of America have been hindered—where not actually stifled. Some have lost faith in the future; faith in work, the source of well-being. No party is solely responsible. We of the minority have perhaps failed in vigilance. But the overwhelming responsibility rests upon the party in power. They have the mandate.

This campaign is more than a mere contest between rival political parties. This campaign is a conflict between philosophies—philosophies of government and of action. We must choose in November whether America shall advance again along the path of her historic mission or retreat still further into the fields of futility.

I should be guilty of a narrow partisanship unsuited to the great West were I, however, to condemn the New Deal in its entirety. Candor requires me to credit this administration with certain social gains which have made the lot of the average man more secure—if not more fruitful and satisfying. I, for one, do not choose to relinquish these advances, where they are genuine; nor to detract from the humanitarian impulses actuating the President. In this campaign I shall not seek to indict the New Deal's motives. I shall, with all the force at my command, attack the New Deal's capacity to govern and the political and economic heresies which have deflected us from our courses.

Every administration since Washington has made progress toward fulfilling the American dream. The New Deal is exceptional in that it alone has sought to substitute new states of mind for old; to inculcate reliance on the Government in place of self-reliance and to supplant hope with fear of what lies ahead.

We may forgive the New Deal's incompetence in dealing with economic forces; its inability—or unwillingness—to further the employment of idle capital and idle hands. We might overlook the confusion in theory and practice that have curbed initiative, stalled the engines of production, and multiplied debt. We are still a rich country. What we cannot forgive is that the New Deal, finding itself unable to restore national vitality, fashioned its plan upon the thesis that America is finished, that our economy is inevitably contracting, that opportunity has been extinguished, and that hereafter we must look increasingly to the Government for jobs, for security, and for the oversight of our private lives.

CONCEPT HAS ITS FOUNDATIONS IN EUROPE'S RAMPANT STATISM

That concept, old as human pessimism, germinates now from a Europe which has been transformed—by poverty, political immaturity, and war—into a dismal despotism. That concept is statism—the doctrine of the ascendancy of the state over the individual. I deny its validity in terms of a youthful, vital America. I charge, moreover, that the diffusion of that concept has impaired the national spirit, and if persisted in, might well rob us in time of the will to be free.

What we need in times like these is more democracy not less. In an earlier period of doubt and dismay, Walt Whitman, the good, gray poet of a dynamic America, thus admonished his country:

> "Sail, sail thy best, ship of democracy,
> Of value is thy freight; 'tis not the present only,
> The past is also stored in thee."

The Philadelphia convention, meeting in the birthplace of our liberties, handed us our sailing orders, bidding us look to our vigorous past, reconstruct America and set her anew on her course. I accept those orders in full confidence that we shall triumphantly make port in November.

READING LESSONS IN THE OREGON TRAIL

This occasion is, in a sense, a personal dedication. I make no apology, therefore, for personal references. Lacking only 4 years, I have served my native State of Oregon in the United States Senate for a third of its existence. In that 23 years my record has been open to the view of my countrymen. I have supported progressive measures. I have sought to conserve and employ, for the benefit of all, our heritage of soil, water power, and forest. I stand on that record. Not one uttered word can be expunged, not one vote recalled; nor would I wish it otherwise, considering the light that then guided us.

I should be lacking in sentiment were I not gratified by the presence of the notification committee. Many of them crossed the continent to be with us. I hope they find compensation in the grandeur of our mountains and forests and the enchantment of the Willamette Valley. I hope they may be recompensed also by the opportunity of mingling with this assemblage of free citizens of the old Oregon country—the northwestern empire—which once embraced all of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, and parts of Montana and Wyoming. This is pioneer country still. We here are pioneers and the sons and daughters of pioneers; of the stock that carried American sovereignty from the Mississippi across the magnificent Rocky Mountain region to the Pacific, conquering and subduing this rich domain for the Union.

Some of our visitors, flying here, crossed the old Oregon Trail in the air. Their passage across plains and mountains took only hours, instead of months. Others motored here. They reckoned traveling time in mere days. Accustomed to the ease of modern transport, it is hard to project our imaginations backward a century into the experience of the bearded men and the heroic mothers who rode uncomplainingly in covered wagons over the "iron road" from the Great Bend of the Missouri to the banks of the Willamette, following the valleys of the Kaw, the Platte, the Sweetwater, the Snake, and the lordly Columbia; fording icy streams, withstanding hostile tribes, suffering hunger, thirst, and sickness, aggravated by strange diets and exposure—and leaving thousands of unmarked graves beside the trail.

OREGON COUNTRY'S SETTLEMENT IS PART OF A PROUD EPIC

The settlement of the Oregon country remains one of our proudest epics. At the time of the Yorktown surrender, our frontier rested on the Alleghenies. Sixty years later, the surging genius of our ancestors had pushed our borders to the Pacific. The beginnings of Oregon lay in the imagination of Thomas Jefferson, the apostle of democracy, who served only two terms in the Presidency, frowning upon contemplation of a third term. It was Jefferson who, after purchasing the Louisiana country, sent Lewis and Clark to spy out the land beyond the Rockies. Their journals kindled the interest of colonial America in the far west. The explorer, the fur trapper, and trader broke the trail. Next came the missionary and, close behind, the housekeeper. If we pause, we may read in the old Oregon Trail lessons applicable to the problems besetting us now.

THE PEOPLE MOVE ON TO THE PACIFIC

Most Americans are familiar with the broad outlines of this vast migration. They are not so familiar with the fact that it was a people's movement. The Government at Washington, absorbed in the 1840's by the acquisition of Texas and the gathering clouds of secession, virtually ignored the trend toward the Northwest. In Congress, numerous voices were raised in discouragement. It was said that Oregon lay beyond our proper aspirations as a Nation; that the Rockies should mark the permanent boundary. Senator Thomas H. Benton, the Missouri giant, suggested erecting a statue of the Roman god Terminus on a peak of those mountains as a reminder of our natural limitations.

Fortunately, there were dissenters. The great Calhoun warned the Senate that, in spite of governmental objections, settlers were overrunning the Oregon country and—he suspected—the settlers, once established, would maintain themselves against the world.

No; the Government did not occupy the Oregon country. That job, thank God, was accomplished by the people. Americans had not then been instructed that they must look to Washington for inspiration and sanction for their every act. And when the pioneers found they needed to organize their rude society into lawful patterns, they made no appeal to the Government. They acted. They formed their own government.

LITTLE AMERICANS THEN AND NOW

The place where they met was Champoeg. A proud and happy sentiment encompasses me as I reflect that that hallowed place lies only a little distance from where we now meet. There, free Americans demonstrated the flexibility of the American political system; they proved that institutions forged on the Atlantic served equally as well on the Pacific and that, therefore, the continent could be welded into one Nation. Out of the bold and considered action at Champoeg sprang the assurance which fortified our diplomacy in acquiring title to the old Oregon country from Great Britain.

We can afford to smile at the timidity of the obstructionists who lived a century ago. In their day, they thought America finished. They belonged to the tribe, seemingly numerous in each generation, which holds that the limit has been reached. Little Americans they were; the type that advocated impeaching Jefferson for his purchase and derided Seward for buying Alaska.

In like manner, the little American of 1940 maintains that our race is run. The throb he hears is not the hum of America's dynamos, but the hardening of America's arteries. It is his despondent outlook that deflates the hopes of youth; insists that our industrial plant is overbuilt and that we must look forward only to a slippered senility.

We, of the old Oregon country, reject the hypothesis of the little American. We are optimists. We say that America is not yet half built. The little American dates the decline of American enterprise from the time when the last free land was thrown open for settlement. We hold that the theory of the last frontier is only figurative. Land, if you had to work it, never was free. Men paid for it in sweat and blood and loneliness, if not in dollars.

As long as great rivers run idly to the sea; as long as vast reaches of virgin soil await only life-giving water; as long as well-being is inequitably distributed, then we say that America is not finished. Our job is to work for an integrated self-confident country, ready to undergo the discipline of the pioneer to the end that we may not only survive in a threatened world but distribute our blessings more abundantly. The call is for a disciplined population. I prefer the self-discipline of the pioneer to the imposed discipline of the European autocracies. The pioneer tradition is strong in our blood. All of us, whether our ancestors crossed the Atlantic in the seventeenth century or whether we ourselves came in the twentieth, are pioneers, or the descendants of pioneers. The virtues of work, thrift, and self-denial for the common good are part of our tradition. We have the tools.

FULL USE OF OUR RESOURCES ESSENTIAL TO RECONSTRUCTION

What are some of the specifications for the reconstruction of America? Among the first is the preservation and fuller employment of the natural resources of soil, forest, and water power. Prudence dictates that we, at least, conserve those legacies for this and future generations.

The prosperity of agriculture should be the first charge on the attention of any administration. Not for sentimental reasons, although society owes a real debt to those who, year in, year out, supply it with its first essentials, food and raw materials. No; the reason for our preoccupation with the farm problem is social and economic betterment. The farm stands somewhere near the center of our economy. For 75 years, the farms of America balanced our foreign trade and, through exportable surpluses, provided the foreign exchange that assisted in building our factories, mines, and railroads. The first World War disrupted the profitable trade and, for 20 years, we have struggled with recurring, unmarketable surpluses.

The farm problem is by no means the exclusive worry of the farmer. In a true and realistic sense, the problem is as national as the problem of national defense. Permit me to cite an example: Statisticians find an uncanny correspondence between gross farm income and industrial pay rolls in a given year. When, as in 1929, farm income rose to $12,000,000,000, factory pay rolls also were $12,000,000,000; and when in 1932, farm income dropped to $5,000,000,000, industrial pay rolls fell off similarly.

The New Deal has administered the farm problem for more than 7 years. What is the present state of the American farmer, who, with his dependents, make up a quarter of our population? In the year 1939, his share of the national income was the lowest since statistics have been kept. Moreover, his income during the 7 New Deal, or lean years, has averaged only $7,000,000,000; whereas, during the preceding 7 years, under Republican administrations, it averaged $9,000,000,000.

Bear in mind, if you will, that the New Deal totals include all the benefit payments from the Treasury of the United States—and that the 7 prosperous Republican years include the black year 1932, which marked the depth of the depression. Throughout this New Deal cycle we have been confronted with the related phenomena of depressed farm prices and industrial unemployment. With the farmer producing without profit, the city worker was idle, his consuming power diminished. I have long felt that these phenomena could not be separated; that a sound policy would work toward relieving both of these disorders.

I shall discuss the farm situation in detail later in the campaign. It is a subject near my heart. For 20 years I have sought means and measures to better the lot of the agrarian producer. For the moment, let me say that the Republican platform recommends a hopeful and affirmative farm program. It endorses the principle of parity. It advocates—and this is a departure—incentive payments to farmers willing to experiment with tillage of crops we now import. We stand pledged to continue soil conservation payments, commodity surplus loans; to encourage acquisition of farms by tenants and for research aimed at developing industrial uses for products of the soil. We favor continuing the food-stamp program, which serves the double purpose of assisting the needy and helping the farmer by reducing surplus crops. The platform offers no magic formula. The problem is far too complex for any all-embracing cure. It does constitute a promise that the Republican Party genuinely seeks solutions.

FARM PROBLEM ESSENTIALLY ONE OF REVITALIZING FARM MARKETS

A substantial solution of the farm problem may be resolved into a question of markets. Any rational plan must assign the American market to the American farmer. Beside being far and away the greatest market, it is the only one we may hope to control. The farmer is, at least, entitled to that, and no Treasury benefits can compensate him for its loss. Yet the New Deal, which, in 7 years, has failed to map out a long-range plan for reconstructing the agricultural empire, piles confusion upon confusion by following two contradictory policies at once. With one hand the New Deal pays farmers not to sow and reap; with the other it lowers tariff barriers so that foreign crops undersell our own in our market.

Secretary Wallace, a high-minded and sympathetic Secretary of Agriculture, may not be blamed for this second policy. Any Secretary of Agriculture would be hampered by the reciprocal-trade system, which, in the last 2 years, has admitted competitive farm products to the value of $537,000,000 a year. That sum, it is interesting to note, approximates what the Government has paid farmers to reduce acreage and production. Experts estimate that the 35,000,000 acres withdrawn through Government payments from production correspond closely to the acreage displaced by competitive imports.

I have always opposed reciprocal-trade treaties, as formulated by the New Deal. When I spoke against their renewal last spring in the Senate I charged that the treaties had failed to "dissipate, alleviate, or liquidate the uneconomic conditions" affecting agriculture. I hold to that opinion still. Moreover, as the war spreads the areas of closed trade I gravely fear that the effects on agriculture may grow worse, and we have no assurance that peace will restore foreign markets for our surpluses.

After 7 years we need a realistic reappraisal of the whole problem, and, whichever party assumes the responsibility next January, we should demand and have the formulation of a long-range policy looking to the restoration of our agricultural empire. The farmers do not wish to rely perpetually on subsidies which stop short of economic justice. They wish to reenter the economy as independent producers. They are entitled to the fulfillment of that wish.

For years I have advocated a two-price system; a system enabling us to export without injuring the domestic price level. The McNary-Haugen Act, which looked to that end, was twice vetoed by a President. Although conditions have altered radically since the bill was last rejected, I maintain with undiminished faith that some such formula must still be sought.

Farm recovery may well be part of a greater whole. The recovery of our whole economy hinges to some degrees upon removal of such obstacles to easy commerce as adverse Government policies, restrictive laws, burdensome taxation, and the uncertainties arising from pyramiding debt. The over-all solution may only await the installation of an administration which wholeheartedly wishes again to see the United States a going concern.

I come to a problem that profoundly touches my emotions. We stand today in the heart of the last considerable area of virgin forest left in the United States—the majestic remnants of nearly a billion acres of timber that clothed this country when the first Europeans saw it. I was born within sight of the great trees that characteristically dominate the western scene from the Rockies to the Pacific. In my lifetime I have witnessed the growth of the lumber industry to its present huge proportions and the expansion of the social and recreational value of our forests. It is but natural, therefore, that during my years in the Senate I have made legislation affecting the forests my special province.

Everyone knows that American timber resources are being swiftly depleted. We take assurance for the future, however, from the knowledge that they may, with care and wise governmental policies, be restored. Happily a substantial portion of our forest lands are being managed and utilized in ways that best safeguard social values, provide maximum employment, guarantee future supplies, stabilize streams and soils, and conserve our rich endowments of natural beauty and wildlife.

IMPROVED CREDIT, FAIRER TAXES WOULD HELP FOREST INTERESTS

Yet, much more can be done. The Government equitably could assume half the cost of abating loss from fire, insects, and disease to the desirable point where forests might become insurable risks. Credit facilities are rudimentary and inadequate. Forest taxation too often tends, by laying too heavy an immediate burden, to compel uneconomic exploitation and forced liquidation.

Unproductive areas increasingly should be acquired for public ownership and the exploration and research arms of the Forest Service should be expanded. Deserted villages and abandoned cut-over lands are the price society pays for wasteful nudations of our forest areas. The remedy for this ruthless policy is a Government-encouraged program of perpetuating this natural resource by regulating the volume of the crop that annually can be harvested. This means balancing the budget between the growth and the cut.

Power is the prime requisite of modern industrial existence. A measure of America's industrial magnitude may be found in the fact that one-half the installed horsepower in the world is developed within our borders. Steam power made England the industrial colossus of the nineteenth century; steam plus electrical power has made the United States the industrial giant of the twentieth. Yet America's water-power resources are still largely undeveloped. In the mountainous parts of the Pacific west, where strong rivers run unimpeded to the sea, a major portion of the country's potential hydroelectric power still waits to be harnessed. Fortunately, the principle on which this power may be made available has long been recognized. The Federal Government accepts the obligation to control floods and assure navigation. Out of these services flows the byproduct of power.

WATER POWER COMMON HERITAGE SHOULD BE FEDERALLY CONTROLLED

Unfalteringly the Congress has granted to the public preferential rights to power generated from navigable streams. Such power should be a common heritage. The Government, having made this power available, should have an indisputable right to control its utilization and distribution. Maximum benefits for domestic consumers, farmers, and small users of power should be the yardstick by which we measure the usefulness and serviceability of every Federal development. Moreover, rates should be maintained at the lowest level consistent with sound amortization. Where irreconcilable conflicts arise between public and private interests in the development and distribution of power, private holdings should not be confiscated; and we now have a working precedent for such fair treatment in the recent acquisition by purchase of private companies by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

From the standpoint of the Treasury, the records of the great public power projects at Boulder Canyon on the Colorado and at Bonneville on the Columbia are reassuring. Both are liquidating their commitments to the Government, as, no doubt, the mighty power and reclamation development at the Coulee Dam on the upper reaches of the Columbia likewise will do. The subject of hydroelectric power deserves fuller treatment, which I expect to give it in a later speech.

The resources we have been considering bear pertinently on a subject uppermost in our minds as we look across the Atlantic. I refer to preparedness for defense. The last war disclosed deficits in power and farm and forest products. A shortage of power in certain eastern industrial districts deprived domestic consumers of service. Food deficiencies caused meatless, wheatless days and the plowing up of the short grass prairies in what is now the Dust Bowl.

In common with what I believe to be the overwhelming majority of my countrymen I oppose involvement in foreign military adventures. America, as always, prefers peace. But America does not prefer the peace of appeasement nor the surrender of our national dignity, our independence of action, our political freedom, or the civilized values that we cherish.

The existence of aggressive despots in Europe is not new to our experience. We administered a lesson to George III. Napoleon inconvenienced our commerce. Monroe and John Quincy Adams effectually warned the Holy Alliance to keep its arbitrary hands off this hemisphere; we helped bring Maximilian's imperial adventure in Mexico to an inglorious end.

NO DOCILE PEOPLE, AMERICANS WILL FACE DESTINY ON OWN TERMS

Nor have we failed to exercise our guardianship over countries within the scope of the Monroe Doctrine. Unless I mistake our temper, we are no less firm and positive today. We are not a docile people and we propose to work out our destiny on our terms. In the present world situation, we still have a choice. We shall be strong, in which case we shall deter our enemies at home and abroad; or, we may remain weak and thus invite their aggression. For my part, I prefer the part of strength. That has been the American choice.

In conclusion, may I remind you that the Republican Party this year lifts the standard of hope; a standard to which all men and women of courage and clear-sighted faith in our mighty traditions may repair. Everywhere we hear that our country faces greater perils than at any time since the Republican Party preserved the Union under Abraham Lincoln. In another hour of crisis, the Republican Party, cradled in a great tradition and seasoned in Government, offers to lead America out of doubt, negation, and disunity. Problems change, new dangers arise—yet remain the ancient virtues—self-reliance, faith, hope and courage—which animated and sustained the pioneer in his quest for a greater, ever greater, America.

With your cooperation, we shall renew that quest—setting our country again on the path of high adventure toward her true destiny. With your help, we shall not fail.

Foreign Policy of the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACE'S FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD five editorials from Wallace's Farmer on the foreign policy of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallace's Farmer of March 13, 1937]

PLAN FOR PEACE THROUGH NEUTRALITY

Farmers who want this Nation to do all that is humanly possible to stay out of the next war will be pleased at the progress in the consideration of neutrality legislation. At present it seems likely that the final bill may contain the following provisions:

1. Placing an absolute embargo on loans and sales of munitions and implements of war to nations at war.

2. Permitting the President to declare the cash-and-carry rule in force against both sides whenever it seems likely that shipment in American vessels of other goods to belligerents may involve us in trouble.

3. Barring Americans from traveling on ships owned by warring nations.

Under the cash-and-carry rule, if warring nations had put lard, for instance, on the contraband list, and if the President decided that shipment of lard in American vessels to the warring countries would get us into trouble, he would have the power to declare, not an embargo, but a ruling that American interest in such shipments should cease at the water's edge. In other words, we would dump our lard on the seacoast; and if warring nations wanted the stuff, let them send their own ships for it.

We use lard as an illustration, because it is essential that Corn Belt farmers remember that neutrality will be bought with a price. Effective neutrality will interfere with exports and will hurt farm prices as well as prices of other things.

While we believe it is better to take the small losses of neutrality rather than the huge losses of war, we also are sure that Congress might properly go on to study ways to see that neutrality should not bear too hard on farmers. In case a cash-and-carry policy is declared on farm products, why not provide funds to distribute part of the surplus to the underfed of our country; why not store part of it for sale when the sea lanes are open again; why not give more financial support to substituting soil-conserving crops for crops that injure the soil and produce unneeded surpluses?

Neutrality has its costs as well as war. Let us plan for this and be willing to pay the bills.

[From Wallace's Farmer of July 17, 1937]

WAR-TRADE PROFITS COST TOO MUCH

The war in Spain, a European war on a small scale, is showing signs of turning into a European war on a big scale. And over on the Pacific, Japanese and Russian soldiers are shooting at each other in a boundary dispute.

It looks as if hell was getting ready to break loose again.

If the present fighting does expand to the size of another major war, farmers can expect two things: Higher prices for farm exports and a pressing invitation to join in a "holy" war to keep the world safe for something or other and to maintain wartime prices.

We suggest that this is a fine time to remember what happened to us in 1914. We got war profits; we let those profits drag us into war; and we threw all those profits—and a good many billions more—back into the pit of war.

If another war comes, farmers will be tempted, by the offer of high prices, to demand that the United States Navy clear the way for shipments of cotton, wool, lard, and wheat to blockaded ports abroad. A few months of that and we'll be in the war ourselves up to our necks.

Let's remember that it is better to let farm prices drop, and better to lose profits on wartime trade, than to get mixed up in another World War. Let's stay out and be willing to pay the cost of staying out. It's expensive to be neutral, but it's a lot cheaper than to get into a fight.

[From Wallace's Farmer of September 25, 1937]

HAVE WE LEARNED ANYTHING SINCE 1917?

Twenty years ago the United States was pulled into a world war which cost us $60,000,000,000, killed and injured thousands of our people, damaged our foreign trade, made a few wartime millionaires and impoverished everybody else, and particularly the farmers.

Today, two wars are going on, one in Europe and one in Asia. Either may involve the United States unless we Americans show more sense than we did 20 years ago.

In Europe, Italy and Germany are unofficially lined up with the Spanish insurgents. Russia and—more mildly—France and Great Britain lean toward the Spanish Government. In Asia, China and Japan are fighting, with Russia sympathetic to China.

The two wars are linked together by the three-fold alliance between Italy, Germany, and Japan, and by the less formal alliance between France, Russia, and Great Britain.

In spite of the fact that no great power probably wants a world war, they may stumble into one. A submarine incident in the Mediterranean, another careless bomb dropped in China, may bring on the conflict.

Can the United States stay out?

Everybody says "Yes." But some say "Yes—but."

Among the enemies of neutrality in this country we have the folks who want the United States to punish the aggressors in these wars, to slap the wrists of Japan and Italy. They want us to "make the world safe for democracy" again.

Among the enemies of neutrality are the Americans who went abroad to make 15 percent on their money over there instead of 5 percent at home, and who want the Army and Navy to help collect their profits.

Among the enemies of neutrality are the devotees of "national honor," who want to send 3,000,000 boys to war every time a shell bursts near the Stars and Stripes.

And there are always those who want to make profits out of the war trade. Some of these are farmers.

Can the United States stay neutral, in spite of these influences?

Corn Belt farmers can help decide that question. Let them use their influence to get the National Government to withdraw troops and warships from the war zones, and to get American citizens out, too. Let them refuse to be excited over "insults to national honor," and over "crusades for democracy." Let them decline to risk their boys' blood for war profits for somebody else.

One more thing. We need to wage neutrality as deliberately as we wage war. The United States can properly compensate those businessmen, those shippers, and those farmers who are injured by a policy of neutrality. Let's be willing to pay the costs of neutrality. They are heavy, but nothing to the costs of war.

This year is the anniversary of the entrance of the United States into one world war. Let us not permit it to mark our entrance into another.

We ought to be smarter than we were 20 years ago. But are we?

MEASURE COST OF WAR

The total cost of the World War to the United States would have paid for the following programs (each figure represents $3,000,000,000).

Thirty-year conservation program at $1,000,000,000 a year, $30,000,000,000.

Thirty-year tenancy program at $1,000,000,000 a year, $30,000,000,000.

[From Wallace's Farmer of August 27, 1938]

WE PAY IN BLOOD FOR WAR-TRADE PROFITS

Wars are still going on in Europe and Asia. Some time, perhaps soon, Japan and Russia may abandon the present skirmishing and begin to fight in earnest. Some time, perhaps soon, Germany may attack Czechoslovakia and draw France, Russia, and possibly Great Britain and Italy into another conflict.

If this happens, what will the United States do?

We all want to stay home and keep out of trouble. Yet we wanted the same thing in 1914, and look what happened.

This is a good time to resolve that no loans will be made to warring governments, and that shipments of any kind to nations at war must be handled by foreign ships and paid for before they leave our coast. If our shipping interests object, pay them damages from the Treasury. That's cheaper than sending the Navy and Army across the water in order to let our merchant vessels through.

We can stay neutral in the next world war if we are willing to pay the costs of neutrality. But we can't have our cake and eat it, too. We can't make big profits from war trade and still expect to stay out of trouble.

And that statement applies just as much to wheat and pork producers as to munitions manufacturers.

[From Wallace's Farmer of May 22, 1937]

NEUTRALITY LAW JUST A GOOD START

The neutrality bill recently passed by Congress is a step toward keeping us out of the next war. However, we believe that Congress made a mistake in leaving too much power to the President.

Under the new law, in case war breaks out, shipments of munitions to the warring countries are to be stopped at once. But what about shipments of cotton, wheat, lard, trucks, and other things that are almost as important to warring nations as rifles and ammunition?

What happens to these shipments is up to the President. If he thinks that the transportation of such commodities by American ships will get us into trouble, he can stop our ships from carrying them. He is not to stop the trade entirely. If a foreign ship wants to come to our shores, pay for the goods and carry them back, that is all right.

Remembering that we got into the last war partly because of the stake supporters had in maintaining shipments abroad, these provisions seem helpful. But let's go back and see how the plan would work on cotton, lard, and wheat if war actually came.

Suppose a situation like the late war, with one group of nations led by Germany fighting another group led by Great Britain. Both want our lard and cotton. American ships are loaded heavily with these products. Some try to dodge the British blockade and get to Germany. If the British capture or sink these ships, we begin to dislike the British. If the German submarines sink ships going to Great Britain, we begin to hate the Germans.

Now suppose the President, seeing that these irritations are building up a war spirit, decides to use the powers granted under the law, and declares that American ships cannot carry wheat, lard, or cotton to either side. The trade in such products would not be ended. Some foreign ships would call at our ports and get supplies.

But the President, no matter who he was, would be damned for his action by several powerful groups. American shipowners would moan about the loss of freights. Cotton, hog and wheat farmers would complain because of the drop in prices. Partisans of one side or the other to the conflict would claim that the President's action would help one group of nations more than the other. The foreign nations who thought themselves injured would claim that the action was a breach of neutrality, rather than real neutrality.

It seems to us it would be safer to say flatly that when war breaks out, shipments of any commodity on the contraband list of either set of powers could not be made to these countries by American ships. Then the thing would be done automatically. Everybody would know what to expect. There could be no charge of partiality.

This may be a good place to add that a really effective neutrality measure should also see that special groups are not forced to pay all the costs of keeping the Nation out of war. If, to preserve neutrality, we injure the market for lard or handicap American ships, some way of compensating farmers and ship owners should be worked out.

The present neutrality law makes a good start at keeping the Nation out of trouble. But it can be and it should be greatly improved.

The Eagles' Pledge to America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HINSHAW

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

COMMUNICATION FROM THE GRAND AERIE, FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following communication from the grand aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, signed by the grand worthy president, John A. Abel. It gives me especial pleasure to present this matter to the Members of Congress, as I am a member of Van Nuys District Aerie No. 2310, of Van Nuys, Calif.:

GRAND AERIE, FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES,
Marion, Ohio, August 17, 1940.

Hon. CARL HINSHAW,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HINSHAW: In convention assembled at Chicago, Ill., August 15 to 19, 1940, delegates of over 1,100 subordinate aeries (local lodges) from all sections of the United States, including 22 in the Dominion of Canada, representing nearly 700,000 Eagles unanimously adopted—

(a) The Eagles' pledge to America;

(b) Resolution in relation to those members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles who enter the military service of their country.

In compliance with the specific direction of the convention that a copy of each of the above documents be sent to each Member of Congress, I enclose same herewith.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN A. ABEL,
Grand Worthy President.

THE EAGLES' PLEDGE TO AMERICA

Injustice and hatred have achieved their end. Over there, the fertile fields where grain should be growing are gashed with shell holes and wet with human blood. The soft clouds of midsummer are pierced with the bulletlike speed of death-dealing planes. And the quiet night shudders with the death cries of women and children.

Six of the seven primary powers of the world are at war. More men are under arms today than ever before in the history of the world. To build swift instruments of death, the blessings of science have been prostituted. The bones of boys and men who fell a quarter of a century ago have not dissolved into dust; yet over them, this very day, new bodies, distorted and mangled, rot by the roadside or lie twisted and misshapen upon the battlefield.

Ours is a country dedicated to the belief that men have certain inalienable rights. Among these are "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." To bring this Republic into existence, men and women suffered and died. Today, as never before, America is threatened by forces from beyond the seas and by forces from within.

To foreign armies that would desecrate our shores and to their leaders, we say: "America was built by men and women who crossed the seas to escape political and religious persecution. From the forests and rivers, from fertile valleys and plains, they built a nation dedicated to God and to the finest ideals alive in the soul of man. These ideals we hold more precious than life. Deprived of them, we count life not worth living. To our children, to the next generation, we have promised to hand down this heritage of freedom. No matter what the sacrifice, no matter what the suffering, we will keep the faith. No foreign army shall invade our continent so long as there are men and women in this country who find inspiration in American history and who deserve the privilege of living under the Stars and Stripes."

To those within our midst who would betray our country, who would seek to surrender the keys of America to those that hate our form of government, covet our wealth, and envy us the happiness that, through the grace of God, has found here its abiding place—to these traitors we say: "Take the first ship to the country whose government you serve. Take your crafty minds and Judas hearts to the dictators whose slimy gold supports you. Leave forever a country whose blessed soil is too decent to hold your faithless bodies."

For any of this treacherous group who are caught in acts or crimes harmful to our Government, we demand immediate and condign punishment. We have witnessed the successful invasion of peaceful countries that had been betrayed and weakened beyond hope of adequate defense by the creatures that, in paragraphs bitter with contempt, future historians will characterize as the "fifth column." And having witnessed the deeds of these traitors, we pledge our individual and group strength to the work of exposing their acts, both of omission and of commission, wherever opportunities present themselves to us.

Resolved, to the Governor of our State and to the President of the United States, we pledge, individually, and as a fraternal group that numbers almost three-quarters of a million men and women, our loyalty to the Constitutions of State and Nation. We pledge ourselves to the service of America. And, with the full understanding of what this vow entails, we pledge our willingness to give the priceless gift that men call life so that our children may inherit the blessings of freedom.

We dedicate, in this hour, ourselves and the Fraternal Order of Eagles to the preservation of America and for what it stands among peace-loving peoples of the world. May God and our fellow citizens help us keep this vow.

(Unanimously adopted August 16, 1940, by Annual Convention of Fraternal Order of Eagles.)

RESOLUTION IN RELATION TO THOSE MEMBERS OF THE FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES WHO ENTER THE MILITARY SERVICE OF THEIR COUNTRY

You have just approved a resolution that has the fitting title, The Eagles' Pledge to America. The resolution is timely. It is in keeping with the patriotic ideals of our order. We have again set forth in very definite terms the fraternity's loyalty to our country. Now, we must think of our obligations to those Eagles who have or will become a part of the Military Establishment of the United States and Canada.

We believe that the United States must be made so strong defensively that no power or powers on earth will seriously consider the invasion of the Western Hemisphere. We believe that our defenses must be built as rapidly as our citizens from all walks of life can achieve. We must have an adequate supply of airplanes and tanks and every necessary type of ordnance, from heavy artillery and antiaircraft guns to the most formidable machine guns, rifles, and all firearms between.

But the mechanical equipment of war must be directed and operated by Americans who understand the technique of the weapons they use; and who have had such invaluable hours of training on the ground, in the air lanes, and through the channels of the seas as to insure, in the event of war, ultimate victory.

Among Eagles the term "equality" has always had a special significance. For almost a half century we have obligated new members in the sunlight of this term. The worthy president of every aerie sits at the station dedicated to equality. For most of us the golden years of peace have meant equality of opportunity. But now, when our beloved land is facing the possibilities of a defensive war, we must understand and accept the equality of responsibility.

When the Congress of the United States and our brother, the President of the United States, have agreed upon the best way in which each of us can discharge his responsibility, we Eagles, loyal to the institutions of our country and to the principles of our revered democracy, must stand stalwartly behind this constituted authority.

Let us assure every Eagle in the military service of his country that his problems, his duties, his individual fate, is of concern to each of us. Let us so legislate that an Eagle who wears the uniform of his country shall have his name continued on the roster of his aerie, and that it shall be the duty of the aerie to keep him in good standing while he is in the military service.

His dependents shall have the services of the aerie physician as provided by law in those aeries that furnish such services, and they shall be entitled to such rights and privileges in the aerie home as they would have if he were there. And I recommend that the grand aerie remit the per capita tax on those in military service.

At the beginning of the World War, the Eagles were the first among all organizations to provide for the welfare of its members who were in service. I urge this grand aerie to be the first among the legislative bodies of national fraternities to make known to the world our attitude toward our country and to the members of our order who enter military service.

Resolved, That the Grand Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, approve this statement and that the judiciary committee shall submit sometime during this convention, such recommendations as will give life to what I have read.

Let us increasingly insist that Eagles emphasize not only equality of opportunity in time of peace but equality of responsibility in time of war or possibly war.

(Unanimously adopted August 16, 1940.)

Federal Aid to Education

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK E. HOOK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE NORTHWESTERN LUTHERAN

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Northwestern Lutheran:

[From the Northwestern Lutheran]

The text of bill No. 1305, known as an act for Federal aid to education and the report of the disposition of this bill in the Senate of the United States is not at hand. Senator DAVID I. WALSH, of Massachusetts, a member of the Committee on Education of the Senate, before which bill No. 1305 was being considered, however, went on record in the following comment relative to the proposed legislation: "I do not subscribe to the doctrine that because our public schools and our educational facilities are a vital element in our national welfare, that they thereby become the proper concern and implied responsibility of the National Government. Our schools are one of the few remaining bulwarks of local self-government and community enterprises. They should remain so.

"They have, on the whole, been well managed and generously supported. We have today too much centralization of control over the affairs of our cititzens in a Federal bureaucracy. We should not add to it by this new excursion into the field of education.

"We cannot undertake to subsidize our public schools with the Federal Treasury and still leave the schools free from the taint of Federal control. Federal domination of education will be the ultimate and, in my opinion, the inevitable consequence. The present bill is the opening we have. The camel's nose is under the tent. Let it be remembered that the most potent weapon of dictators and revolutionists is the control of the schools and the education of the youth.

"Let us be on our guard against putting the public schools in our own land under the yoke of a centralized bureaucracy and thereby provide the mechanism for possible abuse in the years to come."

From the remarks of the Senator, we gather that the designation of bill 1305, "An act for Federal aid to education," is in reality a misnomer and perhaps only a guise and camouflage to hide the real purpose of the proposed legislation, the centralization of education in the Federal Government. Senator WALSH warns against such legislation and has urged defeat of bill 1305 or any similar legislation. The alert Senator clearly sees that Federal control of education is an infringement on the rights and responsibilities of local self-government.

We are reminded of our Saviour's words, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." (Luke xvi: 8.) On the basis of Holy Writ as well as the constitutional rights of Christian parents, the education and training of their children is the duty and responsibility of the parents, and the Scriptures emphasize Christian education. "Ye fathers, bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." (Ephesions v: 4.) We have only recently stated in these columns that parents cannot devolve this duty and responsibility upon the state or the church. Yet many Christian parents have yielded their God-given rights to the state by placing their children into the schools of the state, which can only educate and train children for this life and teach patriotism and loyalty to the Government. If an alert Senator warns against the Federal control of our public schools as an infringement on the rights of local self-government, why cannot Christian parents everywhere realize that the Christian training and education of their children is one of the few remaining bulwarks of Christianity against the surge of worldliness which threatens to overwhelm us?

In some instances Christian parents have, of course, no choice. If our congregations refuse to establish and maintain parochial schools to assist parents in the Christian training of their children—and in this light our parochial schools must be viewed, they shall assist the parents in their God-given duties—the parents have little choice and will, in some communities, be obliged to commit their children to the care of the state. Let the congregations everywhere come to the realization of their responsibilities.

The camel's nose is under the tent from our point of view also with reference to the expediency of accrediting our parochial schools. Such accreditation of our schools by the state may appear to be perfectly harmless and, indeed, an advantage. It does, however, yield to the state a prerogative to pass judgment on our Christian schools, our aims and ideals, to exercise supervision, and in a measure to dictate policies. The accreditation of some schools has not, it is true, resulted in the domination of these schools on the part of the state, but is this an argument for accreditation? Let us be on our guard against putting our schools under any yoke which might ultimately mean the forfeiture of Christian parental rights and responsibilities.

Some voices have also been heard advocating the financial support of our parochial schools from public funds. The argument is that our schools are saving the state thousands of dollars annually by educating our own children, and that we are entitled to a refund from the state. The argument, of course, again implies that the state and not the parent has the duty and responsibility to educate our youth. It has been answered.

A. P. V.

Just how secure are our Christian schools? We are not now thinking of the dangers that threaten them from within—the lack of interest and the apathy that our schools meet among the Christians themselves—but we are thinking here of the dangers that threaten the existence of our Christian schools from without.

Our schools have experienced much opposition. Repeated attempts have been made to kill them or make it impossible for them to exist by attempting to enact legislation that would sound the death knell of parochial schools. Granted that much of the antagonism was directed against the Catholic parochial schools, yet in its vice it would have snuffed out the life of our Lutheran day schools also. As early as 1888 legislation of this type was attempted in the city of Boston by the Committee of One Hundred—"inheritors of the faith"—who claimed as their purpose "to preserve our public schools and defend American institutions." This movement produced such legislation as the Edward's attendance bill in Illinois in 1889, the Pond bill, and the Bennet law in Wisconsin in 1889, the New York Compulsory Education Act of 1894, and subsequent legislation in other States.

Of these the famous Bennet law was a typical example. The Wisconsin Governor Hoard instigated the Bennet law when in his message to the State legislature he recommended that the county and State school superintendents be clothed with authority to inspect all schools and insist that only reading and writing in English be tolerated. On this the Pond bill was introduced and after ignominous defeat the Bennet law was enacted before the opposition could draw its breath. This law, however, was repealed by the next legislature under the pressure of a slashing defeat of the party that was responsible for the Bennet law and the election of those men who favored repeal. In the same year Illinois battled with a similar situation when the Edwards law was enacted. In Minnesota they had the Stockwell and Knudsen bills and in South Dakota, New York, and many other States, the same unfriendly spirit toward our schools had to be met. And who could forget the general, Nation-wide, bitter antagonism against our Christian schools during the World War, beginning as early as 1915. It seemed then that the enemy had finally gained the upper hand. The moment was signally propitious to unleash their fury against the parochial schools, especially after America had entered the war. There were the councils of defense—county, State, and National—there was the general cry of "down with the slackers," and "One language for all Americans"—and that was the English language. But our schools survived those trying days and stand as a monument of God's grace today.

If God thinks so much of our Christian schools, ought we not, as a church, make a united and mighty effort to build, enlarge, and preserve them for the millions yet unborn called to inherit eternal salvation that they may see the works of the Lord and His wonders among the children of men? Verily it ought to break down every whit of opposition within the church and arraign everyone who calls himself a Christian on the side of our Christian schools to give to them every ounce of their support and loyalty.—W. J. S.

Good Neighbors at the Expense of American Farmers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HINSHAW

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

LETTERS FROM THE CALIFORNIA WALNUT GROWERS ASSOCIATION AND THE WALNUT CONTROL BOARD

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter from the California Walnut Growers' Asscciation asking that quota restrictions be placed upon the importation from Brazil of Brazil nuts, and a copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture by the walnut-control board:

CALIFORNIA WALNUT GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
Los Angeles, Calif., August 23, 1940.

Hon. CARL HINSHAW,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HINSHAW: May I refer to you for attention the attached copy of a letter sent to the Secretary of Agriculture by the walnut control board which represents 100 percent of the walnut industry of the Pacific coast. This letter gives rather complete data on the situation pertaining to the importation of Brazil nuts.

Briefly, the facts are that England usually imports more than half the Brazil-nut crop, the United States about 40 percent, and other countries 10 percent. Since the war England has embargoed Brazil-nut importations, forcing practically the entire crop on the American market at prices about half those usually prevalent (less than 5 cents per pound dried, delivered duty paid Atlantic and Pacific ports, for large washed Brazils, which is the highest quality).

This price is far less than the low current prices of domestically grown competing nuts such as pecans, filberts, walnuts, and almonds, and on the average less than half the cost of production, grading, and packing of these domestic nuts.

The threatened increased volume of imports of Brazil nuts at these sacrifice prices is certain to demoralize the market for the domestic-nut industries in which over $350,000,000 is invested by American farmers, and this excludes the large peanut industry which will also be adversely affected.

Brazil nuts are highly competitive with all the domestically grown nuts here mentioned.

The American nut industries are not asking our Government to prohibit Brazil-nut importations or to increase the already low duty which was cut in half by our reciprocal-trade treaty with Brazil.

We are simply asking that a quota equal to the average of the last 5 years' importations be invoked under the provisions of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended. These provisions authorize the President to restrict importations, not only when foreign commodities currently affect domestically produced crops adversely but also when such foreign commodities are "practically certain to be imported" in sufficient quantities as to threaten interference with the orderly marketing of the domestic production.

Certainly we have been modest and fair in not requesting an increase in the low duty or of restricting imports below normal.

The industry's application in this matter has been pending since last March, but so far no action has been taken by the authorities, who are apparently attempting to be a good neighbor at the expense of American farmers.

It would be deeply appreciated if you would aggressively wield the big stick with the Secretary of Agriculture. It might help to inform him that Congress does not pass these laws for the benefit of distressed agricultural industries just to have them ignored by our officials, and that immediate action is now demanded in this instance.

Whatever support you can conscientiously give us in this matter will be deeply appreciated.

Sincerely,

C. THORPE, General Manager.

WALNUT CONTROL BOARD,
Los Angeles, Calif., August 22, 1940.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Under date of March 25 the walnut control board submitted an application for investigation and report relative to imports of Brazil nuts, the purpose of which was to invoke action under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, by imposing a quota on the importation of Brazil nuts that would confine the total importation to the average quantities imported during the past few years. The immediate occasion for the application was the fact that large quantities of Brazil nuts, normally shipped to England, which with the United States was the principal consuming market, were being practically embargoed by reason of severe restrictions imposed on their importation into the United Kingdom. It was feared that because of this condition excessive quantities of Brazil nuts would be dumped on the American market as the only outlet, to the great detriment of the growers of other edible nuts produced in the United States. This threat of increased imports of Brazil nuts continues in serious form and we again urge action pursuant to section 22 that will close the door to excessive imports before it is too late.

Of the total quantity of unshelled Brazil nuts exported in recent years, the United Kingdom has taken a large share and the United States has received most of the balance. For the 7-year period ending with 1936, the percentage was United Kingdom 59 percent, United States 30 percent, other countries 11 percent. We are unable to locate these figures for later years, but imports of unshelled Brazil nuts into the United States have not shown any tendency toward substantial increase until the war conditions caused restrictions to be placed on export of Brazil nuts to the United Kingdom.

A table is attached showing imports of Brazil nuts received by the United States during the past 11 years. These figures are on the basis of the year from July 1 to June 30. The 5-year average of unshelled nuts for the years 1929–30 to 1933–34 was 18,510,000 pounds; the average for the succeeding 5 years, 1934–35 to 1938–39, was 18,656,000 pounds. The 10-year average was 18,584,000 pounds. For the year 1939–40, 22,852,000 pounds were imported, this being the largest importation on record except for the year 1935–36.

The importation of shelled Brazil nuts has shown a tendency to increase substantially. The 5-year average for the years 1929–30 to 1933–34 was 5,420,000 pounds; the average for the succeeding 5 years, 1934–35 to 1938–39, was 8,434,000 pounds. The imports for the year 1939–40 were 9,810,000 pounds.

The foregoing figures are on a basis of a year beginning July 1 and ending June 30. Imports during the calendar year, however, are more significant in measuring the competition with domestically produced nuts. Brazil nuts are harvested during the winter months in the jungles of the Amazon Valley and brought down the river and exported from the Amazon River ports. Exports of unshelled nuts begin to be received in the United States in March or April, and from then on they arrive in increasing quantities until November, after which the imports decline. The largest receipts generally come in September and October. Many of these imports as received are placed in bonded warehouses, and imports entered for consumption appear in largest quantities in September and October, just ahead of the marketing of the new walnut crop. Pecans, filberts, and almonds also come on the market about the same time.

Another table attached hereto shows the imports, by months, for the year 1939 and for the year 1940 through June, which is the latest month for which figures are available. It will be noted that in 1939 substantial imports of unshelled nuts began in April and continued to arrive in increasing quantities for May and June. This year there were only a few imports in March, none in April, very few in May, and substantial imports did not arrive until June. This variation from normal is undoubtedly to be explained by the fact that restrictions on imports into the United Kingdom were lifted during March and April. During this period a general license was issued authorizing anyone to import Brazil nuts into the United Kingdom. That license was revoked effective May 1, and since then importation of Brazil nuts into the United Kingdom has been practically prohibited. During the period in which the general license was in effect approximately 9,000,000 pounds of unshelled Brazil nuts were exported to the United Kingdom. It is evident that exporters were concentrating their attention on the British market while permission to enter Brazil nuts into the United Kingdom was available, and exports to the United States did not begin in substantial quantity until the British restriction was reimposed. Something over 2,000,000 pounds were received in the United States in June, these evidently being shipped in May after the British general license was revoked. The American consulate at Para reported under date of May 9, 1940, that approximately 2,240,000 pounds of unshelled Brazil nuts sold to British buyers had not been shipped before the general license was revoked. (See May 31 issue of Food Stuffs, at p. 8.)

For the foregoing reasons, the fact that imports of unshelled Brazil nuts to date have been relatively light is by no means indicative that the danger of excessive quantities of Brazil-nut imports does not exist. The American consulate report above cited indicated that as of May 9 exporters were contemplating the shipment of 30,000,000 pounds of unshelled Brazil nuts into the United States and Canada in 1940. Canada takes relatively small quantities. This would mean, therefore, that the United States is expected to take from 28,000,000 to 30,000,000 pounds in the current year, as compared with the 10-year average of 18,500,000 pounds and the previous record importation of less than 23,500,000 pounds.

Exports of unshelled Brazil nuts for the United States declared, as reported by the American Consulate at Para were 6,000,000 pounds for June and 3,700,000 pounds for July, a total of nearly 10,000,000 pounds for 2 months. This considerably exceeds imports of any 2 months of previous years (actual imports as distinguished from imports entered for consumption). If this increased rate of exports to the United States continues, and there seems to be no reason for believing otherwise as the British market is now completely closed, the total imports into the United States for the current year are almost certain to exceed any previous year and may well equal the estimate of 30,000,000 pounds forecast by the American Consulate report of May 9, above cited.

Shelled Brazil nuts are imported throughout the year, the largest quantities arriving in the fall and early winter months, but substantial quantities are received each month. The British market takes very few of the shelled nuts; most of the exports of shelled Brazil nuts go to the United States. However, the closing of the British market to unshelled nuts is resulting in an increased production of the shelled nuts in Brazil and consequent increase in the importations to the United States. The export of shelled nuts prior to May was unquestionably held down by the fact that the British market was open to imports of Brazil nuts until May 1, as mentioned above. However, for May and June imports of shelled Brazil nuts into the United States had exceeded the corresponding months of last year by more than double. Total imports of shelled Brazils received in May and June 1939 were 1,019,777 pounds, for the same 2 months of 1940 the total was 2,315,568. Exports of shelled nuts declared for June, which will probably arrive in July, are 1,300,000 pounds and exports declared for July are 1,700,000, a total of 3,000,000 for these 2 months. For the months of July and August 1939, imports actually received were only 1,563,827 pounds, approximately half of what the declared exports indicate will be received in these 2 months of 1940. The total shelled Brazil nuts received for the first 6 months of 1940, together with the declared exports for June and July, amount to 6,815,000 pounds. If the present rate of increase over the previous year's imports is maintained, and there seems every reason to believe it will be, the total imports of shelled Brazils for the calendar year 1940 will be 15,000,000 pounds. This will be more than 5,000,000 pounds in excess of the total imports of shelled Brazil nuts received in the calendar year 1939. This is an increase of more than 50 percent over the preceding year. The average of the 5 years preceding June 30, 1939, was 8,434,000 pounds. The anticipated imports for the current calendar year exceeds this average by more than 6,500,000 pounds, an increase of over 75 percent.

Huge surpluses already exist in the domestic production of walnuts, peanuts, and pecans. Programs for alleviation of these burdensome surpluses have been in effect almost continuously for each of these three nuts during the past 7 years, and there is every reason to believe that the production of these nuts will continue to be substantially in excess of the consuming capacity of the American market. Almonds and filberts have also been increasing in production in recent years and are meeting with surplus problems. With these large surpluses of domestically produced nuts, the American market cannot absorb an additional 5,000,000 pounds of unshelled Brazil nuts and an additional 5,000,000 pounds of shelled Brazil nuts, increases of 25 and 75 percent, respectively, over the importations to which the market has been accustomed in recent years, without greatly adding to the distress of producers of American nuts and particularly walnuts, peanuts, pecans, filberts, and almonds.

With the closing of the British market to Brazil nuts, prices of brazils dropped drastically and purchases have been made at the lowest figures for the past several years. Prices at the Brazil ports have gone as low as 1¼ cents per pound and most of the nuts purchased for export to the United States have been bought within a range of 1¼ to 2 cents per pound. While present prices at the Brazilian ports have firmed upward slightly, most of the purchases of nuts that will be imported during the current calendar year have already been made. The transportation rate from Para, Brazil, the principal port of export, to New York, is $1.10 per 100 pounds—out of which a rebate of 20 cents per 100 pounds is made to an advertising fund to promote distribution of Brazil nuts in the United States. There is some shrinkage in transit, estimated at 15 percent. Cost of warehousing and handling, however, are slight, and the import duty is only ¾ cent per pound. These prices in costs permit importers of Brazil nuts to bring them in, duty paid, at a total cost of less than 5 cents per pound, which is about half the normal landed cost.

With these exceedingly low costs and the enormous increases in importations that may reasonably be anticipated, the effect upon the price structure for domestically produced nuts when the new crops are marketed during the fall and winter months, will be exceedingly serious.

Prices of all domestically produced nuts have been considerably below parity for the past 7 years or more. Walnuts, since 1933 have averaged less than 60 percent of parity.

If these increased imports materialize as threatened, they will arrive certainly in the fall months. After they begin to arrive, there will be insufficient time within which to take action to protect the domestic nut growers. The amendment of January 25, 1940, to section 22 was designed to take care of a situation of this character. That amendment provides that when foreign shipments are practically certain to be imported in sufficient quantities to threaten interference with the orderly marketing of the domestic production, executive action may be taken to limit the quantity of imports. We are asking only for a limitation equal to the average quantity of the past few years; we are not seeking any limitation that will reduce the quantity of Brazil nuts which the American market has been accustomed to absorb in recent years. Our request is prompted largely by the conditions resulting from the war which have caused the closing of the British market to Brazil nuts and as that was the principal market other than the United States, the exports that would normally go to the United Kingdom are practically certain to be diverted to the United States.

For the foregoing reasons it is respectfully urged that your office take immediate action to bring about the establishment of a quota on both shelled and unshelled Brazil nuts which will limit their importation to an amount not exceeding the average imports of the past few years. This application was first formally presented on March 25, 1940, and has been pending in the Department of Agriculture since that date. The statute requires an investigation and report by the Tariff Commission before executive action can be taken. Such an investigation will not be instituted by the Tariff Commission without recommendation therefor by the Department of Agriculture through the President. This required procedure all takes considerable time. Therefore, if the nut growers of this country are to receive, in time to be of any value, the protection to which they are clearly entitled under the provision of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Agricultural Marketing Agreements Act of 1937, the necessary action to cause the institution of an investigation by the Tariff Commission must be taken at an early date.

Respectfully submitted.

WALNUT CONTROL BOARD,
W. E. GOODSPEED, Secretary.

Brazil nuts—imports

(By years, July/June basis)

July/June	Shelled	Unshelled
	Pounds	Pounds
1929–30	4,090,000	19,080,000
1930–31	3,174,000	22,730,000
1931–32	7,518,000	16,486,000
1932–33	5,296,000	17,462,000
1933–34	7,020,000	16,794,000
5-year average	5,420,000	18,510,000
1934–35	7,994,000	16,920,000
1935–36	10,150,000	23,386,000
1936–37	8,736,000	19,690,000
1937–38	6,526,000	12,698,000
1938–39	8,760,000	20,586,000
5-year average	8,434,000	18,656,000
10-year average	7,926,000	18,584,000
1939–40	9,810,000	22,852,000

	For consumption		Actual imports
	Shelled	Unshelled	Shelled	Unshelled
1939:
January	1,036,266		937,794
February	653,538		545,694
March	507,870	42,000	420,761
April	478,370	2,050	500,019	1,241,470
May	405,604	148,000	391,721	2,273,670
June	415,711	265,920	628,056	4,508,340
6 months	3,497,359	457,970	3,424,045	8,023,480
July	461,340	541,473	634,952	3,336,470
August	607,035	920,437	928,875	2,566,429
September	1,228,984	6,234,696	638,889	3,512,593
October	1,492,916	11,108,273	1,411,184	4,958,892
November	1,337,480	2,652,733	1,303,989	1,243,955
December	1,026,210	932,921	959,217	366,600
Year	9,651,324	22,848,503	9,301,151	24,008,419
1940:
January	696,785		781,230
February	243,163	280,360	137,478
March	237,088	5,230	123,898	109,400
April	529,494	22,000	457,092
May	907,114	1,320	1,066,451	164,600
June	982,494	152,500	1,219,117	2,171,500
6 months	3,656,138	461,410	3,815,266	2,445,500

Source: Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce Statistics.

NEW YORK, June 6, 1940.

SUNSET NUT SHELLING CO.,
San Francisco, Calif.

GENTLEMEN: We offer for account of our principals in Brazil, subject to confirmation:

Brazil nuts in the shell: Jarys, at 2¾ cents per pound; large, washed Manaos, at 3 cents per pound; in bulk, cost and freight, Pacific coast ports for August shipment.

Shelled Brazil nuts: Mediums and midgets, at 10¾ cents per pound; chipped and pieces, at 9¾ cents per pound; cost and freight, Pacific coast ports, August to December shipment.

Trusting to be favored with your order, we remain,

Yours very truly,

A. E. RITTWAGEN.
F. V. RITTWAGEN.

The Bank of England and the Welfare of the British Nation

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF JERRY VOORHIS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE LOS ANGELES TIMES OF AUGUST 25, 1940

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the following article, appearing in the Los Angeles Times for August 25, is too significant to require comment by me, except to say that the criticisms of the power of the Bank of England and of the debt-money system generally are exactly as true of our own privately owned Federal Reserve banks and our own debt-money system. It is impossible to exaggerate how very much it would mean to the United States if we corrected these things now instead of waiting until a real emergency overtakes us.

[From the Los Angeles Times of August 25, 1940]

INFLATION FEAR RISES IN LONDON—MOUNTING WAR COST SHOWS BUDGET TOO LOW; FINANCING METHODS HIT

LONDON, August 24.—Conclusive evidence of the expansion of the British war effort since the advent of the Winston Churchill government in May and Fuehrer Adolf Hitler's invasion of the Low Countries is provided by the national exchequer returns in recent months.

A comparison of recent monthly averages of the war expenditure with those of the early period of the war reveals some striking facts. War costs under the administration of former Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain were less than £50,000,000 weekly (about $200,000,000). A month after the Churchill ministry took over, the weekly war expenditure was stepped up to £60,100,000 (about $240,000,000), and in July reached £64,300,000 (about $257,200,000). The average for August to date, according to treasury figures, exceeds £70,000,000 weekly (about $280,000,000).

BUDGET OUTMODED

As a consequence of the sharp expansion in war spending Chancelor of the Exchequer Sir Kingsley Wood's budget, introduced less than a month ago, already is outmoded. According to financial critics, he repeated the error of his predecessor, Sir John Simon, in underestimating the financial effort needed for the war. If the war expenditure continues to average around £70,000,000 weekly until the end of the budget year, Wood's estimate of £3,467,000,000 (about $13,868,000,000) for the entire fiscal year will be exceeded by more than £100,000,000 (about $400,000,000), it is estimated.

The growing menace of inflation revised demands in financial quarters this week for another budget before the end of the fiscal year to bridge the gap between expenditures and revenues.

DEMAND FOR REVISION

The latest treasury statement shows Britain now has an excess of outlay over revenue of £843,617,000 (about $3,374,468,000), equivalent to a weekly deficit of £42,000,000 (about $168,000,000) for the 20 weeks since March 31.

The fact that the Government is resorting in a certain measure to inflationary finance to cover its huge deficit has given rise also to demands in Parliament for nationalization of banks and revision of the Bank of England charter.

Arguments stressing the "evil effects" of permitting a private concern to control Britain's finances, thus influencing both trading and production and even the foreign policy of this country, was developed in detail in the latest issue of the Weekly Review.

COMPLAINT MADE

This journal, basing its main article on a speech delivered in the House of Commons by P. C. Loftus, Conservative Party member of Parliament, during a debate on Kingsley Wood's supplementary budget, contended that ever since the capitulation of William III to the city money lenders the world has been increasingly financed with money issued by banks. This debt money, the writer explains, means the right to draw checks on a bank up to an agreed sum in return for securities up to the whole of this amount and additionally fixed annual payment of interest until the loan is redeemed.

"This interest," the Journal states, "is utterly disproportionate to the services done by the bank since the only expenses incurred by the latter are those of bookkeeping and administration."

POWER OVER COMMERCE

After pointing out the dangers of arming banks with selective power over commerce and production, the Journal charges the Bank of England was "the chief agent in financing the Prussian war machine, thus arming Germany against us."

It summarized a condemnation of the present system under four heads, as follows: (1) Irresponsibility of the agency by which debt money is created; (2) unjust distribution of such money; (3) the cramping effects of the gross overcharge of interest, and (4) the ultimate impossibility of finding means from the outside of continuing to pay tribute on loans that are unproductive or insufficiently productive of real wealth.

The transfer of the power of creating money from the banks to the Government, the article admits, would not necessarily cure the present evils but it would open the way to criticism being leveled against a responsible department and safeguard the country's foreign policy from men whose "knowledge of foreign affairs does not extend beyond an estimate of any nation's ability to pay."

CRITICISM IGNORED

The writer attaches significance to the fact that Government spokesmen in the House of Commons debate and the press generally ignored Loftus' criticisms. But he suggests that despite this a high-powered campaign in Parliament and elsewhere to induce the Government to curtail the Bank of England's privileges is under way, and he even traces the support for the changes advocated by Loftus to comments published by the authoritative and conservative London Times.

Draft Bill Opposed by Illinois Legion

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAMILTON FISH
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

ASSOCIATED PRESS DISPATCH

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Associated Press dispatch, which was printed in today's issue of the Washington Evening Star:

DRAFT BILL OPPOSED BY ILLINOIS LEGION

(By the Associated Press)

DANVILLE, ILL., August 27.—A resolution approving current plans for the Nation's defense, including a two-ocean Navy and an adequate Army and air force, was adopted by the American Legion of Illinois today, but the delegates to the annual State convention rejected an amendment endorsing the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill.

The amendment favoring the Burke-Wadsworth measure was voted down in a chorus of "noes."

Nazi-ism, Fascism, Communism, and Imperialism Are Foreign to Americanism

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEWIS D. THILL
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 21, 1940

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, the American way of life is not compatible with nazi-ism, fascism, communism, and imperialism. We fought British imperialism in the Revolutionary War. Our forefathers declared then that this was a land of liberty where freedom of speech, of the press, and of religion would be guaranteed. We see in Nazi Germany a denial of the freedom we Americans cherish. So, too, in Fascist Italy and Communist Russia are the people enslaved by their Governments. I have on many occasions declared my opposition to nazi-ism, fascism, communism, and imperialism, and I do so now, because these forms of government are inimical to the spirit of free men and are foreign to our ideals and our mode of living.

So long as this Nation is not all-powerful, so long as we are not in a position to direct and control the affairs of the world, it is the better part of wisdom to "tend to our own knitting" and remedy conditions here at home, rather than to take part in wars throughout the world. We should prepare our own defenses so no aggressor or combination of aggressors dare attack us. If we develop a strong air force, an efficient mechanized army, and a powerful navy we need not fear attacks from overseas. We must set our own house in order by ferreting out "fifth columnists" and saboteurs who would wreck our country to further their diabolical schemes. If as Americans we do all in our power to promote our own welfare we shall preserve for posterity our heritage of liberty.

Shotgun Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLARE E. HOFFMAN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, from a political independent publication, the Saturday Evening Post of August 31, 1940, comes the following editorial containing information which everyone should have:

Unity for the national defense is not the problem. Rarely if ever before in our history have people in that way been more united. On only the word of the President that the sums were needed, the Congress has made haste to write blank checks running now to ten billions; and the only serious criticism has been that the administration was not eager enough at the same time to lay on the taxes. Never for a moment was it necessary to sell an adequate defense program to the country; on the contrary, the country has demanded it and is willing to pay whatever it must cost.

Well, then, seeing that we have the money, the material resources, and the skill to prepare a power of defense equal to any power of aggression, and that we are united about it, what is the problem and why are there so many misgivings still?

The answer is implicit in the record; and it is the record we now offer, beginning not far back, nor touching in any way the controversy as to why we were unprepared, but only what has happened since terror of the "blitzkrieg" entered the American marrow.

May 16, 1940: Holland is conquered, Belgium is about to surrender, the doom of France is already felt, and the President reads his first extraordinary defense message to Congress. Events, he says, have made it necessary to reexamine our ideas of defense. For purposes of bombing, New England is only 6 hours from Greenland, Florida only 200 minutes from a base in the West Indies, or, if the aggressor were coming up from South America, there would be St. Louis, Kansas City, and Omaha only 2¼ hours from Tampico. Therefore he asks Congress for an addition of $1,182,000,000 to the Regular Army and Navy appropriations, half of this for the Army, a quarter of it for the Navy, and the rest for various works of industrial preparedness. He speaks of hemisphere defense and of 50,000 planes a year.

May 17 to May 21: Reactions to the President's message. Unless he has exaggerated the picture of danger, the extraordinary appropriation he asks for is a trifling sum, hardly more than the annual W. P. A. bill. His 50,000 planes alone would cost at least 5 times, maybe 10 times, that amount.

May 22: At a White House press conference the President says the labor laws shall not be relaxed for sake of the national defense, nor shall any of the New Deal's social gains be sacrificed.

May 25: Private Secretary Early issues a White House statement, saying the President is very anxious to avoid upsetting the American life.

May 26: The President delivers a fireside chat on the national defense. It is generally reassuring. Our defenses are not as weak as some people say they are; and, in any case, the Republican Party would be to blame if they were. His administration received from the Republican Party a shrunken Navy and a rundown Army. However, both have been very much strengthened. There is nothing in the present emergency, he says, "to justify a retreat from any of our social objectives * * * to justify making the workers of our Nation toil for longer hours."

May 28: At a White House press conference the President says there is no reason for the country to become "discomboomerated." Women will not have to give up their cosmetics or lipstick. "The whole idea was that the present troubled state of international affairs called for an outlay of about a billion and a quarter dollars over and above the two billion that was already being spent on the Naval and Military Establishments." (New York Times report.)

May 31: The President goes to Congress with his second extraordinary defense message. He asks that another billion be voted, part of it to be spent on a training program—training for the youth and training of skilled workmen for the national defense.

June 1: The Chief of Staff of the United States Army favors giving the President power to call out the National Guard, and it is understood that the War Department will ask Congress to authorize an increase of the Regular Army from 280,000 to 435,000 men.

June 4: The defense program is presumably complete. At a White House press conference the President says he sees no reason why Congress should continue to sit. "Sarcastically, he said the situation did not require Congress to remain in session, except for the laudable goal of delivering speeches." (New York Herald Tribune report.)

June 5 to June 15: Very wide popular protest against sending Congress home. Administration leaders in Congress are unable to put the idea of adjournment over.

June 22: The House of Representatives votes a two-ocean navy. It will cost four billions and take 6 years to build.

June 28: At a White House press conference the President indicates that he will be asking the Congress that wouldn't go home to vote three billions more for extraordinary defense.

July 4: The news from Washington is that the President is about to propose a supplemental defense program that will cost five billions more.

July 10: The President goes with his third extraordinary defense message to the Congress that would not adjourn. In this message he calls for "total defense." He says, "This Nation through sacrifice and work and unity proposes to remain free. * * * I believe that the people are willing to make any sacrifice." He asks for nearly five billion more, toward a two-ocean Navy, for an army of 1,200,000 men, and to provide equipment and facilities for an army of 2,000,000. Also, he endorses the idea of universal conscription.

We submit that no thoughtful person can examine this record without a sense of deep misgiving. It is too evident that the problem of extraordinary national defense has been attacked as the unemployment problem was, in a Harry Hopkins manner. First, vote a billion. Two billions. Hellzafire, let's lick this thing right. Two billions? Make it five and then we can do something.

What follows is very exciting and makes big headlines. The Army has never had as much money as it wanted. Now, suddenly, it is rich and can do everything it has ever wanted to do. Its goal is soaring. It goes from a streamlined army of 280,000 men to one of 435,000, and then to one of 2,000,000, for which conscription will be necessary. The Navy is in the same happy situation, all at once rich, with billions on the way. So now a two-ocean navy. That is sound and right. We should have had it long ago, at any cost. But it will take 6 years to build it. Therefore, it cannot be considered in relation to an emergency.

Is this an emergency or isn't it? If it is, and time is vital, a rational defense program would be sure to get the first things first. What are the first things? You cannot say what they are until you decide what you are going to defend and where the line is. No such decision has been made. We talk of hemisphere defense. We are in fact committed to it. But to make it good we should need many naval and air bases in Latin America. It would take years to get them by diplomatic persuasion and there is apparently no thought of taking them, by or without leave. What then?

An army of 2,000,000 men is not a very great army for a country of this size. But what are we going to do with it? Are we going to let the aggressor come ashore?

Suppose we should say that our first line of defense was one running from the tip of Greenland down our eastern coast, around the West Indies, through the Panama Canal Zone, around the Hawaiian Islands, and to Alaska. In one-third of the time it would take to build a two-ocean navy we could be so prepared to defend that line with the talons of an air force and the barracuda teeth of thousands of small torpedo motorboats that no aggressor from overseas could touch us. But who is to say that is the line? Or, let it be any other line, who shall say, "There it is, and now what shall we do to defend it?"

There is no line. There is no unified defense ministry. The President himself decides everything. It is apparent how his ideas evolve. They evolved from the abortive size of a little more than 1 billion for extraordinary defense, no "discomboomeration," and Congress go home, in May, to the magnitude of 10 billions, conscription and national sacrifice, in July. And still no line.

There is a National Advisory Defense Commission. It says the defense program is going well. Mr. Stettinius says it is. Mr. Knudsen says it is. But Mr. Stettinius is talking about raw materials and Mr. Knudsen is talking about the capacity of industry to produce what the Government calls for. They have nothing to do with the defense program until it is brought to them; their only responsibility is to translate it.

The truth is that there does not exist an intelligible defense policy. No such policy could exist or be conceived, until there was, first, a clear and hard foreign policy, and underlying that a positive economic policy.

What we are preparing, therefore, is a kind of shotgun defense. That means just to do everything we can think of, so that whatever happens, give us time up to 6 years, we shall somehow be able to meet it. We shall probably waste billions on it. That is not the point. What we know is that the aggressor power against which we prepare has not that blunderbuss character.

It is but a soothsaying that parliamentary government must be inefficient. The President has been bringing that up. Dictatorship, he keeps saying, has the advantage of being able to move swiftly; what he calls the time lag is inherent in the democratic system.

But we have a record. During our exertions in World War I, by much trial and error, we arrived at a state of efficiency that was the marvel of the world. We saved that pattern. It is written in the textbooks of the War College. Efficiency, we command it. Efficiency, however, is the means to an end given. The trouble now is that we have no definite plan. And that is the fault of leadership.

If the foregoing statements are true, and of that be your own judge, then arises the question: If we as a Nation are riding a horse which is attempting to carry us across the seas into a foreign war, is it not time to change that horse for one whose paramount interest is at home?

A show-ring horse; one that can prance, has style; that can singlefoot, foxtrot, pace, gallop, and run; that is pleasing to the eye; may be all right at a horse show but if he has demonstrated that he is always breaking the harness, upsetting the cart carrying the load, when time of stress comes it is time to change to the sound, solid, reliable workhorse that has demonstrated his ability to haul the load over the roughest going.

Peacetime Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LEE E. GEYER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I have voted for every defense measure. I have always believed in strong national defense. Certainly, this Nation must have an army, a navy, and an air force so formidable that any aggressor will not dare to attack us. I do not believe that adopting a system of compulsory military service in peacetime is either necessary or desirable.

I have listened attentively to many of the arguments advanced by those favoring conscription. I have heard it said that the voluntary system of enlistment has failed. I have heard it said that compulsory military service is more democratic than the voluntary system of recruiting. I have heard it said that since we appropriated the money for guns and equipment it would be criminal waste not to provide the Nation with enough manpower to use those weapons. Finally I have heard advocates of conscription extol the character-building effects army discipline will have upon our young men.

I have listened to these arguments, but I have not been convinced, because I have found that they do not jibe with the facts. In the first place, the evidence shows that voluntry enlistment has not failed. In his testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, General Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, said:

> In June we went ahead with enlisting the force without all the funds necessary, and had to be cautious until the appropriations bill was actually signed; but I think we secured 18,000 men in June. Our quota, which we assigned ourselves, was about 15,000 by the end of the month, and we reached 15,000 10 days before the end of the month. In other words, recruiting went ahead in good shape.

And now I quote the testimony of Rear Admiral Nimitz in regard to naval enlistments.

> We have today about 7,000 men on the waiting list waiting to go into training stations; about 2,500 of those are men whose papers have all been completed and they are just waiting the order to report.

Finally, I quote from ex-Secretary of War Woodring, a man who, above all others, should know whether the voluntary system of enlistment has failed:

> How any fair-minded Member of Congress could say that we have given the voluntary system of enlistment for the United States Army fair trial, and that it has broken down, and therefore we need compulsory military service, is beyond my understanding.

So much for the failure of voluntary enlistment. But what about that other claim by those favoring conscription, that compulsory military service is more democratic than the voluntary system of recruiting? If compulsion is the democratic way, why then do we not choose our carpenters by draft, or our lawyers, or our teachers, or even our Congressmen? Why do we not choose our unemployed by draft if the draft is the way of democracy? Why do we not have draft labor camps? Why do we not draft men and women for marriage if that is the way of democracy? Why do we not have compulsion in every phase of American life if the principle of conscription is democratic? Or do I hear voices saying that that would be regimentation, that that would be totalitarianism, that that would be Hitlerism? One thing is certain, it would not be democracy.

And now what of the argument advanced that since we have appropriated billions for arms and equipment, it would be a wasteful expenditure not to provide sufficient manpower to use those materials. Before the Senate Finance Committee on August 9, Mr. Knudsen, adviser on industrial production in connection with the defense program, stated that it would be 1942 before there would be available complete equipment for an army of 750,000 men.

In the Washington News of August 9, 1940, Secretary of War Stimson is reported as telling Congress that the War Department has been able to sign contracts for only 33 planes out of more than 4,000 provided for in the multibillion dollar defense program.

From a news item in the Washington Times-Herald for August 9, 1940, we learn of the training activities of the Two Hundred and Sixtieth Coast Artillery Regiment of the Washington National Guard and New York's Two Hundred and Twelfth Coast Artillery Regiment.

> Enemy aircraft, meanwhile theoretically wiped out the Two Hundred and Sixtieth Regiment because the unit was without ammunition. Afternoon maneuvers yesterday calling for fire with the unit's nine .50 caliber machine guns were called off because the 18,000 rounds of ammunition "on order" had failed to arrive.
>
> New York's Two Hundred and Twelfth Coast Artillery Regiment offered to lend the District guardsmen some shells so their guns would be placed in action, but this did not help because the New Yorkers could not spare the metallic links used in feeding the ammunition to the guns.
>
> The New Yorkers were having their troubles too. They had been supplied with old World War ammunition. Some of the shells were so badly cracked they were highly dangerous to handle and officers said they feared they would burst before they left the guns. Some of the shells would not even fit the guns.
>
> When the shells did fire they burst several thousand feet below their targets. Officers were bitter over the lack of equipment and the unsuitability of that which they had. A War Department investigation of the failure of ammunition to arrive on time is expected.

From this evidence and news-reel pictures showing our guardsmen using dummy wooden guns and stovepipe cannon, because they have no other weapons, it is apparent that there is not sufficient arms and equipment available even for the country's National Guard units, and yet there is talk of conscripting 2,000,000 men because we do not want to have arms and equipment lying idle. Well, do we want millions of recruits with no guns to man? Do we want millions of conscripts without proper hospital facilities? Without proper housing? Without sufficient shoes?

With the equipment ready for only 750,000 men by 1942, and our Regular Army and National Guard together totaling over 550,000, the cry that we must conscript men is in direct opposition to the facts. When more men are needed for the Army the voluntary system of recruiting will feed them into the service as rapidly as they can be efficiently handled, particularly if we make voluntary enlistment more attractive by shortening the term of enlistment to 1 year and raise Army pay until it is at least on a parity with the $30 paid to enrollees in the C. C. C.

Now let us examine the argument by the proponents of conscription that army life will be invaluable in the character-building of our youth. To assume that character can only be built by the drill sergeant is to assume that the American mothers and the American fathers have failed in their responsibilities. It assumes too that the great American system of education has failed and that we are to repudiate the training methods of all the country's great educators who have spent years learning their profession.

What type of education is it that the Army offers as a substitute? Perhaps this statement of Capt. Marshall R. Diggs before the Senate Military Affairs Committee is an indication.

If we begin with the young men, there can be developed and encouraged the warrior temperament and disposition. This should be a first objective. It is rather a cold-blooded thing, without hate or fear, but with a desire to kill the enemy that is attempting to land on our soil, and to take his property, if he has any, with him in this country.

In conclusion, let me say again that I have always stood for a strong national defense, but in this Burke-Wadsworth bill, I see not only the attack on our first line of defense, the American way of living which abhors the thought of compulsion, but I also find that the bill has no relation to a proper defense program. Not only do we not have the equipment ready to train an army of 2,000,000 conscripts, but there is a question in the minds of many of us as to the advisability of such an unwieldly force.

The invasion of France showed us clearly that large numbers of conscripts were not the answer to an invader, but rather the emphasis should have been on small highly trained mechanized units besides a strong air force. In this time of crisis to break the training of our professional Army in the art of mechanized warfare by burdening them with the job of training raw recruits in the arts of drill seems to me to be a measure designed to weaken rather than strengthen our armed forces.

The Tax Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KNUTE HILL

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

STATEMENT BY EIGHT MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement with regard to the tax bill:

STATEMENT ON TAX BILL

We propose to do everything in our power to make the excess-profits tax bill a measure which will express the principle that the national-defense effort should not be used as an opportunity for enrichment by anybody.

We stand for and will attempt to have included in the bill a stiff rate in the upper brackets of excess profits. We do not believe 40 percent is enough.

We believe there should be an effective limit to the amount of excess-profits tax credit that can be claimed and will seek to amend the bill in this respect also, unless such a provision is included.

We shall not oppose the repeal of profit-limitation provisions of the Vinson-Trammell Act, we are ready to vote for reasonable amortization allowances to protect corporations which use their own money to construct additional plant, we are ready for the sake of speed to see the requirement for competitive bidding suspended. But after the whole manufacturing transaction has been completed, the goods delivered and paid for, and the profit realized then we believe no reasonable person can object to a tax program which will be in accord with the needs of this hour.

We further believe that now is the time when the Bone bill to tax the profit out of war should be brought before Congress. That bill, which would not become operative at all if we remain at peace but would really equalize sacrifice if we should be forced into war, was introduced 2 years ago into the Senate and House, 52 Senators and 7 Members of the House being joint authors.

Congress will be blind to its duty and to the actualities of these days and to the welfare of this country if Congress thinks, or permits itself to believe, that national defense can be developed solely through the building of equipment and the training of soldiers.

Congress now has its greatest national-defense problem before it—the problem of satisfying our people that this program of national defense is "of the people, for the people, and by the people," that it is fair to all; that its burdens shall be borne in accordance with ability to bear them and that first, last, and all the time, no one shall be encouraged or induced or permitted to bear the ignominy and the disgrace which must be accepted by those who would profit out of war.

Even the largest and finest army, navy, and air force in the world will not be adequate to defend America, unless the hope and faith of the people are kept strong and vigorous. Morale is more important than any other factor in a nation's strength. The morale of the American people will be high just to the extent that they know that Congress has not forgotten to work for economic justice at the same time it is planning for defense.

Above all things is it necessary that the Government of the United States in all of its branches should be free from dictation by any private special group. In our opinion, had a strong stand been taken in the beginning toward the demands of big business our defense materials would even now be in production in substantial volume. On the other hand, for Government to admit for a moment that private corporations are bigger than it is and that they are able to dictate without regard to the public interest the terms on which they will produce the materials of defense will be to deal the morale of our people a blow of the most serious character.

At a time like this we cannot afford to let anyone say they have the United States "over a barrel."

We regret to learn that many American corporations have declined to take Government orders until they could be assured of the most favorable terms for price, profit, and amortization, and of the lightest tax obtainable. We congratulate those who have gone vigorously ahead with such orders, and wish their number had been larger.

We voted 2 months ago for a tax bill broadening the income tax base and adding sharply to the tax burdens of the small taxpayers of the country. Those small taxpayers have shouldered this burden without complaint.

For well over a year now we have been advocating passage of an excess-profits tax bill—not so much as a revenue-producing measure but as a matter of simple justice, first to the people of the country who must bear the burdens of defense, second to the industries which cannot hope to share in the lucrative business of filling Government defense orders. We believe it is indefensible for anyone to make out of this national-defense crisis an opportunity to enrich himself and we know that it is of great importance to the morale of the people for them to be sure that no war millionaires are being created. Industry, of course, has a right to know as nearly as possible the situation which confronts it and we also recognize the necessity of sound amortization provisions in cases where industry actually risks its own money to provide facilities for defense production. We believe the really sound method of providing necessary additions to plants for emergency-defense demands is for the R. F. C. to build them, and for the Government to own them and lease them to those who can run them best. Nevertheless, we have listened to the arguments against profit limitation, against the requirement for competitive bidding and in favor of amortization provisions, and we understand the ground on which these concessions have been demanded. But we cannot understand or acquiesce in an insistence by industry upon low tax rates in an excess-profits tax, nor are we willing to see a bill passed containing great loopholes which will enable the very corporations who should pay most heavily to escape. We believe that every group in the Nation, including those with whom Government orders are to be placed, should be motivated to some degree at least by patriotism. It comes with poor grace indeed for these concessions to be demanded by the very people who insist most loudly on a balancing of the Federal Budget.

Unless some effective upper limit is placed on the amount of earnings in the past 4 years that can be counted as normal profits some of the largest corporations in the country will not pay any excess-profits taxes until their earnings exceed 20 percent or even 30 percent. This is clearly unjust and we will work for inclusion in the bill of a fair and reasonable limitation on the amount of excess-profits credit (normal profits) that can be claimed. Furthermore, we believe that in the upper brackets—say above 50 percent excess profits—the rates should be substantially more than 40 percent now proposed. We will try to amend the bill in this respect.

We hold that life is more important than property. And while we know that the American people stand ready to make any sacrifices that may be necessary in defense of their country we do not believe men, however humble, should be treated with less consideration than property, however mighty and however large.

The hope of America must be based upon unswerving adherence by the Congress to the principle of equality of sacrifice in proportion to ability to make sacrifice. We intend to work for as close an approach to exactly that principle as we can get.

We cannot but note an inconsistency between the drive to pass a conscription of manpower bill under pleas of desperate emergency and the readiness to yield to the demands of industry in order to induce its cooperation at a handsome profit in the defense effort. We are struck by the contrast between the refusal of many corporations to take Government defense contracts until every possible risk has been removed and the insistence that the people of the country be selected to join the Army at $30 a month or even less than that. We can't help thinking about the risk that every soldier has to face.

The same emergency affects us all. Indeed, the more we have the more national defense should mean to us. If industry is to be induced with profits and amortization opportunities then recruits for the Army should be induced with higher pay, better opportunities for specialized training and better promotion schemes. If men are to be drafted on the basis of selective service, then a necessary amount of industrial plants should be similarly drafted to be available for full production of the material and weapons with which these men must defend themselves and the Nation. For we are told that modern weapons have been even more important than manpower in recent European campaigns.

We believe income and inheritance tax rates and rates in the higher brackets of the excess-profits tax should be sharply raised.

We believe the Bone bill to tax the profit out of war should be brought before the Congress now.

When these things are done it will go further in persuading the people that the emergency is real than all the oratory in the world can do. It is the American way of fair dealing for all, special privilege for none, that we are all ready to defend.

It is not our purpose to delay passage of important legislation for a single day. But we will work for inclusion in every bill of such provisions as we believe are a matter of simple justice to the American people.

FRANCK HAVENNER.
ED. IZAC.
KNUTE HILL.
JERRY VOORHIS.
JOHN M. COFFEE.
CHARLES H. LEAVY.
FRANK FRIES.
LEE E. GEYER.

Peacetime Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS E. GRAHAM
OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

ADDRESS OF HON. CHARLES L. GERLACH, OF PENNSYLVANIA, BEFORE THE DOYLESTOWN PUBLIC FORUM IN THE COURTHOUSE AT DOYLESTOWN, PA., AUGUST 23, 1940

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address recently delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GERLACH]:

Mr. Moderator, members of the chamber of commerce, members of the Doylestown Forum, Colonel King, citizens of Bucks County, a few weeks ago in my office in Washington I received a telephone message from the secretary of your chamber inviting me to appear here in this forum tonight. I was happy to accept this invitation, for I believe that the issue we are to discuss, that of peacetime conscription of our manpower, plays a very vital part in the state of our Nation today. At the outset, however, let me tell you that I will not be against a plan of conscription if the need for it is proven; but I am, first and foremost, interested in giving the volunteer system a fair and impartial trial for a period of from 60 to 90 days. I feel sure that everybody will agree with me that this is very fair.

I say to you that we should make the volunteer system as attractive as possible to the men of America. There should be a reduction of from 3 years to 1 year in the period of the enlistment, and there should be an increase in the monthly rate paid to the soldier. His pay is now $21 per month, and although the proposed conscription plan now increases this to $30, I believe that $40 would be more equitable. In comparison, the enlisted man in the Navy receives $21 for the first 4 months he is in the service, and then his pay is increased to $36. By the end of his first year in the Navy he is enabled to draw $54 a month. In the Army, however, the $21 a month figure is rarely increased within the first year unless the soldier attains some special rank, and General Marshall, Chief of Staff, has testified that many soldiers receive the $21 a month salary for an entire enlistment of 3 years. Even the young men in the C. C. C. camps are paid $30 a month. Surely no one can deny that, if an increased Army is so necessary to our national defense, then the men within that Army are of more worth to the Nation than the C. C. C. enrollees.

Many of the thousands of dollars that are being spent at this time to create the propaganda for peacetime conscription could better be spent to wage an effective campaign for volunteers. The hysteria and the fear of the people would be lessened; we would be engaging in a rational, not hysterial, plan; and we would have our desired Army strength within the 60- to 90-day period I have suggested.

Let me remind you that despite the fact that we have not given the volunteer system any publicity designed to encourage volunteers, despite the fact that we have not given that American system a fair chance, the Army volunteers in the past month of July totaled almost 32,000, a peacetime record. And bear in mind that these persons enlisted for 3 years and at $21 a month. From all over the country have come reports that Army quotas have been rapidly filled, and in many cases there remain huge waiting lists. Let us take for example the Fourth Corps Area, which comprises a large portion of our South. In the last week of July there were 2,033 voluntary enlistments in this area, a record-breaking total. And the average age of the volunteers was from 21 to 23. Why, therefore, does not the War Department allow larger quotas? If this was done, and the 8 other corps areas into which our Nation is sectioned maintained the same average as the Fourth Corps Area, we would have a total of approximately 75,000 volunteers per month, even at the 3-year, $21-per-month plan. No one can reasonably deny, in the face of this evidence, that a volunteer drive for 1-year enlistments, with increased pay, would bring the Army at least 150,000 volunteers a month, or 450,000 in 3 months, which is 50,000 more than the Burke-Wadsworth bill proposes to conscript in the same length of time.

This is but one example of the inconsistency of those who are attempting to urge this legislation upon our people. The truth of the matter is that the enlistment period for the Army need not be lowered to 1 year, for the law already allows enlistments for that length of time. Section 628, title 10, of the United States Code, specifically states that "original enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for a period of 1 or 3 years, at the option of the soldier." Under the law, then, volunteers may enlist for 1-year periods. A great many have tried, but the Army recruiting offices, deliberately flouting the law, have refused them. Major General Adams, The Adjutant General, recently advised one of my colleagues in the Congress that, "In recent years 1-year enlistments have not been encouraged since an efficient military force depends not only on the training of the individual soldier, but also, and to a greater degree, on the coordinated training of all combat units that make up the fighting force. The rapid turn-over and the short period of training that would result, should 1-year enlistments be general for the Regular Army of 370,000 men, would seriously hamper the development of efficient combat units in this component."

I admit there may be some logic to the reasoning of The Adjutant General; but if it is true of volunteers, is it not equally true of conscripts? The proposed conscription measure calls for 1-year service, with the idea of building an emergency force. Why, I ask, cou'd not these many volunteers who wanted to enlist for 1 year be accepted as an emergency force? It seems to me to be radically wrong not to accept an emergency or reserve force made up of 1-year volunteers while, at the same time, promoting a conscription plan to build such a force. The War Department, in this case, has been ignoring a law that has been bringing them volunteers while, at the same time, it has been advocating a compulsory draft that will bring the same volunteers into the Army.

The situation in the Navy is quite similar. There has been so much propaganda in our newspapers, over our radios, and all about us concerning the building of our Army that most of us have forgotten that the proposed conscription as set forth in the bill is for the land and the naval forces. As with the Army, the quotas for the Navy and for the marines are oversubscribed. The Navy has a waiting list numbering 7,000, from which it can take men as fast as new vessels are built for them to man. Furthermore, Navy recruits are coming in through voluntary enlistments at a rate of 25 percent more than the normal monthly quotas. There are more recruits than can be taken care of with available equipment, so the Navy, like the Army, is forced to send men home to await facilities for their care, paying them while they are at home. And Navy enlistments are for 6 years. Where, in the view of such figures, can we say that conscription is necessary?

General Reckord, of the National Guard, supplies the illuminating answer. "I cannot see why," he states, "it is necessary to register 12,000,000 men when less than 2,000,000 are needed. If you want my honest opinion, I think that by registering all of the men we will make all of the people of the Nation come to a realization of the world situation confronting us." And Henry Stimson, Secretary of War, adds: "Conscription is not necessary because of danger but only to impress upon the country the gravity of the world situation."

There you have the answer. Conscription is only necessary at this time because it is a good propaganda weapon for the war-minded administration to stampede the public into a militaristic state of mind, and then eventually get us into the European war.

High ranking Army officials, officers of the General Staff, who testified before the House Military Affairs Committee prior to the time when the administration advanced the hysteria with its endorsement of conscription, stated quite emphatically that if we had an army of 480,000 properly trained men, together with a two-ocean navy, all the nations of Europe combined could not land one corps of troops on the American shore. The military experts of both Army and civilian life, who have been testifying on the Burke-Wadsworth bill, are in general accord with this view. The majority of them state that a Regular Army of between four and five hundred thousand would be sufficient for our defense in peacetime, provided the force was modernly and completely mechanized for land and air duties. The total force that would be needed, in their opinion, of all components of our armed force, would number 1,200,000 men. In view of this, let us look at the facts.

Today we have in the Regular Army, in round numbers, 265,000 men. We have in the National Guard another 225,000. The Officers Reserve Corps, the Regular Army Reserves and the enlisted Reserves total 157,700. Added together, we find that the Army of the United States now numbers 647,700 men. The voluntary enlistments that have been coming in, the quotas that have recently been filled, will bring the total of the Army of the United States to 757,700 soldiers within the next few weeks. Therefore, if the force the War Department feels necessary for our defense is 1,200,000, we actually need less than 450,000 men to reach that figure. The War Department states the figure will not be needed before January 1, 1941. Therefore, in the light of the figures I have previously stated, it seems to me that our volunteer system would provide the necessary soldiers in the remaining 4 months of this year, and there would be no need for the Congress to pass any conscription legislation.

Furthermore, it is well to remember that the Army figures are augmented by the Navy total of 170,000, plus 34,000 Marines and 14,800 Coast Guard men and officers.

Let us then ask the administration why it endorses the Burke-Wadsworth bill. The only war threat facing us at this time is that created by the President. I say to you that it is our task to stop this fear and expose the war propaganda of the interventionists who are trying to force us into the European war against the will of 95 percent of the American people. Let the American people ask the administration to take them into its confidence. Let them ask the President: "For Heaven's sake, if you have any secret information which causes your approval of the bill, please tell the people of this Nation."

I can remember a year or so ago when the late Senator Borah and the President were debating what was going to happen in Europe. The late Senator stated that he had information from reliable sources in Europe that there would be no war. The President answered that the Senator was wrong, for the President had under his personal charge 700 persons employed in the Foreign Service of our Government who were reporting to him daily the happenings in all the countries of the world and that he, therefore, knew much better than the Senator what would happen in Europe. I believe the President was correct and should have known under such conditions. Let me remind you also that whatever information he received, or receives, at any time, he keeps within the Executive and State Departments. He refuses to reveal it to the Military Affairs Committees of the Senate and of the House. He refuses to reveal it to the Naval or Foreign Affairs Committees of both Houses.

In this connection, a few weeks ago there was offered on the floor of the House a concurrent resolution by Representative ROGERS of Massachusetts which provided that any information received by the State Department and the President that was not compatible for public consumption, be turned over to the Senate and House Military Affairs Committees. When the vote was taken, this resolution was overwhelmingly defeated because the President convinced his rubber-stamp Congress that this all-important information furnished him daily by his foreign-service agents is only for his personal use, and that of a trusted few within the State Department.

I sincerely believe that all the committees of the Houses of Congress that are required to present sound legislation for the benefit of the American people should be given this information which he, and the State Department, refuses to give. I sincerely believe that the President's only reason for withholding such information is to further his own interventionist attitude and bring us to war through the fear and the hysteria so created. Otherwise, why are all the cards kept under the table, concealed from the duly elected representatives of the people; not to mention the people themselves?

We are not faced with any threat of war today except that which has been manufactured by the President and the warmongers with whom he deals. Some people will say, "Look at Holland, Denmark, Czechoslovakia, and Norway." They, fearful under the propaganda of the warmongers, say we should build our Army to great proportions in order to escape the fate that has befallen these countries. But the example does not fit us; we are not a small European nation situated close to a powerful dictatorship. So that, while the arming argument might fit such European nations, it does not fit us.

The condition that exists in Europe today does not exist here. Let me remind you that France has had a conscription law for more than a hundred years. Through this France built the largest standing army in the world up to the time the present war began a year ago. But her conscription, and her numbers, availed her nothing when the enemy, smaller in number, but armed with the latest mechanized devices, flame-throwing tanks, dive bombers, and other instruments of war against which no ill-equipped army could stand. Although France had the greatest infantrymen in the world, they could not stop the armor-plated instruments of war no matter how trained they were in infantry movements, nor how great they were in number.

Our great problem is, therefore, to supply the equipment of modern, mechanized instruments of war for the men we already have within our armed forces. William Knudsen, head of the Defense Commission, announced a few days ago that it would be 1942 before complete equipment for 1,200,000 men could be supplied. Why is it necessary to resort to peacetime conscription today if it will take 2 more years to provide the men with the necessary material? Why conscript men when the National Guard, now in its regular yearly training period, must train with broomsticks, pieces of iron pipe, and old trucks as make-believe tanks. If there is no equipment for proper service training in 1940 methods, why do we need a conscript force? General Marshall stated that the year's training of the proposed conscript army would consist of 3 months' rudimentary physical training, getting the men in shape; followed by a similar, in length, period of training in company formations. The balance of the year would be devoted to training in the use of great formations of troops. I say that we have seen how useless training in great formations of troops has been to France; let us not make the same error here. "Fifth columnists" did not defeat France; France lost because her soldiers could not withstand the onslaught of mechanized forces. Our need is thus exemplified: Not men for great troop formations, but mechanized material for our men.

If our need for men was so great, why has not the National Guard been quickly brought to its full strength? A high-ranking officer of the National Guard unit which comprises the Pennsylvania cities of Allentown, Easton, Bethlehem, Reading, Lancaster, Lebanon, and the surrounding territory, with headquarters in Allentown, has told me that prior to the start of the European war this unit numbered only 758 men. Since the war began the number has been increased to 1,178 men. But, said the officer, he could increase that number to 1,400, which is the peacetime strength of the unit, if the War Department gave him permission to do so, within 24 hours. And he could increase it to its full wartime strength of 1,800 men within a week to 10 days, if permission was granted him. With such being the case, where, I repeat, is there need for conscription?

Furthermore, the Congress has passed the National Guard bill, allowing the guard to be called for 1 year's training. The total number of men authorized to be called through this measure is 412,000, composed of the 252,000 National Guard officers and men and 116,000 other Reserves. Instead of calling them all out, however, the authorities have decided to call only 50,000. The remainder of the 412,000 are to stay "on order," like much of the military equipment we have today. If it is true, therefore, that we need 400,000 men in such haste, why not call the 412,000 partly trained men for whom authority has already been given? It is certainly not consistent to let this number remain uncalled while proposing to conscript 400,000 from another source.

Let us bear these facts in mind, and not let ourselves be fooled by the men who have been advocating compulsory military training for the past 20 years. Let us not be led into a system of militarism by the group of men who originated this bill in the Harvard Club in New York City this past May. They represent a group of interventionists who seek to foster upon our people the way of the dictatorships. Julius Adler, Grenville Clark, Kenneth Budd, Henry Stimson, now the Secretary of War, and Robert Patterson, now Assistant Secretary of War, were the ringleaders. These men have always been interventionists and internationalists. I can well remember when Stimson, as Secretary of State in the Hoover Cabinet, at the time when Japan invaded China, urged that the United States, Great Britain, and France, go to the aid of China to stop the Japanese. Since that time he has been continually approving the President's foreign policy, which certainly is not acceptable to many of us. And because of his sympathy with the warmongering tactics of the administration, he was added to the Cabinet.

These men have been spending enormous sums of money to falsely create hysteria in order that the conscription plan might become law. In their own words, they are propagandizing the people: "To arouse the citizenry to an appreciation of the grave dangers before us; to continue an adequate campaign of public education; to make articulate the large majority of the voters who believe in the adoption of compulsory military training now." Thus, through their plan, they hope to create enough war hysteria so that the next step will be the actual participation of our country solely for the sake of these internationalists and interventionists who have large investments in foreign lands.

They have captured the enthusiasm of the Army men who, despite the testimony before committees, are for the measure. Of course they are for it; it will make colonels out of captains, major generals out of colonels; and brigadier generals out of majors. They, too, are willing to take advantage of the fear and the hysteria which has swept over the country. And, as evidenced in their feelings toward the bill, these Army men realize that conscription will become a permanent part of our way of life.

The entire scheme, therefore, has nothing to do with this so-called emergency. To hide this fact they tell us that conscription is the only way, the American way, the democratic way to build an army because it will be imposed alike upon rich and poor. They would even hide behind the cloak of democracy to push conscription, unneeded, upon the American people. We have seen the nations that have adopted conscription. We have seen it is the way of the totalitarian governments. If that is not evidence enough to silence those who claim conscription is the democratic way, let us take the statement of General Shedd, Assistant Chief of Staff, who said: "Under the voluntary system, you cannot pick out the unimportant man." The general, it seems, wants a plan of conscription which would allow him to pick out whoever seemed to him to be unimportant. Such a plan would most certainly be un-American and undemocratic. By this very statement against the voluntary system its democratic aspect is proven, for it shows that all types of men volunteer, and there is no reason to pick out for our Army only the "unimportant" man. Yet the newspapers and other sources favorable to conscription have been trying to impress upon the people that conscription is democratic and American because it takes all classes, rich and poor, important and unimportant. They have been unfairly criticizing the volunteer system, and doing their best to discourage it, while it should be encouraged. President Roosevelt last week showed conclusively that he did not favor the volunteer system when he told "college students and those who contemplate going to college" not to volunteer. This is the shameful procedure utilized to attain conscription.

Certainly we must be prepared to defend ourselves against any invasion. I favor a national defense built to its greatest possible strength in the least possible time. A part of that defense must be the willingness of every one of our 132,000,000 people to contribute to the national defense. That, however, is something very different than the conscription which means turning over to one man, the President, the power to compel free citizens to spend part of their lives in the Army. Paragraph (b), section 11, of the Burke-Wadsworth bill gives the President tremendous power for, as he controls the calling of the men, he is granted the additional objective that: "The provisions of this act shall be construed liberally to effect the purpose thereof, the spirit always controlling the letter, and any technical deficiencies therein shall be supplied by the reasonable intent of the act as a whole, in the light of national needs." Thus, this loosely drawn measure in fact gives the President the power to create an act of war, even though it is the Congress which must declare war. The President could send conscripts into Canada, Mexico, or across the sea because, "the spirit always controlling the letter," he may think this best "in the light of national needs."

This, to me, is virtual dictatorship. It is far from the democratic way. We have but to look across the Atlantic to see that such conscription is ennobled and glorified as the highest honor within the totalitarian countries. Where conscription is utilized to this great extent, there you have the complete stifling of democracy.

The measure goes further than this. I wonder if you who are here tonight realize that when the bill comes up in the House there will be an amendment proposed which will conscript the wealth of the Nation at the same time that it conscripts the manpower. This amendment provides that there shall be conscription of the wealth of the people in order to support the conscripted army. Incomes from $1,000 to $10,000 will be subjected to a conscript of 5 percent. Ten percent will be taken from incomes from $10,000 to $100,000. In this manner the scale is graduated until incomes of $100,000,000 or more will be required to pay 75 percent. Bonds will be issued by the Treasurer of the United States for all the money conscripted. These bonds will not be tax free, and will pay only 1-percent interest. In case of any person having difficulty in raising the cash necessary to pay his allotment, the Government will accept his personal note bearing 6-percent interest, secured by his personal property. Have those who have been spreading the propaganda in favor of conscription explained this? I sincerely doubt that they have, for they are interested, the administration is interested, only in seeing the measure passed.

Even this, to my judgment, is just the beginning, not only of a plan to regiment manpower and wealth, but of much more, for the administration has, in printed form, a plan that would regiment every man, woman, and child in this country. This plan, the industrial mobilization plan of 1939, was printed in March of 1939, months before the war started in Europe, and the administration awaits only the opportune time to put it into action. I say to you that this is further proof of the war-mindedness of the administration.

The Chief Executive not only endorsed the Burke-Wadsworth bill, but he went so far as to suggest, on June 18, the idea of compulsory service for all young men, and for all young women to aid in the program of national defense. And he replaced his former Secretary of War with the war-minded Henry Stimson. Harry Woodring, who preceded Stimson, was asked to resign because he refused to approve the sending of planes, mosquito boats, and destroyers to the Allies, in direct violation of international law; because he refused to approve of compulsory military training and of the President's foreign policy in general.

The speech made by William Bullitt, lately returned Ambassador to France, last week in Philadelphia gives further evidence of the high favor in which the administration holds its warmongers. No Ambassador, by rule of the State Department, may speak until the Department passes favorably upon the speech. The administration, therefore, approved the Bullitt speech, which was later characterized in the Senate of the United States as "very near to treason." Bullitt urged conscription, and not alone for our defense but in the hope that we might raise an army to send into the present conflict, for he is willing to sacrifice our blood and our men today. He attempted to lay the blame for our present state of defense upon the duly elected representatives of the people. He said: "We don't want any more politicians in Washington who are afraid of the next election and scared to ask us to make the sacrifices that we know are necessary to preserve our liberties." I want to say to you that such is an underhanded method of appealing to the emotions of the people, for if we followed the course suggested by Bullitt we would have no liberties left.

Let me say to you that the politicians in Washington, including the President of the United States, who has been continually playing politics with the question of our defense, are there because the contributions to campaign funds by such men as Mr. Bullitt and Mr. James Cromwell, who had to be recalled from Canada, helped put politicians there so that they might turn around and appoint such men as Bullitt to diplomatic posts in return for their contributions, even though they have neither training nor aptitude for foreign diplomatic service. These diplomats are not the chosen servants of the people, and so I ask, who are they to criticize? I speak not only for myself but for many of my colleagues in Washington, when I say that we are not afraid of the next election. We do not buy our positions; we are elected by the people, and it is the people whom we will serve. We will not be swayed by the propaganda of the warmongers and the interventionists whose voices and views have created the hysteria in the Nation today.

If there is blame to be placed, by Mr. Bullitt or anyone else, let them place the blame where it is due. The Congress of the United States has done its part. We have voted the administration over $7,000,000,000 within the past 7 years for the purchase of military and naval equipment. This year we have voted more than double that amount. And where, I ask you, is the equipment? As a matter of fact, we do not have enough material on hand to mechanize more than one division of our Army, and we should have at least 12 mechanized divisions. The War Department admits that men who have enlisted voluntarily the past few months and who have been assigned to Army posts have, due to lack of equipment, been ordered to remain at home until such time as there will be facilities ready to take care of them. And though we cannot equip volunteers they still insist on conscription.

Truthfully, the production of equipment for the Army has lagged far behind the voluntary enlistments. There are today more men available to the Regular Army and to the National Guard than can be equipped for some time to come. Because of this, because from the point of effective defense, an efficient, loyal, and highly trained army, highly mechanized, is many times more efficient than a sullen, ill-equipped, poorly trained army of three times the size, I say to you that conscription at this time would be a great waste of money and power.

Our immediate need, therefore, is not for men, but for planes, for tanks, for guns, for ships. They exist today chiefly "on order." One of the reasons for this is the sending of equipment to Great Britain as fast as it is completed within our country. While we agree with this to a certain extent, we should keep enough material here for the proper training of the men we intend to train. For this reason I say to you that the politicians of the administration are making a racket of conscription at this time. They seem more concerned with getting the names of from twelve to forty-two million people on a registration list, and their fingerprints on file with the F. B. I., than they are with providing modern equipment for the Army we do have. I feel sure that the American people will not forget this attempt by the administration to regiment them in the guise of a so-called emergency when it comes time to cast their ballots in November. We are tired of the useless waste of the people's money for purposes other than national defense; money which, due to the administration's political lust for power, has been spent, not for defense, but for the personal ambitions of one man's desire to keep himself in office.

These are the facts. I know that you are all familiar with my views on national defense. I have fought since I was elected a Member of Congress from this district for an adequate national defense. I believe this to be the greatest insurance for peace in America. I believe a national defense built to such a strength that all nations respect us will be our greatest assurance that we will keep war out of America and keep America out of war. But due to the conditions I have outlined I do not believe the conscription of our manpower is necessary. If we do need men, let us give the volunteer system a fair chance. It has proven adequate up to date. Let us, for a 90-day period, give it an impartial trial, properly publicized throughout the entire United States. Let us state the exact number of men we need, and I am sure that the necessary number will volunteer within the 90-day period. If it would fall short, then I would be happy to support the conscription of whatever number the Army needed. Meanwhile, let us not be fooled by the propaganda the metropolitan newspapers have been printing; let us think sanely; let us look at the program with common sense; let us remain cool, calm, and collected; and we will be able to build our defense to its greatest strength and assure for ourselves the peace we desire.

Let me offer, in conclusion, a more personal statement. Let me say that I have no sons, no near relatives, who would be drafted. I would not be conscripted. But if ever war should come to America, and if my services were necessary, I would willingly volunteer; and I would want to fight shoulder to shoulder, not with the so-termed "unimportant" men whom the advocates of conscription want to reach but with free men who serve gladly, willingly, to fight for the honor, the safety, and the perpetuation of our great Republic and its ideals.

I thank you.

The National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DAN R. McGEHEE
OF MISSISSIPPI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

A DECLARATION TO PRESERVE OUR LIBERTY AND AMERICAN WAY OF LIFE BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN LEGION, WORLD WAR VETERANS, AND CITIZENS OF MISSISSIPPI IN MASS MEETING ASSEMBLED AT JACKSON ON AUGUST 25, 1940

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am including therein a resolution passed at a mass meeting of the American Legion, World War veterans, and citizens of Mississippi, held at Jackson, Miss., on August 25, 1940.

This resolution expresses the sentiment of a great majority of the people of my State and it gives me great pleasure to convey it to the membership of both branches of the Congress:

When in the course of tragic international events it becomes necessary for the only great democracy yet at peace to immediately rearm against the ruthlessness of Hitler and forces of revolutionary aggressors and to assume among the powers of the earth a military, naval, and air strength adequate to protect our country from invasion now or in the future, and when certain Members of Congress, by their indifference and complacency to an impending danger, procrastinate and delay the passage of legislation necessary to raise and procure an adequate army, matériel, and equipment, a decent self-respect and love of country compels us to action.

We hold these truths to be self-evident:

In 1 day, without a struggle, Hitler conquered Austria and its 30,000,000 people.

In 50 days he conquered and enslaved Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France.

Today he stands as the despot and tyrant over 250,000,000 people in Continental Europe.

Before the fogs come on October 1, his terrorism may destroy the British Isles.

He loathes American democracy. He may strike for our wealth and resources before we are prepared.

We also hold these further truths to be self-evident:

Our Congress, in lightning time, appropriated billions upon billions for defense. Money alone is not adequate defense. Since appropriating the tremendous sum, certain Members of Congress have resorted to politics and delayed 60 days discussing the selective draft bill. This is a longer time than it required Hitler to conquer all Europe.

Under the domination of Blum, the Socialist; Laval; Bonnet; and other politicians, France was paralyzed and blown into oblivion by the tremendous draft of Hitler's "blitzkrieg."

The appeasers, the Mosleys and the Nazis of the English Parliament, delayed rearmament of England until Germany gained supremacy in the air.

As a result, a future tourist viewing the ruins of Ancient Greece or Rome, in his travels, may "in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch of London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's."

Hitler talks and acts.

Congress talks and talks but doesn't act.

We agree with George Washington that an adequate Army cannot, and should not, be raised by the volunteer system.

The surest way to prevent Hitler and other world revolutionary aggressors from invading the Americas is to be adequately prepared at the very earliest moment with army, war materials, and equipment.

We, therefore, members of the American Legion and veterans of the World War, drafted under the Selective Service Act of 1917, and citizens from every section of Mississippi, demand that Congress bring to immediate vote and passage a selective service act to include men from the ages of 18 to 64, inclusive; that Congress immediately pass legislation that will compel the production of War materials and put our industries to work now.

That the national organization and State departments of the American Legion assume leadership to urge Congress to immediate action. We believe all Mississippi Members of the Congress favor the passage of the Selective Service Act. We challenge the Legionnaires and veterans of the World War in every State of the Union to let their voices be heard.

We declare our appreciation be expressed to Congress for liberal appropriations already made to cover, in part, the cost of national preparedness, for the enactment of legislation empowering the President to call into service the National Guard and Organized Reserves, and for such other legislation as has been enacted, designed to enable the executive branch of the National Government to make a start in the matter of the preparation of our national defense.

We deplore the dilatory tactics that savor of an effort to filibustering employed by sundry Members of the Congress, the effect of which tactics have been to delay action and to prevent the passage of legislation designed to properly and, in a democratic manner, provide adequate manpower for intensive military training.

We implore President Roosevelt and Hon. Wendell Willkie to arouse the constituents of their respective parties to urge immediate action.

We challenge every veteran and every State in the Union to follow Mississippi leadership, and recognizing that a free press is an essential bulwark of our democracy and one which, too, is now threatened by those nations in which no free press exists, we request the cooperation of the established press associations and the newspapers of the Nation in disseminating the report of this meeting, thereby aiding the cause of unity and action.

Let all Americans join us.

Some Defense Suggestions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. VINCENT F. HARRINGTON
OF IOWA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, August 27, 1940

LETTER FROM MAYOR OF SIOUX CITY, IOWA

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to include in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Hon. David F. Loepp, mayor of Sioux City, Iowa. Mayor Loepp, in his capacity of chief executive of Sioux City, has had much experience. He is a veteran of the World War and served in France for many months. In conjunction with Capt. E. T. Munroe, of the Officers Reserve Corps, he has placed his recommendations and suggestions in the form of a letter to me, and I am pleased to call it to the attention of every Member of the House. The proposals are sound, logical, and workable.

The letter follows:

The Honorable VINCENT F. HARRINGTON,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have observed that you have expressed opposition to the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill which is now being debated in the Senate. I should be very reluctant to offer any suggestions or write any Members of the House or Senate regarding this but for some time Mr. E. T. Munroe, captain in the Field Artillery Reserve, and I have been discussing the various phases of it and after a good deal of deliberation, reluctantly decided to offer a few suggestions which we felt might be of some little benefit.

It seems apparent to me that there is a good deal of confusion in Washington on this subject and that although the administration would like to follow almost completely the suggestions of the Army and the Navy, the political situation is such that various elements enter into the matter, other than cold-blooded consideration of the facts.

Somehow, I feel that much of the comment that is issued from time to time, both for and against the bill, by persons generally, other than those in touch with it in Washington, shows that they do not appreciate what has been done and what can be done without going the full length of universal conscription. We, therefore, wish to call your attention to what would seem to us to be a reasonable method, short of conscription at this time, some of which is now being put into effect.

It seems to us that there is available to the authorities at this time for intensive training the following forces:

1. The Regular Army, 264,000.
2. The National Guard and Reserve officers, 351,300.

(We see nothing wrong with this bill in inducting into service at the present time the National Guard and Reserve officers.)

3. Civilian Conservation Corps, 250,000.

(That is about the number we understand are enrolled at this time.)

We feel the administration and Congress are in error in failing to require compulsory military training in these camps. I know the criticism is offered that this would be some type of discrimination against these young men because as a rule they are from families on relief.

Captain Munroe has had charge of one of these camps and says that if they had military training, it would be possible to handle the camps more efficiently. I, personally, believe that these C. C. C. camps constitute one of the finest things which this administration has done. Through my experience and connection with relief problems it has long been quite clear that the class of persons who are not adequately protected by relief legislation are young and single men. Therefore, it would really be a favor to them to enlarge the enrollment in these camps so that more young men who are unable to find employment could be enrolled.

It does not seem to me that there is any discrimination in requiring military training of them, for the reason that they would not be under Federal oath. Neither would they be subject to call during peacetime. In other words, it would be similar to the training which is sometimes required of students attending land-grant universities.

4. Inasmuch as there seems to be so much objection to peacetime conscription, why not enact a law at this time calling for the conscription of all men between the ages of 21 and 31, or 45 if desired, and also granting power to the President to conscript, if necessary, and commandeer all necessary war industries to the extent that production in those necessary industries can be accomplished either with voluntary cooperation of the owner or with involuntary cooperation, this law to go into effect at the instance of the President only if war has been declared against the United States or war has been declared by the United States against a major power, or a state of war exists which constitutes a grave national emergency.

I know this proposition was considered to some extent, but it seems to me that the passage of such a law would meet with less objection than even the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming; that it would greatly increase the voluntary enlistment; it would take away the stigma of peacetime conscription and no one could argue that compulsory training required of boys in the C. C. C. camp constitutes a discrimination, because it would then be obvious that all able-bodied men would be subject to call as soon as a national emergency arose. In fact, these boys would have an advantage, rather than a disadvantage, by having had the training.

Captain Munroe thinks my figures on the strength of our National Guard are low and also advises me that they have been conducting citizens military training camps in which were enrolled approximately 100,000 young men. This would mean that there are available at this time approximately 1,000,000 men for immediate intensive training. If one can believe the statements repeatedly contained in various reports emanating from Washington, there would be available all the men which our Army and Navy is equipped to train during the next 12 months. By that time we should know whether or not we will be involved in the current war.

Captain Munroe and I first discussed this matter because he was interested in organizing what one would describe as a home guard which would constitute largely ex-service men. It seems this has been done in the East. The idea there would be to encourage ex-service men and others to join in the organization which would train at home at regular intervals—say twice a week—so as to acquaint these men with modern weapons and modern methods of defense, the idea being that the Federal Government would perhaps extend a reasonable amount of support in the way of necessary equipment.

In regard to this matter Captain Munroe makes the following additional suggestions:

1. That the Mayor in each city would issue a proclamation calling for the organization, by volunteer method, of a home guard, special emphasis being placed upon the enlistment of American Legion members, Veterans of Foreign Wars and other ex-service men. The local posts would make excellent facilities to aid in accomplishing this.

2. At the first meeting of the home guard steps toward organizing the men into companies would be taken. Then at subsequent meetings the new drill regulations would be given. A minimum amount of time would be spent on these new drill regulations.

3. Organize the home guard into a motorized unit. There are sufficient automobiles in the United States to transport the entire population, if necessary, so why not utilize privately owned vehicles and make the home guard a modern up-to-date organization and thus get away from countless hours spent in nothing but squad movements' drill.

If the Government does not have sufficient guns to supply the home guard, then it is suggested that each individual bring whatever weapon he has in his possession and drill with it.

We suggest that the greater portion of the drill period be utilized by putting the men in their own automobiles and teaching them how to go from one place to another by map and then deploy near the theater of operation. We know from past experience that this type of modern home guard would appeal to the average cititzen to a greater extent than the constant squad drill. Such maneuvers and such training, of course, would have to take place proximate to the local communities involved and could take into consideration only the local situation and terrain.

The foregoing suggestions made by Captain Munroe and by me, jointly, are made with the idea of being entirely helpful and with no notion of finding fault with anyone.

A Declaration To Preserve Our Liberty and American Way of Life

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILL M. WHITTINGTON

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

A DECLARATION TO PRESERVE OUR LIBERTY AND AMERICAN WAY OF LIFE, BY THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN LEGION, WORLD WAR VETERANS, AND CITIZENS OF MISSISSIPPI IN MASS MEETING ASSEMBLED, IN JACKSON, MISS., ON AUGUST 25, 1940

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Declaration adopted by representatives of the American Legion, World War veterans, and citizens of Mississippi, in mass meeting assembled in Jackson, Miss., on August 25, 1940, to wit:

When, in the course of tragic international events, it becomes necessary for the only great democracy yet at peace to immediately rearm against the ruthlessness of Hitler and forces of revolutionary aggressors and to assume among the powers of the earth a military, naval, and air strength adequate to protect our country from invasion now or in the future, and when certain Members of Congress, by their indifference and complacency to an impending danger, procrastinate and delay the passage of legislation necessary to raise and procure an adequate army, material, and equipment, a decent self-respect and love of country compels us to action.

We hold these truths to be self-evident:

In 1 day, without a struggle, Hitler conquered Austria and its 30,000,000 people.

In 50 days he conquered and enslaved Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France.

Today he stands as the despot and tyrant over 250,000,000 people in Continental Europe.

Before the fogs come on October 1 his terrorism may destroy the British Isles.

He loathes American democracy. He may strike for our wealth and resources before we are prepared.

We also hold these further truths to be self-evident:

Our Congress, in lightning time, appropriated billions upon billions for defense. Money alone is not adequate defense. Since appropriating the tremendous sum, certain Members of Congress have resorted to politics and delayed 60 days discussing the selective-draft bill. This is a longer time than it required Hitler to conquer all Europe.

Under the domination of Blum, the Socialist; Laval, Bonnet, and other politicians, France was paralyzed and blown into oblivion by the tremendous draft of Hitler's "blitzkrieg."

The appeasers, the Mosleys and the Nazis of the English Parliament, delayed rearmament of England until Germany gained supremacy in the air.

As a result, a future tourist viewing the ruins of ancient Greece or Rome, in his travels, may "in the midst of a vast solitude, take his stand on a broken arch on London Bridge to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's."

Hitler talks and acts.

Congress talks and talks but doesn't act.

We agree with George Washington that an adequate army cannot and should not be raised by the volunteer system.

The surest way to prevent Hitler and other world revolutionary aggressors from invading the Americas is to be adequately prepared at the very earliest moment with Army, war materials, and equipment.

We, therefore, members of the American Legion and veterans of the World War, drafted under the Selective Service Act of 1917, and citizens from every section of Mississippi, demand that Congress bring to immediate vote and passage a selective service act to include men from the ages of 18 to 64, inclusive; that Congress immediately pass legislation that will compel the production of war materials and put our industries to work now.

That the national organization and State departments of the American Legion assume leadership to urge Congress to immediate action. We believe all Mississippi Members of the Congress favor the passage of the Selective Service Act. We challenge the Legionnaires and veterans of the World War in every State of the Union to let their voices be heard.

We declare our appreciation be expressed to Congress for liberal appropriations already made to cover, in part, the cost of national preparedness, for the enactment of legislation empowering the President to call into service the National Guard and Organized Reserves, and for such other legislation as has been enacted designed to enable the executive branch of the National Government to make a start in the matter of the preparation of our national defense.

We deplore the dilatory tactics that savor of an effort at filibustering employed by sundry Members of the Congress, the effect of which tactics have been to delay action and to prevent the passage of legislation designed to properly and, in a democratic manner, provide adequate manpower for intensive military training.

We implore President Roosevelt and Hon. Wendell Willkie to arouse the constituents of their respective parties to urge immediate action.

We challenge every veteran and every State in the Union to follow Mississippi leadership, and recognizing that a free press is an essential bulwark of our democracy and one which, too, is now threatened by those nations in which no free press exists, we request the cooperation of the established press associations and the newspapers of the Nation in disseminating the report of this meeting, thereby aiding the cause of unity and action.

Let all Americans join us!

The Negro and the National-Preparedness Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ARTHUR W. MITCHELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, recently I have received a great many communications from distinguished representatives of the colored race in various parts of the country making inquiry of the present status and future plans for the use of colored units of the National Guard in the present preparedness program. I am deeply interested in this matter, for it is my contention that racial prejudice in the Army and in the Navy—in fact, in all branches of our national defense—should be wiped out, and should be wiped out immediately.

On August 16 I had a conference with the President at the White House, at which time I took this matter up with the President. He was deeply interested in the communications which I had received on this matter and, through General Watson, requested the Secretary of War to clarify the situation. On August 22 I received a letter from the White House, signed by General Watson, secretary to the President, explaining the changes which are now taking place and stating definitely that colored units will be officered by colored officers and will take their appropriate places in division and corps organizations and will not be grouped separately. The following is the letter which I received on this matter:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 22, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR W. MITCHELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: The President has asked me to give you specific answers to the questions asked by Mr. Matthew W. Bullock in connection with certain Negro units.

The War Department hopes, with the consent of the States concerned, to convert a number of surplus infantry units of the Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, District of Columbia, Ohio, and Illinois National Guards to antiaircraft artillery, field artillery, and engineers. These changes are necessary because the National Guard has more infantry units than are required for divisional organizations, and they involve such famous units as the Seventh Regiment of New York, which has recently been converted from infantry to antiaircraft artillery. Specifically the Third Battalion, Seventy-seventh Infantry, will probably be converted, if the State authorities approve, to a battalion of engineers.

When existing infantry units of the National Guard are converted to units of another arm or service, their commissioned officers are transferred to the converted units. Any additional officers required for colored units so converted will be colored officers. In the National Guard it has always been the policy of the War Department that colored units be officered by colored officers.

The War Department has no plan for the organization of a combat division composed exclusively of Negro personnel either in the Regular Army or in the National Guard. Colored units will take their appropriate places in division and corps organizations and will not be grouped separately.

Very sincerely yours,

EDWIN M. WATSON,
Secretary to the President.

During the 6 years I have been in Congress I have worked diligently to place competent colored boys in the Military Academy at West Point and in the Naval Academy at Annapolis. In fact, out of the many appointments I have made of colored boys to the Military Academy at West Point, two are making good—one will graduate this year. I have made several appointments to Annapolis, but have not yet succeeded in securing a colored boy who could stand the tremendous gaff and race prejudice encountered at the academy.

I should like to state that in my effort to place boys in these two Government institutions I have had the wholehearted support of the President. No one could have done more to aid me in my effort than President Roosevelt has done. I am still hoping that I shall yet be able to find at least two colored boys who will go to Annapolis and make history by remaining at that school and graduating, regardless of the hardships they will be called upon to suffer. The fact that we have not succeeded in the past is no reason why we should not continue in our effort to break down these racial barriers. This is the best time to do it, while we have an administration in power that is absolutely fair to us.

Central and South America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY JOHN T. FLYNN

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the pen of Mr. John T. Flynn, in relation to Central and South America.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, August 24.—The House having passed a bill to provide half a billion dollars for loans to South America, we may now wonder what will be done with the money.

After all, while South America is in difficulty, her troubles are not due to the war. They are accentuated by the war. And if we want to help South America, instead of just making her a pawn in the war game of Europe, we should proceed with a good deal more deliberation and study than we are doing.

South America's troubles are political, cultural, and economic.

First of all, the country has been the prey for many years of political and military dictators. There has been very little real democracy. The Latin has not lent himself to the democratic processes as his northern neighbors have done.

For over a century, these dictators have been the old-fashioned type, mere adventurers. More recently, they have tended to the Fascist type, which is something else again, and grows out of the continent's economic difficulties.

One of the grave dangers in South America is that most of its countries will move over to the Fascist model. This does not mean that they will be under the dominion of Hitler. Monarchist countries have fought each other as savagely as they have fought democracies, and Fascist may fight Fascist.

The Fascist threat in South America is an internal and indigenous one. Indeed, a sort of fascism had appeared there long before Hitler was heard of.

The next difficulty in South America is cultural. There is little we can do about that save to recognize it. It grows out of racial and cultural roots and tolerates a large mass of uneducated and poverty-stricken peasants at the base of the social pyramid.

The third and gravest menace is economic. These are commodity countries. Many of them are in the kind of trouble Kansas would have been in if it were an independent nation and dependent wholly on its wheat crop. The economic stability of the South American nations is at the mercy of the fate of single commodities. As long as this is true, nothing can be done for them.

What they need is diversification. And as part of this they need, not merely a variety of crops, but some form of industrialization. They have got to learn to create a larger part of their income within their own borders, so that they will not be reduced to penury by shifts in foreign trade.

All these together make up a collection of profound social problems which call for statesmanship of a high order. But we rush in with scarcely a moment's thought, prepared to save South America by lending her money to increase the surpluses which are already ruining her, and to increase the debt which burdens her.

Of course, Jesse Jones says this money will be used partly to help industrialize South America. But everybody knows that is just talk, that there are no plans for it, and that not more than a handful of dollars will find their way to that objective.

German Propaganda

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

LETTER FROM THE NONSECTARIAN LEAGUE FOR AMERICANISM

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a letter from the Non-Sectarian League for Americanism and an editorial which appeared in the official publication of the German World War Veterans' Organization of Chicago.

NON-SECTARIAN LEAGUE FOR AMERICANISM
National Headquarters, Chicago, Ill., August 22, 1940.

DEAR SIR: We are herewith enclosing reprint of an editorial, together with a word-for-word translation, that appeared in Der Frontkamerad, which is the official publication of the German World War Veterans' Organization of Chicago.

Mr. Ernst A. Ten Eicken, former president of the German World War Veterans' Organization of Chicago, was one of the organizers and the first president of the German-American National Alliance. Mr. Otto Schwarck, who is also a past president of the German World War Veterans' Organization of Chicago, is acting president of the German-American National Alliance.

This particular issue was published on the occasion of German Day, a celebration dating back many years; which, however, during the past several years, has been used for dissemination of German and pro-Hitler propaganda.

In the interest of Americanism, we believe that this sort of activity should be called to your attention and to that end are enclosing these copies.

We would appreciate your acknowledgment of the receipt of this and any comment you may care to make.

Sincerely yours,

W. F. CLARKE, President.

[Der Frontkamerad, German Day ed., Chicago, July 1940 Official publication of the German World War Veterans Organization, 1914–18]

WE GERMANS—TO ALL GERMANS

As a result of the latest events in Europe, each and every German feeling and thinking individual abroad, should have reached the conviction that it is truly a special honor and distinguished privilege for a man in this world to be permitted to identify himself as a member of this (German) nation. Whom, however, in view of these occurrences, his conscience has not led to his German heritage is a traitor to his own people and a coward and a double-crosser (Schuft—also hoodlum)!

Never has the world seen greater events, never has an army achieved mightier successes than the present German military might (Wehrmacht). In reverence every German should bow his head to such grand heroic courage and loyalty displayed on all fronts by the German men. We are forced to admire the willingness to sacrifice and the solidarity of a people with their soldiers, and this is our own people in our fatherland.

Only through the spirit (Geist) at home could that be accomplished at the front which holds us in admiration and respect today. With special reverence, however, we must look upon the guidance of the German Reich under the leadership of its first front-line soldier, the leader Adolf Hitler. If there are still Germans today who do not dare to speak this name (Hitler's) and defend him against all reproaches, it is either (because of) fear or selfishness. Such individuals are not worthy to be identified as Germans. These cowards should rather identify themselves as Englishmen, perhaps then they will feel better. Why, in all the world, fellow German-nationals (Volksgenossen) abroad, is it not permissible that particularly the German man (Deutscher Mensch) who may justly claim to be first among all the nations of the world in view of his cultural achievements can identify himself all the time voluntarily with his nationality (Volkstum)?

This question is answered just as speedily as it is put. Through petty disagreements and jealousies and partly through selfishness, the German abroad cannot and will not become united. If, for example, someone claims to be a better German, there is, on the other hand, again someone else who thinks he could and may not declare himself in accord with the existing conditions in the old homestead (Heimat).

What the devil—what kind of arrogant presumption and excuses are these if it should be our primary purpose to work in unison for the good of the old fatherland.

If, in the beginning I used the words "cowards" and "double-crossers," I hold these expressions to be absolutely justified, for, if a man has sunk so far as not to be willing to identify himself with his own nationality (Volkstum), then the best place for him is where silence reigns.

Germans awake, come finally to the clear-cut understanding (Einsicht) that we cannot exist abroad (wordly transl.: we cannot be abroad) without uniting all those belonging to our people (Volkstums). The sad truth that particularly the German needs this admonition shows to a frightening degree to what (low) level our nationals (Volkstum) abroad can sink.

Many a brave fighter abroad has died of a broken heart in striving for the unity of the German race (Deutschen Stammes) and many have recognized the hopelessness of his plans to create this unity and has withdrawn himself with his disappointments to a quiet corner of the world. You took their lives from them and are responsible for their disappointments. Do you really want to continue on this path? Do you want to persist in this unheard of lack of interest?

In view of the great occurrences in his old home country (Heimat), every German should have retained at least enough self-pride to say: "I am a German, I belong to this (German) nation. My nation was able to perform the greatest and most glorious achievements and successes in peace and in war; I dedicate myself to my nationality (Volkstum), I am a German (Deutscher Mensch)."

If again today, as every year abroad, we gather here to celebrate a German Day, it is now the time for a free and open confession of every German to his nationality (Volkstum). Let us celebrate this day in solemn, unswerving loyalty to our nationality (Volkstum), let us celebrate this day in complete unity and remember our old home (Heimat) where today our fellow nationals (Volksgenossen), our brothers and sisters are fighting in the struggle for their, our lives. Then we will first have grasped the significance of what it means to be celebrating as Germans a German Day; only then we will have declared ourselves to be belonging to our nationality (Volkstum). Then the Germandom (Deutschtum) abroad can hold its place and be able to do his share (Einstehen) for the fatherland and for his own good as well. But only then * * *.

This Changing World

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NOAH M. MASON
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, once upon a time the American workingman was dominated, controlled, coerced, by big business into voting as the bosses dictated under penalty of losing their jobs. Representatives of the "boss" stood at the polls and checked the votes of every workman to see that he voted right—or else. The revolt against this type of tyranny brought about the Australian-ballot reform in 1888 providing a secret ballot.

Then came the period when big business made generous contributions to the campaign funds of political parties or candidates in order to buy up or influence the election. This method of controlling elections became so prevalent and so brazen that the public again revolted, and as a result another election reform took place, and Corrupt Practice Acts were put into effect by the Federal Government and also by practically every State to prevent the buying of elections.

Today many Americans see a real danger to a free and uncontrolled ballot box in the money power of "big Government" rather than the money power of "big business." The Government's power to influence elections has increased in direct ratio to the increase in the number of employees on the Government pay roll, as well as in proportion to the increased billions the Government now hands out to voters in the shape of Federal subsidies, such as unemployment relief, farm benefits, and W. P. A. jobs.

Two years ago the country was shocked by the revelations of the Sheppard congressional investigating committee concerning the widespread use of W. P. A. millions to buy up that election; to influence the voters in favor of certain administration favorites, such as Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky; or to influence voters against certain Democratic Senators that were in the New Deal "dog house" because of their opposition to the Court-packing bill. The Hatch law was therefore passed, and later strengthened and expanded, to correct this situation and to prevent undue political pressure or control over elections by Government agencies or the spending of Government funds to influence elections.

Whether the Hatch law will correct the situation concerning big government and big-government subsidies unduly influencing the ballot box remains to be seen. Candidate Willkie has called attention to the fact that in the election years of 1934, 1936, 1938 the relief rolls were greatly increased during the summer months of June to October, while in the off-election years, 1935, 1937, 1939, the relief rolls dropped decidedly during the summer months of June to October. This up-and-down tendency in the number on Government relief as between election years and nonelection years is significant, to say the least. It is particularly significant and interesting to note that in this election year of 1940, in spite of Government figures that show private employment rolls have been absorbing thousands of the unemployed of the Nation, yet we are now experiencing a decided increase in the number being placed on the relief rolls, some 90,000 having been added in July of this year. Can we have clean elections, uncontrolled by either big business or big government? Can we divorce control over the ballot box by big government as we have divorced control over the ballot box by big business? The answer to this question is one of the chief issues of the coming campaign, and it will be settled by the voters on November 5. When the ballot box is controlled either by big business or by big government, then our democratic form of government is lost.

Slum Clearance

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROBERT W. KEAN
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, the legislation providing further funds for the United States Housing Authority seems to have bogged down, chiefly, in my opinion, owing to the form in which the legislation is written and the reluctance of the House to believe that the present law is the best way to handle the situation.

I believe that there is a majority in the House which feel as I do, that further Federal aid for slum clearance in some form is advisable; though I do not believe there is a majority in favor of extending the present rather extraordinary legislation.

In order that the continuance of the program be not unduly delayed, I have introduced a resolution providing that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, or a subcommittee thereof, be authorized to study the progress that has been made under the present act, to recommend what further provisions we should make to continue the program, and to see, after carefully studying the matter, if we cannot write a bill which will have the support of all, except those few who are opposed to Federal aid for slum clearance on principle.

This committee should consult with men who have both practical and theoretical knowledge of housing problems and who thoroughly understand the financial commitments involved—men such as Gerard Swope, chairman of the New York Housing Authority, former chairman of the General Electric Co.; and Gerald Lambert, formerly president of the Gillette Safety Razor Co.; and other civic-minded citizens who have shown their interest in the housing program, with the hope that a bill may be worked out which will give the best housing possible at the lowest cost to the taxpayers.

There have been no hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee on the subject since any of the United States housing projects have been completed. The proposed committee should visit these completed houses, study the records of employment and health of those living there, where these people came from, what were their living conditions in the past, what rent they were paying; in fact, the whole social results of the experiment.

They should compare the completed housing projects with other buildings erected at somewhat comparable expense, both as to cost and the improvements provided.

The committee should study the fantastic plans for farm slum clearance and decide if there was any excuse for this proposal, other than a desire to gain votes in Congress for the rest of the bill.

They should carefully investigate the various local housing authorities and see that every dollar of the taxpayers' money which has been spent has been used to provide cheap housing for those supposed to be covered by the bill, and has not been used for political sinecures or any other purpose foreign to the announced purposes of the bill.

We have now a case history, and it seems ridiculous to attempt to legislate further large sums of money without knowing what have been the actual results of the hundreds of millions already spent.

Though it was suggested by certain members of the Banking and Currency Committee that hearings should be called this year, no hearings were held. Is there some hidden reason why the administration does not want to bring into the light the actual results of the present law?

It would seem that passage of my resolution would be the best way to insure that the program of slum clearance be continued in an efficient way as soon as is practicable.

The Wool-Labeling Bill, H. R. 944

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CAROLINE O'DAY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, women throughout the country are showing an increasing desire that Congress pass this wool-labeling bill—the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, which includes in its membership and affiliated groups some 250,000 women, women in other sections of the State, and women as individuals, clubs, State federations, from practically every State are urging the passage of this legislation.

These women have a right to be heard. We must remember that women buy 85 percent of all consumer commodities and the welfare and comfort of their families depend on the wise use of this buying power. But the task of buying wisely for household uses is not as easily performed as it was in the days of our mothers and grandmothers. They had to know four fibers—silk, linen, cotton, wool. The laboratory researches are giving us day by day new fibers and mixtures, all valuable for certain uses but we need to know what they are and we have the right to know. The Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion written by the late Justice Cardozo in the Algoma Lumber case has stated:

> The public is entitled to get what it chooses, though the choice may be dictated by caprice, or by fashion, or perhaps by ignorance.

Through many centuries virgin wool has established a reputation as a warmth-giving fiber which has served the human race well—that is one reason why women question the intent of those who talk so much about inferior virgin wool. We know there is some inferior virgin wool as there are spoiled apples or vegetables—but we do not believe this can be more than a small percentage of the new wool or why would "wool" have the reputation which it has. We were glad to learn that Dr. W. E. Emley, Chief of the Division of Organic and Fibrous Materials, National Bureau of Standards, at the hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, made the following statement:

Let me put it this way: When the fabric is new, I wouldn't expect to find very much difference in the thermal conductivity of the fabric whether made of virgin wool or reclaimed wool, other things being equal, of course. But I would expect that virgin wool would stand laundering better and the service conditions better. So I think it would retain its properties longer than a fabric made from reworked wool.

We believe this statement is one very good reason why this bill should be passed.

It is possible for a purchaser of wool products to examine the weave and to tell whether it is loose or coarse or fine or close and strong, and so forth, but no purchaser today can tell what is woven into a piece of cloth. That is why we need the legislation. Then a woman can work out what her budget will permit her to pay for a given article or piece of cloth and determine whether the use for which the article is intended justifies the cost of virgin wool or whether a wool product which is partly virgin wool and partly composed of reprocessed or reused wool or other fibers will be the best buy for the given purpose. This is surely within the rights assured to the public in the opinion from the Supreme Court.

We are impressed by the fact that the favorable report on the bill by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce followed lengthy hearings, which afforded all opponents and proponents the opportunity to present their arguments and also the consumers' viewpoint. We believe that the committee has acted wisely in suggesting that the legislation be amended to provide for three classes of wool and for restricting the unqualified use of the word "wool" to mean new, virgin wool. This provision for reprocessed and reused wool will overcome any unfairness which might accrue from classing new factory clippings or waste in manufacturing with the wool derived from the rags the ragman gathers. We can see, however, that there is no chance the reprocessed wool will be as valuable as the wool from which it is derived because of the picking to pieces, even at times bleaching, to which it must be subjected. Still this classification of reprocessed and reused wool which was made at the hearings by the American Retail Federation is valuable, and we are glad the committee embodied the recommendations of the Retail Federation in its report.

The report of the committee also sustains women in their conviction that the Federal Trade Commission can enforce this legislation, basing its action upon the manufacturers' manufacturing specifications and that the old smoke screen that laboratory analysis was necessary for enforcement has been blown away. As one prominent woman has pointed out, "We do not need to resort to a microscope to find what is in a cake; we read the recipe." The same practical procedure will apply in the case of a wool product; the manufacturer's specification will tell what is in the wool product.

It is also very encouraging to read in the hearings that the Federal Trade Commission will not require additional appropriations and personnel for the enforcement of the legislation, but on the contrary expects a large proportion of voluntary compliance which would result in diminution of the types of complaints now required to be handled by the Commission, and even goes so far as to state:

This legislation, if passed, will so clarify the situation in respect to destructive or harmful practices in the marketing of wool products as to simplify the administration of the laws relating to the transactions in interstate commerce, thereby making possible a more effective use of the Commission's present facilities and tending to effect savings in the administration and enforcement costs in relation to the protection afforded to the public.

In conclusion, there is every reason to expect that the passage of this legislation will promote good relations among industry, distributors, and consumers, and prove a substantial aid to women in meeting their responsibilities as purchasing agents for their homes.

Willkie and McNary Run Full Speed in Opposite Directions

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WADE H. KITCHENS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, apparently the Republican nominee for Vice President, Senator McNARY, has accepted the advice which Secretary Ickes gave Mr. Willkie. In his acceptance speech the nominee for Vice President opened debate with his running mate. One of the clear-cut points of difference between Mr. Willkie and Senator McNARY appears to be the Democratic administration's reciprocal-trade program.

The following is one of Mr. Willkie's favorable statements on this program:

Now obviously it will not do for one great nation to become a free-trade country by itself. For the United States to erase its tariffs all at once would be ruinous to our people and many of our industries. The present Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, who is wise and temperate, realizes this. And so he adopted the reciprocal-trade agreements as a step toward increasing our foreign business gradually. Under this policy the United States takes up the problem of tariffs with each country separately; lists the products that it would like to export; studies a similar list submitted by the other country; and then a deal is arranged, each country making such concessions as it can, with the least possible harm and the most possible benefit to its own people. This agreement is then extended to apply to other countries too. What could be simpler or more in accord with common sense? What could be better qualified to benefit us, the people, as a whole? Of course, we have to make sacrifices. But the point is that, owing to the way the agreements are negotiated, the sacrifices are always, and should always be, less than the benefits gained. That is, we, the people, profit. (Source: Fortune Magazine, April 1940.)

The following is Senator McNARY's reply to Mr. Willkie which was given in the Senator's acceptance speech:

I have always opposed reciprocal-trade treaties, as formulated by the New Deal. When I spoke against their renewal last spring in the Senate, I charged that the treaties had failed to "dissipate, alleviate, or liquidate the uneconomic conditions" affecting agriculture. I hold to that opinion still. Moreover, as the war spreads the areas of closed trade, I gravely fear that the effects on agriculture may grow worse and we have no assurances that peace will restore foreign markets for our surpluses.

The Washington Post of August 28, although complimentary to other phases of Senator McNARY's acceptance speech, had the following to say regarding trade agreements:

Much less can be said for some of Mr. McNARY's specific proposals for the benefit of agriculture. It is futile to denounce reciprocal-trade agreements and to propose a two-price system for agriculture under present conditions. Neither the Senator nor anyone else can foresee what machinery the United States will need for the conduct of its foreign trade a few months or a few years hence. Decisions on such issues must necessarily be postponed until the conditions to be met are far less confused than they are today.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot be on both sides of a fence at one and the same time, one cannot ride two horses going in different directions at the same time. The consequences will be disastrous. We have that situation among the leaders of the Republican Party. The Courant, a Republican paper of Hartford, Conn., in an editorial gives some good advice:

THE HULL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Although Congress has voted to extend for another 3 years the authority of the President to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries "for the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States," the question may be expected to play an important part in the Presidential campaign. The debate in the Senate exemplified anew the truth of what General Hancock said back in 1880, "The tariff question is a local question," by which he meant that different sections of the country had an unequal interest in the enactment of tariff laws.

Opponents of the trade agreements gave lip service to the principle of reciprocity, so eloquently espoused by McKinley in the speech that he delivered at the Buffalo Exposition in 1901—a speech in which he said, "We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. * * * By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus." But while upholding the reciprocity idea, the opponents of the Hull program did not conceal their fears of its possible effects on local tariff situations. We shall hear a great deal more about that from now on, particularly in the agricultural States, where reciprocity has never been a popular issue.

Before the Republicans get too steamed up over the prospect of gaining votes by attacking the trade agreements they would do well to recall what they had to say about the tariff in their platform of 1932. They then declared that in attempting to fix duties on thousands of commodities it was unavoidable that some of the rates should, even at the time of their enactment, be too low or too high. Therefore, they renewed their faith in the policy of a flexible tariff, "giving power to the President, after investigation of an impartial commission * * * to modify the rates named by the Congress." President Hoover's veto of a bill, sponsored by the Democrats, which would have transferred from the President to Congress the authority to put into effect the findings of the Tariff Commission was strongly commended. Approval of that bill, it was asserted, "would have returned tariff making to politics and destroyed the progress made during 10 years of effort to lift it out of logrolling methods."

The Hull trade agreements are in reality little more than the application to the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act of 1930 of the flexible tariff provisions which gave the President, with the consent of the Tariff Commission, the power to increase or decrease existing rates of duty by not more than 50 percent. The present law provides that no agreement shall be concluded without prior consultation with the Tariff Commission and the Departments of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, and until an opportunity has been given to interested persons to present their views. This procedure appears to have been followed by Secretary Hull, although it may be questioned whether any great amount of attention has been given to the views of "interested persons." In the main the program offers a practical method of overcoming barriers to trade with a minimum of disturbance to domestic production, although under war conditions its effects cannot be fully appraised.

Twentieth Anniversary of the Proclamation of the Nineteenth Amendment

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CAROLINE O'DAY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the twentieth anniversary of the proclamation of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guaranteed to women the right to vote.

Very appropriately, each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives found on his desk on Tuesday a letter from Mrs. William T. Gayle, Jr., of Atlanta, Ga., an active participant in the movement for suffrage reform. Enclosed with this letter was a very impressive statement signed by 100 prominent women in the poll-tax States. These women are leaders in community, social, and political activities. Their declaration calls attention to the fact that 20 years have passed since women were given the right to vote, but that countless thousands of women are still, in effect, disfranchised in those Southern States which require payment of a poll tax before voting.

According to the Department of Labor, there are more than 4,000,000 American women who are still denied the right of franchise due to the voting levy.

Among lower-income families the right to vote must be exercised at a heavy price. The payment of the poll tax takes a relatively large toll from a tightly budgeted income. In such cases it is rarely possible for more than one member of a family to exercise the right to vote. It is usually the man who is permitted that precious right—precious to these people because it must be bought with much sacrifice. When the poll tax was abolished in Louisiana the number of men voting increased from 260,000 to 335,000 in 1936, an increase of 25 percent. However, the women's vote jumped from 135,000 to 260,000, an increase of almost 100 percent. Note the difference—25 percent for men, 100 percent for the women.

National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Hugh S. Johnson on the subject of our national defense.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ONE MAN'S OPINION

(By Hugh S. Johnson)

A month-by-month recounting of War Department testimony as to our military requirements before the congressional committees would make a ludicrous showing—and it would be most unfair.

It started with preparation for an Army of about 400,000 and now has reached a projection of 4,000,000. In comparison with the cold precision of Nazi military planning, it makes our General Staff look like a bunch of bush leaguers.

The answer to that is this: It is not the business of a general staff to plan policy. When these military estimates were first made, our Government was giving no attention to hemisphere defense and the great "safety belt" around the Americas or the conventions of Panama or Habana.

Step by step, in the rapidly expanding policy of intervention everywhere, our General Staff has been confronted with new and lightning-like changes in policy. There is this difference between the harnessing of Nazi foreign policy with Nazi military preparation—that Hitler planned nothing on foreign policy that his general staff hadn't been told to prepare in military strength and wasn't given time to prepare it. In our case, the whole surprising brainstorm shift in a constantly increasing foreign policy of threat and aggression has proceeded with no regard whatever to our military preparation to make it good and with no sufficient allowance of time and money to do so.

General Marshall's talk about an army of three to four million men was wholly based on a new diplomatic theory that we are to police every American country from the North Pole to Cape Horn. That theory is utterly fantastic and impossible. We can't afford it, couldn't do it, and have no business indulging in any such popular deceits and ludicrous international posturing.

It's about time that this Government settled down and decided exactly what its foreign policy is going to be, and, more precisely, as controlling that, exactly what policy it can enforce, without absurdity and possible disaster, within the realistic and reasonable limits of its present and immediately potential strength on land, sea, and in the air.

In that connection the immediate controlling nubbin is naval and political policy in the Pacific. As between our necessary defensive policy of remaining dominant on both American coasts as far south as Natal in Brazil and the addition to that of maintaining a threatening attitude in Asia, Indochina, and the East Indies, there is a difference of unestimated billions of dollars of expense and of comparative safety as contrasted with sprawling all over the map and constantly risking not only our prestige, but our peace and even our existence.

This is a question that has been scarcely even debated. For what stake, reason, or obligation are we becoming so insecure in the Atlantic because the bulk of our fleet is in the Pacific that Mr. Bullitt can tell our people that we are in as grave a danger of invasion as was France a year ago?

The foundation of that part of our policy should be brought promptly into discussion and threshed out to some understandable and defensible conclusion. There is no space to discuss it in this short column—or in a dozen columns—and continued columnar discussion just doesn't click. But, in all this dazzling confusion of kaleidoscopic change and mountainous expansion of debt and taxes, there is no fundamental of more importance or more poignantly needing the immediate attention of the American people than just why and how we have to defend the status quo in Asia as well as in the Americas.

Tribute to the Adams Family of Colorado

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON
OF COLORADO
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 29 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY ALVA A. SWAIN

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, may I have the unanimous consent of the Senate to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a splendid historical editorial by the popular Colorado columnist, Alva A. Swain, paying a well-deserved tribute to the Adams family, to which my distinguished colleague, Senator ADAMS, belongs?

This article delves into the Colorado history of this family and will be, I am sure, of especial interest to the Members of the Senate and other readers of the RECORD.

No family has made a greater contribution to the growth and development of my State than has the Adams family.

I am happy that I am joined in my opinion by many Washington observers that few Americans are serving their country more effectively than is Senator ADAMS. Good men, it seems, come from good sires.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNDER THE CAPITOL DOME—THE NAME IS ADAMS

(By Alva A. Swain)

The influence of the Adams family, long confined to this State, is now being felt in matters national.

Amid all of the world news that covers the front pages of the papers and that goes out over the air, there has come to be almost daily some mention of Senator ALVA B. ADAMS.

More than any other United States Senator has he, the last few weeks, been in front-page headlines and in national editorial discussion. His name has thus been used just because he has tried to protect the credit, as he sees it, of the Federal Government. He has stood for what he thinks is the best interests of the Nation and does not care whether it suits or does not suit a single individual on earth, just so long as his conscience is clear.

THE PEOPLE OF COLORADO KNOW WHY

The people of Colorado know the answer to the question why this position has been taken by the Senator. They know the background of the man. They know that the Adams family has had more influence on the development and the growth of this State politically than any other family that ever called it home.

There has not been a moment since the State was admitted into the Union that the Adams family was not at the forefront of its political destiny. They have been whipped, thrown out of office, been successful, been everything that can come to a family through the years, but they always come back and come back until today they have the honor of having been in the midst of every political campaign for the last 60 years.

Previous to now theirs has been a local mingling. They have not gone outside of the State to wield their influence, but have wielded it here. Now, Alva B. has started out to be a national figure. What his father, his uncles, and his cousins have been in the State, he now is being to the Nation. Naturally the folks back home wonder if he will succeed.

When he was campaigning 8 years ago his platform was, "I will do my best to be of service to Colorado."

When his Uncle Billy was campaigning for the legislature and the governorship he would say, "I will do my best." He left off the last six words of the platform of his nephew.

THERE WERE FOUR BROTHERS

Originally, there were four brothers in the Adams family. Alva was the eldest. John was second. Frank was third, and Billy was fourth. These were the four men who kept the name of Adams in the front line of leadership in this State for over a half century. Alva was Governor two times. Claimed he was elected the third term, but was unseated. That never hurt him one bit politically, because the people generally think he was cheated out of the office. He was the father of the present Senator ALVA B. ADAMS.

John never participated in Colorado politics to any great extent. At least his name was never mentioned in political matters. He moved to California and was a power out there.

Frank was the controlier of Denver politics for years. He never gave out an interview and never abused any one, but he had his hand on the situation as perhaps no other man ever had in Denver, unless it may have been Bob Speer. In controlling the Denver situation he was a power in State politics. He was often credited with being the best political man of the four, but that honor was generally given to Billy, who still lives at Alamosa.

Billy was in public office in the State over 50 years. He was never defeated, and held, in addition to local home county positions, the office of State representative, State senator, and Governor. His term of office in the three positions covered a continuous service to the State of 52 years. No man in the Nation ever held that type of a continuous record of service to the people.

The three brothers were fought, maligned, abused, supported, befriended, praised, and condemned all through the years that they were before the public, either as officeholders or as "back of the curtain controllers," but they never completely lost their magnetic hold on the people of this State.

Somehow the people had faith in the Adams family and they returned them to power and to prestige.

That is the background that Senator ALVA B. ADAMS carried with him when he started out to have an influence on national matters. And it is not without the facts to say that the majority, and a big majority, of the people of Colorado still have faith in the Adams family as he is representing it.

WHAT HE PROMISED TO DO

When he was nominated the first time he said he would do his best to represent the people of Colorado.

A short time after he started to serve in the Senate he came back to the State and delivered a talk before a gathering of Democratic Federal employees in which he intimated that they were not doing their work as they should. He said that an employee of the Government should do his best to earn his salary, and that if he was not going to do his best he had better get out of the service. Some of them thought it a good speech, but did not follow what he advised. Soon they were out of the service. The others found out that he meant it.

Later he made another address in Denver in which he said the Federal Government has scraped the bottom of the financial barrel in its expenditures and that he for one, was going to try to stop waste. In a still later address he declared that the Federal Treasury could not go on and on in its expenditures, without something snapping in a financial way.

When he refused to put out the recent $5,000,000,000 defense bill he was but fulfilling the promises he had made the people of the State in his many addresses.

He gets his thrift from his parents. His father vetoed and vetoed appropriation bills. The father kept the expenses of the State within its income and he did not increase taxation. His father used to say: "If you cannot afford another pair of shoes, have the old ones repaired and make them do a while longer." His Uncle Billy and his Uncle Frank were of the same nature. They used the pruning knife on appropriations whether they were public or private.

He is not in good standing with some of the members of his party who feel that the wishes of the President should be followed. But somehow the people who are on the street, the people who have known the Adams family for years and who know its traditions and its general worth to the State, the people who want taxes held down and the people who voted for Senator ADAMS are still back of him, and cherish the worth of the family which he represents has been to Colorado.

Foreign Policy of the United States

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 29 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACES' FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD several editorials from Wallaces' Farmer and relating to the foreign policy of the United States.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead of July 27, 1940]

WHAT KIND OF A WAR ARE WE IN FOR?—GET READY FOR ECONOMIC WAR—NOT LIKELY TO HAVE "SHOOTING WAR"

(By Clifford V. Gregory)

GET READY FOR ECONOMIC WAR—NOT LIKELY TO HAVE "SHOOTING WAR"

(Cliff Gregory, associate publisher of Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead, has recently returned from conferences at Washington with members of the National Defense Council. He is a member of the Agricultural Advisory Committee, named by Secretary Wallace, and the farmer director of the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank. Mr. Gregory's recommendations in this article are based on unusually thorough knowledge of the national and international situation)

The American people are scared for the first time since the British burned the National Capital in 1812; we are afraid of invasion from abroad.

In many cases, this wave of fear that has swept over the country amounts to panic. It is time to snap out of it, and replace hysteria with common sense.

Let's see if we can't winnow a few solid facts out of the chaos, and use them as a foundation on which to build a sensible policy to meet whatever may lie ahead.

We need to remember first that there are two kinds of war:

1. Shooting war.
2. Economic war.

Two kinds of preparedness are needed for these two kinds of war. Just now we are shoveling billions into preparedness for a shooting war, and doing almost nothing to prepare for an economic war. Yet it is the economic war, not the shooting war, that we need to fear most, and for which preparedness is most important.

If we get involved in a shooting war in the near future, it will be our own fault. There are two ways in which we may do it.

1. By sending our Navy and air force to help England.
2. By sending our armed forces to suppress Nazi uprisings in Latin America.

Hitler is not likely to attack this hemisphere, lurid magazine articles to the contrary notwithstanding.

Even if he were to invade the British Isles successfully, the British Navy might escape to Canada. Until the British Navy is destroyed or captured, Hitler cannot possibly attack the Western Hemisphere.

Even if the Nazis should capture or destroy the British Navy, the task of defeating our Navy and air force and landing an army on this continent is almost impossible. And to keep it from being thrown back into the ocean would be still more difficult.

Don't forget that Hitler is not a superman. His brilliant successes must necessarily hide many strains and stresses and weaknesses at home.

With the continent of Europe won, and with a tremendous job of economic consolidation ahead of him, he is not likely to be crazy enough to risk everything on the doubtful gamble of an invasion of the Americas.

There is nothing in North America that would make the gamble anywhere near worth the risk. There is nothing in South America that he cannot get more easily without fighting, if he can get it at all.

Hitler's war on the Americas will not be a shooting war. It will be an economic war. That is as certain as anything can be. Some of our money and our frenzied preparations ought to be diverted into preparedness for that economic war.

It is highly probable that the shooting war in Europe will be over this year and that it will leave us to face one of the two following situations:

1. A Nazi Europe wholly under German control. An undefeated British Empire. A negotiated peace that will recognize Germany's control of Europe and Britain's control of the seas.

2. A Nazi Europe, including the British Isles and a considerable part of the British and French and Dutch colonies, all under German control, with the British Navy either destroyed or captured.

Now, let's see what these two situations may mean to us. In either event we will have lost most of the European market for our farm products.

For 6 months or a year after the end of the war we shall probably sell large quantities of farm products to Europe, because the immediate need will be so great. After that, Europe's agriculture, organized efficiently by Germany, will produce enough so that imports will be small.

Germany plans to organize Europe and all other territory under its control into an economic and trade bloc, with all imports and exports under rigid German control. If American exporters or American nations try to deal with the Nazi trade bloc individually, they will be sunk. That will be true not only as to exports to the Nazi bloc but will also apply to exports to any other part of the world where we may meet Nazi competition.

The only way we can hope to retain any export business at all in the face of this economic war will be to organize a trade bloc of our own. Present talk about a pan-American export cartel, to handle all exports of agricultural products from this hemisphere through one agency, is a step in this direction.

If Britain is undefeated, the pressure of events will undoubtedly compel us to join with it in the formation of a Western Hemisphere-British Empire trade bloc. Such a bloc will be even more powerful than the Nazi trade bloc. It will not be as ruthless, for we have not learned that yet, but under such a set-up we might hope to trade with and compete with the Nazi trade bloc on something like equal terms.

If Britain is defeated and the British Navy lost, all that would be left to us for sure would be North America, with the hope that at least the northern part of South America might go along with us.

In that case, we could depend on little or nothing in the way of farm exports to the rest of the world. At the same time, industry would be upset by the loss of its export markets.

The task of adjusting industry and agriculture to the North American market would be difficult, but no more difficult and less expensive than the task of rearmament.

Let's look at it this way. Suppose an earthquake should submerge all the world except North America. Would we sit and wail that we were ruined? Or would we set to work to build up a sound prosperity in what was left of the world? The latter would be our choice, of course, and we should undoubtedly be successful.

We can be prosperous and peaceful and safe here in North America without any intercourse with the rest of the world. It is not what we would choose, but if the choice is forced upon us that is no reason why we should fold up.

The biggest task will be a readjustment of our thinking. We have been taught that the only way we can be prosperous is to ship a lot of our goods abroad. Whether we get paid for them or not doesn't seem to matter.

We haven't been getting paid, in the main, for over 20 years—not with anything of value to us. During the twenties we were paid with worthless notes. During the thirties we were paid with gold for which we had no use.

Do we have to be poor during the forties because we must work to produce for ourselves, instead of working for nothing to produce for someone else?

To believe that is silly. A lot of readjustments must be made, of course, especially in agriculture. If our production is to be used here at home, we will have to produce the things our people want.

And we will have to arrange matters so that all our people have an opportunity to earn and buy more of the things they want. But that ought to be better for us, not worse, than producing things for Europe without getting paid for them.

A tightly organized Europe under Nazi management will be more prosperous than it has been for a long time. Freer trade inside the continent, a smaller burden of armament, and efficient German organization will see to that.

The danger to our democracy is that while Europe's prosperity increases ours will decrease. That is the only thing that will sprout any sizeable Nazi movement in this country.

So it is highly important that we should plan for prosperity during the post-war years, no matter how changed the rules may be. More planning will be necessary—more regimentation, if you want to call it that. But we can make it democratic planning and democratic regimentation.

We must be thoroughly organized to win the economic war. We can't blunder through it. But our organization need not be of the Nazi type, nor need it interfere with such important liberties as freedom of speech and thought. It can be the kind of organization that will create much wider opportunities for the young people of America than they have had for the past 10 years.

Agriculture should begin its program of economic preparedness right now. What adjustments in production will we have to make to meet the new situation? What is the best way to make them? What can we do to cushion the adjustments, so that farm income will not drop during the transition period?

Facts should be compiled to answer these and many other questions. Those facts, and their practical application to the problem that confronts us, should be discussed at farm meetings this winter.

Agriculture is better organized than it has ever been before. Let us use that organization to prepare for the new kind of economic world into which we are moving. The future for agriculture and for our country is not black. It is just different. Surely, we have enough courage and ability to meet and conquer any new situation which may confront us.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of June 29, 1940]

KEEP COOL AND STUDY NEW WAR FACTS

The rapid changes that are taking place over in Europe are so important to the farmer of the Corn Belt that he cannot allow himself to be fooled about any of the new facts that are being made clear. Here are several points to remember:

1. The Nazis are not likely to invade the United States—at least, not for a long, long time. The reorganization of Europe, the Balkan states, the new African colonies, and the handling of Russia would take up the energies of the Nazis, even if the British were out of it.

It is to be remembered that it took a month for the Nazis to get 60,000 men into Norway. The 26 miles of water which lie between England and the Nazi Army is still a difficult barrier. Our 3,000 miles of Atlantic Ocean, plus our Navy, plus our air force, plus our Army, make invasion impossible from the military standpoint.

2. If we send our Navy over to help out the British, or if we remove the Neutrality Act and permit American ships to be sunk while trying to run the blockade, or if in any other way we let ourselves be pulled into war with the Nazis, we will run the risk of a long war, and possible defeat.

Is it safe for us to risk a war in the Atlantic while we are still on bad terms with Japan, in the Pacific? Let's remember what it means to us to get into a war in Europe. We'd be spending twenty billions a year for arms—over one-fourth of our present national income—and raising huge armies for service overseas. Picture all the difficulties involved in making Europe do what we want it to do. The war might drag on for 5 or 10 years. The same facts that make invasion of the United States difficult or impossible make our invasion of Europe difficult or impossible.

3. Even a policy of defense of the Americas, while less difficult than intervention in Europe, demands a tremendous increase in economic and military planning. We shall have to take over British and French islands in American waters. We shall have to work with South American governments to see that no Nazi foothold is won there. We shall have to make peace with Japan, and forget about fighting naval wars in Asiatic waters.

But in doing this we have two new advantages. The present war is being won by machines, not mass armies. The United States can build and man airplanes with a relatively small professional air force, can build and man tanks with a relatively small professional army. The bomber has made defense of the United States much easier than in the old days of purely naval defense.

These are the things to remember when bombs drop on British cities and when all our sympathies incline us to help the victims of a cruel war. Americans must think of their own children in estimating the situation and do what is best for their own Nation.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of August 10, 1940]

IF OUR RUBBER SUPPLIES ARE TO BE CUT OFF

It may turn out that the most important part of our preparedness program is the work of the Department of Agriculture in increasing rubber production in tropical South America. For some time now, the Department has been helping South American planters to develop better strains of rubber trees, to overcome diseases, and to get production in the south in shape to supply our needs.

Now, of course, we get most of our rubber from the East Indies. That is our worst military handicap. To assure ourselves of rubber supplies, the Roosevelt administration is taking long chances—in a naval way—by trying to bluff Japan out of the Dutch East Indies.

The problem of national defense would be much more simple if we could get our rubber from South America. One queer thing about this vital program was that Congress tried to cut out the agricultural appropriations for this work before the May offensive, and only put them back in the bill after the "total" war was on.

We need the friendship and the business of tropical South America if we are to be in a position to defend the Canal Zone effectively and if we are to abandon our outposts in Asia. The Department of Agriculture has done some excellent pioneer work in this field, but will have to work faster now.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of July 27, 1940]

CENSORSHIP HIDES VITAL WAR FACTS

Americans still do not know what is going on abroad. In spite of the admirable efforts of news and radio men to get the news to the American public, the censorship in warring nations makes it impossible to get the real news through.

That is what the collapse of France has proved. Before the surrender, very few persons here in America had any idea that the French Army was both underequipped and badly led; that the conservatives in politics were more willing to let the Nazis win than they were to risk their property in a last-ditch fight, and that millions of workers and farmers thought their share of the national income was too small to be worth fighting for.

All of these things were true, however, but the censorship kept the United States from learning about them.

What we heard instead was a lot about the battle of the "democracies against the dictators." Now we realize that this was far too simple an explanation. Partly, the war is the revolt of a young, growing empire against the domination of an old empire; partly, it is a social revolution, with the Nazis upsetting the old masters of society and putting a new crowd on top; partly, it is a conflict between a regimented dictatorship on one side and on the other the so-called democracies that were never quite willing to give democracy a real trial.

If Great Britain beats off Nazi attacks now, it will probably try to develop an alliance with Russia and possibly later with Italy, in an attempt to defeat a Nazi-controlled western Europe. We may see even stranger things than the recent sinking of French ships by British gunfire.

But it will continue to be hard to find out what is really going on. Censorship, plus the incredible complexity of European politics, will keep Americans guessing wrong half the time on who is on what side, and which nation is going to double-cross what other nation next.

A Tribute to the Isolationists

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWIN C. JOHNSON

OF COLORADO

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 29 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL BY RICHARD L. NEUBERGER

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on August 9 of this year the Oregon Labor Press printed an interesting editorial, entitled "A Tribute to the Isolationists," written by Richard L. Neuberger. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Oregon Labor Press of August 9, 1940]

A TRIBUTE TO THE ISOLATIONISTS

(By Richard L. Neuberger)

Last week the Oregonian printed a communication from an English Army officer bitterly denouncing the leaders of the isolationist movement in America. "Isolationist" is a much-abused word, but the men ordinarily referred to as isolationists are among the noblest and most useful individuals in the country.

Perhaps the most famous isolationist in the recent history of our Nation has been a man from the Pacific Northwest, the late William E. Borah. President Roosevelt referred to him this year as "a very great American." Borah devoted his life to tolerance, peace, and humanity. In 1931 he prophesied that there would be terrible trouble in Europe if something were not done about the Versailles Treaty, reparations, and the Polish Corridor.

Senator Borah will be remembered and respected long after his present detractors are forgotten. He has not been the only noted isolationist. What about the late Harry Lane, great wartime Senator from Oregon, grandson of the first Governor of the Oregon Territory, many times mayor of Portland, leader of the Democratic Party in this State? He was an isolationist, and in 1917 he had the courage to predict the World War would not make the world safe for democracy.

Senator CHARLES L. MCNARY, of whom both Democrats and Republicans in Oregon are rightly proud, was recently referred to by Alsop and Kintner as an isolationist. Senator HOMER T. BONE, of Washington, who has fought a long fight to retain the water-power sites of the Northwest for the people, is an isolationist. So is Senator D. WORTH CLARK, of Idaho, one of the most distinguished graduates in the annals of Portland University.

A leader of the isolationists in Congress is Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri, one of the first national commanders of the American Legion. He is the son of a noted isolationist, Champ Clark, great Democratic Speaker of the House of Representatives, who was another in 1917 not afraid to say that the World War would fail to end war.

Probably the most outstanding isolationist today is BURTON K. WHEELER, senior Senator from Montana. He emerged from the recent Democratic Convention a great figure, having won against overwhelming odds a battle to write into the platform a pledge not to send American soldiers overseas. Last week the Democratic voters of Montana gave Senator WHEELER a decisive 3-to-1 endorsement at the polls. For the past 20 years he has been in the forefront of nearly every struggle for liberty, security, and democracy. Who looms more available as the Democratic Party's standard-bearer in 1944?

This list of illustrious American isolationists—or, I should say, of men regarded in the public mind and the press as isolationists—could be continued indefinitely. Let me name a few: Senator Hiram Johnson, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Senator Sheridan Downey, Senator David I. Walsh, Oswald Garrison Villard, Stuart Chase, John T. Flynn, Col. Charles Erskine Scott Wood, Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr., John Chamberlain, Harry Elmer Barnes.

Among these men are Republicans and Democrats, critics of the New Deal and stanch supporters of the New Deal, conservatives and liberals. By and large they are men who believe that resort to force and blood and thunder should be the last, rather than the first, resort of the great American democracy in which we live. They are men who would rather get a man a job at a living wage, find him a home and security, than make any plans to involve our Nation in foreign war.

The greatest of all American isolationists once said, "I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take an active part in the quarrels of Europe. Their political interests are entirely distinct from ours. Their mutual jealousies, their balance of power, their complicated alliances, their forms and principles of government, are all foreign to us. They are nations of eternal war."

The author of those words, which are the creed of many American isolationists, was a very great man. His name was Thomas Jefferson.

Army Enlistments, Fiscal Year 1940

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MALCOLM C. TARVER

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

TABULATION BY THE LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement:

[The Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service]

Enlistments, State of residence as tabulated from enlistment papers, fiscal year 1940

State	Number of enlistments	Number of enlistments per 100,000 population (census, 1930)
Alabama	4,545	172
Arizona	642	149
Arkansas	2,532	137
California	5,695	100
Colorado	1,892	183
Connecticut	1,376	86
Delaware	205	89
District of Columbia	413	81
Florida	2,085	142
Georgia	5,906	203
Idaho	723	187
Illinois	6,794	89
Indiana	3,189	98
Iowa	1,994	80
Kansas	2,304	122
Kentucky	7,326	280
Louisiana	2,519	119
Maine	1,268	160
Maryland	1,501	92
Massachusetts	4,268	100
Michigan	3,310	69
Minnesota	1,762	68
Mississippi	2,338	116
Missouri	3,149	87
Montana	664	125
Nebraska	1,633	118
Nevada	236	[1] 262
New Hampshire	497	108
New Jersey	3,007	74
New Mexico	553	131
New York	11,092	88
North Carolina	6,220	196
North Dakota	585	86
Ohio	4,326	65
Oklahoma	5,512	230
Oregon	1,574	165
Pennsylvania	14,586	153
Rhode Island	745	109
South Carolina	3,121	180
South Dakota	724	100
Tennessee	4,502	153
Texas	14,670	252
Utah	536	105
Vermont	427	122
Virginia	4,280	176
Washington	2,183	139
West Virginia	3,598	209
Wisconsin	2,973	101
Wyoming	451	205
Hawaii	122	34
Panama Canal Zone	25	[1] 83
Philippines	57	4.7
Puerto Rico	382	241
United States Army posts	2,353
Alaska	33	[1] 66
Total enlistments	159,403
Average per 100,000		133

[1] Estimate given on basis of 100,000 population; in this case below that figure.

Source: U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census: Fifteenth Census of the United States, 1930, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., 1933.

The Milk Trust Is Now Endeavoring To Nominate a Candidate for Congress in the Thirty-second New York District—Whom the Lobbyists Cannot Control They Seek To Eliminate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS D. CULKIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 15, 1940

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, the bane of the dairy farmer lies in his difficulty in getting free and open access to the markets. During my 12 years' service in the House I have fought vigorously in and out of season to take the marketing chains off the dairyman. In doing this I have incurred the complete hatred of the middleman and the distributors, who are destroying the north-country farmer. Today I wish to discuss the present situation of the dairyman, our past attempts to improve his desperate condition, and the procedure which I believe should be followed to free him from his present economic servitude.

Mr. Speaker, American dairying is a major agricultural industry, and its chief product, milk, is absolutely essential to the growth of the young and the welfare of the people. The cow is, in fact, the "foster mother of the human race." Twelve million people within these United States are dependent upon dairying for their livelihood, and there are approximately 4,000,000 dairy units in America. Much of the wealth that is created in my district comes from the sale of products of the dairy farms.

THE DAIRYMAN'S CONTRIBUTION

Let me say primarily that no man in agriculture is performing a more important national function than the American dairyman. Despite the fact that the output of the dairyman is essential to national well-being, there is no agricultural group whose economic condition has been more depressed. There is no farming group whose situation has been more thoroughly exploited by the middleman or whose situation has been so outrageously manhandled by govermental experimentation. The dairymen have not worn a path to the Treasury and have not been on the firing line clamoring for governmental aid. But their situation is no less grevious, and the farmer is tied to the soil while his situation cries to heaven for relief. At the present time the dairyman's land is being sold for taxes with his mortgages growing bigger and while he is making a necessary contribution to the health of the people he finds himself without sufficient return to live comfortably, free from the stress of poverty.

I wish to review briefly the attempts that have been made during the past few years in Congress by myself and other Congressmen interested in the dairymen to alleviate and aid them to obtain a living price for their milk.

TRADE AGREEMENTS INJURIOUS

We sought to obtain an amendment to the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act to provide no further reduction be permitted in the tariff structure on dairy products, and also that such agreements should be ratified by the Senate of the United States. In a speech some years ago Secretary Wallace eulogized the trade agreement with Canada which gives the Canadian farmer a reduction of 2 cents a pound on Cheddar cheese. Under this trade agreement Canada was also given a quota on cream and cattle. In treaties with France, Switzerland, and the Netherlands the duty on dairy products has been lowered from 20 to 35 percent, although production costs in these countries are less than half of what they are in America. The result has been that while the price of other farm products has been greatly increased, the price on dairy products remains static or depressed despite the greatly increased cost of production which has fallen upon the shoulders of the dairymen. Importation of dairy products amounted to more than $16,000,000 in 1936. The Democratic leadership of the Ways and Means Committee of the House refused to give us a hearing on this proposition, despite the fact every other nation with whom treaties have been made, whether European, South American, or otherwise, requires the ratification of the treaties by their legislative assemblies.

DISEASE ERADICATION

We sought to obtain appropriations for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis and Bang's disease. The Democratic-controlled House committee, although they had voted some $2,000,000,000 for the wheat, corn, and cotton farmer, refused to give us adequate appropriations for that purpose. We sought an additional $11,000,000 and were given three and one-half after a protracted and savage struggle.

SANITARY CONTROL

We sought extension of the Lenroot-Taber Act, which prohibits the importation of cream and milk into the United States, to all dairy products unless such products have been produced by dairy herds under official tests for bovine tuberculosis. More than $300,000,000 have been spent in continental United States by State and Federal Governments for eradication of bovine tuberculosis. The farmer himself receives only nominal reimbursement for the loss of his cow and sometimes his whole herd and has contributed more than $100,000,000 to the purpose of insuring sanitary production of his milk. I know of no other country in the world, except New Zealand, where such regulations are enforced. The American span of life has been extended 10 years, and it has been said by reliable authority that this is largely due to the sanitary production of dairy products. Despite these facts, the administration-controlled committee of the House on Agriculture refused to even give us a hearing on the grounds it would be violating principles laid down in the trade agreements. To add insult to injury, the State Department wrote into these treaties the provision that we could not impose sanitary regulations without the consent of other nations, none of whom had made more than the first approach toward disease eradication and the production of dairy products by sanitary means. The dairyman is still being sold across the lakes and over the seas by the internationalists in charge of this program.

THE FIGHT OF OLEO

We sought to obtain an additional excise tax on foreign fats and oils. The chairman of the Democratic Ways and Means Committee refused to even give us a hearing on this proposition.

The last count in the indictment revolves around an added 5-cent tax on oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. The proposition did not even reach the hearing stage in the Agriculture Committee, as the cotton-oil group, who were, of course, interested in butter substitutes, were in command. We vainly called the administration's attention to the fact that while only $5,000,000 worth of cottonseed products went into the manufacture of vegetable margarine, the dairyman of the North and East was buying $40,000,000 worth of cottonseed byproducts as food for cattle. In prosperous years the purchase by the dairyman amounted to $1,000,000,000 a year. We vainly called attention to the fact that the profits from the sale of butter substitutes went largely to the Philippines or to the "packer kings."

We called attention to the finding of the American Federation of Labor, the largest body of consumers in America, that the use of butter substitutes was injurious to childhood and particularly harmful to eyesight. We called attention to the fact that while butter substitutes were synthetic, counterfeit food lacking in vitamins necessary to sustain life, they were also destroying the market for dairy products. We called attention to our neighbor, Canada, with 10,000,000 people in comparative modest circumstances, which had abolished the manufacture and sale of butter substitutes. I myself, introduced a bill patterned after the Canadian measure. These protests were all in vain. They conceded the justice of our demands in the interest of the dairyman and public health, but under the political lash and urge of loyalty refused to give us the relief asked. The opposition to our program went further. The Margarine Institute, financed by the "packer kings," caused to be introduced a bill that dignified oleomargarine by giving it a statutory name and abolished most of the present taxes on the nefarious product. The measures we proposed all died aborning, slaughtered in the House, always at the behest and command of the Department of Agriculture and Secretary Wallace. On all these matters I have fought shoulder to shoulder with the cooperative groups and have spent a great amount of time fighting their battles. In doing this I have cooperated with Mr. Fred Brenckman, the legislative representative of the National Grange at Washington, and Mr. Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation. I refer the members of the cooperatives or members of the Grange to these men for an estimate of my services.

ORGANIZATION NECESSARY

The course I am going to suggest is obviously sound. It is taking a leaf from the book of the distributors and nimble middlemen. It is embraced in one word, "organize." Organize to the last man. Organize until it hurts. You must give up your ancient individualism and join up with the cooperatives or other organizations. I know there are two schools of thought in New York State on the proposition, and, so far as I am concerned, I care not which vehicle you ride in if you but present a united front to the enemy. Do not be too tenacious of your own views on organization. The evil condition of the dairyman has been due in considerable part to his unwillingness to join forces with existing organizations. Dairymen have been too prone to see the mote in the other fellow's eye and sometimes have hived with their oppressors. There are honest, sincere, and able men in all groups. Seek them out and join forces with them. Put away your phobias and hates and make a common stand against the oppressor. It was the Napoleonic conception to divide the enemy in two and then destroy each part in turn. The distributors in the past have taken a leaf from the book of Napoleon and you have been destroyed piecemeal. In the present hour of your distress I hope you can see the logic of my suggestions.

Labor in the industrial field has forged ahead of the farmer. Labor is in a fair way now to obtain a decent return for its skill and toil under the collective-bargaining principles. That is sound national procedure and applies to the dairyman. If you but organize under loyal, able, and honest leadership, you will come into your own and obtain a just and living price for your product. There are plenty of profits in the dairying game and the consuming public is paying adequate prices. The trouble is that the dairyman is not receiving his share of the returns. The great combinations of capital, including the Borden Co. and the Dairy Products' Corporation, hold you in the hollow of their hands.

ADMINISTRATION HOSTILE TO DAIRYMAN

I have come to believe that under the present administration the case of the dairyman will not be aided or advanced. The people of the district honored me by making me a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Philadelphia. Out of that convention came the nomination of Wendell Willkie for the presidency. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Willkie on several occasions and was greatly impressed with his sane, liberal viewpoint on all economic questions. He reminded me strongly of Theodore Roosevelt in his viewpoints and beliefs. The country is in desperate condition with President Roosevelt warmongering continually. I am certain that if Roosevelt is elected we will be in the war before the end of the year. Every dairyman, whatever his political affiliation, should support Willkie and McNary.

VAST PROFITS OF MILK TRUST

A recent and very able report of Attorney General Bennett of New York on the situation of the domestic milkshed showed that the Milk Trust was paying 108-percent profit on its manufactured dairy products and 24 percent on fluid milk. The Milk Trust calls the milk that goes into manufactured products surplus and pays little or nothing for it. Despite the slight gains that have been made the dairyman is still far below the cost of production and as I have frequently said in 10 years they would be scattered to the four winds if the present evil marketing conditions continue.

ANTITRUST PROSECUTION

I have been somewhat instrumental in getting Attorney General Arnold, in charge of antitrust prosecution, interested in the milk situation in the New York milkshed. Mr. Arnold is an able public servant and has agreed to bring these malefactors to book. My efforts in this connection have not escaped numerous milk lobbyists in Albany and Washington, and they have been turning heaven and earth to get a candidate to run against me. Last spring in Albany these gentry endeavored to get several candidates to run against me, promising them unlimited and liberal financing. In other words, these bloated lobbyists, who are fattening on the toil and sweat of the north country dairymen, desire to name my successor in Congress. I am content to leave that issue to the people of the district.

During my service in Washington I have stood foursquare for the economic and personal rights of the people of the Thirty-second District. In doing this I have, of course, incurred powerful enmities who are bending every effort to eliminate me from the congressional service. I repeat that I am entirely content to leave that issue to the people of the district.

Registration of Aliens

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, August 28, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. FRANCIS BIDDLE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Hon. Francis Biddle, Solicitor General of the United States, delivered over the Columbia Broadcasting System, August 25, 1940:

When the Alien Registration Act was passed by the Congress of the United States this past June, I gave it as my opinion that the overwhelming majority of noncitizens in the United States were loyal to our traditions of liberty and freedom and that they were peaceful and law-abiding residents of the Nation.

Now, 2 months later, with the alien-registration program about to begin, I am even more fully convinced of the validity of that belief. During this preparatory period we have had the active cooperation of hundreds of organizations who are concerned with the welfare of our noncitizens; of practically all of the foreign-language newspapers published in the United States; and of thousands of individual alien residents. Because of this cooperation, I am certain that the alien-registration program will be carried out intelligently and efficiently.

I am obliged to the Columbia Broadcasting System for giving me the opportunity to talk personally to those who are required by law to register and to the citizens of the United States who can cooperate with the Government in putting into effect the alien-registration program. First, I will address my remarks directly to the noncitizen.

The provisions of the Alien Registration Act are fairly simple. The registration period begins on Tuesday, August 27, and extends through December 26 of this year. Registration will take place at all first- and second-class post offices and at all post offices located at county seats. Every alien in the United States who is 14 years of age or over must register in person and be fingerprinted. This applies to persons who have taken out their first naturalization papers but have not yet got their second papers. Aliens under 14 must be registered by their parents or guardians but will not be fingerprinted. However, when they reach the age of 14, they must then register in person and at that time be fingerprinted.

After you have registered, a receipt card will be sent you from Washington. This card will serve as evidence of your having registered.

In addition, aliens must notify the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington when they change their residence address. Such notification must be made within 5 days of the change. Change of address cards will be available at the post offices.

It is my duty to warn all noncitizens that the Alien Registration Act is not voluntary but compulsory. You must register. Failure to comply with the provisions of the Federal law calls for severe penalties. If you are not clear about the law, or if you are not clear about your citizenship status, consult the post office or the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Registration will not have any bearing whatsoever on your citizenship status.

You, as an alien, naturally want to know what questions the Government will ask you. You want to know why you are required to register. It may be that the Registration Act has caused you needless concern. You may think of registration as an ordeal inflicted upon you by a hostile Government.

If so, let me relieve you of those doubts and fears. If you are a loyal, law-abiding noncitizen, registration cannot harm you in any way. In fact, registration will serve as a means of protection for you. If you have nothing to hide, you have nothing to fear.

We have tried to make the registration process as simple as possible. No one need be embarrassed when registering. You will not be required to report at a police station; you will register at a post office. The average registration should not take more than 20 minutes. You will not be subjected to a hostile cross-examination; you will be received in a spirit of friendliness. Insofar as possible, registration will be private, and registration hours will be adjusted to suit local conditions.

You may obtain a sample registration form from your nearest post office and study the questions at your leisure. The questions are identical with those you will answer when you register. When you go to the post office to register, bring the prepared sample form with you. By so doing, registration will be much easier.

Should you have difficulty in answering any of the questions in the sample form, I suggest you consult your friends or relatives or anyone who may be of assistance. Frequently you may get the best assistance from a reputable and established social agency. It is perfectly legal to consult anyone you wish. The Post Office Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice stand ready to be of every possible assistance.

What information are you required to give the registration authorities? Well, you will be asked the usual questions to establish your identification. You will be asked how and when you entered the United States and the method of transportation you used to get here. You must state the length of time you have been here and how long you intend to remain. If you have had any naval or military service, you will be asked to describe it. You must list the names of organizations, clubs, or societies in which you participate or hold membership. Your activities on behalf of any organization must be described, and you must state whether or not the organization promotes the interests of a foreign government.

You will not find these questions unreasonable. It is logical that the United States Government should know who and where its noncitizens are and what they are doing. Every nation requires such information; and in dangerous times such as these, it is imperative that we do likewise.

The information obtained through registration will be sent to the Department of Justice in Washington. Such information will be kept secret and confidential. No one will have access to the records without the express permission of the Attorney General of the United States. I can assure you that these records will not be used to compile blacklists. They will not be used to the detriment of law-abiding people.

I wish to call the attention of the alien to the fact that he must register in person. Fingerprinting is part of registration and all fingerprinting will be done at the post office when you register. No one can register for you. Exceptions will be made only for those people who are bed-ridden or who are confined to institutions. Also, there is no fee or charge whatsoever connected with registration. There are a few people who are trying to make a racket of registration. They are attempting to extort money from aliens for phony services. The Department of Justice will take care of them. Do not pay anyone for any service connected with registration. The Post Office Department and the Department of Justice will assist you for nothing in every possible way.

And now an additional word about fingerprinting. I understand that some aliens are worried about being fingerprinted. The Alien Registration Act calls for fingerprinting because it is the most accurate and dependable method of identification known to science.

Many people still feel that there is a stigma attached to being fingerprinted. It is true that criminals are fingerprinted; but it is also true that millions of law-abiding citizens have placed their fingerprints on record with the Government. I have been fingerprinted, as have millions of others who served in the armed forces of the United States. All Federal civil-service employees are fingerprinted. Even postal-savings depositors are fingerprinted. I assure you that there is no stigma attached to being fingerprinted in this day and age.

We who are citizens view the law-abiding noncitizen of this country as a guest of the United States. You who are not as yet citizens should not consider registration as an imposition, but as a measure vital to the security of the United States—a measure designed to safeguard the national household in which you and your family make your home and livelihood. Consider registration in this light and you will interpret it not as an ordeal but as a patriotic duty.

And now I wish to say a few words to those of you who are American citizens. The intention of the Congress in passing the Alien Registration Act of 1940 was to get full and complete information about the aliens residing in the United States. But it was not the intention of Congress to start a witch hunt or a program of persecution of peaceful and law-abiding aliens.

It is estimated that there are in this country some 3,600,000 aliens. Many of them are on the road to citizenship. An overwhelming majority of them, as I have said before, are loyal to our democratic traditions. Let us keep them loyal and let us help them to become good American citizens. That would be consistent with our American traditions.

It may sound trite, yet it is well to point out that every citizen of the United States was once an alien or is a descendant of an alien. This is true of the President of the United States, the Members of the United States Supreme Court, the Members of Congress, of me, of you, and of the man who became a citizen last week. I think it is well for us to remember that fact when we discuss the problem of aliens in the United States.

We should not forget, also, that, throughout our history, aliens or noncitizens have contributed in no small measure to our economic and intellectual development. Some of our greatest citizens were people who came to our shores from other lands. Alexander Hamilton, Carl Schurz, William S. Knudsen, the present Senator from the State of New York, ROBERT F. WAGNER—to mention but a few—came to us from other countries. Until they became naturalized citizens, they were aliens. And so today, of the 3,600,000 noncitizens in our country, many are destined to play important parts in our future development.

Let us not get overzealous or hysterical about the noncitizen in our country. Let us use the coming 4 months' registration period to assist him. If you have a relative or a friend or a neighbor who must register under the Alien Registration Act, perhaps you can help him. Whether or not you can help him, in a concrete way, to register, a friendly and hospitable attitude toward him will in itself be helpful.

I need not be reminded of the fact that there are some aliens in our country who are dangerous, who are anxious to undermine our form of government, who would bite the hand that is feeding and sheltering them. And, I am sorry to say, that subversive acts are not always confined to aliens.

We in the Department of Justice will apprehend such troublemakers, whether aliens or citizens. We will do so systematically, conscientiously, and legally. But we do not propose, and the great majority of American citizens agree with us, to tolerate the persecution of innocent and law-abiding noncitizens who are residing in our country. Let us help those noncitizens who are worthy of our help. Let us help them during this registration period, and let us help them to become enthusiastic American citizens.

In closing, on behalf of the Department of Justice, I wish to thank the various Government agencies, notably the Post Office Department, and the Government Printing Office, and the Work Projects Administration for their telling and unselfish help in preparing for the alien-registration program. And I also wish to thank the numerous private organizations—the social welfare agencies, the veterans' organizations, the patriotic and fraternal societies—and the thousands of patriotic men and women who have assisted us, for their unselfish and sympathetic cooperation.

Such assistance has made a very complex job considerably easier. I ask for their continued cooperation during the 4-month registration period.

Senator McNary Did Not Accept Mr. Willkie

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PATRICK J. BOLAND

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker Senator MCNARY's charge, in his acceptance speech, that the trade policies of this administration have been injurious to farmers is as completely at variance with the facts as it is with the pronouncements of his party's candidate for the Presidency, to whom he blandly pledges his allegiance in this campaign.

The utter falsity of the assumptions on which the Senator rests his case has been pointed out so many times in Congress and out during the past few years that further repetition has long since become monotonous. His primary assumption is that the American market has been taken away from the American farmer under the trade-agreements program and that farmers would be better off under embargo tariffs. With respect to this whole proposition, I should like to quote as follows from an address which Secretary Hull made before the last annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation in Chicago on December 5, 1939:

If experience is any teacher at all, it should have taught every one of us by now that the notion that farmers can be saved by embargo tariffs is a snare and a delusion.

It is politically impossible to grant tariff embargoes to some groups and withhold them from others. When such embargoes are granted generally, the result, as was the case in 1930–32, is a collapse of our foreign trade, vanishing foreign markets for our farm and other surpluses, a prostrate agriculture, and a prostrate Nation.

It is not a question of giving the American market to the American farmer or taking it away from him. He has already got practically all of the American market, as he has always had it, except—as I have said—for a few types of products that we do not grow in sufficient quantities for our own needs even though we impose high tariffs on most of them. Nobody proposes to adjust any tariff rate in such a way as to diminish the sales of American farm products in the home market. The sole aim is, rather, to increase such sales in both the domestic and the foreign markets.

We all know that the home market just will not absorb our large surpluses of cotton, corn, and pork products, tobacco, wheat, and fruits of various kinds, not to mention other products. We must either find outlets abroad or else see these surpluses back up on us until we are overwhelmed by them.

It is idle for the Senator or any other like-minded person to try to dodge the issue by attempting to make an over-all comparison of the average conditions in agriculture during the past 7 years of this administration with the preceding 7 years under earlier administrations. It was the terrible conditions that prevailed in 1932, under Smoot-Hawleyism and other false policies to which the Senator would now have us return, that this administration had to contend with. If the trade policies followed by this administration have hurt farmers, how does it come that cash farm income, which in 1932 had fallen to the ridiculously low level of $4,700,000,000, rose by 1939 to $7,700,000,000, exclusive of benefit payments—at the same time that our total foreign trade was rising from the pitiful level of $2,900,000,000 to $5,500,000,000?

I suggest that the Senator examine the figures in the following table and then further explain his statement about the welfare of farmers under the Hawley-Smoot tariff and under trade agreements.

Average prices received by farmers

	Unit	1932, Hawley-Smoot	July 15, 1940, trade agreements
Wheat	Bushel	$0.382	$0.614
Corn	Bushel	.319	.631
Oats	Bushel	.157	.283
Tobacco	Pound	.105	.220
Cotton	Pound	.065	.095
Potatoes	Bushel	.392	.821
Hogs	Hundredweight	3.44	5.78
Beef cattle	Hundredweight	4.07	7.26
Veal calves	Hundredweight	5.00	8.56
Lambs	Hundredweight	4.40	7.85
Butter	Pound	.208	.256
Milk	Hundredweight	1.27	1.67
Sheep	Hundredweight	2.40	3.60

If the Senator, as his party's candidate for the Vice Presidency, had been as anxious to show his fealty to his party's candidate for the Presidency as he professed to be, he could have profited by reading what Mr. Willkie has said at numerous times in the past on this very subject, as, for example, the following in April 1940:

Now, obviously, it will not do for one great nation to become a free-trade country by itself. For the United States to erase its tariffs all at once would be ruinous to our people and many of our industries. The present Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, who is wise and temperate, realizes this. And so he adopted the reciprocal-trade agreements as a step toward increasing our foreign business gradually. Under this policy the United States takes up the problem of tariffs with each country separately; lists the products that it would like to export; studies a similar list submitted by the other country; and then a deal is arranged, each country making such concessions as it can, with the least possible harm and the most possible benefit to its own people. This agreement is then extended to apply to other countries, too. What could be simpler or more in accord with common sense? What could be better qualified to benefit us, the people, as a whole? Of course, we have to make sacrifices. But the point is that, owing to the way the agreements are negotiated, the sacrifices are always, and should always be, less than the benefits gained. That is, we, the people, profit.

Not only are the Senator's views on this subject plainly at variance with those of Mr. Willkie, but in addition, in his effort to inject this issue into the campaign in the false hope of making political capital out of it, the Senator has chosen to ignore Mr. Willkie's statement on trade agreements on the eve of his nomination for the Presidency at Philadelphia, in which Mr. Willkie said, among other things:

In this new world and in these new conditions, for the issues before this convention to be determined on questions which have no relation to present conditions is pure shadow boxing. Republicans today must deal with the present situation, with something which is unique and with problems which have not yet been fully stated.

Today we must deal, not with the past and its dead problems, but with today with its live problems and with the future and its as yet unborn problems.

I do not change my position. I merely state to you that all old positions are obsolete, as dead as last week's newspaper, and that any man who aspires to leadership must think wholly in the present and its future and let the dead past bury its dead.

In other words, if Mr. Willkie is right, then the Senator is not only wrong, but "obsolete" as well.

Under leave to extend my remarks I include the following:

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY HULL

At his press conference today, the Secretary of State said that he had received a number of questions about some phases of Senator McNARY's address last evening in which he referred to commercial policy. The Secretary then made the following comment:

"I am sure that it will be a matter of disappointment to the country to see that Senator McNARY, instead of dealing with existing acute problems and conditions in a modernized and constructive manner which is so urgently demanded, complacently falls back on antiquated and discredited economic nostrums, such as the theory that the farmers can be saved by embargo tariffs. The Senator and his associates some years ago led the farmers into bankruptcy under the slogan of embargo tariffs.

"The farmers of the country will not soon forget that under this identical leadership the cash farm income of the Nation in 1932 had fallen to the ridiculously low level of $4,700,000,000, when our export markets had become restricted largely as a result of our own embargo policy. The American farmers will also keep in mind the fact that amidst every sort of impediment and difficulty growing out of wars and preparations for wars, cash farm income rose to $7,700,000,000 in 1939, exclusive of benefit payments. American farmers will of course take their choice of policies and of leadership. As against the only alternative policy of autarchy, the reciprocal-trade program and the policy on which it rests needs no defense.

"As to the misleading figures cited relative to the home market, Secretary Wallace stated the entire truth of the matter as follows:

" 'By all means, let us make the most of the home market. But I want you to think seriously about the fact that farmers have more to lose through nationalistic policies than any other group. In the present year, 1936, farmers are cultivating probably thirty-five to forty-five million acres that are going to produce things which will be sold abroad. The most additional land they could use by cutting out imports would be perhaps 10,000,000 acres. It just wouldn't be good sense to risk having to leave thirty-five to forty-five million acres idle in order to try to gain a market for 10,000,000 acres. I don't think farmers are foolish enough to trade dollars for quarters, no matter how strong the pressure may be by those who are busy grinding their own axes.' "

Take the Profits Out of War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ED. V. IZAC

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

ON THE BILL (H. R. 10413) TO PROVIDE REVENUE, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues, I am sorry we have to consider this bill under a gag rule. I had intended offering an amendment to increase the excess-profits tax, but under the rule I am prevented doing so.

You will note the highest rate this bill provides is 50 percent. Let me call your attention to the fact that the present British excess-profits tax has a rate of 100 percent. In other words, the British refuse to permit anyone to get rich at the expense of their suffering country.

When we returned from the first World War we found a crop of millionaires who had blossomed forth as a result of war orders while many of us and our comrades suffered privations, wounds, and even death for a few dollars per month.

It was then a movement was started to enact legislation that would, in case of another emergency, draft wealth and industry, as well as manpower. All the veterans' organizations have for the past 20 years been urging this step as a means of preventing war by taking the profits out of war.

Here we have an opportunity by means of a tax bill to take the profits out of this present emergency, but unless we make the tax much more stringent than 50 percent we will find, I fear, a new and bigger crop of millionaires grown rich on the profits made from national-defense orders.

Next week we will be called upon to vote a selective-draft bill which will compel many of our young men to serve their country for a small monetary return. Let us not, while we draft the manpower of the Nation, permit the rich to become richer and the poor poorer. Recently our unemployment conference, while making a study of the tax structure, found that the peacetime tax in England on a net income of $25,000 per year was $7,600. At the rates we enjoy in the United States the recipient of a $25,000 net income could pay the Federal income tax, the State of California income tax, and the District of Columbia income tax, and still pay but one-half what the resident of London pays, or $3,800. With this disparity, it can readily be seen that we have barely scratched the surface on taxation. Our national-defense program is necessary for the safety of our people and the preservation of our American institutions. It must be paid for through taxes.

This is a job for us all. Let none get rich at the expense of others. While some bare their breast in actual defense, let industry be at least willing to serve without excess recompense.

When the opportunity presents, I intend to move for a higher rate on excess profits to the end that all profits shall cease if war comes.

Analysis of Voting Rights of Soldiers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, with tremendous interest growing in the forthcoming national election, probably intensified by the personalities of the two candidates for President and the third-term issue, the question of voting privileges of soldiers, National Guard men, and reservists which we have authorized called to service, and of draftees, if the conscription bill should pass, is being widely discussed.

Because there have been a number of conflicting reports published, I have asked the State law division of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress to prepare for us a summary covering soldier voting in the States.

I am glad to note practically all States have some provision for soldier voting. It appears some which do not have absentee balloting provide for voting at the soldiers' camp.

The Library's summary follows:

Voting rights of persons in military service

[For citations and summary of provision see supplemental report of same date]

State	Special procedure for soldier voting	Absent voting outside of State, including soldiers	Absent voting inside of State, including soldiers	Voting before election at place of residence	Absentee registration
Alabama	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Alaska	No	No	No	Yes	No.
Arizona	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes.
Arkansas	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No.
California	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes.
Colorado	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Connecticut	No	Yes	No	No	No.
Delaware	Yes	No	No	No	(1).
Florida	No	No	No	Yes	No.
Georgia	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Hawaii	Yes	No	No	Yes	Yes.
Idaho	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Illinois	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Indiana	No	(1)	Yes	No	No.
Iowa	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Kansas	Yes	Yes	No	No	No.
Kentucky	No	No	No	No	No.
Louisiana	No	No	No	Yes	No.
Maine	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Maryland	Yes	No	No	No	No.
Massachusetts	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Michigan	(2)	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Minnesota	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Mississippi	No	No	No	No	?.
Missouri	Yes	(4)	Yes	No	Yes.
Montana	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No.
Nebraska	(2)	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Nevada	No	Yes	Yes	No	?
New Hampshire	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
New Jersey	Yes	No	No	No	Yes.
New Mexico	No	No	No	No	Yes.
New York	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
North Carolina	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
North Dakota	Yes	Yes	Yes	Yes	No.
Ohio	Yes	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Oklahoma	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Oregon	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Pennsylvania	Yes	No	No	No	No.
Puerto Rico	No	No	No	No	No.
Rhode Island	No	Yes	No	No	No.
South Carolina	No	No	No	No	No.
South Dakota	No	Yes	Yes	No	?
Tennessee	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Texas	No	No [5]	No [5]	No	No.
Utah	No	Yes	Yes	No	No
Vermont	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Virginia	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
Washington	No	Yes	Yes	No	No.
West Virginia	No	Yes	No	No	?
Wisconsin	No	Yes	Yes	No	Yes.
Wyoming	No	Yes	Yes	Yes	No.

[1] During active service.
[2] Probably dependent on place of encampment.
[3] Special provision but not special procedure.
[4] Soldiers only may vote outside of State.
[5] Doubtful as to persons in National Guard, etc.

VOTING RIGHTS OF PERSONS IN MILITARY SERVICE

ALABAMA [1]

"No person shall lose or acquire a residence * * * by being absent from his or her place of residence in the civil or military service of the State or the United States; neither shall any soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States acquire a residence by being stationed in this State" (Code 1928, sec. 366). "Any qualified elector * * * who may at any general, special, or municipal election * * * by reason of his regular business and in the performance of his regular duties be absent from the State or from the county in which he is a qualified elector may vote [by mail]" (sec. 405). Registration must be in person but need not be renewed (sec. 385).

ALASKA

No specific reference to voters absent in military service found. "Any elector of the Territory who believes that he will be unavoidably absent from his home and more than 2 miles distant from the voting place in which he is qualified to vote, may vote [apparently within the Territory and before a commissioner] at any primary, special, or general election" (Laws 1939, ch. 82). No provision found for absent registration.

ARIZONA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his absence while employed in the service of the United States" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 3). "No soldier, seamen, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed to be a resident of this State in consequence of his being stationed at any military or naval place within this State" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 6). A law "to enable qualified electors in the military or naval establishments of the State of Arizona or of the United States in any capacity to exercise the right of suffrage while absent from the State in such military establishments" approved June 20, 1918 (Laws 1918, extra sess., ch. 11) was apparently considered superseded by the general absent-voting law as it is not included in the 1928 Code. "A qualified and registered elector who is absent from the county of which he is an elector, or who expects to be absent from such county, at the time of holding any general or primary election" (Code 1928, sec. 1303) may vote by mail. "Electors of the State who are temporarily out of the State may, during the period of registration, be registered by writing to the recorder of the county wherein such elector has a legal residence" (sec. 1167).

ARKANSAS

"No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval service of the United States shall acquire a residence by reason of being stationed on duty in this State" (constitution, art. III, sec. 7). Any soldier, sailor, or marine, being a qualified elector of the State unavoidably absent from the State on active duty at the time of a general or primary election may vote at an election to be held on the same day and in the same manner as elections in the State with each regiment, separate battalion, troop, or battery (Digest 1937, secs. 4785–4787). As the general absent-voting law provides that any person being absent from his regular voting place within or without the State may vote by mail (sec. 4782) and the specific provision for military voting applies only outside of the State, presumably a soldier within the State may vote by mail under the general law. Registration is effected by payment of poll taxes (Laws, 1939, No. 82).

CALIFORNIA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States" (constitution, art. II, sec. 4). Any voter who expects to be absent from his election precinct on the day of any primary or general election may vote by mail (Laws, 1939, c. 26, secs. 5882, 5900, 5911). An elector absent from the county may file an affidavit as to his residence and forward it in duplicate to the county clerk of the county in which he claims to be an elector, who shall, if it is received within the time allowed for registration enter it in the proper register (Laws, 1939, c. 26, sec. 132).

COLORADO

"For the purpose of voting * * * no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his presence, or lost it by reason of his absence, while in the civil or military service of the State, or of the United States" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 4). Any qualified, registered elector absent from his county on the day of a general or primary election may vote by mail (Comp. Laws, Supp. 1932, secs. 7727, 7729). "Any qualified elector may be registered by filing or causing to be filed with the county clerk a verified application for such registration" (Laws, 1939, c. 103, sec. 6).

CONNECTICUT

No existing provision has been found differentiating persons in military service from other voters of the State. A temporary law, approved March 21, 1918, provided that "every qualified elector of this State who is in the service of the military or naval forces of the United States, and in consequence thereof is absent from this State on the day of such election, shall have the same right to give * * * his ballot for candidates for offices voted at such election * * * as he would have if present at the time of voting in said election in the town in which he is a registered and qualified elector." Ballots were to be mailed to commanding officers who were to receive and mail the voted ballots (Laws, 1918, extra session, ch. 1). Presumably no specific provision is necessary since "any qualified elector of this State who shall be absent from the State during the entire day of any National or State election" may vote by mail (Supp. 1931–35, sec. 168c). There is no provision for absent voting within the State, nor for absent registration. However, registration need not be renewed.

DELAWARE

"Every person enlisted or engaged in any military or naval organization of this State or the United States and who prior to enlistment was a resident of any election district of this State shall not lose his domicile in such election district by reason of such enlistment" (Rev. Code, 1935, sec. 1734). "Whenever any of the qualified voters of the State shall be engaged in the military or naval service of this State or of the United States and as such absent from the election district of their residence on the days appointed by law for holding county, State, congressional, or Presidential elections within this State, or on the days appointed * * * for holding special elections to fill vacancies, such qualified electors shall be entitled at such time to exercise the right of suffrage as fully as if they were present at their usual places of election" (sec. 1926). A poll shall be opened in each company where those within 2 miles thereof shall vote—others at the most convenient poll (sec. 1935). There are additional statutory provisions for voting by mail by persons "in the public service of the United States" (sec. 1945) which have been held unconstitutional (State v. Lyons, 5 Atl. 2d 495). Citizens of the State engaged or enlisted in military or naval service are entitled to be registered in the district in which they resided prior to election (sec. 1735). Registrars shall visit each encampment "in whatever part of the world they may be located" who shall register voters of the State (secs. 1736–1740).

[1] 1939 session laws not available.

FLORIDA

The only specific reference to voting rights of persons in military service provides that "any soldier, sailor, or marine who returns to the State after the time for payment of poll tax or for registration has expired, may be permitted to vote in any municipal, primary, or regular election upon the presentation of his discharge to the election officers and establishing the fact that he is the bona fide holder of same and that he could have been duly authorized to vote in said election except for his absence from the State and the fact that he was engaged in the military or naval service of the United States" (Comp. Laws, 1927, sec. 249). Absentee voting by persons outside of the State was authorized by Laws, 1935, chapter 16986 and absentee registration by chapter 16987. In State v. Page (169 So. 854) the supreme court of the State held the absent registration law unconstitutional. The discussion and the declaration of unconstitutionality concern the registration law but as the ballots cast by absentees were thrown out and since the reasoning appears to apply equally to absent voting this decision has apparently invalidated both voting and registering from without the State. An elector expecting to be absent on election day may vote in person not more than 15 nor less than 3 days before an election (Comp. Laws, 1927, sec. 436).

GEORGIA

"No soldier, sailor, or marine in the military or naval services of the United States shall acquire the rights of an elector by reason of being stationed on duty in this State" (Code, 1933, sec. 2–602). "Any voter, when required by his regular business and habitual duties to be absent from the city and county, ward or district, in which he is registered may vote by registered mail" (sec. 34–3301). Prior to the passage of a general absent-voting law Georgia provided in 1918 (Laws, p. 238–246) until "12 months after the final declaration of peace between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government" for voting by mail by persons absent "in any enterprise connected with the prosecution of the war." Registration must be in person (Code, 1933, sec. 34–107) but need not be renewed. On application, persons discharged from the United States Army or Navy are listed in a "Discharged Soldiers' and Sailors' List" and "shall not be disqualified on account of nonpayment of poll taxes which may have accrued within 6 months previous to their entry into the service of the United States, during such service, or within 6 months after their discharge" (secs. 34–501, 34–503).

HAWAII

"No registered voter shall be deprived of his right to vote at any primary, county, or general election by reason of his absence from the precinct in which he otherwise would have the right to vote, provided such absence at the time of such election is held is caused by being called into the service of the Territory or the United States by virtue of orders issued by either the Governor of the Territory or the President of the United States of America. * * * all mobilization grounds of the National Guard of the Territory, or all places where such National Guard may be congregated on active service, are for the purposes of any primary, county, or general elections declared to be polling places. * * * Whenever the National Guard shall have been called into active service, or whenever volunteers have been called into service through proclamation of the President of the United States, it shall be the duty of the Governor to ascertain the places at which the National Guard or such troops at the date of any primary, county, or general election * * * will be stationed." (Rev. Laws, 1935, sec. 7696.) Voters expecting to be absent may leave their vote with the local officials, but this applies only within 5 days preceding elections (Laws, 1937, pp. 266–267). Absent registration is permitted (Rev. Laws, 1935, sec. 7649).

IDAHO

"For the purpose of voting no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of this State or of the United States" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 5). "Any qualified elector" absent from his election precinct may vote by mail (Laws, 1937, ch. 45), and any qualified elector "who is an officer, agent, or employee of the United States Government or of this State temporarily absent from his or her precinct" may register by mail (Code, 1932, secs. 33–715). While for others registration must be in person, it need not be renewed except on change of residence (Laws, 1939, ch. 1904).

ILLINOIS

"Qualified electors of this State enlisted in companies or regiments organized in this State and absent from their election precincts on the day prescribed by law for the holding of any general election because engaged in the actual military service of the State or of the United States shall be entitled to vote for all State officers and on all State-wide questions in any such election. The qualified electors of any such company or regiment shall vote as a group or unit" (Rev. Stat., 1939, p. 1518). Absentee voting is permitted to "any qualified elector" absent from the county on business (p. 1515). Absent registration is not permitted. Requirements as to renewal of registration vary in different localities.

INDIANA

"No soldier, seaman, or marine, in the Army or Navy of the United States, or of their Allies, shall be deemed to have acquired a residence in the State in consequence of having been stationed within the same; nor shall any such soldier, seaman, or marine have the right to vote" (constitution, art. II, sec. 3). "No person shall be deemed to have lost his residence in the State by reason of his absence, either on business of this State or of the United States" (constitution, art. II, sec. 4). Qualified electors absent on business may vote by mail, but if one's residence is outside the State, the law applies only to citizens of the State employed in State or Federal Government residing in the District of Columbia or other Federal Territory (Laws, 1935, ch. 316). Absent registration is not permitted, but registration need not be renewed (Burns' Anno. Stat., 1933, sec. 29–308).

IOWA

"No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident of this State by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval place or station within this State" (constitution, art. II, sec. 4). Absent voting by qualified voters absent from the county is permitted at all elections (Code, 1935, sec. 927). The affidavit of an absent voter constitutes registration (sec. 954).

KANSAS

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States. * * * The legislature may make provision for taking the votes of electors who may be absent from their townships or wards in the volunteer military service of the United States, or the militia service of this State; but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to allow any soldier, seaman, or marine in the Regular Army or Navy of the United States the right to vote" (constitution, art. V, sec. 3). According to judicial interpretation, "if an officer of the Regular Army has a residence in the State, irrespective of his connection therewith, and is absent temporarily in the service, the provisions of the section do not extend to him" (Hunt v. Richards, 4 Kan. 476). "It shall be lawful for qualified electors of Kansas who may, on the occurrence of any annual election, be absent from their township or ward, employed in the militia or volunteer service of the State or the United States, to vote for county, district, or State officers, members of the legislature, and for Members of Congress and electors of President and Vice President of the United States, at the places where they may be stationed on the day of such election" (Gen. Stat., 1935, sec. 25–1201). Qualified electors outside the county but within the State may vote in person at general elections at the precinct in which they may be (secs. 25–1001, 25–1002). Those outside the State during primary or general elections may vote by mail (sec. 25–1101). No provision is made for absentee registration, but renewal is not required (secs. 12–904, 13–311).

KENTUCKY

"No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State by reason of being stationed within the same" (constitution, sec. 146). A statutory provision repeats this section of the constitution and adds "nor shall any such soldier, seaman, or marine have the right to vote" (Baldwin's Rev. Stats., 1936, sec. 1440). Neither absentee voting nor registration is permitted. An absent-voting law which specifically provided for persons absent in military service (Laws, 1918, ch. 37) was held unconstitutional (Clark v. Nash. 192 Ky. 594).

LOUISIANA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his presence, or to have lost it by reason of his absence, while employed in the service, either civil or military, of this State or of the United States" (constitution, art. VIII, sec. 11). While a constitutional amendment was adopted in 1936 to authorize absent voting by mail, no legislation in furtherance thereof has been passed. Persons expecting to be absent at any election may vote not more than 10 nor less than 2 days prior to the election in the parish or residence (Dart's Gen. Stats. 1932, secs. 2686–87). There is no provision for absent registration. Voters must register in person every 4 years (sec. 2629). A temporary act of 1918 (Laws, No. 264) authorized registration by mail of persons in the service of the United States during the war.

MAINE

"But persons in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall not be considered as having obtained such established residence by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military place, in any town or plantation. * * * No person, however, shall be deemed to have lost his residence by reason of his absence from the State in the military service of the United States, or of this State" (constitution, art. II, sec. 1). Citizens of the State absent from the State in military service may vote for Presidential electors, State and county officers at "each regiment and battery without the State" (Rev. Stats. 1930, p. 192). Any qualified voter absent from the city or town of residence may vote at any election by mail (Laws, 1937, ch. 183; Laws, 1939, ch. 234). There is no provision for absent registration. The tax lists constitute the registration lists.

MARYLAND

When a state of war exists or circumstances occur to cause the Government of the United States to call the National Guard into service, any qualified elector absent in the military or naval service of the United States or the State may vote by mail (Bagby's Anno. Code, 1924, secs. 225, 227, 229). There is no general provision for absent voting nor for absent registration.

MASSACHUSETTS

When registered voters are absent in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of a biennial State election, the secretary of state is charged with the duty of sending them absent voters' ballots (Gen. Laws, 1932, p. 617). They vote, however, under a general absent-voting law (pp. 616–622, as amended). "Any soldier or sailor in the service of the United States who had a legal residence in any city or town in the Commonwealth at the time of entering said service, who by reason of his being in the Army or Navy was absent from the city or town during the periods when sessions for listing and for registration were held, may appear, * * * prove his qualifications as a voter, * * * and be registered, if he so appears not less than 3 days before the election" (Laws, 1939, ch. 440, sec. 17). There is no provision for absent registration. Primary registration is as a taxpayer.

MICHIGAN

"No elector shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his being employed in the service of the United States or of this State" (constitution, art. III, sec. 2). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed in any military or naval place within the State" (constitution, art. III, sec. 3). "No qualified elector in the actual military service of the United States or of this State, or in the Army or Navy thereof, * * * or any regularly enrolled members of a citizens' military or naval training camp, held under the authority of the Government of the United States or the State of Michigan, * * * shall be deprived of a vote by reason of absence from the township, ward, or State in which he or she resides" (constitution, art. III, sec. 1). Persons absent in military service may vote under a general absent-voting law (Comp. Laws, 1929, secs. 3134–3147, as amended). Absent registration is permitted (sec. 2774).

MINNESOTA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have lost a residence by reason of his absence while employed in the service of the United States" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 3). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed within the same" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 4). Any qualified elector may vote by mail (Laws, 1939, ch. 345, pt. 4). Absentee registration is permitted (Laws, 1939, ch. 345, pt. 2).

MISSISSIPPI

The special enactment for soldier voting (Laws 1917, ch. 184; Amended Laws 1918, ch. 184) has apparently been considered a temporary law, and subsequent provisions for general absent voting were repealed (Laws 1932, ch. 292). According to secondary sources (Harris, Joseph P., Registration of Voters in the United States, p. 205; Chaffee, A. E., Summary of General Election Laws, 1936 ed.), absent registration is permitted, but no statute has been found.

MISSOURI

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his presence, or lost it by reason of his absence, while employed in the service, either civil or military, of this State or of the United States" (Constitution, art. VIII, sec. 7), "Qualified electors absent from the State on military or naval service shall * * * be enabled by law to vote at general or special elections" (Constitution, art VIII, sec. 9. Electors absent from the State on military or naval service during a general election may vote by mail (Rev. Stat. 1929, secs. 10224–10231, as amended, Laws 1939, p. 383). The general absent-voting law of Missouri (Gillespie's Supp., 1937, secs. 10181–10188d) in its terms would appear to apply to voting without the State but is limited by the constitutional provision (art. VIII, sec. 9) authorizing the legislature to enable qualified voters (other than those in military service) absent from their counties but within the State to vote. Specific provision is made (Laws, 1939, p. 384) for absent registration of persons absent in military service.

MONTANA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the State or of the United States" (Constitution, art. IX, sec. 3). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed at any military or naval place within the same" (constitution, art. IX, sec. 7). An absent-voting law applicable to persons in military service (Laws 1918, ch. 18) was repealed in 1935 (Laws, ch. 163). A general law (Rev. Codes 1935, secs. 715–735) authorizes any qualified elector absent from the county of his residence to vote by mail. Absent registration is not permitted.

NEBRASKA

"Every elector in the military or naval service of the United States or of this State may exercise the right of suffrage at such place and under such regulations as may be provided by law" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 3). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army and Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of the State in consequence of being stationed therein" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 4. Persons absent in military service are specifically provided for under the terms of the general absent-voting law (Comp. Stat., 1929 and Supp. 1935, secs. 32–801, 32–816; Laws, 1937, ch. 79), but they vote as other voters. Absent registration is not permitted.

NEVADA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States" (constitution, sec. 43). "The right of suffrage shall be enjoyed by all persons otherwise entitled to the same who may be in the military or naval service of the United States: Provided, the votes so cast shall be made to apply to the county and township of which said voters were bona fide residents at the time of their enlistment: And provided further, That the payment of a poll tax or a registration of such voters shall not be required as a condition to the right of voting. Provision shall be made by law regulating the manner of voting, holding elections, and making returns of such election" (constitution, sec. 44). Qualified electors may vote by mail (Compiled Laws, 1929, secs. 2553–2567). Registration of persons in military service would seem not to be required (constitution, sec. 44; Laws, 1917, ch. 231, sec. 2; Compiled Laws 1929, sec. 2566). According to Chaffee's Summary of the General Election Laws, 1936 edition, these provisions are interpreted as requiring registration by mail.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

"A residence acquired by any person in any town shall not be interrupted or lost by temporary absence therefrom, with the intention of returning thereto as his home" (Public Laws 1926, p. 105). A special soldiers' absent voting law (Laws, 1917, ch. 95) was repealed by a general absent voting law (Laws, 1925, ch. 20) under which absentees may vote by mail but only for Presidential electors (Public Laws, 1926, pp. 132–137; Laws, 1929, ch. 102). There is no provision for absent registration, but renewal during continuance as a voter is not required.

NEW JERSEY

"No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident in this State by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval place or station within this State. * * * in time of war no elector in the actual military service of the State, or of the United States, in the Army or Navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from such election district; and the legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent elector may vote, and for the canvass of their votes in the election district in which they respectively reside" (constitution, art. II, sec. 1). Soldier voting is restricted to "time of war," applies to any election, and is done by mail. An elector in the military service may file his name and address with the county board or any person having knowledge of the name and address of an elector absent in the service may file the name and military address of those to whom the act applies (Rev. Stat., 1937, secs. 19:35–1–19). "Any elector who has been in such service but who has been honorably discharged from such service subsequent to the last registration day for such election, may vote upon exhibiting * * * a certificate showing his discharge from such service, but in municipalities having permanent registration such elector shall first fill out an emergency voting form" (sec. 19:35–13).

NEW MEXICO

"No person shall be deemed to have acquired or lost residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States or of the State" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 4). "Citizens of the State absent from their places of legal residence in the military or naval service of the United States or of this State, and being otherwise qualified electors, may be allowed to vote at any election for all State officers, Presidential electors, Representatives in Congress, and upon constitutional amendments, under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 6). The general absent-voting law was held unconstitutional (Thompson v. Scheier, 40 N. Mex. 199) and there has apparently been no enactment putting the constitutional provision for soldier voting into effect. Absent registration is permitted (Laws, 1939, ch. 152).

NEW YORK

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States" (constitution, art. II, sec. 4). "* * * in time of war no elector in the actual military service of the State, or of the United States, in the Army or Navy thereof, shall be deprived of his or her vote by reason of his or her absence from such election district; and the legislature shall provide the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent electors may vote, and for the return and canvass of their votes" (constitution, art. II, sec. 1). Qualified voters absent from their residences may vote by mail (Cahill's Constitutional Laws, 1930, pp. 819–821; Supp. 1935, pp. 248–249; Laws, 1936, ch. 705). A specific soldiers' voting law of 1917 (Laws, ch. 815) was repealed in 1922 (Laws, ch. 588). Absent registration is not permitted.

NORTH CAROLINA

No provision found specifically referring to voting rights of persons in military service. Any qualified voter may vote by mail (Laws, 1939, ch. 159). Registration in person outside of regular period for registration is permitted to those expecting to be absent (Michie's Code, 1935, sec. 5961) but absent registration is not.

NORTH DAKOTA

"No elector shall be deemed to have lost his residence in this State by reason of his absence on business of the United States or of this State, or in the military or naval service of the United States" (constitution, sec. 125). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of his being stationed therein" (constitution, sec. 126). County auditors are required to maintain a register of persons qualified to vote in the county who are absent in military service and to send them ballots and return envelopes on which postage is paid (Laws, 1918, ch. 6). Any qualified elector absent from the county may vote by mail (Compiled Laws, 1913, secs. 992–1004; Laws, 1933, ch. 107). No provision for absent registration found.

OHIO

"No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall by being stationed in any garrison, or military or naval station within the State, be considered a resident of this State" (constitution, art. V, sec. 5). "Whenever in time of war any qualified voter of this State shall be in the actual military service of this State or of the United States, in the Army or Navy or militia thereof, and by reason thereof is unavoidably absent from his election district on election day, such absent voter shall be entitled to vote as fully as if he were present at his place of residence in the same manner herein provided for other absent voters. The secretary of state, in such cases, if the number of such voters exceeds 100, shall have authority to organize a staff to visit such headquarters and to care for the casting, sealing, and return of such absent voters' ballots to their appropriate counties" (Throckmorton's Anno. Code 1934, sec. 4785–141). Persons absent during the period for registration may personally register before leaving their precincts (sec. 4785–55).

OKLAHOMA

"For the purpose of voting, no member of the Regular Army or Navy of the United States shall gain a residence in this State by reason of being stationed in this State, nor shall any such person lose a residence in the State while absent from the State in the military or naval service of the United States" (constitution, art. III, sec. 2). A law specifically on soldier voting (Stat. 1931, secs. 5821–5833) was repealed by a general absent-voting law (Laws, 1937, pp. 139–142) which differs from the usual in that the ballot is sent to a proxy of the voter's choosing to be cast by him. Absent registration is not permitted. An extension of time after the regular registration period is made for persons absent during general registration (sec. 5654).

OREGON

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States or of this State" (constitution, art. II, sec. 4). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States, or of their allies, shall be deemed to have acquired a residence in the State in consequence of having been stationed in the same, nor shall any such soldier, seaman, or marine have the right to vote" (constitution, art. II, sec. 5). Any elector absent from his county may vote by mail (Anno. Code, 1930, secs. 36–2210 to 36–2215; Laws, 1939, chs. 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 346). "Electors absent from their country may register before any notary public, or county clerk, in the county where they may be. * * * Any electors who may be absent from the State upon the business of the State or of the United States may be registered by subscribing to the affidavit required of a resident elector before a notary public and mailing such affidavit to the county clerk of the county in which said elector claims his residence" (code, secs. 36–106).

PENNSYLVANIA

"For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his presence, or lost it by reason of his absence, while employed in the service, either civil or military, of this State or of the United States" (constitution, art. VIII, sec. 13). "Whenever any of the qualified electors of this Commonwealth shall be in the actual military service under a requisition from the President of the United States or by authority of this Commonwealth, such electors may exercise the right of suffrage in all elections by the citizens, under such regulations as are or shall be prescribed by law, as fully as if they were present at their usual places of election" (constitution, art. VIII, sec. 6). Electors in actual military service absent on the days of general, municipal, or special elections may vote at polls to be opened in each military or naval unit containing Pennsylvania electors. "The right of voting shall not be affected by reason of the failure of any elector to have been registered in his place of residence" (Laws, 1937, No. 320, secs. 1301–1302).

PUERTO RICO

No provisions found.

RHODE ISLAND

"No person in the military, naval, marine, or any other service of the United States shall be considered as having the required residence by reason of being employed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval station in this State" (constitution, art II, sec. 4). By a Civil War amendment of the constitution (August 1864, amendment No. 4) provision was made for soldier voting which is superseded by amendment No. 21, adopted November 1930, providing for absent voting generally. A provision "for the registration of citizens absent from the State in the actual military service of the United States" (Laws, 1918, ch. 1610) was repealed (Laws, 1920, ch. 1892) and the act putting the then-existing constitutional provision for soldier voting into effect in the World War (Laws, 1918, ch. 1657) was applicable only to the 1918 election. Electors absent from the State may vote by mail (Gen. Laws, 1938, ch. 319). There is no provision for absent registration, but apparently taxpayers are permanently registered.

SOUTH CAROLINA

There is no provision for voting by persons absent in the military service. An act so providing in 1918 (Laws No. 574) was declared to "apply only during the present war."

SOUTH DAKOTA

"No elector shall be deemed to have lost his residence in this State by reason of his absence on business of the United States or of this State, or in the military or naval service of the United States" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 6). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed therein" (constitution, art. VII, sec. 7). A specific law on voting by persons in military service (Laws, 1918, ch. 46) was apparently considered temporary. Any qualified elector absent from his home precinct may vote by mail (Code, 1939, secs. 16.0606–16.0609). A person not registered may "furnish to the judges of election his affidavit, stating that he is an inhabitant of the precinct, giving his place of residence, the time he has resided therein, and the reason why he was not registered" (sec. 16.0706).

TENNESSEE

No specific reference to voting by persons in military service found. Any voter whose business, occupation, or habitual duties requires absence from the city or county of residence may vote by mail (Code, 1932, secs. 2228–2256). Absent registration is permitted (sec. 2254).

TEXAS

"The following classes of persons shall not be permitted to vote in this State * * * all soldiers, marines, and seamen employed in the service of the Army or Navy of the United States. Provided that this restriction shall not apply to officers of the National Guard of Texas, the National Guard Reserve, and the Organized Reserves of the United States" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 1). Payment of poll tax constitutes registration.

UTAH

"A person shall not be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States. * * * No officer, soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed at any military or naval station within the same" (Rev. Stat. 1933, sec. 25–2–14). Any qualified elector absent more than 20 miles from his voting precinct may vote by mail (sec. 25–5–1; sec. 25–5–14). Absent registration is not permitted.

VERMONT

"A person shall not gain or lose a residence by reason of his presence or absence while in the service of the State or of the United States" (Public Laws, 1933, sec. 87). Legal voters absent at any election may vote by mail (secs. 91–108 amended Laws, 1935, No. 6, Laws, 1937, No. 4). There is no provision for absent registration but renewal is not required.

VIRGINIA

"No officer, soldier, seaman, or marine of the United States Army or Navy shall be deemed to have gained a residence as to the right of suffrage in the State, or in any county, city, or town thereof, by reason of being stationed therein" (constitution, sec. 24). Apparently citizenship in the State is lost only by definite act of relinquishment (Michie's Code, 1936, secs. 63–65). Any qualified voter may vote by mail (secs. 202–218). Absent registration is not permitted.

WASHINGTON

"For the purpose of voting * * * no person shall be deemed to have gained a residence by reason of his presence, or lost it by reason of his absence, while in the civil or military service of the State or of the United States" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 4). "Absence from State on business shall not affect the question of residence of any person" (Remington's Revised Codes, 1932, sec. 5111). Any registered voter absent from his precinct may vote by mail (Supp. 1939, secs. 5280–5282). Absent registration is not permitted but renewal is not required.

WEST VIRGINIA

"No person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State by reason of being stationed therein" (constitution, art. IV, sec. 1). A soldiers' absent voting law (Laws, 1917, 2d Ex. ch. 13) is apparently considered merged in a general absent voting law under which any qualified elector absent from the State may vote by mail (Michie's Code, 1937, secs. 135–149). The right to absent registration is doubtful (see Chaffee, A. E., Summary of the General Election Laws, 1936 ed.).

WISCONSIN

"No person shall be deemed to have lost his residence in this State by reason of his absence on business of the United States" (constitution, art. III, sec. 4). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed within the same" (constitution, art. III, sec. 5). An act for field voting by companies of the National Guard in active service (Laws, 1916, Ex. ch. 2) has been superseded by a general absent voting law under which qualified electors may vote by mail (Stat., 1939, secs. 11.54–11.68). Absent registration is permitted (sec. 6.17).

WYOMING

"No elector shall be deemed to have lost his residence in the State by reason of his absence on business of the United States or of this State, or in the military or naval service of the United States" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 7). "No soldier, seaman, or marine in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of his being stationed therein" (constitution, art. VI, sec. 8). Any qualified elector absent from his county may vote by mail (Rev. Stat. 1931, secs. 36–1401–1420, Amended Laws, 1935, ch. 30; Laws, 1937, ch. 7). Absent registration is not permitted, but apparently renewal is not required.

S. 3550–H. R. 10101

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

MEMORANDUM ON S. 3550 AND H. R. 10101

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

MEMORANDUM ON S. 3550 AND H. R. 10101

The title of each of these bills is: "To make unlawful the transportation of convict-made goods in interstate commerce."

Their purpose would be more accurately described under a title: "To soak the farmers for the benefit of the cordage and the farm-machinery manufacturers."

These bills originated with a group of binder-twine manufacturers, members of the cordage institute, but have been paraded before Congress behind a labor mask. The real beneficiaries of this proposed legislation are not workers, but are binder-twine manufacturers.

The interstate transportation of convict-made goods in every line except binder twine and farm machinery has ceased because of legislation adopted by most of the States under authority of the Ashurst-Sumners Act in order to give effect to the Hawes-Cooper Act.

Eight State prisons manufacture binder twine and only one farm machinery. These eight States are Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma. Minnesota is the only State prison manufacturing farm machinery.

Under the drive to make effective State inhibitions against open-market sales of convict-made goods, nearly all of the States have adopted legislation to prohibit transportation of prison-made goods into each such State. The law in a few States exempts binder twine and farm machinery from such inhibitions. Wisconsin is one such State.

For more than 20 years cordage interests have promoted national legislation to destroy State set-ups for production of prison-made binder twine. These cordage interests, like barnacles, attached themselves to the clothing, the shirt, the foundry industries in their fight to eliminate prison production from competition in these fields with free labor.

In this contest it was possible to show instances where, in some lines of manufacture, prison production was marketed unfairly in competition with like goods made in free industry.

No such condition exists as to prison-manufactured binder twine.

WHY WERE PRISON MILLS ESTABLISHED?

The establishment of binder-twine mills in the prisons of several of the States was made through efforts of grain-producing farmers to protect themselves against extortionate prices of the twine used to bind grain. These mills have made an outstanding record of attainment of the objective responsible for their establishment.

Without taking any unfair advantage of competing free industry, prison binder-twine mills accomplished their purpose.

These mills are an effective stabilizing influence upon the price of binder twine.

During the existence of N. R. A., a convincing demonstration of the fairness of the operators of these prison mills was made when under the codes they sat together with the code authorities of the free-cordage industry. The prison mills willingly, in fact, avidly, accepted the wage and hour conditions of free industry.

The only differential they asked, and the competing free industry readily considered it to be justified, was a price differential to cover the lack of efficiency in the prison-operated mills. This price differential varied from one-half cent to about one cent per pound on binder twine. No complaint was made by private manufacturers that prison binder-twine manufacturers had chiseled in any particulars.

It is true a decline in the amount of twine sold by the free manufacturers has been experienced in this country. The same applies to the prison mills. There are two reasons for this: one, the introduction of the combine harvesting machine, doing away with the need of binding grain; and second, the increase in imports of foreign twine. In this wartime this latter reason has almost been eliminated except for the stock of foreign twine carried over from the imports made prior to the beginning of this war.

The manufacture in prison of twine was undertaken in the first instance not for the main purpose of giving prisoners employment but to protect agriculture, the fundamental industry of this country, against exploitation by a handful of binder-twine manufacturers. The same condition that justified its establishment in the first instance exists today. There are fewer free manufacturing plants producing binder twine than were in business 15 years ago. Also, there are fewer State-operated binder-twine mills. The disappearance of some manufacturers from this field was not due to prison-made twine, but in large measure was due to the "squeeze" tactics of free industry to change in harvesting processes, and to the importation of foreign twine.

At the same time that these prison mills protected grain-producing farmers against extortion employment was furnished to prisoners. These prison twine mills have not only been a source of labor and income to prisoners but have produced substantial revenue to operating States. Through these revenues it has been possible in some instances, either wholly or in considerable part, to pay the cost of operating prison establishments.

Unfortunately for this presentation figures are not available from all States manufacturing binder twine to show what these publicly owned and operated prison activities have done for the States and for the prisoners.

In Minnesota, in 26 years, it is estimated that the manufacture of binder twine and of farm machinery in its prison has brought revenue to the State of $20,000,000, and that over and above the cost of maintenance of prisoners in the past 10 years, the earnings of prisoners averaged $150,000 per year, or a total of $1,500,000 in a decade.

In addition to a saving made through the revenue from these prison industries during the 26-year period, it is estimated that on the use of binder twine from its State-owned mill the farmers of Minnesota made an additional saving of $10,000,000.

In Wisconsin in a 25-year-operating period its prison binder-twine mill, a very modest mill compared with that of Minnesota, turned into the general fund for inmate labor $696,530, and from the binder-twine revolving fund, which is never permitted to exceed $600,000, the general fund has received $1,263,059.

In other words, the Wisconsin mill has brought into the Treasury of that State $1,959,589. This does not include sums paid to prisoners personally.

It is estimated the actual savings to Wisconsin grain-producing farmers through the operation of the prison binder-twine mill at a minimum is in excess of $100,000 per year, or for the period covered it would mean a saving to the farmers on their binder twine of $1,500,000.

So the experiences of these two States present the picture of benefits accruing from binder-twine mills operated in their prisons.

The picture of this industry and the social and economic effect it has in the giving of employment to prisoners and at the same time the giving of protection to farmers, places its value on an entirely different basis than that of any other prison industry disposing its products on the open market.

Wisconsin has no private manufacturer of binder twine within its borders. Every pound of the binder twine manufactured by the Wisconsin prison mill is sold within the confines of the State. Farmers in northwest Wisconsin, because located close to the Minnesota prison mill, buy binder twine from that mill, as the freight rate is less from Stillwater to points in the northwest of the State than from Waupun, Wis., which is situated a little south of the central part of Wisconsin.

To briefly present an additional picture of the benefits which prison industry confers upon the farmers, the Minnesota prison in 1940, has a wholesale price of $164, f. o. b. Stillwater, from its 7-foot binder. The competing machine sold by the International Harvester Co. is priced f. o. b. Chicago at $211, and by the John Deere Co., $211.25, f. o. b. Moline. This difference of $47 on each machine of this type is evidence that in those communities where the prison-made machinery is being shut away from the farmers, that the charge of extortionate prices and monopoly control is established.

The facts presented here establish that the prison production of binder twine and of farm machinery is an entirely different relationship than is that of the production and marketing of shirts and overalls and other articles of like character which were cited in the charge of unfair competition and wrong done to labor by prison manufacture. Similar wrongs were never successfully established in the case of prison production of binder twine or farm machinery, but on the contrary not only have farmers benefited, but the public has been protected, as the lower price of the binder twine and farm machinery must lower the cost of the production of grain.

Notwithstanding the plain implications of statements made here in Congress in support of this legislation, the language of the Hawes-Cooper Act or of the Ashurst-Sumners Act was not mandatory. Each was an act to provide certain rules with respect to transportation and sale of prison-made goods. These acts were to become effective only through the action of the States. Each State was free to adopt or not to adopt legislation to give effect to these acts of Congress. In the language of either of these statutes, there is no compulsion placed upon the States. The Hawes-Cooper Act divests prison-made goods of interstate character provided such goods made in one State are sent into another State which has enacted a statute to give effect to the Hawes-Cooper Act. The Ashurst-Sumners Act provides penalties for the interstate transportation of prison-made goods or for offering for sale such goods on the open market, provided that such goods are received or offered for sale "in violation of any law of such State or Territory."

The Federal law imposing penalties only becomes operative through a local law enacted to make the Hawes-Cooper Act and the Ashurst-Sumners Act effective within that State.

States that have refused to enact such legislation are as clearly within their legitimate sovereign rights as are those States which have enacted legislation to make effective the provisions of these statutes.

Neither the Hawes-Cooper Act nor the Ashurst-Sumners Act in language or declared purpose were amendatory of any constitutional power of a State. These acts placed within the power of each State to determine for itself whether it desired to limit its own right to ship or receive or sell or permit the sale in the open market, within its own borders, convict-made goods. However, the legislation proposed in S. 3550 and H. R. 10101 is broader than any heretofore offered, in that it provides penalties for the transport of convict-made goods in interstate commerce.

VIOLATION OF STATE'S RIGHT

There is no reference to violation of a law of a State. This is as broad a prohibition as can be written into the statutes. It is not dependent upon the action of any State law. It is compulsory.

Heretofore legislation to limit prison industries was enacted with coating of honeyed words, which won acceptance because the right of the State to act upon the transportation and disposition of prison goods, whether made within or without its borders, was safeguarded. This legislation denies discretion to the State and arbitrarily imposes the will of Congress.

This legislation has been advanced by gum-shoe methods. The States concerned were without notice of it until after it had been sent to conference. In the turmoil of more important subjects of legislation, this was put through without the general hearings and complete consideration which should be given to any legislation which affects or modifies the program of a State in the handling of its penal-treatment program. That is the concern of all the people of the States. It should not be sacrificed to the cupidity, the greed, the selfish interest of any group or combination of groups.

Appropriations and Contract Authorizations, 1940

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN TABER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith the amounts of money made available as a result of the passage of bills from the Appropriations Committee to the 29th day of August 1940:

TABLE 1.—Appropriations and contract authorizations incurred by the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress (1940)

Agriculture and farm credit:
Regular	$918,603,918.00
Permanent	112,052,045.00
Reappropriations	9,305,000.00
R. F. C. funds	150,000,000.00
		$1,189,960,963.00
District of Columbia:
Regular	48,765,080.00
Permanent	3,873,821.00
Contract authorizations	600,500.00
Reappropriations	17,500.00
		53,256,901.00
Independent offices:
Regular	1,120,240,528.00
Permanent	279,027,166.00
Contract authorizations	2,000,000.00
R. F. C. funds	2,000,000.00
Reappropriations	6,141,620.00
		1,409,409,314.00
Interior:
Regular	135,383,330.00
Permanent	13,505,940.00
Reappropriations	16,203,900.00
Contract authorizations	10,220,000.00
		175,313,170.00
Labor-Federal Security:
Regular	1,023,282,690.00
Permanent trust	140,176,723.00
Permanent annual	9,550,000.00
Special fund	15,869,750.00
Reappropriations	41,406.00
		1,188,920,569.00
Legislative:
Regular	$23,671,220.00
Permanent	608,600.00
		$24,279,820.00
Military:
Regular	1,499,323,322.00
Permanent	18,799.00
Contract authorizations	323,229,636.00
		1,822,571,757.00
War Department civil functions:
Regular	222,718,717.00
Permanent	2,423,700.00
Contract authorizations	103,500,000.00
		328,642,417.00
Navy:
Regular	1,308,171,138.00
Permanent	2,430,000.00
Contract authorizations	182,741,612.00
		1,493,342,750.00
State, Justice, and Commerce:
Regular	107,149,000.00
Permanent	4,185,280.00
Reappropriations	600,000.00
		111,934,280.00
Treasury and Post Office:
Regular	1,032,801,095.00
Permanent	3,397,997,215.00
Reappropriations	31,000,000.00
		4,461,798,310.00
Supplemental deficiency:
Regular	252,340,776.00
Contract authorizations	2,450,000.00
		254,790,776.00
Urgent deficiency, regular	57,541,300.00
		57,541,300.00
First deficiency, regular	92,035,408.52
		92,035,408.52
Second deficiency:
Regular	85,891,777.23
Contract authorizations	53,575,000.00
		139,466,777.23
Relief:
Regular	1,157,711,357.00
R. F. C. funds	125,000,000.00
		1,282,711,357.00
Supplemental national deficiency:
Regular	1,479,777,147.00
Contract authorizations	289,136,761.00
		1,768,913,908.00
		15,854,889,777.75

This does not include amounts made available to the R. F. C. exceeding $1,000,000,000, and many smaller items from the claims committees.

I shall, after the last bill is passed, bring this up to date, complete with all items.

What Happens If Wealth Is Conscripted?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HINSHAW

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of this morning:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 29, 1940]

George Washington said: "Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other."—From the Farewell Address.

WHAT HAPPENS IF WEALTH IS CONSCRIPTED?—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

This red-hot slogan, "Conscript the wealth if you conscript the men," is just the kind of catchy business to lead a lot of good people into something they don't want.

Everybody knows what happens when a man is drafted into military service.

Have you done much thinking about what happens to conscripted wealth?

Conscripted wealth doesn't just mean conscripted money. After all, that is just a matter of taxation. The Government always gets what it is after in the tax line. Always has. Always will as long as there's anything to get.

So if the slogan is going to lead to anything, "Conscript the wealth" means that the Government will move in and take over industries lock, stock, and barrel, in the name of national defense.

Now, for the past several years the same kind of people who are now yelling loudest about conscripting the wealth have been yelling about the necessity to protect labor by higher pay and shorter hours of work. They have backed all kinds of law, State and Federal, to protect the working man against arbitrary treatment by his employer.

And the great weapon which they have forged to protect the workingman has been the strike. We have a multitude of laws today guaranteeing labor the right to organize for collective bargaining, to strike against what it considers abuse, and to punish the employer who behaves badly when he doesn't like the way things go.

THE EMPLOYER WILL GET BY

Now under this "wealth conscription" project many of these same advocates of labor reform are shouting for the employer would be kicked all the way out of his plant and the whole put into the hands of the Government to advance the national defense.

Forget about the employer. If he has anything at all saved up, he'll get by, even if the Government doesn't pay him off for his capital investment.

But what about the employees who have, these 5 years past, been enjoying the right to strike, the 40-hour week, the protected wage, and generally a stronger position opposite the table of authority?

Can you fancy a union business agent telling the Army officer in charge of a steel mill where to get off?

When the Government conscripts a chunk of wealth it conscripts all that goes with it, and that includes the filing clerks, the elevator boys, and the janitors as well as the lifters and pushers out in the mill.

Everybody, not just the men drafted into the Army, would be in the service of Uncle Sam.

YOU DON'T STRIKE ON UNCLE SAM

And do you think labor unions can do anything to protect wages, hours and working conditions when the Government is boss? If you do ask the boys in the W. P. A. union who tried to pull a strike in New York and another one here about a year ago. They got a message from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue reminding them that nobody has the right to strike against the Government.

So they silently folded their tents.

If that isn't enough for you, consider the position of the labor unions in Germany. Or in Russia. They don't do much worth telling to protect labor against the Government there, do they?

MADE IN MOSCOW

There are some people in this country who would like to see the Government in charge of everything. That's because they figure they will then be in charge of the Government. But how anybody who claims to believe in the system of civilization under which most Americans were born and brought up, and which we are all supposed now to be preparing to defend, can fall for their racket is beyond our comprehension.

Every time somebody shouts "conscript the wealth" they are delighted. But there is no reason for the rest of us to be. That slogan was made in Moscow, if any ever was. The next time you hear it, ask the shouter just what it means.

You'll find out, sure enough, that he doesn't realize what he has been saying, or he is working straight toward Government-take-everything.

Modern Philosophy of Politics: An Appraisal of the Republican Nominee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. COFFEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE TACOMA LABOR ADVOCATE

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herein an editorial from the Tacoma Labor Advocate, of my home city of Tacoma, Wash. This is the official organ of the American Federation of Labor in my congressional district, and is an excellently edited and managed weekly publication. Its editor, John McGivney, is one of the most scholarly writers on labor matters in the United States. He has written an editorial in a recent issue which is so thoughtful and provocative that I am including it in my remarks for the benefit of the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the Tacoma Labor Advocate, Tacoma, Wash.]

MR. WILLKIE ACCEPTS

As we listened to the acceptance speech of Mr. Willkie, and later on read it again in the papers next day, we had the strange feeling that we wished he would make up his mind.

For the life of us we couldn't make out whether he was a liberal or a conservative, a new dealer or a Hooverite, and what sort of a witch's broth in the end he had mixed up for the workers of tears and sweat, for we never saw a businessman, especially a big businessman, in tears or sweating in all our lifetime, we could not determine at all.

We found ourselves sympathizing with Members of the House and the Senate, where even on the conscription question both sides claimed Willkie for one of themselves. The anticonscriptionists insisted he had not declared for anything like the draft, while supporters of the draft were equally emphatic that he had.

In the earlier part of his utterances he appeared to support in all its moods and tenses the New Deal, and the only objection he seemed to have to any of it was that President Roosevelt headed the administration. And we found also that he was in the same plight as to the foreign policy of this Government, which he was heart and soul supporting except that he didn't like Roosevelt's way of doing it. We gathered that the New Deal would be all right except for Mr. Roosevelt, and we began to wonder indeed how it was that Mr. Willkie ever allowed anyone to baptize him in the Republican faith, except that he was tempted by Wall Street, where he lived and fell.

We observe that the National Association of Manufacturers, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and various bitter anti-new-dealers are all for Mr. Willkie. We have noted in the city of destiny some of the most vehement opponents of the New Deal are proud to wear Willkie buttons, and we wonder why.

Mr. Willkie, in his acceptance speech, swallows the New Deal—hook, line, and sinker. He approves the right of collective bargaining for labor. He endorses with emphasis the wage and hour bill and even promised to increase wages and shorten hours. He approved the S. E. C., regulation of public-utilities corporations, which seems as near economic treason for such a one as a man can get, takes the foreign policy of the Democrats to his bosom, and says he can lick Hitler, giving him cards and spades and little casino.

But that's just why he hates Roosevelt's policy. He threatens, says Willkie, and Mr. Willkie then to show that he can out-rant all ranters does a bit of threatening himself.

We confess that while we found the acceptance speech of Mr. Willkie quite an intriguing effort, we didn't get the answer to some of the things that a labor editor should know. We didn't find out who is backing Mr. Willkie for that is quite important. There is no such thing as an independent politician. The men who pay the Republican piper called the tune. And we'd like to know who that was.

We don't know how there could have been in one short week such a demand for one that not one in a hundred ever heard of or if they did ever remembered. We would like to know who paid the claquers in the gallery of the Philadelphia convention, who shouted all through the day and all through the night, "We want Willkie," when they would not know Willkie from a crow. We would like to know who had the money and the foresight to give the delegates who came for Dewey and for TAFT the "bum's rush" and dumped them into the Willkie camp. We wonder what brought Lamont to Philadelphia and how he came to be mixed up in the shenanigan which swept the delegates for the native son of Pennsylvania not into the ranks of BOB TAFT but into the ranks of Wendell Willkie.

In fact we would like to know who discovered Willkie and how come he was to become so soon "a second" Lincoln and who in a single acceptance speech could make the second part nullify everything he said in the first part.

Candy for everyone, and then tears and sweat! Well we know who suffer tears and who are bathed in a bloody sweat of privation and misery. And we know it's not the Willkies nor the bosses for whom the Willkies as attorneys and managers are merely serving men.

Of course we know that Mr. Willkie consulted everyone. Taft, Dewey, Hamilton, Hoover, Landon. Most of these are men of different views. You couldn't reconcile one with the other if you tried. And they all tried to wind Willkie's acceptance speech over to their points and so inevitably there is hodgepodge which could be all things to all men—alike new dealers and old.

But as an acceptance speech it lacked one notable feature. It was not the voice of a fearless captain and full of humility, full of noble dread for the awful tasks which, if he were elected, fate would impose upon him. It was a mocking and ignoble state of mind which would challenge the President of the United States to exhibit himself and as our Chief Executive as a contentious rival, to a holding company charlatan while President Roosevelt is bearing the tremendous responsibility of this emergency on his shoulders. It was such an outrageous suggestion that we begin to suspect Willkie is a brazen fraud, for no man could mean to do any such thing as that in this crisis of our Nation's history. Willkie promised everything to everybody. He is going to start the wheels of industry by free enterprise, but the mystery of his method is a secret apparently shared in only by names so august that he dare not utter them.

Frankly we are appalled by the amazing and expanded efforts to exploit Willkie. It began in Philadelphia. It is continued at Elwood, Ind., and at the latter place revealed such a mastery of showmanship that those in charge could have no aim but pretensions. We would like to compliment Willkie by saying that it must have been arranged for him, not by him. For we doubt if even the most arrant political humbug would go as far as that.

Yet we confess that the miracle of effort in an attempt to seat 150,000 people on 30,000 wooden seats must have rivaled or was intended to rival the miracle of the loaves and fishes that fed once on a time the hungry multitude. There was a peanut and popcorn vending machine at every corner and the streets bristled with ice cream and soda fountains for the honor of the nominee. It was to be a modern Cloth of Gold, and the wonder is, so far unanswered, who were the big boys behind the reckless spending.

It may have been political etiquette which forbids the nominee to indulge in any mention of his running mate. We don't know about that; but it would have been quite informative if Willkie had spent a brief space of time reconciling his own career as a private utility magnate and attorney with that of Senator McNARY who never avoided a fight for Bonneville and the T. V. A. Mr. McNARY never refused to vote for the New Deal and so his support of such as he finds favorable cannot be doubted. He is not suspect. But we wonder how this great landlord like Willkie, who enjoys the secure revenue from tenantry, can even come approximately close as such a landlord to the McNary-Haugen bill which with fine flourish of the veto power two Republican Presidents have killed because it was meant to help the small farmer and the plastered farm.

However, these things are beside the question. But there are other things which are not, and it is to them we would refer. This Nation is immersed deeply in a crisis. This is as inevitable as that night will follow day. The Nation's ideology will become a defense ideology or a war ideology. That is going to affect how men think, what men do, and what men will say. It will produce a more or less hysterical condition, wherein the profiteers will seek to eke out of the Nation's woes and worries greater and greater profits.

We see that condition coming down on us right now. We could not avoid it even if we would. But Willkie didn't mention it. He never showed it was even in his thoughts. He promised prosperity and work. He didn't tell us anything about the defense psychology which will be ours for the next 4 years. He said nothing about prices which even now are beginning to soar and that efforts to secure Government contracts with Government assuming the costs and responsibilities for industrial expansion.

Now, these things are of vital importance to us. They concern all our civil rights. They affect such freedom as we have. They will test our metal and we may realize profoundly then what Tom Paine meant when he said in another day and another crisis, "These are the times that try men's souls."

We are shocked to think that while Willkie could in such easy fashion dare to belittle the Presidency by attempting to drag it into the political slime of the hustings, he revealed no sense whatever of what is before this Nation. He spoke of tears and sweat. But tears and sweat are always the lot of most of the workers, and it is the trusts and monopolies and holding companies that have thrust so much of that privation upon them.

We are face to face with an emergency and its magnitude, its nearness, and its tremendous responsibilities that seem to have been ignored with or without deliberation by Mr. Willkie.

However, that will not matter. We are quite certain in our own mind that Mr. Roosevelt will be reelected. To Roosevelt's administration, rightly or wrongly, labor owes much. It has not confined itself to eloquent promises before Elwood crowds to be forgotten the next day. The Roosevelt administration has translated into deed what others have said might be done. His administration has helped the unemployed and all over this Nation has kept them at work who would otherwise starve. Every State is the richer for the Roosevelt administration: richer in new schools, richer in roads and bridges and public works, things that are lasting in their worth and which have relieved want and penury and privation that never would have otherwise been even palliated.

Roosevelt came in 1933 the great captain. He is still the great captain in 1940. He is the chief of a great Nation to whom the whole world of men has looked for inspiration, for hope, and for guidance. Confident, alert, determined, unflinching in will and purpose to make this America prove worthy of its great tradition of men and institutions. And we are quite certain that the people for whom Mr. Roosevelt has done so much and whose great humanitarian heart has been in evidence in everything he has done for them and who more keenly than any man since Lincoln has shown that deeds, not words, are what count, will be reelected.

Mr. Willkie, we judge, doesn't like that acceptance speech. He has since seemingly weighed it and found it wanting. Mr. Ickes' icy and acid criticism has made him wilt. Don't answer it, he wires his campaign manager. Perhaps already too much dirt has been shaken up to muddy the pool. "Let sleeping dogs lie" is a sound motto. And so we judge that Wendell L. Willkie, despite the big show at Elwood and the big promises of what Norman Thomas called a stick of candy for everyone, may find it harder to fool all the people some of the time or enough at least part of the time to elect the man who comes to claim the Republican Party as a Democrat through the grace of accentuated humbug.

Frankly, we had hoped that Wendell Willkie was a different sort of a man. We had believed that we saw in him a man free from political humbug and deadly in earnest. We had hoped that he was one at least who would not, like so many, attempt the impossible feat of riding two horses running in different directions. We had hoped he would not be emphatically a Mr. Facing Both Ways which excited the contempt of Mr. Bunyan. We had believed that he would have something to offer—not just as good, not more efficient, but something infinitely finer and franker and more assured than the New Deal. There are lots of things we don't like in the New Deal. But Willkie has nothing better and he seems to think that there should be reason and sense in our approving as he does New Deal doctrines and deserting the political fortunes of the man who gave it to us.

Well, there are all sorts of ingrates in this world, but we don't believe that any number can be found among the followers of Mr. Roosevelt. That we can safely leave to those who have already taken a walk and who find themselves much more at home in the ranks of special privilege and special interests. But they were never supporters of Mr. Roosevelt. They were silent servitors of reaction. They have always known on which side their bread was buttered, as the ox knoweth its owner and the ass its master's crib.

Sentiment Grows for Unified Air Force

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of August 19, I had the opportunity of addressing a Nation-wide radio audience on the subject Aviation Progress and Problems. As a part of my speech I advocated a Department of National Defense, with Secretaries for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps. I placed that address in the Appendix of the RECORD of August 20. At this time I again call attention to the following two paragraphs:

In the President's Cabinet, instead of having a separate Department of War and a separate Department of Navy with military aviation scattered between them, there should be a single department of national defense under which the three great arms of our Nation's power may be coordinated on an equal footing. Our fighting forces by air, by land, and by water should, on an equal basis, find a place in a single great department with one coordinating head at the Cabinet table. Senator CLARK of Missouri and myself have introduced in Congress legislation which would make this a reality. This proposal will be vigorously pushed.

Again and again during the past year the power of aviation has been impressed upon us by a ruthless invader. May our country learn, while God gives us time, to so nourish our aviation that the Stars and Stripes will fly ever triumphantly over land and sea, over mountain and wave, supreme against the jealousy of unprincipled aggressors.

On Saturday, August 24, I read with interest and approval of the statement of the Republican candidate for President, Wendell Willkie, in which he advocated a unified air force.

In connection with this matter I include at this point editorial comment from the Washington, D. C., Daily News of yesterday:

Air power has dominated that war. Germany's preparations began with, and have adhered to, the principle that men who believe in air power and understand its uses should be free to develop it. France and Britain were forced to come to that principle, but belatedly. The United States, alone among major powers, still clings to the traditional practice that keeps air power divided into two branches, one subordinate to the Army and the other subordinate to the Navy.

Admirals have been trained to think first of battleships. Generals have been trained to think first of land armies. Both are necessary. But this country also needs men who will think first of planes and pilots, and whose authority in their field will equal that the admirals and the generals in theirs. And then, above them all, it needs a higher authority to balance the development of the three arms of national defense and to coordinate them if war comes.

This is what Mr. Willkie advocates. He would begin immediately with the creation of a new Cabinet post—a Secretary of the Air Force, with authority equal to that of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. His ultimate objective would be a single Cabinet officer in charge of defense, with under secretaries for the Army, the Navy, and the air force.

Until there is such an arrangement, American air power will continue to be the stepchild of the older services. There is little reason to hope that aviation will be given that emphasis to which, by its performance in modern warfare, it is entitled. There is much reason to fear that the tremendously costly defense program will be unbalanced by overemphasis on older weapons whose effectiveness has been lessened by air power.

Mr. Willkie has taken a bold stand on an issue about which much more should be heard in the Presidential campaign. It is an issue vital to the safety of the country.

This subject is not new, and many public officials and military authorities and observers have advocated that we give proper place to the air force in national-defense planning and preparation. It is not political. It is vital, as I see it, that we take action toward this highly desired end. For many years I have worked for such action. I shall continue my efforts.

Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 29 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM AMERICAN FEDERATIONIST

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article entitled "Labor Weighs Conscription." This article is from the American Federationist, the official publication of the American Federation of Labor.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the American Federationist]

LABOR WEIGHS CONSCRIPTION

When the mailed fist of any enemy of the American people is thrust across the water to strike at the heart of world democracy, it will be crushed by the solid armor of impregnable military defenses backed by the united national will, the technical genius, and the rich resources of the people of the United States.

In modern warfare effective national defense rests upon three requirements essential to victory—determination, organization, and mechanization.

Determination, born of national unity and reinforced by the singleness of purpose and conviction that freedom shall not be destroyed, is the most powerful of our weapons.

The defense of the American soil means more than the defense of home and hearth. It is more than a defense of a way of life. It is the defense of basic human rights and of institutions which give meaning to these rights. It is the defense of that democracy which has given to every citizen in our community new stature, dignity, and scope for achievement, long sought by man but heretofore denied him.

KEY TO MODERN MILITARY STRENGTH

Organization is the key to military strength in modern warfare. Not only organization and coordination of military forces but organization of all resources is also of crucial importance to our defense. In taking stock of our strength we can count our ability to organize to be superior to that of other peoples, and with reason.

Over a brief span of 150 years, beginning with a meager seacoast colony, we have turned a continent untouched by civilization into a nation whose industrial supremacy and standard of living stand unchallenged today.

Our gigantic enterprises and great institutions bear convincing witness to our ability to organize, to undertake a big job, and do it quickly, efficiently, and thoroughly.

Mechanization is indispensable to modern defense. A technological revolution has swept the armies of the world and has made hopelessly obsolete the basic military strategy and technique of yesterday. In this, too, we shall be strong.

As a people we are mechanically minded. We have led the world in technological progress and mechanical advancement for the past hundred years. Our scientists have pioneered in technical discovery which our engineers have translated into miracles of steel, power, productivity, and made them part of everyday life.

In surveying our problem of defense we face the crucial fact that modern war is primarily a war of machines and no longer predominantly a war of men. The character of armies has always been determined by the weapons used. The gasoline engine has completely changed the scope and character of warfare and equipped us with new weapons.

It has made the airplane the foremost instrument of combat; it has given tanks, tractors, armored trucks, and other mobile equipment supreme importance on land; it has given armies speed and mobility they have not known before.

To man these weapons, to put this equipment to most effective use, we need a personnel in our armed forces of a type and character wholly different from those relied upon in the past.

We need skills more than we need numbers. Continued reliance on sheer numeric manpower can only lead to needless loss of human life and weaken rather than strengthen our entire defense.

THE INGREDIENTS OF VICTORY

The current war in Europe has demonstrated that quick, well-coordinated action, made possible by topnotch organization and maximum efficiency, plus mechanical superiority, are the qualities of victory. These have been the crucial secrets of success of Nazi invaders. We cannot hope to achieve these qualities within 1 year of compulsory training of 2,000,000 conscripts.

Throughout the battle of Flanders and the battle of France the invading German force was able to overwhelm armies possibly several times its size. Not all of this can be charged to treason and "fifth column" activity.

Relatively small contingents of Nazi troops were able to surround and down the great Allied force because of their superior skill in mechanized warfare, better coordination, and greater mobility.

We cannot afford to ignore this fresh and bloody lesson of the European war. We must put quality before quantity in shaping our own defenses.

It would be different if both could be achieved in a short space of time. We know this cannot be done. What our new recruits need, above all, is training. We have sufficient training personnel to handle some 300,000 men in one year—to give them thorough training and military discipline, develop their skills and make them into first-class fighters.

But if we bring under the colors five or six times that number of recruits, we would be forced to leave them for a long time not only without training but even without adequate supervision.

But the newly recruited Army personnel calls for more than training. The recruits need uniforms and shoes; they need housing and camp equipment; and above all they need rifles, guns, armored cars, and vast quantities of mechanical equipment so that they could be trained to handle this equipment, to service it and to fight with it.

This problem must be approached realistically. We know now that in the space of a few months we cannot hope to provide even 1,000,000 new recruits with supplies, ammunition, and mechanical equipment to justify their conscription into the active ranks.

Our present strength of the Regular Army is 283,000, with the authorized strength of the National Guard at about 235,000. The immediate defense need can best be met by doubling our present Regular Army strength in the next year.

It would be sheer folly to denude industry of workers essential to production of defense equipment and bring them into the Army ranks before we are ready to provide them with the necessary training and equipment. Every practical consideration dictates this realistic moderate increase in our defense force.

The analysis of every industrial, economic, and military phase of our defense problem indicates that the immediate quota for recruitment can and should be filled by voluntary enlistment.

Yet it has been proposed to raise by conscription, in a short space of months, a huge army of much the same type as the one with which we fought in the last World War. Peacetime conscription is the order of the day. Compulsory military training in peacetime for great numbers of our citizens is urged as essential to defense. With reckless haste and with a minimum of opportunity for calm discussion and competent criticism, a bill designed to raise through conscription a peacetime army of 2,000,000 men was being rushed through Congress as this issue went to press.

How did compulsory conscription originate? What has it meant in terms of offensive and defensive warfare? How would it affect our peacetime way of life? Let us first turn back a few pages of history.

Wartime conscription is not undemocratic, as has been claimed by some. Arguments that conscription is a totalitarian product are vicious attempts to confuse the real issues by historical falsehoods.

As the term is used today, conscription is a relatively recent development, dating from the French Revolution. In fact, it expressed the basic ideas of the French Revolution by requiring equality of service and giving substance to the fraternity of all classes of society in their responsibility for military service.

The Revolution of 1789 brought to an end the old royal army of France and made it necessary to raise a new army on a new basis. It was inevitable that the French Republic should adopt the principle of universal service.

EARLY FRENCH DRAFT RESISTED

In 1793 the first attempt to make the service truly universal by resorting to compulsory conscription proved extremely unpopular. Thousands of men liable to draft deserted their homes and uprisings took place.

After the initial successes of Napoleon in Italy, the renewal of the war with Austria appeared inevitable by 1798. In the latter part of that year the law embodying General Jourdan's system of conscription was incorporated in the French Constitution.

This law, which furnished Napoleon with his armies of conquest, provided for five classes of conscripts in age groups between 20 and 25, each class being called out on an ascending scale to meet the necessity of Napoleon's "absolute warfare."

Napoleon's successes firmly established the principle of conscription in other European nations. Thus by 1808 Prussia accepted in full the principle of universal service without distinction of class or right of exemption by purchase. In fact, the application of compulsory conscription in Prussia, bringing all groups, classes, and ranks into the national army, was a tremendous force in the shaping of a united German Empire out of a patchwork of states and principalities.

It is probably fair to say that the triumph of a fully developed system of conscription was achieved by the Prussian military machine at the battle of Sedan in 1870, which brought victory over France. The evolution of the techniques of warfare from 1870 to date has proved conscription to be an increasingly costly device to nations at war.

The instruments of warfare available at the given time have always determined the make-up and size of armies in combat. In a primitive society in which simple agricultural implements were used as effective military weapons it was natural that every able-bodied man would be called upon to defend the community. It was the manufacture of armor and the gradual development of military inventions which gave rise to the professional soldier and changed the character of armies.

CHEAP GUNPOWDER CHANGED THINGS

Costly ammunition called for smaller and more highly selective armies.

This was the case in the Middle Ages when armor was of dominant importance, but with the advent of gunpowder, when ammunition gradually became cheap and easy to obtain, the use of mass manpower gained in importance.

Europe of the nineteenth century fought out its wars on the assumption that the numerical strength of the army is decisive to military success. Napoleon's belief that God marches with the biggest battalions held good through this time and its hang-over still overshadowed European military thinking through the last World War.

Warfare today is vastly different from that of 25 years ago. It has even less in common in its technique with the warfare of Napoleonic conquests. Modern war is chiefly a war of mechanical equipment.

Military power, which was once based on the number of yeomen who could be enlisted, today depends on the number of skilled mechanics needed, not only to manufacture war machines, but to fight with them.

Conscription is a military outgrowth of an agricultural democracy in which the vast reserve of manpower was derived from agriculture. An industrial democracy which no longer depends on crop-growing as its basic industry a totally different problem and finds that conscription saps its resources rather than adds to its strength.

These compelling conclusions have been forcefully stated by one of the foremost writers on military science and tactics, Maj. Gen. John F. C. Fuller, who was chief general staff officer of the British Tanks Corps in 1917–18.

His studies of recruitment and training during the last World War led him to the conclusion that the future use of conscription will be limited solely to the armies of aggression for the purposes of occupation. Writing as long ago as 1928, Fuller pointed out that "the theory of conscription has run its course, and is today growing out of date. A few years hence no conscript army will be able to face an organized attack by armed motor cars, let alone by tanks and kindred weapons."

"To those who can read the past and follow present tendencies," Fuller wrote 12 years ago, "the future development of recruitment is clear and certain. The advent of the motor-driven battle vehicle has introduced armor as an essential in tactical organization. Another armored age faces the great armies of the world, an age of costly machines in place of cheap muskets. The tendency is, consequently, one toward small armies in which quality will replace the quantity theory of the present cannon-fodder masses."

In his penetrating analysis of the World War tactics Fuller saw that "it was nothing less than a national, let alone military, crime to conscript all classes of men as if they were of equal value, and to fill the trenches which were little more than altars of human sacrifice to a discredited god, with highly skilled mechanics, miners, and professional men.

"Throughout the war it was scarcely realized by any of the general staffs that the one great tactical problem was not to increase fighting manpower, but as far as it was possible to eliminate the fighting man, the human slop-butt, and to replace him by a mechanic."

"In spite of tank attacks, air attacks, naval attrition, and chemical attacks, it was not realized that weapons give blows and men receive them and that the main problem in tactics is how to give blows without receiving them, and not a mere question of human tonnage."

It is ironic to consider today that Fuller held the key to the future course of events when he pointed out the fatal error made in 1919, when Germany was denied the power to maintain a conscript army and was compelled to establish a voluntary one—that is, to rely on quality—while France continued to adhere to bulk numbers.

FORESAW DEFEAT OF FRANCE

Though his warning went unheeded, Fuller foresaw the outcome many years ago when he suggested that the mechanical training and equipment of the Germans was bound to win over the sheer strength in numbers of the French.

A number of our own military experts have been giving increasing recognition to this view. Hanson W. Baldwin, military expert of the New York Times, points out in the August issue of Harper's that the maximum initial force which could be transported to the Western Hemisphere by an enemy power, "even if control of the sea were wrested from us" would not be much larger than 50,000 men.

To transport and supply an army of 1,000,000 men to this hemisphere would require at least 13,000,000 tons of shipping. Baldwin considers this economically impossible.

"Not even Britain, or a combination of Britain and Germany, has sufficient shipping to divert such an enormous amount of it from their ordinary and vital trade routes for military purposes," he says. "We do not, therefore, have to fear the employment of mass armies in this hemisphere; the most we have to guard against is the possible transportation of a small expeditionary force."

The important point in Baldwin's analysis is that, even if our defense extended to the entire Western Hemisphere, we need, in addition to our own home defense, "a field force, highly trained, fully equipped, instantly ready for transportation anywhere within the Western Hemisphere. Such a force certainly need be no larger than 150,000 men—perhaps half that number—about the number with which Germany, only 100 miles away, seized Norway." The entire enlarged Regular Army "need be no larger than 400,000 men, if that large."

Some experts place the maximum at 600,000. Some put it as high as 750,000. This is the largest professional army, the Regular Army, we can possibly need at the present time. And such an army can and should be raised by voluntary enlistment.

We have seen that mechanical warfare is the dominant characteristic of present-day defense. Having borne the brunt of technological displacement of manpower in our everyday life, it would be folly to ignore the fact that the bulk of our military manpower requirements have also been displaced by technological developments and that we must substitute mechanical strength for numerical strength in our defense force.

COMPLETE TRANSFORMATION

We must fully realize the revolutionary impact of the gasoline engine on our techniques. To the extent that the gasoline engine has given armies unprecedented mobility, it has completely transformed the scale and the scope of military activities.

If the United States is to be engaged in a defense war in the near future it will be engaged in a war of machines, airplanes, and armor plate, a war of rapid movement in which our mechanical dexterity will be pitted against the technological ingenuity of the enemy.

Such a war cannot be waged as effectively with a large army of conscripts, burdensome, immobile, and clumsy, as with a highly trained, compact force of skillful soldiers and skilled technicians.

We have seen that in the light of the training facilities as well as of military supplies and equipment which can be made available within 1 year, our Regular Army should not be increased beyond the maximum of 750,000 men which can be attained by voluntary enlistment.

Our total peacetime defense force should not exceed 1,500,000 if it is to be efficient and effective. Our defense production as well as defense itself would bog down under the weight of an excessive and unnecessary mass of recruits which the proposed conscription would bring.

We have also seen that the very nature of our defense requirements cannot possibly justify the immediate raising of an army of 2,000,000 conscripts in the space of a few months, even when we assume the defense of our entire hemisphere to be the immediate objective. The armed force that we do need, the force that can be properly trained, one which can be adequately clothed and properly equipped is of a size which can and should be recruited by voluntary enlistment.

The proposed peacetime draft would give us a large standing Army which, once established, would remain a burden upon the rest of the population, on our customs, and on our institutions. It would inevitably become a self-perpetuating force which would dominate the civil life of our Nation.

WHAT IT MEANS TO LABOR

What does the proposed peacetime conscription mean to labor? If approved, the draft would reach into every factory, mill, and mine, into every family and every home. For those who are conscripted it would mean a complete economic readjustment. For this, provision should be made.

Foremost in importance is the worker's equity in his job. Workers subjected to military service should be assured priority of reemployment without loss of senicrity rights. This cannot be enforced by a mere declaration but should be made mandatory.

Compulsory contribution to national defense on the part of the worker places a corresponding duty on the employer to do his part in safeguarding the economic security of those called to fight for their land and the security of their dependents.

For those dependents who are deprived of their means of support as the result of conscription, adequate provision should also be made. Adequate pay to the men subjected to military service is one of the essentials in a program designed to achieve this by the most equitable means.

Employed wage earners have accumulated a stake under our social-security program. Under our contributory system of old-age benefits, provision should be made to preserve the accumulated equity unimpaired.

Although our system of unemployment insurance does not call for employee contributions, in reality the bulk of the unemployment compensation funds is derived from the wages of our workers, not only through direct as well as hidden taxes and higher prices, but also in lower wages resulting from the natural desire of employers to pass on the cost of social-security taxes.

Workers' equity in all phases of the social-security program should therefore be protected.

There is also the problem of adjustments in the obligations incurred by the workers and their families in their day-to-day struggle for existence. Payments on insurance policies and taxes, on homes, automobiles, and other necessities cannot be continued when men are torn away from their jobs.

Provision should be made to suspend the pressure of these obligations in an equitable way which would safeguard the interests of the worker and of his family, as well as protect those of his creditors.

Conscription which reaches into every sector of the community, and into every type and class of our labor force will disturb to the very foundations our entire employment structure. It will mean drastic readjustments in every phase of industry and the flow of production and distribution of those goods and services which go to make up the economic strength of the people of the United States.

Conscripted workers will have to be replaced, and replacement skills developed. In many occupations women will have to be brought into industry to take the place of the men called to take up arms.

Our industrial defense needs are as vitally important as our military requirements. Machinery must be perfected to achieve a balance in a way in which maximum industrial productivity, both in quantity and in quality, could be sustained.

Our employment services would have to be geared up to recruitment procedures to achieve this complex distribution of skills and manpower with the maximum of effectiveness.

LET'S BE EFFICIENT AT THE START

It would also be necessary to make provision for the cost of transportation of all workers from their homes to the places where their services are utilized. All industrial workers, skilled, semiskilled, and unskilled, who are called upon to serve in war manufacturing industries as well as in our armed forces should be provided transportation by the Government whenever their place of service or employment is away from their homes.

Congress has already made enormous appropriations for defense production purposes, but the billions thus far appropriated are small compared with the total price which will have to be borne by the entire Nation in perfecting its defenses.

The American people will pay this price willingly and patriotically, but in return they can justly demand that their contribution is not dissipated wastefully and extravagantly. If we are to do an efficient job of our defense we must begin to be efficient at the beginning. Compulsory conscription of an Army of millions of soldiers to be carried out at once is a wasteful and an extravagant proposal.

Nye Charges United States Gave War Signal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD KNUTSON

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES OF AUGUST 28, 1940

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the New York Times of Wednesday, August 28, 1940.

NYE CHARGES UNITED STATES GAVE WAR SIGNAL—SAYS IN LETTER TO THE TIMES "SOLD OUT ENGLAND AND FRANCE" BY PROMISE OF AID—DOUBTS PERIL OF HITLER—QUOTES TIMES MILITARY WRITER IN SUPPORT OF HIS RETORT TO EDITORIAL CRITICISM

The New York Times has received the following letter from Senator GERALD P. NYE, of North Dakota:

WASHINGTON, August 27, 1940.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The New York Times in an editorial this morning entitled "Mr. NYE Finds It Funny," ridicules me for allegedly having ridiculed the idea that Mr. Hitler could successfully invade the continental United States.

This, if the matter were not so deadly serious, would indeed be funny, inasmuch as one of my authorities for my belief that Mr. Hitler would find such a program distinctly difficult, if not, indeed, impossible, is the military expert of the New York Times itself, Mr. Hanson W. Baldwin.

Mr. Baldwin has said, and I have quoted him, thus:

"The maximum initial force that could be transported (from Germany to the United States) even if control of the sea were wrested from us, would not be much larger than 50,000 men."

The transportation of such a force would require 375,000 tons of shipping, perhaps 40 ships, about the largest force that could conveniently be convoyed in a single operation.

"To supply such a force might require from 650,000 tons of shipping to 2,000,000 tons monthly; in other words, perhaps half of the tonnage of the German merchant marine would have to be devoted solely to the job of supplying 50,000 soldiers. If this force were to be doubled, the shipping tonnage necessary would be doubled; to supply an army of 1,000,000 men would require at the very least 13,000,000 tons of shipping.

"Economically and commercially, the problem seems impossible; not even Britain or a combination of Britain and Germany has sufficient shipping to divert such an enormous amount of it from their ordinary and vital trade routes to military purposes."

AS TO A SIGNAL FOR WAR

So said Mr. Baldwin, the Times' own expert, but the New York Times has, perchance conveniently forgotten about it, just as conveniently as it forgets to add that when it quotes me predicting about a year ago that there wasn't going to be a war in Europe, that I added that there wouldn't be unless the United States gave the signal to go. Which I am confident it did, and I think history will show that the administration gave England and France reason to believe that if they would declare war on Germany, help would be forthcoming.

I am not afraid to believe that some day history will show, as one of the blackest marks of our time that we sold out, by deliberate falsification, the two European nations with which we had the closest ties. We sent France to her death and have brought England perilously close to it. Had they stalled Hitler for a while, while they prepared to meet him, the story might have been different. Instead they plunged into it, unready as they were.

But the New York Times is anxious for national defense; no more so than am I, however. But it can see only conscription as the way to get it. I see conscription as a poor way to get it, but worse than that, the beginnings of a regimentation here which will have the New York Times eventually suffering from the very kind of dictatorial power to which newspapers have been subjected in Europe.

CALLS CONSCRIPTION A SUBTERFUGE

Conscription is a subterfuge, a complete subterfuge, a political subterfuge, and the Congress know it. If it were anything else but that, the issue would have been disposed of in a week.

The New York Times would like a better Army. So would I. Will it go along with me in an attempt to get one by means at our command already which do not involve blasting our own democracy and mimicking Hitler to stop a fear of Hitler? Will it go along a step further and caution Washington against more of the kind of foreign policy that has made hateful people abroad of those we ought to have as friends?

I am flattered and delighted at the personal attention of the New York Times in devoting its lead editorial of virtually a column length to me, but not because of the personal advertising it gives me.

ASKS WHY THE ATTENTION TO HIM

I am flattered and delighted only because it indicates that there must be a great many people who think as I do whom the New York Times is having a difficult time converting to its way of thinking. If the administration and its foreign-policy spokesman, the New York Times, are so certain that the great majority of people agree with them, why all this attention to a single individual?

Were I on the other side of the fence and enjoying the confidence which the New York Times and the administration exude, I would ignore such trifling hecklers as myself. If I and others who have cautioned against intervention in foreign affairs, who have fought determinedly every step toward war, are in such terrific minority, why are we worth bothering about?

Evidently our thoughts are being entertained by many Americans who don't like this march to war.

Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. VITO MARCANTONIO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. VITO MARCANTONIO, OF NEW YORK

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me on Tuesday, August 13, 1940, over the National Broadcasting Co. network in behalf of the American Youth Congress against conscription:

"From the military point of view the United States must be considered as an insular Nation. We are separated from potential enemies on the east and west by broad and deep oceans. On our northern and southern borders are nations which have been friendly heretofore. Across these land frontiers could come no armies of sufficient strength to menace our security. Our situation is not similar to that of the British at the present time. Prior to the advent of air power the British Isles were insular countries. This complete insularity is now compromised in the military sense in that they are subject to damaging attack by aircraft based on the Continent.

"The armies of Europe and Asia do not menace us. To be a menace they must be transported across the sea in ships. Airplanes on the continents of Europe and Asia do not menace us. To threaten seriously our continental security they must be conveyed across the sea and operated from bases in or near this hemisphere.

"The armed forces of no foreign nation or group of nations can seriously threaten our continental security if we make sure that we command the seas which separate us from all potential enemies."

This statement was not made by those of us who are now opposing conscription. It is found on page 2 of a report issued by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate of the United States on May 15, 1940. This report was the unanimous opinion of the members of the Senate committee which has made a thorough study of the problem of defense against invasion. Despite the fact that the press and others in authority have seen fit to keep the contents of this report from the American people, no one has as yet even attempted to refute the conclusions contained therein. Hence, the hysterical argument advanced by the proponents of the Burke-Wadsworth bill to the effect that we are in danger of successful invasion is not founded in fact, but is a lineal descendant of the war hysteria preparedness propaganda of 1916 and 1917.

A careful analysis of the events which have taken place since the President of the United States foresook the defense of the general welfare of the country for a war-armament program demonstrates conclusively that armaments and conscription are not being undertaken for defensive purposes, but constitute preparedness for active participation in an imperialist war from which the American people have nothing to gain and all to lose.

You cannot keep out of war when you become a military reservoir for one side of the belligerents as against the other.

You cannot keep out of war with a war-armament budget which will amount to $19,000,000,000 in less than 2 years.

You cannot keep out of war by forcing the youth of America into a Europeanized military machine.

The President of the United States is himself an authority for these contentions. During the winter of 1936 at Buenos Aires, the President stated that out of his wide experience and historical study, nations which spend heavily on armaments "inevitably face the day when their weapons of destruction must be used against their neighbors, or when an unsound economy like a house of cards will fall apart."

The President himself, on May 16, informed us that we had the biggest and best Navy in the world.

Hence the conclusion is inescapable. The program is armaments, not for defense, but for war; conscription, not for defense, but for war.

The similarity between 1916 and the war preparedness of today is so great that it is shocking and alarming, except that in 1916 no one dared to even suggest conscription.

We are preparing, not for a war in behalf of the American people and their interests, we are not preparing for a war in defense of men and women on W. P. A.; we are not preparing for a war in defense of the men and women in the shops and factories; we are not preparing for a war in defense of the interests of the men on the farms; we are not preparing for a war in defense of the men in the mines and in the mills, but we are preparing for a war to protect the stake of the American dollar in the British pound, and for a possible extension of our imperialism in South and in Central America.

Such a war is not a war of the American people.

Since such a war is not a war of the American people, it is only natural that the American people are overwhelmingly opposed to such a war. Therefore, it has become necessary by those who are conspiring to catapult America into war to destroy the civil rights and liberties of the American people and to substitute Nazi systems for American institutions. It is precisely because you are opposed to such a war that the war conspirators find it necessary to conscript, to draft, to forcibly take from the home your son, place him in a camp, militarize him, regiment him, knock out of his system every democratic concept which he had learned since childhood, and then send him to war.

This, and this alone, is the scheme of things behind the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill now pending before the Senate of the United States. The Burke-Wadsworth bill now provides for the following:

1. Compulsory registration of all males between the ages of 21 and 31.

This feature, passed over lightly by the press, is the heart of the bill. It would, by requiring all registered persons to carry passports, set up a vast system of Nazi-like control over the lives of the millions of men and their families. It would wipe out at one blow the American way of life for which our forefathers fought.

2. Compulsory military training for a period of 12 months, to be extended indefinitely if the necessity exists.

The young men of America, once registered, lose their right to decide their own futures. They could be transferred to the Army or Navy without their consent for compulsory service up to 10 years. The bill is drafted so that those registered may be sent to the battlefields for war, at any moment.

3. Contrary to press reports, the bill contains no constitutional and enforceable provision which requires an employer to rehire a man after the training period is up. If the bill were to pass, thousands of men would lose their means of support, with no right to return to work afterward.

4. The President is empowered to use his judgment as to the number of men to be conscripted. Thus he is given unlimited power over the lives of millions of families. Treatment of married men is left to the judgment of the President and no part of the bill exempts them from service.

5. Once conscripted, a man has no choice of the branch of service to which he may be assigned. He can be sent to Army, Navy, or C. C. C. "occupational groups" by arbitrary decision.

6. The bill provides $30 a month pay, and makes no provision for the millions of families whose lives will be disrupted by the reduction in income. Leases, mortgages, debts, even starvation and urgent needs are ignored in the arbitrary wage.

7. Constitutional rights to fair trial would be eliminated for millions of citizens by the bill, which calls for trial by court martial of violations of the act. The Nazi rule of the firing squad would be substituted for the American system of trial by jury.

8. The call to active training can be made by a proclamation of the President. No written notice to enrollees is required. Failure to appear can be tried in military courts as a military offense.

An amendment has been proposed to charge a fine of $10,000 or a prison term of 5 years to any person who in speech or writing opposes conscription once the bill is passed. This provision would bring all the terror of nazi-ism to our land, allowing the round-up and arrest of millions opposed to war.

All this in the name of a false national defense.

We destroy democracy under the guise of protecting it. How much of our freedom which we seek to defend will be left in America after the enactment of this bill. It seems to me that we cannot consistently speak of going to war to defend freedom if we must begin by destroying it with our own hands, and we do this, how?

First, by setting up a terrific armament program and indulging in a military extravaganza for war.

Second, we destroy civil rights and freedom of the American people by the arousing of war hysteria and ruthless suppression of all individuals and groups that have dared raise their voice against war.

Third, by segregating and fingerprinting 3,500,000 noncitizens in America.

Fourth, by converting our F. B. I. into a gestapo; and Fifth, by conscripting the youth of our Nation.

Armaments, conscription, war, and dictatorship. That is the path along which those who sit in the seats of the mighty of our Nation are leading us. The American people alone can stop it. The same spirit that guided us in 1776 and in 1860 is now awakening throughout the land. Millions of messages are pouring in on the Congress of the United States against this swift juggernaut propelling us into war and dictatorship.

This "blitzkrieg" against the peace and freedom of America must be stopped and it will be stopped.

I am happy to announce that people from all walks of life—labor, farm, youth, cooperative, fraternal, business, regardless of race, color, or creed—are sending their representatives to Chicago on August 31, September 1, and September 2, to unite to defend America by keeping America out of war and by keeping America a free and democratic nation.

My fellow Americans, let us meet this crisis as we have met those of the past, with the firm resolve to exercise our democratic rights, to the end that those rights shall not perish from our land.

Tributes to Hon. James A. Farley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES M. MEAD

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Thursday, August 29 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

RECENT EDITORIALS IN THE PRESS PAYING TRIBUTE TO POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, under permission granted me to have printed several editorials recently published in the press of the country paying tribute to Postmaster General James A. Farley, I present them for the RECORD.

The editorials are as follows:

[From the Postmasters' Advocate, Washington, D. C., August 1940]

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES A. FARLEY LEAVES THE CABINET AUGUST 31, 1940—PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ACCEPTS THE RESIGNATION WITH REGRET

This announcement will bring most genuine and sincere regret throughout the ranks of postal employees. Believe the feeling is a general one, in and out of the service, that Mr. Farley will go down in the annals of postal history as one of, if not the most, popular Postmasters General ever to fill this important position. His square dealing, upright character of fairness, friendliness, and acknowledged efficiency in the performance of his duties as Postmaster General, brought the Postal Service to a new high level, never before attained. He can well feel proud of his accomplishments, and carry with him the assurance that he gained not only success but the affection of every postal group and individual employee. The National League of District Postmasters wishes for Mr. Farley the best of life's gifts in his new field of private business.

Following is text of letter of resignation and reply by President Roosevelt:

POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY'S LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT

AUGUST 7, 1940.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In accordance with my several conversations with you wherein I indicated the necessity for my returning to private life, I tender you, with sincere regret, my resignation as Postmaster General of the United States, to become effective at the close of business on August 31, 1940.

I want you to know how much I appreciate the honor you conferred upon me and the trust that you placed in me when you appointed me to this important position in your Cabinet, when you took office on March 4, 1933.

Whatever success I may have had in the conduct of the affairs of the Postal Service is due in a large measure to the splendid assistance and cooperation which I have received not only from my associates in the Department here in Washington, but also from postmasters and postal employees in every branch of the service throughout the country.

During my two terms as Postmaster General we have succeeded in placing the Postal Establishment on a self-sustaining basis with respect to that part of the service that is rendered to the public for hire; we have reduced the hours of labor from 44 to 40 hours a week; we have extended the Air Mail Service by thousands of miles, including the inauguration of the trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific services; we have supervised the erection of hundreds of new post-office buildings in every State and congressional district in the Nation; we have reduced postal expenditures by several millions of dollars while at the same time doing a record business in both volume and receipts, climaxed by a new all-time high of $766,000,000 in the matter of postal revenues for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940; we have provided new and increased services and we have likewise performed several outstanding services for other Government agencies, such as the handling and payment of the soldiers' bonus, the registration of workers under the social-security program, the taking of a census of the unemployed, and the sale of millions of dollars of United States saving bonds for the Treasury Department.

These are some of the outstanding accomplishments of the Postal Service during my period of service as Postmaster General, but what has pleased me more than anything else is the manner in which the Department's relations with its employees in every branch of the service have been carried on. Through our cooperation with each of the employees' organizations, we have succeeded in bringing about a new spirit of friendliness and devotion to duty in the ranks of the more than 300,000 postal employees, and I doubt if the morale of the postal workers has ever been higher than it is at the present time.

The Department has also been particularly fortunate in its relations with the committees in the Senate and House of Representatives. Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in the Senate, has been extremely kind and helpful, and most efficient, and has aided the Department materially on legislation which is handled by his committee.

During the time that Senator JAMES M. MEAD was chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in the House of Representatives, we had extremely friendly relations with him and our relations with the present chairman, Congressman MILTON A. ROMJUE, have been extremely pleasant. All of the members of both committees in the Senate and in the House have been of great assistance to me and my associates in the Department.

During my lifetime I shall cherish the associations and friendships which I have made while serving as Postmaster General, both in the Postal Service and in the other departments and agencies of the Federal Government.

I know that it will please you to learn that I have made definite arrangements for my future in private business where I know I shall be very happy.

Again expressing my deepest gratitude at the opportunity you afforded me to serve as a member of your Cabinet, and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Faithfuly yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE

The Honorable POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JIM: I accept, with real regret, your resignation as Postmaster General, to become effective at the close of business on August 31.

First of all, I want to tell you of my own sincere sorrow that we are losing you as a member of the official family. At the same time, as I have told you, I fully understand and appreciate the personal reasons which recall you to private business after all these unselfish years in the public service. I congratulate you on your new work and send you every wish that it may, in every way, be successful.

Under your administration the Post Office Department of the United States has made great strides in business efficiency, in service to the public, and in the outstanding morale of its more than 300,000 employees. That the post-office service is on a completely self-sustaining basis with respect to that part that is rendered to the public for hire is in itself a real tribute to you and your associates.

All of us in the administration will miss you deeply; we count on seeing you often, I especially count on this after all of our years of close personal association. Our friendship will always continue.

I need not tell you that you have always my affectionate regards.

Faithfully yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

JIMMY DIDN'T WANT TO SLOP OVER—BUT THIS NOTED NEWSWRITER FOUND IT HARD NOT TO WHEN HE WROTE THIS TRIBUTE TO THAT STRANGE MAN IN POLITICS WHO ALWAYS KEPT HIS WORD, MR. FARLEY

(By James L. Kilgallen)

It's hard to do a story on James A. ("Genial Jim") Farley without slopping over.

For there's a man, a big man by any yardstick; a regular 100-percent guy, strictly on the level with everybody, including himself.

Newspapermen all say that, and they are a discerning lot. They can spot a "phoney" quicker than any class I know. Of all the men in the American spotlight today, I know of no man who holds the sincere respect and goodwill of the press to a larger degree than does Jim Farley.

Now, when you stop to think that Farley has been dealing with straight-away news reporters, Washington correspondents, and sports writers over a period of years, that's saying a great deal indeed.

Farley is a man with a million friends. And there's a reason. He instinctively accepts you the minute he meets you. Though the meeting be a casual one, he never forgets you—or the circumstances of the meeting.

Suppose you met Farley just once and, 2 years later, he suddenly encountered you and said something like this:

"Why, Hello Tom! How are you? And how's your sister, Mae? Is she still giving singing lessons?"

You'd first be surprised, then a bit flattered to think Farley remembered so much of that first meeting. Yet he does this all the time. It's one of the principal reasons why he's been such a standout success in politics.

It wasn't easy for Farley to shelve politics for private business. Farley had been in politics a long time and had almost made it his life's work. He loved the thrill of taking part in dramatic episodes, the uncertainty of a great political struggle, and the surge of pleasure that comes from an honestly earned victory over worthy adversaries.

He was a battler for someone else, and for the party, rather than for himself. He did more for President Roosevelt, politically, than any other person. Twice, in 1932 and in 1936, he triumphantly directed Mr. Roosevelt's campaigns for the highest office in the land. He will not, however, run the President's 1940 campaign for a third term.

Jim made it clear to President Roosevelt that he finally must do a little thinking for Farley, and for his family. The President realized the logic of this, and concurred—although reluctantly—for no one knows better than he what an astute, capable, and resourceful Democratic national chairman Farley was.

Farley has a wife and three children. Their home is at 1040 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and now that Jim is virtually through with politics he will see a lot more of his family. His wife, whom he affectionately calls Bess, is an attractive, frank-minded woman who talks straight and to the point. She has never been overenthused about her husband's political career, feeling he could have been a success in business.

It is no secret that Jim Farley, as honest a man as ever walked, pulls out of politics in need of money; in fact, in debt. His salary of $15,000 a year as Postmaster wasn't much, with the social obligations such a position entails.

Bess Farley, they say, didn't care much for Washington—or for Capital society. She preferred New York. She realized her husband was getting along in years. He's now 52. She knew, too, that if Jim accepted 1 or 2 of the many big-paying positions he was offered in private industry she'd see more of him. He no longer would be the star traveling salesman of the Democratic Party.

Many people believed that when Jim definitely decided he wouldn't run F. D. R.'s 1940 campaign, it was a victory for the spirited Bess Farley and naturally a distinct loss to Mr. Roosevelt.

The Farleys have two girls and a boy. The eldest girl, Betty, aged 18, is said to be Jim's favorite. She attended Wellesley College. Her younger sister, Ann, 15, goes to Mary Mount, a Catholic convent in Manhattan. Jim Farley, Jr., aged 12, is a student at the New York Military Academy at Cornwall-on-Hudson.

They are a happy, closely knit family—a typical American family.

The dramatic highlight of Jim Farley's remarkable political career came at 1:37 a. m. Thursday, July 18, when he stood on the platform in the Democratic National Convention in Chicago and, giving up the 79½ votes that the delegates had polled for him for the Presidential nomination, moved that the nomination of President Roosevelt be "by acclamation."

Cheers from the throats of 25,000 men and women spectators in the flag-bedecked stadium shook the convention hall to the rafters.

Out in front with friends, in an inconspicuous seat, sat Mrs. Bess Farley. What her thoughts were must be left to the imagination.

Jim, a fine figure of a man, tall, strapping, florid-faced, and bald-headed, looked handsome in a white palm beach suit. His genial smile warmed every heart in the vast audience.

On the platform, a few feet back of Farley at this dramatic moment, sat his daughters Betty and Ann. Tears glistened in the light blue eyes of Betty, who looks so much like her father. Ann sat with bowed head.

I talked to Betty a few seconds after Big Jim Farley retired from the rostrum amid salvos of applause. Her eyes still were glistening and she said in a girlish tremolo: "I'm so happy—I'm so proud of Dad."

The delegates were proud of her Dad, too. Virtually every delegate in the stadium knew Farley personally, knew what he had accomplished for the party, and recognized that this was his political "swan song." Tears came into many an eye, a choke to many a throat, and even the small army of newspapermen and women, pounding away on noiseless typewriters, were not immune to the drama.

Farley, it can be ventured, emerged from the convention a bigger national figure than at any time in his long career as a politician. In a way, he almost "stole the show."

Analyzing Farley, newspapermen say he is a man who possesses qualities many politicians lack. Above all, he is true to himself, to his conception of right and wrong. He is a "square shooter," loyal to the core.

Farley, in all the years of his dealing with the press, has never "doublecrossed" a newspaperman, never denied a story he has given out, no matter how unfavorable the public reaction to the story might have been. He never played favorites. He always has treated writers on Republican papers with the same consideration as those employed by Democratic publications.

"I make it a policy to tell the truth," Jim once said. He has found it a good formula.

His word is no scrap of paper. If he promises to do something, it is a gilt-edged guaranty.

He is perhaps the most humane man in American public life today. I saw his humaneness illustrated during the recent Democratic National Convention. An 18-year-old, red-headed cub reporter, named Bob Kubicek, breezed into political headquarters looking for a press ticket so he could represent his weekly paper, the Oak Leaves, of Oak Park, Ill. The big-time correspondents had reservations long before.

Young Kubicek was eased out of the publicity department faster than he entered.

Farley happened to come along a corridor. He asked the boy, "What's the trouble, son?"

Kubicek, a bit awed, told him.

"Follow me," said Jim.

He led the cub to his own private office, opened a drawer, and came up with a book of tickets good for every session of the convention.

I have attended many press conferences with the big-wigs of politics, but I have never seen what I saw at Farley's press conferences in Chicago. I saw him applauded by 300 to 400 newspaper men and women when he came into the room, and heard his answers to questions applauded with equal enthusiasm.

It is interesting to watch him at a press conference. Not many in public life, not even President Roosevelt, surpass him in dealing with the press or foiling off cleverly put questions. Farley is a diplomat; he's keen and intuitive and has a lot of good common sense. And he's frank and open, which is what the press likes.

The press gave Farley a big party and several gifts, including a wrist watch and baseball glove—he likes baseball; once played first base—and they said a lot of nice things to him. He assured them they always treated him fairly. Why not?

As I said in the first paragraph, it's hard to do a story on Jim Farley without slopping over, as we say in the newspaper business.

[From the Beacon Journal, Akron, Ohio, August 9, 1940]

"DEAR JIM"

"Dear Jim," the President called him, and after August 31 he will be known as the former Postmaster General. The letter Farley sent to Mr. Roosevelt, along with its acknowledgment, makes Big Jim's departure from the Cabinet official.

But the exchange of letters doesn't explain the resignation. It would have had to explain the steps leading up to the third-term decision to have done a complete job. Fuller explanation will have to wait upon history—upon the new book Farley will write, for one part; upon Mr. Roosevelt's expanded explanation and the interpretation of historians for the rest.

[From The Sun, Baltimore, Saturday, August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY STEPS DOWN WITH UNIVERSAL RESPECT

In this year of tumultuous and bitter politics, James A. Farley is one of the fortunate men. For he has emerged from a difficult situation with an enlargement in every quarter of the respect given him and with unusual manifestations of affection in many and varied groups.

He has been a practical politician and, as a political manager, he has played the game to win. As the chief political marshal of the Roosevelt Administration, he has made full use of all the advantages that came to his hand in practical manipulations. He was eminently practical in dealing with other eminently practical men in the campaign which brought about the first nomination of Mr. Roosevelt. And he was eminently practical in using, in the administration's dealings with Congress and in the administration's appeals to the people in elections, all the political resources that lay in vast public expenditures and in a public pay roll that has been rapidly increased until, within little more than 7 years, it approaches double the total which Mr. Roosevelt found on assuming office. Mr. Farley had a part in the New Deal which invited criticism and received it.

Yet, he departs from his official duties as Postmaster General and from his political duties as chairman of the Democratic National Committee with the respect and affection of which we have spoken. One reason is that men in and out of politics have learned that, while he played politics up to the hilt, he is a man of personal and official integrity. Another reason is that men in and out of politics have learned that he is unfailingly loyal and straightforward. And still another reason is that, with serious personal and political differences arising between him and the President whom he had so long served, he has conducted himself with dignity and with a really fine sportsmanship. He has known how to break a long relationship without small and mean words—how to break a long relationship with an understanding of the obligations which are imposed by such a relationship.

In short, Jim Farley has proved himself to be very much of a man, and recognition of that fact, warm and hearty recognition, has come from those who have worked with him and from those who have fought him. He passes from official life, and he passes from the larger field of politics, with the best prize of all.

[From the Bangor (Maine) Daily Commercial of August 14, 1940]

MR. FARLEY'S DEPARTURE

It is a commonplace of life and a favorite device of fiction and the stage for two old friends who part under strained circumstances to talk about everything but what they are really thinking. So it must have been with President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley when the latter sent his letter of resignation and Mr. Roosevelt his reply of acceptance.

Mr. Farley was preoccupied only with leaving the Postal Service. It was divulged by his letter that during his two terms the system was placed on a self-sustaining basis, the air mail was extended, a record business was done, etc. All business. Mr. Roosevelt's response was in kind. He spoke of the success of Farley the Postmaster General, of the morale of the Service, the great strides in business efficiency.

In the minds of both these men there must have been countless thoughts that could not go into the letters, for their association is historic. In 1932 Farley was the incarnation of "Roosevelt-Before-Chicago." He delivered the convention votes that made the New Deal possible. He was out in front again in 1936 and made that amazing Maine and Vermont prophecy. It is idle to say that his passing somehow tears away the political past from Mr. Roosevelt. Things just will not be the same, third term or no third term.

That was the rock on which their political association, if not their friendship, broke. Jim wouldn't go along at Chicago in 1940. He wouldn't even pretend to go along. He was practical enough to know that he could not be nominated, practical enough to know there was no stopping F. D. R., but he stood up and had his votes counted, nevertheless. Then he quit as national chairman and as a member of the President's Cabinet. November will disclose the effect of his departure.

[From the Barre Daily Times, Saturday, August 10, 1940]

FARLEY RETIRING

It goes without saying that the United States Government can get a capable Postmaster General, and perhaps it does not need to be said that Franklin D. Roosevelt cannot get along well in his campaign without the services of James A. Farley as campaign manager. But Farley is out of the job as Democratic national chairman on August 15, and he will retire from the Cabinet on August 31.

There is no doubt about the sincerity of Roosevelt when he expressed regrets at the resignation of Farley as Democratic national chairman and as Roosevelt's personal campaign manager. Roosevelt and Farley have been linked up very closely in political maneuvers ever since the former's initial campaign for the Presidential nomination, and there is no doubt that Farley's keen political insight has been a very powerful factor in the political successes of Roosevelt ever since that time. Farley has built up a technique in politics which he turned to tremendous advantage for others but which failed him in his only quest for party preferment. He keeps in close touch with political affairs in all of the 48 States; he knows human nature well; he has the capacity to remember names and faces (it is said he can call 50,000 persons by their first names and can ask a good many of them about their families); he is a good organizer. Those qualifications go to make an effective campaign manager. No one knows that better than "F. D. R." as Farley is wont to call Roosevelt.

Without a doubt Roosevelt would have been glad to retain Farley as national party chairman and as his personal manager. Whether Farley reads the political handwriting on the wall and wishes to get settled in business life before his political and official jobs come to a peremptory end is not known; but if Farley had felt assured that the third term program would go through, and if he himself had been in favor of it, he probably would have stuck to his post as Postmaster General and to the party chairmanship. At any rate, Farely can quit both places with a consciousness that he has been successful in both.

[From the Baton Rouge (La.) State-Times of August 12, 1940]

FAREWELL MR. FARLEY

At the end of this month Postmaster James A. Farley will retire from the Roosevelt Cabinet.

Previously he had notified the Democratic organization that he could no longer serve as its chairman, and Mr. Edward J. Flynn, of New York, has been named to succeed him as head of the Democratic National Committee.

Now, his retirement as Postmaster General imminent, his official connection with the present administration will come to an end.

Usual felicitations were exchanged in his correspondence with the President. The latter assured Mr. Farley that "all of us in the administration will miss you deeply; we count on seeing you often." Mr. Farley in turn told the President he knew it would please him "to know that I have made definite arrangements for my future in private business, where I know I shall be very happy."

Thus, an official connection severed, scarcely can the personal relationship continue in precisely the same way. However kindly the feeling on either side, and the regard for a long, long friendship, the new order brings a difference—as it always does.

As a fact, no matter how capable Mr. Farley's successors, he will be missed both in the Cabinet and as Democratic chairman. He is the type of friendly, wholesome, good-humored person who fits easily into the group and helps put all at their ease. When the members of Mr. Roosevelt's official family gather about the table for serious discussion, they will miss the cheerful presence of "Smiling Big Jim." And in the approaching campaign it will be strange for Mr. Rcosevelt not to have Jim around to untangle many a perplexity. He's been depending on Jim for a long time, through two previous campaigns. Though Mr. Flynn is the President's personal choice for new Democratic chairman, any such change naturally calls for some adjustment.

It is conceded that Mr. Farley has served faithfully the Democratic Party. He has shown himself an energetic and inspiring leader, ready to shoulder more than his share of any blame.

Also, as Postmaster General he has given efficient service. The volume of postal business has set a new record, and Mr. Farley cites that the part of the service for which the public pays has become self-sustaining. It was during Mr. Farley's postmastership that University, La., was established as an independent post office, after he had visited here and had delivered an address at a campus luncheon.

Mr. Farley is the type to throw himself with ardor into any task he undertakes. If he feels any lingering disappointment over the third term, he will doubtless laugh it off and go on about his affairs. Whatever his new business connection, the public will agree with his own prediction that "I know I shall be very happy."

[From the Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise of August 10, 1940]

ANOTHER PILOT IS DROPPED

Cartoonists borrowed an idea from Tenniel's famous cartoon of the Kaiser and Bismarck to picture the parting of Mr. Roosevelt and James A. Farley. The former German Emperor may wonder to this day in his exile at Doorn, Holland, if he made one of the greatest mistakes of his life in dropping his pilot, that "Iron Chancellor" who was the creator of the German Empire.

In his way James A. Farley was a more efficient pilot for Franklin D. Roosevelt perhaps than Bismarck was for William II. Twice the personal devotion and political genius of James A. Farley raised Mr. Roosevelt to the highest office in the world. At least, Americans think so.

Louis Howe must be given some of the credit for Mr. Roosevelt's successful career in politics. But Mr. Farley deserves more credit. The gnomelike Howe did his work more or less behind the scenes. He was a fearless and able adviser to Mr. Roosevelt. According to report, Howe was the only man ever intimately associated with Mr. Roosevelt who dared to talk bluntly to him and did so whenever Howe thought Mr. Roosevelt had made or was about to make a mistake.

But Howe could never have made the friends for himself and for Mr. Roosevelt that Farley made for himself and the President. Mr. Farley went up and down the country meeting politicians and voters. He knew all the more prominent politicians by name and every one was his friend. There is no doubt that many Democrats worked for Mr. Roosevelt who did not like him particularly or approve of his policies, because they liked Jim Farley. It probably is true, as stated many times, that no other man in the country ever had more personal friends who would do anything they could for him than Jim Farley.

But the man who would be President and the man who twice made him President—with the aid and consent of a majority of American voters—came at last to the parting of the ways. It was a melancholy ending for what had been a "beautiful friendship." Mr. Roosevelt's epistolary cordiality does not conceal from any discerning eye the fact that James A. Farley was shabbily treated. He retires from the Cabinet and the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee disappointed in the leader in whom he served with unwavering loyalty as long as his principles would permit him to do so and disappointed also in that his own political career did not reach the heights which, in moments of introspection, he hoped it would.

[From the Age-Herald, Birmingham, Ala., August 10, 1940]

JIM STEPS DOWN

Jim Farley's resignation as Postmaster General takes him one more step away from activity in national politics. Soon he will be occupying himself with pitchers and basemen instead of letters and ballots. But he will never be out of the political picture.

Even if Farley were not retaining the chairmanship of the New York State Democratic Executive Committee he could not quit politics cold. No man who genuinely loves politics as a game as he does could cut himself entirely away from politics at such an early age.

Big Jim will find that there are many little political debts he, in his generous spirit, will feel called upon to repay. And he will learn that thousands of men and women who owe Jim a political debt will insist on trying to repay him.

Mrs. Farley, who wants Jim to quit politics forever, perhaps is destined to disappointment. For Jim has stepped down for the moment—but not out. Baseball, we fear, will be too tame for the man who made a President and who managed the most successful campaign in the history of national politics.

[From the Birmingham News, Birmingham, Ala., August 9, 1940]

VALE, FARLEY

Not all men who have been in the forefront of political life for 8 trying years can step out as Jim Farley is doing with the good will and friendship of so many persons.

The national chairmanship of a political party is a post that carries many opportunities for making enemies. Likewise, a Cabinet position in an administration that has been the center of much controversy is apt to create many enmities for its holder.

But "Genial Jim" resigns as Postmaster General and as chairman of the Democratic National Committee with the good wishes of most Americans, regardless of their party affiliations. The tribute is due to Farley's friendliness, to his capacities for remembering people, and to his strict and unswerving integrity. Farley has been a gentleman in politics, and there are too few of his sort.

[From the Eagle, Brooklyn, N. Y., August 9, 1940]

FARLEY LEAVING THE CABINET

There was no element of surprise in the resignation of James A. Farley as Postmaster General, but the fact that he will step out of the Cabinet on August 31 is a major event in the history of the New Deal.

Jim Farley has occupied that post from the day that Franklin Roosevelt assumed the Presidency on March 4, 1933, and he has filled it with distinction. But more important is the fact that this move will sever his last direct connection with the national administration following his retirement on August 17 from the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee.

The exchange of letters between the President and his Postmaster General contained even more than the customary expressions of regard. For Farley was in a real sense the king maker. He brought about Roosevelt's nomination in Chicago in 1932 and he was the man behind the ballots in 1932 and 1936.

So the President has good reason for expressing his "sincere sorrow" on the departure of his old friend. Farley leaves because of his plans to become president of the New York Yankees Baseball Club. But it is an open secret that the growing political coolness between the two was brought to a head by the President's determination to seek a third term.

[From the Boston (Mass.) Herald of August 9, 1940]

MR. FARLEY DEPARTS

It is not given to every chairman of a Democratic or a Republican national committee to withdraw with his reputation undamaged or enhanced. The late William M. Butler did, his management of the Coolidge campaign in 1924 winning him additional respect from each party. The retiring Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee will also depart from national politics with a sweeter reputation and more prestige than he had when he first tried his hand at the game.

The Washington correspondents, who once made him the whipping boy of the administration, came to respect him deeply. They liked him for his human qualities and his complete absence of hypocrisy. Even the "irreconcilable rebel", Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, an austere old boy, eulogized him warmly at the Democratic Convention. Mr. Farley's standing has never been higher than it is today. If he does as much for the Yankee baseball team, which he is to administer hereafter, as he has done for himself, it will soon have a top standing in the American League.

The change in the public attitude toward him has probably been due to his wearing qualities, his bland good humor, his steadiness in fighting for a principle in which he believes, his loyalty to party traditions, and the conjecture of the public that he "took the rap" for the President on many occasions. His book, too, won him many friends. Here in New England, and especially in Massachusetts, he has been almost as great a favorite as Al Smith. If the Democratic Convention had been as democratic and as responsive to public opinion as the gathering at Philadelphia was, Mr. Farley would have received a great many of the New England ballots for the Presidential nomination.

Was he a masterful political manipulator? Possibly, even though circumstances were favorable to him. Probably any Democrat could have defeated President Hoover in 1932. Indulging in second guessing, one may surmise that an uninspired sort of chairman could have led the Democrats to victory over Governor Landon in 1936. But, according to the box score, Mr. Farley was the most accomplished Democratic national chairman in the history of the party.

[From the Standard, Butte, Mont., August 6, 1940]

JIM FARLEY STEPPING OUT

James A. Farley has washed his hands of the third term. His successor as national chairman of the Democratic Party has been named in characteristic Farley manner. Announcement of Edward J. Flynn's selection was made by Farley himself after a conference between the national committee's representatives, the President, and his friends.

The big, genial Irishman, who has held the post of national party chairman longer than any other man in modern American history, has gained a firmer hold on the affections of millions of voters than he ever had before. The courage of his stand during the national convention of the Democratic Party, when he insisted that democratic process should not be abandoned, proved his courage and his utter devotion to principle.

Farley had not a chance to win, and he knew it. He was aware also that there had been built by years of work on the part of the most astute politicians the party had ever known a third-term psychology with which the great mass of the delegates had been impregnated. And still Farley did not flinch in his position that democratic forms must be observed. He did more than that. He set the example. He said that he had become a candidate and that he would insist that all the forms and methods for candidates be left open and untrammeled. He made his own candidacy a guaranty of the Democratic Party's democracy.

And so, although President Roosevelt was nominated for a third term on the first ballot, American procedure and party forms did not collapse. Farley, alone, had saved them. It was an heroic action. Farley's friends, the convention delegates, the public at large, all realized his magnificent stand.

So Jim Farley steps out of politics this month holding an entirely unique relationship to the voters. He is more highly respected, better loved and admired than he ever was before.

But he will not long remain in private life. His party's call will be heard again. There is division within the ranks, and only men like Farley, who stand on their principles with even greater determination than on their friendships, can save it. Win or lose, the third-term campaign is bound to make a deep and grievous mark upon the party in every part of the country.

There is a strong sentiment in New York for Farley as the party's candidate for Governor. There are other Democrats who want Farley in the United States Senate. It seems doubtful that he will manage to continue in private life over the urgings of his friends.

He has been a powerful factor in the Government and the Cabinet. His loyalty to his chief was never questioned. So long as he served, he served with complete fidelity. Even when he disagreed, he preserved harmony and often helped to smother the kindling fires of dissension.

The President will miss Farley, not only in the campaign but in the operations of the Government, for there never was a more astute or efficient political fixer and smoother-out of differences than the man who led the fight under the Roosevelt banner through two campaigns.

[From the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer of August 10, 1940]

"BIG JIM" IS THROUGH

The final official separation between the President and his longtime and affectionate friend Jim Farley is terminated with the tender of the latter's resignation as Postmaster General.

Mr. Farley resigns in order to devote himself to business and make some money to cover up a leanness in his accounts due to his constant political activities during the past 8 years.

But behind this legitimate and honest reason for the retirement of "Big Jim" is unquestionably a feeling of deep resentment over what happened at the Chicago convention when Mr. Farley was virtually banished from the inside proceedings and the President's case handled by his young friend Harry Hopkins.

As a matter of fact, this attitude of estrangement has been in the building for the past year and only came to its head in connection with the proceedings at the convention.

As a result of Mr. Farley's feeling that the President had snubbed him, he resigned as chairman of the national committee and has now walked out of the Cabinet, manifestly bringing to a sharp and decisive end a long-standing intimacy with the President whose successes in two previous Presidential campaigns were in considerable measure due to the good offices of Jim Farley.

[From the Observer, Charlotte, N. C., August 12, 1940]

WHY THEY RESPECT HIM

Mr. Farley is being condemned by some of the ultra-Roosevelt partisans for having deserted the chief when the latter will probably most greatly need him.

It is an unfair and unwarranted criticism, we hold.

Whether he has quit as chairman of the National Democratic Committee and as Postmaster General with a sizable peeve, or whether financial considerations drove him out of political life, Mr. Farley retires with respect that is well nigh universal—the respect of friends who have been right along with him in party battles during the past two Presidential campaigns as well as the interims, and the respect of his political adversaries whom he always contested fairly and honorably and struck never below the belt.

Mr. Farley is a man of personal and political uprightness.

The Baltimore Sun thinks this is the first reason he has earned and enjoyed the respect of such a widespread part of the general public.

"Men in and out of politics," says that contemporary, "have learned that, while he played politics up to the hilt, he is a man of personal and official integrity."

Another reason, as that newspaper continues, is that Mr. Farley is unfailingly loyal and straightforward.

Often he has been compelled to swallow his pride during the past 7 and more years of New Dealdom.

He withheld his complete sanction to many of its enterprises, but he stood by those he so materially helped to enthrone, and so long as they observed the principles of honor and honesty and fair dealing, he defended them.

The last reason given by the Sun answers the critics of Mr. Farley who charge him with meanness in deserting the administration at this time.

"With serious personal and political differences arising between him and the President, he has conducted himself with dignity and with a really fine sportsmanship. He has known how to break a long friendship without small or mean words."

This is a very rich and deserved tribute to a public servant who moves back into private life with multitudes more of friends than he owned when he undertook the laborious political and official services laid to his charge, and with a public, not always fair and charitable in its appraisements, remarking upon the cleanness of the man and his high sense of honor and uprightness.

[From the Times, Chattanooga, Tenn., August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY RETIRES

Back in 1932, and still later when Mr. Roosevelt had been elected, it was the fashion in many quarters to describe Mr. James A. Farley as the "chief spoilsman" of the new regime. He was known to the country chiefly as a member of the New York Boxing Commission during a period when professional fighting in this country was far from savory. He was, moreover, a contractor and he labored under the handicap of widespread cynicism concerning the activities of "political contractors." He was, in short, a marked man.

A marked man who made his mark, that is "Big Jim" Farley. After approximately 8 years as Democratic national chairman and as Postmaster General, Mr. Farley is retiring from all but the fringe of the political scene. His resignation as Democratic national chairman became effective several days ago; he will step out of the Cabinet on August 31. The jovial big fellow with a host of friends takes with him a record for fair dealing, for hard work, for straight shooting that many other men in public life ought to envy. He has played the game. Many of the political crimes charged against him were committed by others. Many of the mistakes were not his.

As the executive head of the Post Office Department, Mr. Farley's administrative record will for some time be a subject for debate; the adaptation of double-entry bookkeeping by which he regularly showed a profit for that part of the Postal Service for which the public pays has been the subject of jibes and learned articles. But as to the morale of the Postal Service there can be no question; "Big Jim" is liked wherever he goes, and those who like him have learned to admire him. The New Deal has not produced a man with a larger number of friends, or one whose abilities are more widely respected. It is doubtful if in the country's political history there has been an abler party chairman, or one who, starting with as many handicaps, cleared them all by plugging at his job, by remaining steadfastly loyal to his "Chief" up to the very point where his conviction bade him leave.

Until Mr. Farley tells the story, the background and circumstances of his differences of opinion with Mr. Roosevelt will be shadowy. It is known that Mr. Farley does not like the idea of a third term. He will remain chairman of the Democratic State committee for New York, and he will support the Democratic ticket. He is not a "king maker." He is an able, likable, many-sided politician who takes into private life the best wishes of a great many Americans.

[From the Times-Star, Cincinnati, Ohio, of August 9, 1940]

A REAL MAN MOVES OUT

The ablest politician in the Democratic Party, and with one exception the ablest member in the Roosevelt administration, has stepped down from the party's national chairmanship and has resigned his position as Postmaster General, effective at this month's end.

James Aloysius Farley was one of two men who secured Mr. Roosevelt's nomination in 1932. JOHN NANCE GARNER was the other. Both men are through with political life. They knew that when they took at face value Mr. Roosevelt's personal assurances that he would not again be a candidate and carried their own candidacies into the Chicago convention. They realized that the White House had stacked the cards against them, but they held out because neither would countenance violation of what both deemed a basic American doctrine: That two terms should be the outside limit for any Chief Executive. In the sorry spectacle of a gathering of Lilliputians staged by the convention, they and their followers alone preserved the stature of men.

Jim Farley, once New York boxing commissioner, has exemplified in politics the code of the ring at its best. He has struck hard but fair, has taken punishment without outcries. Loyal, efficient, likable, he has more real friends in his party than any other man. We are inclined to believe that the President's growing coolness toward him has no better explanation than that Farley, on return from a western trip more than a year ago, talked straight to him. He told Mr. Roosevelt, so the accepted story goes, that he could be renominated but not reelected—which at present writing sounds like very valid prophecy. This was straight talk, and flattery was expected. What makes the story ring true is that the Cabinet officer who tells Mr. Roosevelt that he can be "elected and elected and elected," and that he is the greatest man on earth, is a permanent White House guest.

With Farley going, and Harry Hopkins burning incense daily at his chief's very feet, it is just too bad—that is, too bad for Mr. Roosevelt.

[From the State, Columbia, S. C., Thursday, August 8, 1940]

MR. FARLEY'S CRISIS

Some say President Roosevelt owes his political success to Postmaster General Farley. Others say Mr. Farley owes his high position as a national figure to President Roosevelt. There is truth in both statements, although neither is a well-rounded presentation of the truth.

For a decade these two men have come along together, each of incalculable assistance to the other. To attempt to measure the aid each has given the other leads into abstract opinions. But this is a fact:

The Democratic Party needs the combined and harmonized efforts of these two men in the course of the coming campaign. Again there is a chance for each to promote the other, and for both to serve party and country.

But Mr. Farley is hurt. He had hoped to win the Democratic nomination of President. Will the injury he now feels continue to give him pain throughout the remaining years of his life? The State believes that Mr. Farley, and only Mr. Farley, can determine the answer to that question. If he sulks he cannot be happy, now or later. If he rises magnificently above the plane of normal conduct, throws himself energetically into another campaign for the causes he has stood for, he may become radiantly happy again, as he has been in the past, and he may live on and on in that enviable state of mind and of spirit—a condition achieved by serving, not by sulking.

Mr. Farley is an old head in politics. He has seen others suffer and die of disappointment after hopes for the Presidency had been frustrated. He knows that Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, of California, never has recovered from his rejection of the Vice Presidential nomination later accepted by Calvin Coolidge. If JOHNSON had said "Yes," instead of "No," he would have become President on the death of Harding and thus attained the heights toward which his sharp ambition had been driving him since his young manhood. But he did not say "Yes." He said "No." And that fact has run around and around in his mind and perhaps in his spirit.

Champ Clark the elder—Mr. Farley knows how disappointment after the Baltimore convention crushed that lovable old statesman. He also knows that the father's chagrin seems to have come down to the son who now serves in the United States Senate.

Governor Ritchie of Maryland—Mr. Farley knew him, perhaps intimately. He thought he would be nominated, and the thought consumed him, confused him, injured him in politics, and in spirit. It may even have hastened his death.

Al Smith—he and Mr. Farley have been pals. Does Mr. Farley believe the once "happy warrior" is happy now? Or has sulking cut him down in political importance, and perhaps soured his once altruistic heart?

The list might be longer, with the conclusion always the same—sulking hurts the sulker.

For a number of years Mr. Farley has been growing in moral, intellectual and political stature. Whether he continues to grow depends, this newspaper believes, on his conduct within the next few weeks and months. If he is big enough to find his life by losing it, happiness and continuing growth are likely to characterize his career from now on, as they have from formerly up to now. Because of its belief in the causes represented by the Democratic Party, and its personal liking for Mr. Farley, The State hopes his geniality, generosity, and bigness will combine to win the critical spiritual battle now apparently going on within him.

[From the Columbus Evening Dispatch of Saturday, August 10, 1940]

FARLEY QUITS THE CABINET—HE TRADES POLITICS FOR SPORTS

A bit of news that the country has long known was coming has at last hit the front page. Jim Farley has resigned as Postmaster General in President Roosevelt's Cabinet. Thus, in addition to having lost an invaluable campaign manager when Mr. Farley resigned his chairmanship of the National Democratic Committee, the President has also lost a valuable official. Admired for his remarkable ability, respected for his integrity, and liked for his genuine friendliness, Farley steps down now from public life to be missed by millions of Americans.

Apparently, however, he will not disappear from the public eye. Mr. Farley, it is assumed almost without question, will, in addition to his new post with the Coca Cola Co., become president of the New York Yankees baseball team, and as such will still hold a place in the limelight and public affections. He will trade politics for sports. Both are spectacular activities with wide human appeal that demand a great degree of expertness for continued success. There is no doubt that Mr. Farley will shine in his new environment as he did in the one he is leaving.

There is a note of sadness in his change. A great deal of effort has been made on his part to make it appear that the sole reasons he is leaving his political connections are because he wants to recoup his fortunes and to spend more time with his family. These considerations obviously played a large part in making his decision. But the public cannot but believe that entering into his decision also is his deep patriotic regard for democratic government and his regret that his chief has seen fit to violate it by seeking a third term in office.

That indication of unworthy ambition, coupled with the vanity that has permitted Mr. Roosevelt to see himself as indispensable to the Nation, must have cut deeply into Jim Farley, who never yet has lost his head or his judgment. The parting of the two old friends, as one forges heedlessly ahead on a dangerous and needless pathway, rouses a feeling of pity for the injured faith which the other must be suffering.

[From the Dallas Journal of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY FIXES FAREWELL DATE

Sunny Jim Farley has set the date for his retirement from the Cabinet of Franklin D. Roosevelt. As August fades into September and the Presidential campaign steps up its tempo, the genial Postmaster General will turn over the key to the stamp box and all the other requisites of his office to another.

No longer will the fertile Farley brain devise new schemes to enrich the revenues of the Department and the collections of the world's philatelists. No longer will postmasters from Bangor, Maine, to Petaluma, Calif., look forward to visitations from this rotund, good-natured cabineteer. No longer will local politicians pleasantly anticipate the political conferences that attend such official business tours.

Jim is through on August 31. The third-term candidacy atop the New Deal finished him.

Smith, Roosevelt, and Farley—a one-time powerful triumvirate it was. Smith "took a walk" 4 years ago. Farley stuck it out with his friend Franklin D. till the third-term nomination came between them. It was too much. The Damoclean sword was held over his own ambition till the hour of nomination in the Democratic Convention. He saw it cut his hope of attaining the high office for which Al Smith reached and failed and which Franklin D. twice held and seeks to hold again. Jim Farley's mind was made up. His new connections awaited only his word of assent. He would have no more of politics.

The Democratic Party won't be the same with a Hopkins at the right hand of the title holder instead of a Farley. The Post Office Department won't be the same, whoever the new Postmaster General may be.

But the biggest drawing card the Yankees will have on tour next year will be their new president, Jim Farley.

[From the Dallas Morning News of August 10, 1940]

GENIAL JIM

Now that Jim Farley voluntarily removes himself from the scuffle of political battle, he must be pleased, if a little surprised, to note the almost universal good will and good wishes that go out to him from his fellow Americans.

As Postmaster General he gets the bulk of administrative credit for placing this great public-service branch of the Government on as sound a basis as at any time in its history. With the exception of the air mail and certain other subsidies which are thoroughly justified, the Postal Service is now on a paying basis.

Jim Farley's break with public office and national politics is complete. He has already severed his connection as chairman of the National Democratic Committee. It is noteworthy that the big, happy-go-lucky Irishman is loyal to the end. The turn of events both before and after Chicago (1940, of course) would have embittered a less sanguine friend. A true son of his faith, he must have been outraged by reports that even his friend in the White House feared that his catholicism ruled him out as a candidate for either of the two highest offices. Yet time will bear out Genial Jim's conviction that religious belief should be no bar to this highest ambition. In the meantime he may retire with good conscience, knowing that he has done a good job sincerely and faithfully.

[From the Times Herald, Dallas, Tex., Friday, August 9, 1940]

FARLEY RETIRES

James A. Farley has submitted his resignation as Postmaster General, and it has been accepted with regret by the President.

In accepting it in this fashion, President Roosevelt speaks not only for himself, but he also expresses the sentiment of the people of the United States. They, too, are profoundly sorry that the man who for 7 years has headed that important Department of the Government has lain down his burden. His act deprives them of the services of an as able and competent Postmaster General as they have had; one who, in more respects than one, stands at the head of that distinguished list.

Mr. Farley has every reason to be proud of his record; of the many new post offices built, and other needed facilities provided for during his regime, of the new methods making for greater efficiency introduced, of the fact that the Department, under his leadership, has become self-sustaining in important parts of the service.

But, as he told the President, his greatest satisfaction comes from the "manner in which the Department's relations with its employees in every branch of the service have been carried on." In those words are revealed the essence of the man himself, for Jim Farley loves his fellow men. He likes to get along with them and to see them prosper. It is that quality that ties men to him, and makes them love him.

That the American people do love him is something that has become increasingly evident as the years of his service as Postmaster General, and as chairman of the National Democratic Committee gave them the opportunity to know him, and to take his measure, not only as an official, but as a man.

The retiring Postmaster General gives as the reason for leaving the need for devoting his full time and attention to his personal affairs, and despite the recent turn events have taken in phases of his relations with the administration, there is no reason to doubt its genuineness. Had his opposition to the third term been less adamant, he perhaps would have stayed on as chairman of the national committee. If he had felt that his duty demanded his remaining as Postmaster General, we may be certain he would not have given up that place.

So as he goes back to private life, this man takes with him the deep affection and every good wish of the people he has served so faithfully and well.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat and Leader of August 9, 1940]

JIM FARLEY'S CHANGE

Probably no American will retire from public life with more sincere regret on the part of millions than attaches to the resignation of James A. Farley, Postmaster General, who makes his exit from President Roosevelt's Cabinet on August 31.

President Roosevelt and Mr. Farley part company after 8 years of the closest association on the most friendly terms. They have been almost as brothers in public service, and although they have at times disagreed on public measures, nothing has been permitted to mar their friendship and devotion for each other. It is pleasing to see them part official company on such amicable terms. Undoubtedly their friendship will continue through the years although they will hardly see one another as often in the future as they have in the past.

Mr. Farley is one of few men who emerge from political life with a higher standing and a better rating than before they entered. He has been generally recognized as the best national chairman either major party has had in the last quarter of a century. The reason for his success is no secret. Honesty and sincerity has been his trade-mark. Added to that is his genial personality and his capacity for hard work. He was never known to betray a friend or to abuse a trust. Enemies were unknown to him for he possessed the rare faculty of enjoying the confidence and esteem of all peoples, of whatever political complexion or walk in life. He gave freely alike of his loyalty to friends and to party. His word was his bond.

Jim Farley is as mild-mannered as he is honest. The esteem and regard of those who know him best border on affection. In every way he is a great American, one of the greatest, and his unblemished record in public life will stand as a shining star in the political firmament of the Nation.

Entering business life as president of the New York American League baseball team he will carry with him the best wishes of millions of staunch admirers.

[From the Davenport (Iowa) Daily Times of August 12, 1940]

FARLEY'S NEW CONNECTIONS

All Americans, regardless of their politics, will wish Jim Farley well in his new undertakings. In addition to his Yankee ball-club interests he is to be head of the export division of Coca-Cola. Farley has the reputation of not drinking anything stronger than Coca-Cola, and he ought to be able to recommend the qualities of that beverage to the natives of Timbuktu as convincingly as he sold the New Deal to the people of the United States.

Jim is a master politician. The Roosevelt line-up will feel his loss keenly in the campaign now developing. But Jim had to go. He didn't like the third-term idea and anybody in that frame of mind must not be permitted to stay around the Roosevelt bailiwick. It was noteworthy that the exchange of letters between Roosevelt and Farley made no mention of the third term.

There is no question about it, Jim Farley was the most popular man in the recent Democratic National Convention in Chicago. Every time he showed up anywhere there were scores to shake his hand. The principal spontaneous applause from floor and from galleries of the convention was for Farley.

Mr. Roosevelt shoved Farley aside, and in the saddle for this campaign are Ed Flynn, a typical big city political boss, and Harry Hopkins, a starry-eyed new dealer who acted as Roosevelt's personal representative at Chicago and who lives at the White House.

When the Chicago convention had ended, it was certain that Mr. Farley would leave the national committee and the position of Postmaster General. So far as the latter position goes, Mr. Roosevelt might well follow the example set in naming Knox and Stimson, Republicans to his Cabinet. The Post Office Department could well use an outstanding businessman as its chief since it is one of the biggest business enterprises in the country. Can you think of a new dealer, off hand, who is well fitted for that post?

[From the Dayton (Ohio) Journal of August 9, 1940]

FAREWELL TO FARLEY

Now it has become obvious that the band leaders at the Chicago convention who insisted upon making Take Me Out to the Ball Game the theme song of Postmaster General James A. Farley must have possessed the gift of prophecy. Now the Postmaster General not only resigns from the Roosevelt Cabinet, but he becomes president of the New York Yankees baseball club. The resignation is to become effective August 31.

Farley held a peculiar position in the Roosevelt Cabinet. He was the President's political lieutenant; also the administration whipping boy whenever things went wrong. Being loyal to his chief, he exhibited a surprising capacity for punishment—even that which should have fallen to others. Furthermore, he was one of the frankest distributors of Government jobs the country has ever seen. It was Farley who filed and indexed jobs and applicants and saw to it that the latter had "political clearance" before going on the Federal pay roll. Also, it was Farley who did much of the "leg work" in connection with political campaigns.

It is a curious fact that Mr. Farley became ambitious after he went to Washington rather than before. Even as early as 1934 there were reports that he aspired to be either Governor of New York or a Presidential candidate in 1940. In both he was disappointed. In the matter of the Presidency he was blocked by no less a person than the chief to whom he had been so loyal for many years. Also, Mr. Farley's opposition to the third term and to some of the political purges made him most uncomfortable in a Cabinet position.

No doubt Mr. Farley's attitude is typical of that of many regular Democrats. Although opposing the third term he chooses to remain silent rather than support the Republican candidate. How far this will affect the result in November remains to be seen. However, with the departure of Mr. Farley from the Cabinet the "leftist" wing of the New Deal, the "palace politicians" will come into their own. They will hold undisputed sway—at least until next year. But the Roosevelt administration will miss the loyal, shrewd, and effective political services of the retiring Postmaster General who was useful to them although they never liked him.

[From the Detroit News, August 9, 1940]

THE FINAL PARTING

Following the severance of their still longer political association, official relations between President Roosevelt and James A. Farley are coming to an end. Their exchanges expressing warm personal esteem for one another as Farley submitted and the President accepted his resignation as Postmaster General, were obviously sincere. It could not be otherwise between two such men. Their success as a political "team" is assured of a permanent place in American history.

There is, nevertheless, another fact in their case, unmentioned in the letters, unconfirmed by any open expression by either, but clearly established by Farley's course during and preceding the Chicago convention. Farley was firmly opposed to the President's candidacy for a third term. At Chicago he insisted that an opposition to the President be recorded, preventing his renomination by acclamation.

Farley will not be among the Democrats deserting Roosevelt for Willkie, but it may be assumed with confidence that his opposition on principle to the third term contributed materially in forming his decision to become happily situated in private life as president of the New York Yankees.

When Farley quits as Postmaster General, August 31, he will have had an unusual tenure as head of the Postal Service. His record there is good, notwithstanding that all the while, since March 1933 until a few days ago, he also was the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and, consequently, the chief patronage dispenser at Washington. After making thousands of postal appointments on the political basis, he probably did the utmost that could be done under those circumstances to get efficient results.

Having a far keener sense of financial responsibility than the New Deal elsewhere displayed, he sought to balance postal income and expenditures, and he took pride in the showings of success the yearly figures enabled him to make. The Air Mail Service was developed to its present extensive proportions under him.

[From the Dubuque (Iowa) Telegraph-Herald, August 11, 1940]

PARTING OF THE WAYS

In their exchange of felicitations and regrets, the President and Jim Farley studiously avoided any mention of the third-term issue, which brought about this severance of relations. But it might just as well have been mentioned, for it figured in every news account and comment on the event.

The final break is all the more dramatic in the light of earlier events. Here was "the man behind the ballots," as Farley was widely known, withdrawing from a political battle which will probably excel 1932 and 1936 in its intensity. He said he was going into new work "where I know I shall be happy."

We wonder if he'll be happy anywhere else—this master technician, who did the spade work which produced the greatest of American political landslides.

[From the Durham (N. C.) Herald, August 9, 1940]

BIG JIM QUITS

There isn't much to be said about Mr. Farley's resignation except that it was expected.

The exchange of letters, as anticipated, reflects the warmth of friendship that has existed between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley these several years and in spite of much columnistic gossip to the contrary, we suspect the two gentlemen still cherish their comradeship.

It is fairly evident that Mr. Farley lacks enthusiasm for the third term and feels that Mr. Roosevelt sort of snubbed him on that issue. It is just as evident that Big Jim recognizes more fully than some of his recent boosters that he (Farley) owes something to Mr. Roosevelt the same as Mr. Roosevelt owes something to him, and that in or out of the official family he cannot well sulk in this campaign.

It is no secret that Mr. Roosevelt and his intimates beseeched Mr. Farley to stay on as party chairman and still hope to have him actively in the Roosevelt corner during the campaign.

It is not a foregone conclusion but a reasonable guess that Mr. Farley will leave most of the campaign management to others. First, because he has no enthusiasm for the task, and secondly, because he is dubious of the outcome.

But Jim Farley cannot cut loose from politics all at once if he wanted to and the fact that he is staying as New York chairman indicates that he has no desire to do so. And Jim, unlike Al Smith, knows well that the professional party man can't get far by "taking a walk."

So our guess is that Jim will put in some effective blows for his old chief ere the November deadline.

[From the Easton (Pa.) Express of August 9, 1940]

THE UNHAPPY WARRIOR

There is no reason, of course, why the friendship between James A. Farley and Franklin D. Roosevelt shouldn't "last" as the President put it in his letter accepting the resignation of the Postmaster General as of August 31.

Between the two men there ought to be a mutual affectionate regard which in the very nature of things arises out of long association.

But, if we could look into Jim Farley's heart we believe we would find a different tale to be told regarding whatever political friendship remains between the Cabinet officer and the man whom he twice aided in putting in the White House.

From a number of different authentic sources in Washington in recent months the report has been persistent that Roosevelt and Farley were not seeing eye to eye on many public questions—and that the greatest of these was the third term.

Certainly, by his actions in Chicago, reinforced by the words of CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, Mr. Farley showed his utter disapproval of the third-term bid and especially of the steam-roller tactics employed by his Chief.

Under the circumstances, it may well be said that Jim Farley represents the unhappy warrior—that is to say, a man who fought valiantly for one whom he long believed to be a political god, only to learn at long last that the said deity was made up of considerably more political clay than of the stuff of which statesmen are constituted.

It is a melancholy conclusion to an association which ought to have gone down in history as a historic one of mutual loyalty and regard.

[From the Elizabeth (N. J.) Daily Journal of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY OUT OF POLITICS

Not long ago James A. Farley resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee. This week he resigned as a member of the President's official family. He still retains his job, for a time at least, as chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee.

It must be something of a wrench of feelings for Mr. Farley to take himself out of politics, when he was so deeply immersed in politics. It has been said of him that he made Franklin D. Roosevelt President; yet it is quite well understood that his letter of resignation does not tell the whole story of his feelings regarding the end of their long, intimate association. Political ambition is far from being careful of friendships, and far from exhibiting full appreciation for favors and service rendered.

The Hatch law is intended to divorce public office from political activity. It has never reached the President's Cabinet nor had much influence on the members of his family of advisers. Mr. Farley will be remembered longer, it is likely, as the political manager of the New Deal party than as a postal administration statesman. Yet there have been many innovations in the Postal Service. No administration has ever thought out so many real or contrived reasons for making stamps and keeping the stamp engravers and printing presses busy.

Mr. Farley has won more actual admiration and respect in the past few weeks than ever before in his attitude toward the third-term candidacy of his former political associate. He took the failure of his own Presidential aspirations smiling, as seasoned politicians do, but has undoubtedly retained the memory of the treatment himself and other aspirants received.

[From the Fairmont (W. Va.) Times of August 9, 1940]

PROOF OF GREATNESS

Jim Farley cut his second and last official connection with Washington yesterday when he resigned as Postmaster General. At the end of this month he will be free to reenter the field of private enterprise, even though there is little likelihood that he will return to private life. For one so prominent, association with the New York Yankees can hardly be termed retirement.

The best proof of Jim Farley's great ability is to be found in the fact that he made a success of the two big jobs he tackled in the Roosevelt administration. Just a few weeks ago he retired as the Democratic Party's national chairman, acclaimed as one of the greatest political chiefs the party has ever known. Yesterday he resigned as head of a Federal department, leaving behind records which establish him as one of the most able executives ever to grace the Postmaster General's office.

If the point needs proving that a politician can also be a good businessman, Jim Farley has furnished the necessary evidence.

[From the Gadsden (Ala.) Times of August 9, 1940]

LOYAL DEMOCRAT TO RETIRE

The retirement of Jim Farley as chairman of the National Democratic Committee, August 17, to be followed shortly thereafter by his retirement as Postmaster General, will mark the exit of one of the most loyal and capable Democrats associated with the party during the past seven and a half years.

Indeed it may be said that Farley is one of the two Cabinet officers who have been more of an asset than a liability to the administration, the other being Secretary Hull. Farley's intense loyalty to his party and to the principles for which it has been committed in past generations won for him the respect and gratitude of millions of sincere party members, among many of whom will exist the feeling that his reward was scanty out of all proportions to its value.

Meanwhile it is to be hoped that there will be no hesitancy about appointing a Democrat to succeed Mr. Farley as Postmaster General. With four Republicans and one Socialist now in the Cabinet, it would put the Democrats in the minority were a Republican named to succeed Farley, and would look much like an invitation to turn the whole job over to the Republicans.

Besides, Farley deserves better than to be succeeded by a member of the party he has fought so shrewdly and successfully throughout the past two national elections.

[From the Greenville (S. C.) News of August 9, 1940]

THE POST OFFICE REPORT

For the past 6 years Postmaster General James A. Farley has been able to report a "net operating surplus" for his department. The fiscal year ending on June 30 ran true to form and his preliminary report shows a surplus of about $8,000,000 "with respect to that part of the postal services that are rendered to the public for hire."

When the Department's annual report to Congress is made in December, however, it is expected that the usual "gross" deficit will appear. These figures will include the air-mail subsidies and the estimated costs of handling free mail. These items in recent years have caused the Post Office Department to show gross operating deficits of around $45,000,000 annually.

Little criticism is heard of the Post Office Department. There is a general feeling that it is doing a good job and that it is operating efficiently. Yet every year when the public's attention is drawn to that item of free mail, a few squawks are heard. A great many citizens feel that several million dollars could be trimmed from this item without doing anybody any harm and without detriment to the service.

[From the Hamilton (Ohio) Journal-News of August 10, 1940]

JIM FARLEY BOWS OUT

Bowing out of the national political picture is James A. Farley, of New York. "Big Jim" has turned over the reins as chairman of the Democratic National Committee; he quits President Roosevelt's Cabinet as Postmaster General on August 31.

Farley will enter private business, if becoming owner of the New York Yankees baseball team can be called private business.

At the end of his political trail, for the present at least, Jim Farley leaves a twin heritage which might be described in these words: "He was honest; he was loyal."

Jim Farley was a hard hitter. Opponents early learned that. But he could take it as well as give it, and he never struck below the belt.

His loyalty, when historians get around to writing about it, probably will be pointed to as his outstanding characteristic. In the vagaries of a changing political scene, his loyalty often had been tested and never found wanting.

If Jim Farley is half as successful in his baseball connection as he was in politics, and friends both inside and outside the Democratic Party wish him well, the Yankees should have many more prosperous years ahead.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Courant of August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY RESIGNS

In his letter of resignation as Postmaster General, Mr. Farley devoted himself chiefly to expressing his esteem for Mr. Roosevelt as a man and to describing with justified pride his accomplishment in the Postal Service. For his part, the President in reply also dwelt upon his great affection for the man who, more than any other, was responsible for his great political victories and upon the achievements of Mr. Farley in the Post Office Department. What neither could honestly do was to discuss the New Deal in its present manifestation; to do so would have been to cast a shadow over the whole occasion.

The personal friendship between the two gentlemen, who have gone through so much together, doubtless will endure. What is painfully evident is that in other respects they now have drifted far apart. A week hence Mr. Farley will no longer be chairman of the National Democratic Committee; 3 weeks hence he will have left the Cabinet. Even though long anticipated, the imminent dissolution of an extraordinary political partnership gives the situation fresh significance. Not only is the President deprived of his most accomplished political adviser, in addition, he loses the backing of a man whom many have come to respect deeply and to whom they look for political guidance.

Doubtless Mr. Farley will vote the straight ticket when he enters the voting booth in November, as his sponsor for the Presidential nomination, CARTER GLASS, has said that he will do. Maybe he will be inveigled into taking some part in the campaign before it closes. Yet the chances are that "Jim" will be a pretty silent man for the next few months, as he gets his new business venture under way. His silence will speak loudly, and it may make a deeper impression than all the speeches and parades of the oddly assorted cabal that has taken over his role.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Times of August 9, 1940]

NO SURPRISE

Postmaster General Farley's resignation takes neither the country nor the President by surprise. It was definitely announced as forthcoming during the Chicago convention, the only question being when. As usual in such cases, Mr. Farley and the President exchange messages of good will, regret, and mutual admiration. Mr. Farley would be less than human, however, if his soul did not contain some bitterness over conditions under which he retires and which prompted him to carry his third protest to the length of a last-ditch candidacy.

The country has increased respect for the Postmaster General. It looks upon him as a man of sense, character, and courage. Modern times have furnished few more resourceful or more skillful political managers. The Democratic Party will indeed miss his hand from its helm.

[From the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle of August 11, 1940]

HE HAS LIVED UP TO HIS CODE

The retirement of Postmaster General James A. Farley to private business on August 31 removes from the Cabinet one of its most respected figures and one of the best-liked and most-useful public men of our period.

From humble circumstances Jim Farley came up through the routine routes of politics to the management of two Presidential campaigns, to 8 years as chairman of the Democratic National Committee and 7½ years in the Cabinet.

Yet never during his whole career has the finger of accusation been pointed at him with even a particle of success. He is no pretender and would never object to being called a politician. But he has always played the game squarely and by the rules as he understood them.

The necessity of making some money for his family is one of the reasons involved in Farley's retirement. The authentic story is told how, once before when Farley was talking of retiring in order to improve his financial status, another less scrupulous politician expressed surprise.

"A man who has been in his position," he said, "ought to be worth a million or two."

But Farley's wealth is in his friendships. These are extremely numerous as a result of a great capacity for friendship. He probably knows more people by their first names than any other American. He has traveled all over the country many, many times; and while he could and did say "No" when occasion demanded, he could never say "No" to a plea that he help out his friends who had charge of a program by coming to make a speech.

During his long career as political generalissimo he has often taken the rap for things done by others. But never has he complained. He is and always has been "Sunny Jim," proud that he plays the game as he thinks it ought to be played, proud that his word, once given, has always been kept, at whatever sacrifice was necessary, proud of the friendships he has made and the loyalties he has inspired.

As an organizer he will be difficult to follow in the national committee, and as an administrator it is one of his most cherished prides that he has been able to get the Post Office Department into the "black" after years in the red.

His capacity for detail has always been amazing, his policy of almost never going to a town without going to the post office, his tremendous capacity for remembering names and faces, his daily output of personal letters.

He has friends because he has always practiced Robert Louis Stevenson's formula: "The only way to have a friend is to be one." He goes back to private life with the respect of everyone because of the qualities of character he has shown and because he has never failed to live up to his code.

[From the Indianapolis (Ind.) Star, August 10, 1940]

"GENIAL JIM" DEPARTS

Resignation of James A. Farley as Postmaster General, effective August 31, removes the final link between this nationally popular Democrat and the Roosevelt administration. At the Chicago convention he announced his retirement as Democratic national chairman. Farley's letter to the Executive was somewhat formal. Thus ended the close relationship of the pair that has dominated party affairs for the last 8 years.

Mr. Farley was opposed vigorously to the Roosevelt ambition to shatter the third-term tradition. He also had disagreed with the Executive on other matters and the rift between the two gradually widened. The President will miss the guiding genius of the New Deal campaigns. Farley is by no means indispensable as Postmaster General, although his administration of that post has been satisfactory. This Cabinet berth usually goes to a political expert, however, with assistants handling most of the departmental routine.

The new dealers have suffered an irreparable loss in Farley's retirement as national chairman. He was marvelously effective as an organizer. This ability was due to a remarkably widespread acquaintance throughout the country and to unusual personal popularity. Few men in political life have known personally so many leaders in every town and hamlet. Edward J. Flynn, Farley's successor as chairman, is capable enough in a narrower orbit. He is handicapped, however, by inevitable comparison with rare qualities of "Genial Jim."

[From the Indianapolis (Ind.) Star, August 19, 1940]

FARLEY STEPS OUT

The retirement of James A. Farley as Democratic national chairman and his stepping out of the Cabinet post of Postmaster General, which is scheduled for the end of the month, take an interesting and colorful figure from the stage of national politics. He relinquishes those positions in order to accept more lucrative and permanent opportunities in the world of business. The record he has made in directing the affairs of his party and his capacity as head of the Post Office Department are assurance of success in his new undertakings.

Mr. Farley's attitude in opposition to the third-term nomination of the President was well known. He was insistent on the presentation of his name as a candidate for the nomination, at the Chicago convention, in order to register his conviction on the question of renaming the President. It was generally known he was anxious to return to private business, a determination that has been put into action. He is a good citizen and an American gentleman who served his party well as chairman and the public well as Postmaster General.

[From the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion-Ledger of August 10, 1940]

JIM FARLEY LEAVES A RECORD AS A TRULY GREAT POSTMASTER

Postmaster General James A. Farley formally resigns his post, as he had announced he would do, and thus ends his long political, personal, and official alliance with President Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose two campaigns he directed. He had earlier resigned as Democratic national chairman.

President Roosevelt accepted the resignation in what press dispatches describe as "an exceedingly friendly letter" in which he expressed "sincere sorrow that we are losing you as a member of the official family" and in which he testified to Farley's "unselfish years in the public service."

Some, remembering all the implications and facts of the story leading up to Mr. Farley's resignation, may question the full sincerity of the President's "sorrow" in losing him. But none can question the sincerity of the President's praise of Farley's services and accomplishments as Postmaster General.

"That the post office service is on a completely self-sustaining basis with respect to that part that is rendered to the public for hire, is in itself a real tribute to you and your associates," the President wrote. And he added that the Post Office Department, during Farley's administration, made great strides in business efficiency, public service, and in the bettering of the morale of the 300,000 employees.

All citizens with any knowledge of the Post Office Department can and do endorse that tribute. "Big Jim" Farley, no matter how history treats him as a politician, will long have his place in the Nation's annals as one of the greatest, most efficient, most humane of the Nation's Postmasters. The Post Office Department will miss him as much or more than the President does.

[From the Jersey City (N. J.) Journal, August 9, 1940]

FARLEY STEPS ASIDE

James A. Farley has resigned as Postmaster General, and thus goes out of the New Deal picture the No. 1 man of all those who pushed Roosevelt up the political ladder. Farley now joins the growing company of those other early Rooseveltian Warwicks like Ray Moley, Lewis Douglas, Hugh Johnson, et cetera, et cetera, who have been dropped as the Kaiser dropped Bismarck.

The letters exchanged between Mr. Farley and the President regarding the resignation were extremely friendly—so friendly that both visibly overplayed the part. The honey was thick but transparent enough so that the public can perceive the underlying cause of the break—the third term.

Mr. Farley had a 3-way political tie-up for 8 years. He was Postmaster General, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee, all at the same time for 8 years. No amount of criticism could budge him out of any of those places. It remained for his chief to shame him out. Farley stood pat for 8 years, but that was all he wanted, or would take for himself, and was all he thought a President should take.

When Mr. Roosevelt branded himself as the "indispensable man" and headed himself for a third term, it was too much for Farley. "Big Jim" will have, and deserves, happier fields of endeavor.

[From the Lockport (N. Y.) Union-Sun and Journal, August 10, 1940]

WHY IS FARLEY POPULAR?

It appears that nearly all the nice things to be said about a national politician this year were reserved for Postmaster General James A. Farley. And why was that? He is not a scholar, great statesman, or an outstanding administrator of a Department of the Government. He is not weak, and he does not bend easily.

He is the one big man in the Government who never gets mad, never says unkind or hurtful things about anybody. He is a true gentleman of the finest type of Irish parentage. He is "Gentleman Jim" Farley, nothing more.

That explains why he is one of the country's most popular citizens.

[From the Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer Journal of August 9, 1940]

JIM FARLEY

The Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General, has resigned, effective August 31 to go into private business.

The American people thus lose from their service one of the ablest, most colorful, and most useful men in public life since the turn of the century.

Any man who can remember a million faces; who, in a short 7 years in public life can call a half million people by their first name, and who steadfastly refused to allow his business firm to take any Federal contracts, or any subcontracts on Federal work, when for years there was practically no work being done his firm could do except public work, not only has morale but morality that will always be a monument to his integrity.

It is a parody on public life that a man of the attainments of Jim Farley has to turn to a plaything like baseball in order to win a substance for a rainy day in life, instead of continuing to serve the people of a nation of 130,000,000 as it has never been better served than he has served and still has the ability to continue to serve it.

[From the Lincoln (Nebr.) Journal of August 10, 1940]

JIM FARLEY IS OUT

The political break that has been indicated for a long time has finally been made complete. Jim Farley has resigned as Postmaster General. The resignation is effective with the end of August. It has been accepted with "real regret" by the President. Discussing his future Mr. Farley says, "I shall be very happy."

Previously Mr. Farley had resigned from the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee. It will be recalled that he was a candidate who was steam-rollered by Presidential forces in the Chicago convention. At that time both the President and Mrs. Roosevelt expressed their high regard for Mr. Farley and apparently went far afield to impress the public and the party concerning the high esteem in which they held the political manager who had much to do with placing Mr. Roosevelt in the White House. Another political manager has been named and is now officiating.

The Farley resignation was announced but a few hours before the President was to meet Secretaries Wallace and Hopkins in conference. Mr. Wallace is the President's political running mate. He aspires to the post now held by JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas. Mr. GARNER recently left Washington with the intimation that he might not return. So the designation "of Texas" seems fitting.

At the Chicago convention, Secretary Hopkins was the manager of the President's board of political strategy. The Wallace influences were favorable to Roosevelt. The President had indicated that he desired Wallace for a running mate. Secretary Hopkins went so far as to indicate to political workers that the President might not accept a third-term nomination if Wallace were not named for the Vice Presidency.

Political medicine mixing has been the order of the week at Hyde Park. Mr. Farley has had no part in it. He did aspire to the Presidential nomination. His defeat was made certain by the Roosevelt machine. He is a shrewd politician, however. He will go along. No such assurance has come from GARNER. Mr. GARNER has been remarkably reticent.

[From the Los Angeles Times of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY RESIGNS

Postmaster General Farley leaves the Cabinet August 31, but of greater moment to the administration is his departure from the post of chairman of the Democratic National Committee 2 weeks earlier. As Postmaster Generals go, in a department which mostly runs itself, Farley has made about an average record. As a political manager he has been outstanding, and the efforts of Boss Flynn, his successor, to keep at reasonable efficiency the organization which Farley built up are likely to be pathetic.

The public and Farley's numerous friends will not be seriously deceived by the mutual expressions of esteem and protestations of undying friendship in the exchange of letters between him and the President. The President's comments on Farley as a candidate and the shabby treatment Farley got at Chicago will be remembered for a long time.

It will be noted that Farley looks forward to his as yet officially unnamed private business venture "with great pleasure." The innuendo is not to be missed. He is sick of the New Deal.

[From the Lynchburg (Va.) News of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY RETIRES

James A. Farley has resigned as Postmaster General in the Cabinet of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, a post he has held since 1933, and will step down August 31. Effective a few days earlier he has already resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Thus ends a political and administrative association of two colorful figures in American life that has continued for many years and has had great effect upon the political fortunes of both men. It has been a team that has written history in a way that neither could have written by himself.

Whether or not it means an end to a long personal association remains to be seen. President Roosevelt is warm in his expression of personal feelings in the letter accepting Postmaster General Farley's resignation, in accord with his temperament and practice, and though the retiring official is more restrained, he, too, voices personal regards of kind nature. It is not likely, however, that ties of personal nature will ever bind as closely again. That is not in the nature of things. Politics brought the two men together; political and official cooperation made them closer. When those ties are severed, the two men will go their own way and gradually, whatever their feelings now, they will drift apart personally. Moreover, there is evidence in the record and in the restrained nature of Farley's letter to the President that the rift has already been made. Friendly feelings may remain, but absence will hardly make hearts grow fonder in this instance and under existing circumstances. No Damon and Pythias, David and Jonathan relationship may be expected.

Whatever Jim Farley's personal feelings as he steps down, whatever his unrecorded disappointments and chagrins, Postmaster General Farley has the great satisfaction that he has performed the duties of a high public office well. It is not necessary to accept at face value his estimate of the financial condition of his Department and its achievements to give him credit for having made a splendid Postmaster General. Despite his occupation with political affairs and political activities, he has conducted that Department efficiently and has left it a smooth-functioning machine for his successor. He will be known not only as a master politician, not only as a loyal friend, and, what is greatest of all, as a man of convictions so strong as to make personal sacrifice in their behalf easy, but as one of the country's greatest Post Office Department heads.

Into private life Jim Farley will be followed by the good wishes of masses of people of all political faiths throughout the United States. Those who have fought with him, those who have fought against him, those who have criticized and censured, as well as those who have had praise only, will hope for him contentment and happiness and financial success, the deserved rewards of jobs well done at considerable personal sacrifices.

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Sun of August 9, 1940]

FAREWELL TO FARLEY

Now that James A. Farley has formally resigned from the Roosevelt Cabinet, the official family isn't going to seem the same. The Post Office Department will miss him, but, more than that, the everyday citizen, with whom he was always foursquare, will miss him.

In his dual capacity as Postmaster General and national chairman of the Democratic Party, Mr. Farley proved himself a top-flight executive. Until this year he was President Roosevelt's right-hand man, but the tossing he took at Chicago bore out the suspicion that dissension had arisen in the administration camp.

Despite the apparently sincere exchange of letters between Farley and Roosevelt in connection with the Postmaster's departure from the Federal service, there remains more than a faint implication that Jim leaves office with a broken heart.

Although they stripped him of his chances in the Presidential carnival at Chicago, however slim they might have been, they couldn't take from Mr. Farley his record of service in the leadership of his party for almost 8 years. His millions of affectionate and admiring friends will never forget.

Jim Farley could never be a nonentity. That perhaps explains his resignation from political life. He had been one of the most effective and most beloved national chairmen ever to serve the Democratic Party. He did the wise thing in getting out before the bosses placed him on the junk pile to gain their own ends.

[From the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph of August 12, 1940]

BACK TO PRIVATE LIFE

James A. Farley resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee immediately after the adjournment of the Democratic convention at Chicago. On Thursday of last week he submitted to the President his resignation as Postmaster General, effective August 31, and his consequent retirement from the administration's official family.

In his letter of resignation and in the President's acceptance of it there is little of a personal nature. Mr. Farley dwells at some length on the good record the Post Office Department has made under his regime and expresses his appreciation of the cooperation he has received from Congress.

Mr. Roosevelt takes note of the improvement in the Postal Department under Farley, voices his "sincere sorrow" at losing him as a member of the Cabinet and expresses the hope that "after all of our years of close personal association" members of "the administration hope to see you often."

Thus closes a career of unselfish service which finds few parallels in American politics.

Mr. Farley has made two important business connections which will help him to build up his private fortune, suffered to decline while he was chairman of the Democratic National Committee and a member of the Cabinet.

There is a general feeling that he is entitled to all the good things that may come to him in private station and that no man in public life was ever treated with greater ingratitude than when his ambitions were coldly strangled at Chicago.

[From the Meriden (Conn.) Record of August 15, 1940]

MR. FARLEY'S DEPARTURE

It is a commonplace of life and a favorite device of fiction and the stage for two old friends who part under strained circumstances to talk about everything but what they are really thinking. So it must have been with President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley when the latter sent his letter of resignation and Mr. Roosevelt his reply of acceptance.

Mr. Farley was preoccupied only with leaving the Postal Service. It was divulged by his letter that during his two terms the system was placed on a self-sustaining basis, the air mail was extended, a record business was done, etc. All business. Mr. Roosevelt's response was in kind. He spoke of the success of Farley, the Postmaster General, of the morale of the Service, the great strides in business efficiency.

In the minds of both these men there must have been countless thoughts that could not go into the letters, for their association is historic. In 1932 Farley was the incarnation of "Roosevelt before Chicago." He delivered the convention votes that made the New Deal possible. He was out in front again in 1936 and made the amazing Maine and Vermont prophecy. It is idle to say that his passing somehow tears away the political past from Mr. Roosevelt. Things just will not be the same, third term or no third term.

That was the rock on which their political association, if not their friendship, broke. Jim wouldn't go along at Chicago in 1940. He wouldn't even pretend to go along. He was practical enough to know that he could not be nominated, practical enough to know there was no stopping F. D. R., but he stood up and had his votes counted, nevertheless. Then he quit as national chairman and as a member of the President's Cabinet. November will disclose the effect of his departure.

[From the Miami (Fla.) Herald of August 12, 1940]

NOT AMONG JOBLESS

There is no depression for James A. Farley. He is not bothered by unemployment. It just shows what a bright young man can do when he gets cut and hustles. There is always opportunity in America, even for the boy from the big city.

Farley, you know, is quitting a paltry job that paid a mere pittance, $15,000 a year, as Postmaster General, but he did so well selling stamps, and votes, that he has been awarded a chance to sell Coca-Cola, but not exactly like the soda jerker.

He has been named a director right at the beginning, which saves the trouble of working up to that honor, and will have charge of exports. That does appear like a mean trick, asking him to ship "cokes" to the heathen in Europe and Asia when they are so busy blowing each other up and have no boats for soft drinks, or hard. Trying to build up an export business ought to be rather difficult at present, but you never can tell about Jim. He may induce the belligerents to call the whole thing off so they can quench their thirst with his product.

We understand that Jim also proposes to buy the New York Yankees, and then he can use their billboards to advertise his product and make the customers purchase it. It is a fine combination, and Farley ought to be a success. The next thing we know he will be complaining about restrictions on business and Federal taxes on excess profits.

[From the Middletown (N. Y.) Times Herald of August 10, 1940]

EMPTY COMPLIMENTS

When he accepted the resignation of Mr. Farley from the Cabinet the President paid compliments to the loyalty and fidelity of the man. He could have done no less.

Mr. Farley made Mr. Roosevelt President. His devotion received through a 7-year period of disappointment and disillusioning experience with the hypocrisy and essential fraudulency of self-professed idealists, a test of extraordinary character. Yet he remained faithful until the last measure of ingratitude was cupped for him by Mr. Hopkins at Chicago.

Compliments and praises are his as a matter of course. They cost a man nothing who scatters them profusely. They were nevertheless obtained at a price—a price that only Jim Farley knows.

For Mr. Farley there probably are no more idols. The one he had destroyed itself.

Every period in American public life culminates in the destruction of political idols. The wrecking in this instance perhaps will have more than ordinary effect, an effect, however, that may not become unmistakably evident until the votes of Mr. Farley's friends throughout the country are counted in November.

[From the Nashville (Tenn.) Banner of August 9, 1940]

THE FINAL BREAK

The resignation of Postmaster General Farley, to be effective August 31, 2 weeks after his retirement as chairman of the national committee, was a fulfillment of predictions generally made after the action of the Chicago convention. The amenities, and even cordial assurances, that usually accompany the severance of political ties between men whose relations have been even intimate were meticulously observed in the present instance; but they in no degree lessened the significance of the retirement of Mr. Farley from the Cabinet quickly following that as head of the national organization of the party.

The course which Mr. Farley has taken was the natural, indeed the inevitable, result of differences that have been developing for more than 2 years. The inner White House coterie—Corcoran, Hopkins, Ickes, Ben Cohen, Jackson, and several others of scarcely less intimate access to its occupant—have never liked Mr. Farley, and, indeed, have been at slight pains to conceal their antipathy. They could never forgive him for his independence, and his refusal to approve their tactics, such as the purge, which they had urged upon the President, and to which he gave ready and disastrous acquiescence.

Mr. Farley's loyalty to the President and to the party forbade him to make open dissent to a situation of steadily increasing embarrassments. Mr. Roosevelt's candidacy for a third term caused the open and final break which incidents at the Chicago convention accentuated and precipitated.

Mr. Farley was the most popular and able head that the Democratic National Committee has had for a generation. That he will vote for Mr. Roosevelt he has made certain by public assertion, but it is probable that his ballot will nearly compass the assistance which the ticket will receive at his hands. That he will be missed in the counsels of the party and from the front ranks of valiant party fighters as the campaign advances will scarcely be questioned.

[From the Newark (N. J.) News of August 9, 1940]

MR. FARLEY GOES

It is a commonplace of life and a favorite device of fiction and the stage for two old friends who part under strained circumstances to talk about everything but what they are really thinking. So it must have been with President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley when the latter sent his letter of resignation and Mr. Roosevelt his reply of acceptance.

Mr. Farley was preoccupied only with leaving the Postal Service. We learned from his letter that during his two terms the system had been placed on a self-sustaining basis, that the air mail had been extended, that a record business had been done, etc. All business. Mr. Roosevelt's response was in kind. He spoke of the success of Farley the Postmaster General, of the morale of the Service, the great strides in business efficiency.

In the minds of both these men there must have been countless thoughts that couldn't go into the letters, for their association is historic. In 1932 Farley was the incarnation of "Roosevelt-before-Chicago." He delivered the convention votes that made the New Deal possible. He was out in front again in 1936 and made that amazing Maine and Vermont prophecy. It is idle to say that his passing somehow tears away the political past from Mr. Roosevelt. Things just won't be the same, third term or no third term.

That was the rock on which their political association, if not their friendship, broke. Jim wouldn't go along at Chicago in 1940. He wouldn't even pretend to go along. He was practical enough to know that he couldn't be nominated, practical enough to know there was no stopping F. D. R., but he stood up and had his votes counted, nevertheless. Then he quit as national chairman. November will tell the effect of his departure. Mr. Flynn, of the Bronx, may suit Boss Hague & Co., but he'll find it hard to fill Jim's shoes.

[From the New Bedford Standard-Times of August 8, 1940]

MR. FARLEY RETIRES

Postmaster General Farley's resignation, which has been accepted by the President, is taken to mean that he has retired for good from political life to devote himself to baseball and the Yankees. Long associated with politics in his own State of New York, it was not until he became manager of Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaign for the Democratic nomination in 1932, that he became a national figure. Successful in this assignment, he managed the election campaign, and won the reward that has often gone to campaign managers—a place in the Cabinet as Postmaster General. He scored another success in 1936, and his reputation as a shrewd politician was further enhanced by the uncanny accuracy of his prediction of the number of States Roosevelt would carry.

It was during Roosevelt's second term that Farley's relationship with the President began to undergo a change. He was not in sympathy with the more radical of the New Dealers. Moreover, he had an ambition to be President, only to find, as the choice of delegates drew near, that he was blocked by the President's silence as to his own plans. He knew, before the convention was held, that the nomination was not for him; but as an opponent of the third term he let his name be presented to the convention, and by so doing won commendation not only from his friends and members of his own party, but from political opponents.

So his political career came to an end, not the end he had desired, but one that did not impair, and on the contrary enhanced, the public's good opinion of him. His friendliness, his gift of remembering names and faces, and his loyalty to his friends, should stand him in good stead in his new undertaking which is, by the way, distinctly clothed with a public interest.

[From the Journal-News of August 13, 1940]

BUT NOT OUT OF CIRCULATION

Resignation of Postmaster General James A. Farley from the Roosevelt Cabinet, effective at the end of this month, brings to an end what might well be called an epoch in Rockland County because it marks the conclusion of the term of service of the country's first Cabinet officer. Mr. Farley has brought to Rockland County many firsts during his public career, and there are many other firsts probably to come before he retires permanently from the scene.

Rockland County in its long history has had a fair share of honors, but to none of its distinguished citizens ever came the recognition that has been accorded Jim Farley. For the first time in the history of the Democratic Party in New York State its chairman came from Rockland, for the first time the National Democratic chairmanship went to a native of Rockland Conty, for the first time a Cabinet officer was appointed from Rockland County.

There may have been and there may now be other Rockland County men and women who are nationally known, but there has never been a resident of the county better known the length and breadth of the land than the man who started his climb up the political ladder as town clerk of Stony Point. The rise was little short of meteoric, for it was accomplished in the short span of two decades. Other national figures have been known to spend their lifetimes before they have gained the same pinnacle of public prominence.

In his resignation from the Cabinet and from the national chairmanship Jim Farley takes from the administration campaign for reelection much solidity, a feeling that the party management is in safe hands. He was first, last, and always a politician, but in that lay his greatest strength. A party leader must be a great politician to be successful and nothing else.

As Postmaster General he proved himself also an able businessman, competent to run an immense business profitably and efficiently. He will be as difficult to replace in that post as in the national chairmanship, and it is safe to assume that his successors will not throughout their careers gain as much prominence in the national picture as has Farley.

Rockland County may indeed again be proud of its most famous son as he retires to private enterprise, and it seems evident that he will be as successful in his new endeavors as he was while in the national eye. Jim Farley is out of public life but not out of the public eye. That's a place he will hold for many years to come.

[From the Ottumwa (Iowa) Daily Courier of August 9, 1940]

GOOD LUCK, JIM

Postmaster General Farley is to leave the Cabinet August 31 and Mr. Roosevelt says they always will be friends. Mr. Farley says they will, too, so they probably will.

But it will be a different type of friendship than that of 8 years ago when Mr. Roosevelt first ran for the Presidency.

Mr. Farley, a master in the field of politics, was largely responsible for Mr. Roosevelt's election to his first term. Later solid advice from this source was not so well received in the Presidential office. A strange fringe of advisers had appeared. Mr. Farley had little in common with them. They were not of his kind.

Then came the Chicago convention and its preparations. There were others who veered away from being Mr. Farley's kind.

A man of his integrity, personal and party, no longer could be happy in such surroundings. So he seeks new fields. Success to him. He has earned it.

[From the Phoenix (Ariz.) Republic of August 13, 1940]

NEW DEAL LOSES ITS STRATEGIST

Irrespective of their party affiliations, citizens of the United States will wish James A. Farley, who has served ably for 7 years as their Postmaster General, success in his undertakings in private life. It probably depends upon how one views the New Deal as to whether one regrets his retirement from public life or not. Those who were politically opposed to Mr. Farley could not help admiring him as a skillful political organizer and campaigner.

Most Americans, we believe, are convinced that Mr. Farley has resigned from the President's Cabinet and has surrendered his portfolio as Postmaster General because he could not "go along" with Mr. Roosevelt on a third term. They admire Mr. Farley's reticence in not saying anything about his real reasons for leaving the official family of the President, thus leaving untold the story behind the story of his resignation.

To a few of the many friends of the Postmaster General, his resignation is clear and understandable. As early as 2 or 3 years ago, Mr. Farley confided to some of his friends that if Mr. Roosevelt chose to run for a third term, he would not be with him. He may have given his reasons to some of his confidants; but if he did, they have remained silent.

We do not believe that failure of Mr. Farley to obtain the Presidential nomination of his party had anything to do with his resignation. He must have given up any aspirations he may have had for the nomination some months ago when the "draft Roosevelt" movement was begun by Harold L. Ickes and other members of the President's Cabinet. It was evident some weeks before the Democrats met in convention in Chicago that only a miracle could prevent Mr. Roosevelt from being nominated.

The President is sincere in saying he accepted Mr. Farley's resignation with "real regret." It is very doubtful that the position of the Postmaster General as the director of successful campaigns can be filled. The genial chairman of the Democratic Party had a flair for organization, and when he decided he could not "string along" with Mr. Roosevelt for a third term, the New Deal lost its chief political strategist and its star salesman. The New Dealers may be able to fool themselves to the contrary, but it was Jim Farley who sold the Nation on Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932.

[From the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of August 10, 1940]

AN OLD ALLIANCE BREAKS ON THE THIRD TERM

James A. Farley has resigned his place as Postmaster General, severing his connection with President Roosevelt's Cabinet as he earlier had severed connections with the Democratic national organization; and when those two resignations become effective, that from the Cabinet on August 31, that from the national chairmanship a week from today, an episode in American political history will have ended.

The alliance between Mr. Farley and Mr. Roosevelt dates back to the earliest contemplation of Mr. Roosevelt's candidacy for President. That was in 1930, 2 years before the convention which nominated Mr. Roosevelt for the first time. Mr. Farley's autobiography reveals that shortly after the 1930 campaign Mr. Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, wrote to him, "I have an idea that you and I make a combination which has not existed since Cleveland and Lamont * * *." That combination has stood firm under every circumstance until now, and it fell apart on the issue of the third term. Meanwhile, Mr. Farley had engineered two national conventions which nominated Mr. Roosevelt, and his sound political advice had contributed greatly to keep the Democratic organization running smoothly during those years.

But Mr. Farley did not engineer the Roosevelt nomination last month. When Harry Hopkins and other New Deal advocates of the third term sought to avoid a roll call and force the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt by acclamation, it was Mr. Farley who stood in their way and successfully blocked that proposal. Mr. Farley insisted upon his own nomination, fully realizing it was hopeless but determined to preserve at least the appearance of democracy in a convention which he knew had been driven into line by the power of the New Deal.

And now Mr. Farley is through. The man who, probably more than anyone else, guided Mr. Roosevelt in the devious ways of politics will not pilot his party toward the goal of a third term. The combination of Roosevelt and Farley is broken, and it cannot be repaired again.

[From the Pittsfield (Mass.) Eagle of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY'S FAREWELL

"Mellifluence" is the only word that seems to fit, in a hurried reading of the dictionary. The Farley letter of resignation was all sweetness—and light. Jim told Franklin that he was now all done and was going back to private life. Jim expressed the added hope that, in business, he would find great happiness. The President said everyone around the shop was going to miss him greatly and hoped he would come up to see them sometime.

Up to now everyone thought the Postmaster General was one of the most noted of the trimmed, that he was the victim of the basest and blackest ingratitude. But no. That is the calumny of an enemy. Jim implied he wasn't getting enough to live on and while he was a patriot and all that, he felt he just didn't belong. Frank was not in a position to pay him more, so reluctantly he had to look around for a successor. So that is apparently that! The correspondence has made it so simple one wonders how the public continues to countenance the hairbrained reports of the Washington reporters. It just seems to bear out, darn it, the mendacity and corruption of the press which Mr. R. is always hinting at.

En passant, it would be futile to deny that Farley has done an important job well, and it would be an abuse of gratitude not to assert that he has kept his Department on a high plane. In him the Executive found fortune throught the 7 turbulent years. It is to be hoped Franklin can locate another as good, don't you know.

[From the Plainfield Courier-News of August 12, 1940]

JUST PLAIN "JIM"

James Aloysius Farley, the boy from Grassy Point, N. Y., who rose from town clerk to President-maker and Postmaster General of the United States, will step from public life August 31.

His retirement will be only semiofficial as "Jim" still retains the chairmanship of the New York State Democratic Committee. He has shorn himself of the roles of chairman of the National Democratic Committee chairmanship and Postmaster General, however, and ceases to be officially a national figure for the time being.

From here on, President Roosevelt will be obliged to map his own election campaign strategy, with the help of those New Dealers and third-termers, Wallace and Hopkins. Mr. Roosevelt has written Mr. Farley, "All of us in the administration will miss you deeply."

These words may well be prophetic. Millions have learned to call Farley "Jim" and it is reasonable to believe many of these millions, who followed his advice in 1932 to elect Roosevelt President, will walk with him down a middle road next November. Farley may not come out in active opposition to Roosevelt's aspirations for a third term. He may even vote for his former chief at the general election but it is extremely doubtful if he will raise as much as a finger to ask his friends to break a tradition of 150 years.

After the votes are counted in November, Franklin D. Roosevelt, win or lose, will still be Franklin D. Roosevelt to 130,000,000 people, but the former Democratic chairman is now and will be then, just plain "Jim," a lovable American character, who made a President, pulled the Postoffice Department out of the red, and when he came to the fork in the road tipped his hat from his shining bald pate in graceful gesture and said to his Chief Executive, "This is where we part company."

[From the Pontiac (Mich.) Daily Press of August 12, 1940]

HAVE A COKE ON JIM

For nearly 8 years James A. Farley has been demonstrating the value of the old saw: "A soft answer turneth away wrath." Happily the Postmaster General clears his skirts of the Cabinet position and gets out from under the perplexities of the coming campaign just in time to accept an important position with the Coca-Cola Corporation. What more appropriate than that "Sunny" Jim should turn from soft answers to soft drinks?

The big Atlanta enterprise has been one of the conspicuous business successes of the last several decades. The officials of the company have been able to pick the winners when it came to putting men in key positions, and the selection of Mr. Farley is an evidence of their shrewdness in this respect.

Jim Farley has enormous capacity for work. He knows how to concentrate. He knows the value of long hours. Jim has grinned at the philosophy of the 40-hour week which has been so persistently touted by his fellow new dealers, but as far as he himself was concerned he would have none of it. Jim knew better. He was aware that if big things were to be accomplished it would take all the time there was and that is what the second violin in the Roosevelt administration has put into his assignment. Jim gets things done because he works like a horse himself, and expects those around him to do the same. He maps out a big program and hews to the line. A lot of men are hard workers but lack resourcefulness. That is where Farley passes less capable aspirants. He has imagination and ingenuity. If one plan does not work, he has a score of others ready to try out on the instant. No wonder the Coca-Cola board of directors selected the former Postmaster General to take charge of their foreign sales. They wanted a man who could bring a fresh viewpoint to his job with new ideas and plenty of steam. Jim doesn't intend to carry any mail routes after this month, but the business world is going to continue to hear from him.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Journal of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY'S DEPARTURE LOSS TO ROOSEVELT

Jim Farley's withdrawal from President Roosevelt's Cabinet closes a New Deal chapter.

His geniality, method, optimism, courage, and honesty belong to 1932, where every one of these qualities was needed in the leadership of America back toward the way of life that we call normal, prosperous, and free.

He was indispensable in 1936, when the issue was the continuance of the recovery program.

But Jim Farley doesn't belong to 1940, and none realizes it more than he. He could not be a party to the third-term ambition. He could not concur in the unnecessary machine tactics of the Chicago convention. He was not in the picture which showed two political bosses—Mayor Kelly and Mayor Hague—seated at meat with members of the Roosevelt Cabinet, one of them, Mr. Wallace, now the Democratic Vice Presidential nominee.

Jim Farley goes back to private life without a smirch upon honor, judgment, or reputation. He is a bigger man than when he entered the national political arena, bigger in conscience as well as in ability. May he command for himself and his family the success that he won for the New Deal.

[From the Portland (Maine) Press-Herald of August 9, 1940]

THEY MISS JIM

The Democrats, so-called, unquestionably will miss Jim Farley as director of the campaign. They are missing him now. His successor, Edward J. Flynn, has already started blundering. Monday he sounded off about Mr. Willkie, "fugitive from Tammany Hall." Mr. Flynn's statement will create no concern in G. O. P. ranks. There is more joy amongst Republicans over 1 sinner who has repented than for the 90 and 9 that have remained faithful. For these strayed sheep will roll up a bigger plurality against the New Deal machine. Next time, louder, Mr. Flynn, and funnier and more convincing.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Sunday Oregonian of August 11, 1940]

ACCEPTING JIM FARLEY'S RESIGNATION

Acceptance by President Roosevelt of the resignation of Jim Farley as Postmaster General, soon to become effective, as is also Mr. Farley's departure from the national chairmanship, inspired the President to write his friend and political associate a letter expressive of warm personal regard. Though this was the conventional thing to do, doubtless the President felt, as the bond of their long and intimate association was severed, a certain richly human sense of loss—attended, maybe, by some bewilderment. The President wrote Mr. Farley:

"All of us in the administration will miss you deeply; we count on seeing you often. I especially count on this after all these years of close personal association. Our friendship will always continue."

Yet we dare say that, had Jim Farley truly felt that his friends of the official family in the Capital, the President foremost among them, would miss him deeply, he must have put aside the temptation of returning to private life and endeavor. It is an open secret that for some months prior to the Democratic convention poor old Jim "wandered lonely as a cloud" in Washington. He was shunted, genially enough, oh, charmingly so, to the siding.

His chance at the nomination was obscured by the orblike radiance of the President's still unsatisfied ambition. It was even attempted to cajole him, when at the last they fawned upon this really fine comrade, to sacrifice his right to the honor of being placed in nomination in order that the luminous name of Roosevelt might be hailed with acclamation. But there Jim stood pat. His self-respect, in spite of the fortunes of politics, and the casually scurvy way in which he had been misused, was still intact. As for running the campaign for them, why should he? He had made the decision which every integrally honest and long-suffering man must somehow make in this time—enough was enough.

Much has been said of President Roosevelt's facile gift of making friends, but little of the almost equal facility with which he insists upon losing them. Big Jim Farley, wise and tolerant, a friend affectionate by nature, loyal to the limit of endurance, is not the first stanch friend the President has, at his urgent whim, driven from the Presidential side. Exchanges of mutual esteem at the parting cannot alter, and probably will only intensify, the disillusionment of Mr. Farley. If their secret minds were known, it is likely we should discover that the President thinks better of his retiring Postmaster General than this olden associate thinks of the President, and each private appraisal, we dare say, would have sound reason enough.

[From the Roanoke (Va.) Times of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY'S RESIGNATION

Two weeks after he ceases to be chairman of the Democratic National Committee James A. Farley will step out of the President's Cabinet. Farley's resignation as Postmaster General, effective August 31, was accepted yesterday by President Roosevelt. In accepting the resignation the President paid tribute to Farley's service and said their friendship would always continue. Thus the Chief Executive and his great political lieutenant come to a final parting of the ways. That they have done so without any public break is doubtless a matter of satisfaction and relief to both.

Jim Farley owes much to Franklin D. Roosevelt, undoubtedly, but on the other hand it is equally true that Mr. Roosevelt owes a great deal to Farley. He has been exceptionally fortunate in the complete loyalty and great skill with which Farley has guided his political bark since he first entertained Presidential ambitions. It may well be that without Farley at his side Roosevelt would never have succeeded in gaining the Democratic nomination at Chicago that started him on his eventful career in 1932.

It is no secret that relations between the two men have been growing steadily cooler for the past 2 years. Farley did not see eye to eye with many of Mr. Roosevelt's political policies, concerning which he was not consulted and about which he was not advised in advance. He was notably out of sympathy with the ill-fated "purges" which failed in 1938 and conveniently went on a trip to Alaska while the President was invading Georgia, South Carolina, and Maryland in an unsuccessful attempt to persuade the voters to deny renominations to Senators GEORGE, SMITH, and TYDINGS, all three of whom are still Members of the Senate, notwithstanding Mr. Roosevelt's edict that they must be retired to private life.

Farley also was opposed in principle to a third term and emphasized his disapproval by becoming a candidate for the nomination himself, well knowing that he stood no chance of receiving it if the President decided he wanted the honor for himself. Farley's resignation as national chairman was announced before he left Chicago, and it was understood that he would not remain in the Cabinet very long after stepping out as party chief.

September 1, generally regarded as the date on which the political campaign will begin in earnest, will find Farley on the outside, a private citizen for the first time since March 4, 1933. He has been an able public servant and a political leader who has won the respect and admiration not only of his own party but of the entire country. The Roosevelt administration will be the loser by his departure from Washington.

[From the Roanoke (Va.) Times of August 10, 1940]

A WISE MAN

"The wise man," wrote James A. Farley in his autobiography, published in 1938, "steps down when he is at the top and before the going gets rough."

Mr. Farley had no way of knowing, when he wrote the foregoing words, that 2 years later he would act on the principle set forth. But in retrospect the statement has a prophetic note.

Jim Farley has taken his own medicine—something that physicians are said to be loath to do. He has stepped down of his own volition at a time when he was riding the crest of the wave. He could have continued in office as Democratic national chairman—in fact, he was urged to do so. But he said several months ago that he would not continue at the party helm in a third-term campaign, and he was as good as his word. A week from today Farley will turn over the chairmanship to Edward J. Flynn and march out of Democratic national headquarters with the respect and regard of all who know him. Three weeks from today he will retire from the President's Cabinet—also of his own volition—and step back into the ranks of the country's private citizens.

However rough the going may hereafter become, Jim Farley will not be affected. He quit while he was at the top. By his own code he must be judged a wise man.

Not all who are at the top are wise enough to step down before the going gets rough. By the same token, not all who are at the top are as wise as "good old Jim."

[From the Sacramento (Calif.) Bee of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY HAS DONE WELL AS POSTMASTER GENERAL

The reputation of "Genial Jim" Farley as a skilled political organizer has somewhat overshadowed in the public mind the work of James A. Farley as Postmaster General of the United States.

But it is the common opinion among the postal employees, from the postman on the beat to the top places in the service, that the Department never has had a head who was more intent on giving the American public the best possible service; on speeding up the delivery of the mails; on developing new sources of revenue; and on instilling the entire personnel with a sense of esprit de corps which any private business organization well might envy.

No man appreciated the quality of Farley's work as an administrator better than did Franklin D. Roosevelt. And the evidence is to be found in the letter the President wrote in accepting with real regret Farley's resignation as Postmaster General.

The resignation will become effective on August 31.

On that date, after seven and a half years in the public service, Farley will return to private life to accept a much more remunerative position as general director of the New York Yankees baseball club.

He thus will be able to do what he has stated publicly long has been in his mind—make better provision for his family than being a Cabinet officer permitted him to do.

The Nation generally heartily will second the hope expressed by President Roosevelt for every success for Jim Farley in his new niche in life.

Nor will his valuable services be entirely lost to his party as he has announced he will remain as chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee. Together with National Chairman Flynn, long his chief aide in Empire State politics, he can be counted on to give valiant service in keeping New York in line for Roosevelt and Wallace.

And, in the meantime, if his record in the Post Office Department is a criterion of the future, the fading Yanks will get a real shot in the arm when Jim Farley starts talking turkey to them. He is that kind of a man.

[From the Rome (N. Y.) Daily Sentinel of August 12, 1940]

JAMES A. FARLEY

Now that he is about to retire as Postmaster General and head of the Democratic National Committee, James A. Farley is receiving a collection of bouquets that would stagger any man who is not as sure-footed as he.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, when you get your copy (this RECORD issue is worth reading), will contain over 40 pages of newspaper articles praising the retiring genius in richly deserved language. Senator BYRD, of Virginia, in behalf of his colleague, Senator CARTER GLASS, obtained unanimous consent of the Senate to insert the 175 newspaper clippings in the RECORD. If there is any criticism of this it is that 175 clippings is a woefully small number to give more than a faint idea of the situation.

Farley leaves the national committee without one cent of indebtedness. A national committee without debt is a distinction like the United States would be without a national debt.

Moreover, through lean years, he has increased the cash business of the Post Office Department so that is out of the red for the first time, we believe, since George Washington's regime. Yet that Department has taken on extraordinary jobs such as registration under the Social Security Act, the census of the unemployed, and others, in addition to its regular business, while the mails have carried a tremendous volume of free official matter.

Farley has built up a big business by issuing commemorative postage stamps. Illustrious citizens in large numbers are in the collection, heroes male and female, geography represented, the world's fair, of course, and even the centennial of baseball. The business of philately has grown by leaps and bounds just when the country needed business. Young and old know about that. The Philatelic Agency is doing a business of about two million a year.

The least his successor as Postmaster General can do is to issue a new stamp bearing the cheerful, sincere face of James Aloysius Farley and make it legal tender for a bottle of soft drink, which is the only kind Farley ever used.

Remember what a time the late W. Pierrepont White had getting Fort Stanwix and Oriskany on a stamp? Farley would have settled that in a jiffy, and it would have been a beauty. But that was before Farley's regime.

Just look at the home run that man Farley is making as he lays down these official duties.

[From the Richmond (Va.) News Leader of August 9, 1940]

FAREWELL TO FARLEY

Jim Farley's resignation as Postmaster General, following his retirement as national chairman, probably eliminates him from American politics. He will keep his interest, of course, in what he considers a more interesting game than baseball, but politics are apt to be an avocation, not a profession. In the event Mr. Roosevelt is reelected, New Deal bureaucrats will regard Farley as a backslider. If Willkie wins, Farley will belong to the minority for a period long enough to make him a back number when the Democrats return to power.

He quits the stage amid more general applause than welcomed his first entrance. Then he was considered a sublimated "j'iner," a political smoothie whom Mr. Roosevelt would better have left alone. Scarcely one of the New Deal Cabinet members was regarded at the outset with more suspicion, more perhaps of open hostility, than was Mr. Farley. Now that he retires, he carries with him more of public regret, more widely expressed, than would attend the resignation of any Cabinet member except Mr. Hull.

What is the explanation? It is an old one, a simple one, but one that politicians who hope to continue in office never can afford to disdain: Jim Farley kept his word. He did not pretend to any code of political ethics superior to that of up-State New York Democrats. That code sometimes seemed to mock the implication of the word "up." According to the rough rules of a tough game, Jim Farley played; but he never violated those rules. Whether he made a promise to a friend, or struck a bargain with a foe, or entered into a compromise to prevent a party split, he would live up to it. He would not always answer questions, when political strategy called for secret movement; but when he did answer, he always was frank and truthful. If he said "Yes," one could pin to fulfillment. His "No" never meant "maybe."

This was an expression of Farley's innate honesty and no less an application of what he knew to be good politics. Selfishness may wreck the future of some politicians, poor judgment may, temper may, or liquor, or ambition, but any one, and perhaps any two, of these may be overcome. The one thing that is certain in the end to ruin the average man and to bring upon even the most powerful politician the detestation of his associates is failure to live up to his bargains. Some politicians do not realize this. They think they can be silent or tactful or evasive and still hold their following. They may go to their graves without perceiving that the reason for their failure was not the disloyalty of friends or the wiles of foes, but their own unwillingness to let conversation be yea, yea and nay, nay. Once a man gets the reputation of being unreliable in his promises, politicians say, "You can't tie to him," and from that day they will not work with him. When such a man falls, he falls, like Lucifer, never to hope again."

Farley knew that. He never took a chance that it could happen to him. It didn't. He goes out with flags flying.

[From the St. Louis Star-Times of Friday, August 9, 1940]

"DEAR JIM"

A strange atmosphere of unreality emerges from the letters exchanged between President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley on the latter's resignation.

Mr. Farley dwells in detail on the strides made by his Department—the increase of air-mail service, the post-office buildings erected, the improved morale of the workers. Mr. Roosevelt congratulates Mr. Farley on these achievements; he expresses "sincere sorrow" at "Dear Jim's" departure from his "official family." He felicitates the Postmaster General on the latter's "definite arrangements" for his future in private life, about which Farley had solemnly informed him.

Never a syllable is uttered by the two men on the third-term issue or Farley's disappointment at failing in his Presidential and Vice Presidential ambitions, or the curious fact that Farley, the original Roosevelt man behind the ballots, finally insisted on having his own name presented to the Chicago convention in opposition to the President's.

Every anti-New Deal paper in the country, of course, can be expected to make much of these circumstances. They will talk of Mr. Roosevelt's "ingratitude" and speculate—with almost too transparent hopefulness—on the possibility that Roosevelt's luck will fail with the departure of his leading political strategist.

Granting the elements of tragedy in Farley's case, however, the sudden affection of Tory editors for the Postmaster General lacks something in consistency. Seven years ago they were calling Farley the President's "trigger man" and denouncing him for the doctrine that only Democrats who were "for Roosevelt before Chicago" in 1932 deserved Government jobs. Now they use him as a text for their attacks on the President. It is not, perhaps, that they love "Dear Jim" more, but that they still love Roosevelt less.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY LEAVES THE CABINET

A common criticism of the administration for years was that James A. Farley was Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Now within about 3 weeks he has resigned both posts.

Mr. Farley has been a politician through and through; whatever else he did has been incidental to his practice of the art of politics. As the President's trigger man, he has taken a lot of blame that might have rested on more famous shoulders. That was part of the game as he played it.

As political Postmasters General go, he has been a good one. This great business department—the greatest the Government has—was no more political under him than under the Republican ax men of preceding administrations. In any case, he administered it well; the deficits were not due to faulty operation, but to the great amount of franked mail carried without charge and other classes of mail transported at exceedingly low rates.

The vacancy gives President Roosevelt the chance to do the startling thing of appointing a nonpolitical Postmaster General. He could hardly start his campaign for reelection better than by naming an outstanding business executive or a career man in the Post Office Department to the post traditionally farmed out to the winning party's chief spoilsman.

[From the St. Louis (Mo.) Globe-Democrat of August 9, 1940]

MR. FARLEY WAVES GOOD-BYE

Jim Farley has severed his last tie with the New Deal. He has resigned as Postmaster General, effective August 31. His resignation as chairman of the Democratic National Committee was filed 2 weeks ago and his successor will take over on August 17. Thus does companionable "Sunny Jim" pass out of the political picture to enter private industry.

His letter yesterday to the President and the latter's acceptance of his resignation from the Cabinet were effusive in their complimentary terms. This was to be expected. But the bald fact remains that Mr. Farley is quitting because he is not in sympathy with Mr. Roosevelt's acceptance of a third-term nomination. He has had many opportunities previously to quit the national committee and the Cabinet and engage in private business. But he stayed on because of loyalty to the President and because of his zest for the game of politics. Now he cannot in good conscience support Mr. Roosevelt for another term and he is getting out.

He is not "taking a walk" from the party, but the significance of his departure on the eve of a campaign which will subject the New Deal and Mr. Roosevelt to the severest test yet will not be lost on his friends. Had Jim Farley really wanted to "put over" Mr. Roosevelt this fall, he could easily have deferred this entry into private business for a couple of months.

[From the St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette of August 10, 1940]

SO LONG, JIM

Jim Farley, the man who made millions of friends out of politics, steps out of the Cabinet the last of the month to seek the financial success he missed in the years he was building the political fortunes of his associates. Thus ends the alliance between the man who sold Franklin Roosevelt to the country in 1932 and stayed to help re-elect him in 1936.

Though the President is said to have sent an "exceedingly friendly" letter in accepting the resignation of his Postmaster General, it takes no gift of clairvoyance to know that both undoubtedly are relieved that they have come to the parting of the ways. Mr. Roosevelt because his one-time friend is utterly unsympathetic to third-term ambitions, and Farley because of the slights and affronts of recent months. Because of his unswerving loyalty to the man he once called Chief, and his present distaste for the maneuverings prior to and during the Chicago convention, Farley could do no less than sever their relationship. His conscience would permit no endeavors that were not wholehearted.

One thing can be certain. Farley will retire from the political stage with his chin up and a smile on his face. It is equally certain that he will not "take a walk," nor raise a finger to block the desire of Mr. Roosevelt to remain in the White House for 4 years more. He will vote the ticket bearing the Democratic label in November, for, as he said when the party's convention adjourned last month, "I've always been regular." He will go out with the reputation of being one of the most admirable figures in the political life of this generation, starting now on the task—important to any man at 52 who owes $100,000 and has three children to educate—of accumulating financial security for himself and his family.

[From the St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer Press of August 9, 1940]

THE RETIREMENT OF FARLEY

The farewells with which President Roosevelt and James A. Farley took their leave of each other Thursday reveal the personal esteem in which they have held each other, and conceal much more. The retirement of Mr. Farley from the Cabinet, like his previous resignation as chairman of the Democratic national committee, merely puts the final seal to a parting that really took place not long after the election of 1936.

When Mr. Roosevelt was first elected in 1932, nothing would have seemed more unlikely than the breach of the association of these two outstanding figures. They seemed then the ideal partnership of the practical political organizer and the statesman with social vision. This friendly association endured through the first administration and the second campaign, but was not destined to outlast the second administration.

It requires an unusual combination of political agreement and personal devotion for a close relationship between a President and his political manager to persist. There is a natural conflict between the claims to fame of such men. Whatever credit falls to the political manager for the President's success, is so much detracted from the personal worth of the President in his own right as a statesman and campaigner. No President cares to believe that his political success is to be attributed to the fact that he has a miracle man as his manager.

In this particular association there were political disagreements that did not come to the surface until, following the election of 1936, President Roosevelt began to turn to the counsel of advisers belonging to the more radical wing of the New Deal, which he found more congenial than the advice of Mr. Farley. This difference led to the disagreement over the attempted purge of the conservative Democrats in the primaries of 1938. It became an open break when Mr. Farley was himself an opponent of the third-term nomination at the Democratic convention last month.

His own ambitions for the Presidency blocked by the third-term candidacy, the Postmaster General retires from the administration to become instead the president of a baseball team; and it is no secret that, despite the friendly postscript which he writes to his broken association with the President, he goes from public life with the feeling of one who has been denied his rightful due.

The President's new political manager, Edward J. Flynn, starts with various handicaps in the occupancy of the chairmanship vacated by Mr. Farley. He has a party to organize which is divided over the third term. He lacks the broad personal acquaintance in all ranks of the organization which his predecessor has. Like Mr. Farley, he comes to national leadership out of New York machine politics. Whether he has the personal attractiveness and the warm qualities which made it possible for Mr. Farley to overcome that particular handicap remains to be seen. Mr. Flynn has a very large order to fill.

[From the Saginaw (Mich.) News of August 10, 1940]

EXEUNT "GENIAL JIM"

And now comes word that Postmaster General Farley will retire soon from his post in the Washington scene. Although it was only last month at the National Democratic Convention that "genial Jim" indicated he no longer could carry the torch for Mr. Roosevelt and what has been termed the New Deal party, masquerading as Democratic, his decision to resign as Postmaster General will be felt by many as doubly regrettable.

Rival party chieftains and Government officials alike never doubted Farley's business ability and capacity for administration. Organization of Government mail service to its present state of development was one of his achievements.

Many will feel his retirement from postal duties was prompted fundamentally by a desire to escape association with New Deal administration, although unconfirmed reports credit him with an ambition to enter private enterprise as head of a baseball syndicate.

An old-line Democrat of the Jeffersonian type, Farley and his equally "old-fashioned" notion that a third term for Mr. Roosevelt was inconsistent with American traditions probably had no place in the Washington of today.

[From the Savannah (Ga.) Evening Press, Friday, August 9, 1940]

EXIT JIM FARLEY

James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States and national chairman of the Democratic Party, has left the Washington scene, having first given up the chairmanship and yesterday retiring from the Cabinet. His departure leaves a void in Democratic ranks that will be hard to fill, for few men, if any, enjoy wider acquaintanceship and higher confidence through the country than does Jim Farley.

Much water has run under the political bridges since Mr. Farley came to Washington in 1933 to take a place in the Cabinet of the man he more than any individual had made President of the United States. Mr. Roosevelt would not have been the nominee of the Democratic Party in 1932 had not Mr. Farley during the preceding months gone about the breadth and length of the land gathering delegates for him, almost in fact ringing doorbells throughout the Nation in his round-up of convention votes for the man who was selected as the party's standard bearer. Those were the happy days for Mr. Farley and his chief responded with enthusiasm, conferring on Mr. Farley the party chairmanship and the honor of a Cabinet post. When 1936 and reelection time came around, Mr. Farley again did yeoman service for the man he admired and respected, and the record-establishing reelection of Mr. Roosevelt was the result.

This year of grace, 1940, finds new forces in control of the Democratic Party, forces which Mr. Farley, try as he might, cannot recognize as representing the factors which made the Democratic Party the great party which it was. The shattering of the third-term precedent was a severe blow to this Democratic leader, the fact that he permitted himself to be nominated in opposition to his former "chief" speaking eloquently on the score. Democratic eyes dimmed with tears at the almost pathetic position of Mr. Farley at the Chicago gathering when the party chased away after new gods and left him to admit he did not know what was going on at the convention.

And now he has left Washington, retiring to private life to pick up the threads of private business and family life which he had sacrificed for his party and Mr. Roosevelt.

The President writes to him: "All of us in the administration will miss you deeply." They will that and to an extent which even they themselves do not yet realize.

[From the San Diego (Calif.) Union of August 9, 1940]

DROPPING THE PILOT

Although it has been common knowledge for some weeks that Postmaster General Farley would step out of the New Deal picture before the campaign got under way, it was not until yesterday that his resignation from the Cabinet was announced. He previously had resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, effective August 17. Now, with his resignation from the Cabinet becoming effective on August 31, it can be assumed that beginning September 1 the third-term movement will be on its own without the benefit of the great talents that guided the New Deal to success in two previous campaigns.

How great the loss will be only time will tell, but even the most ardent new dealers concede that it will be considerable. There have been few national chairmen in the Nation's political history with as great a capacity for making friends and winning votes as that possessed by Jim Farley. In 1932 he started the organization which he guided to success again in 1936. In the first 4 years of the administration he was the official patronage dispenser, and in that way his popularity and his power grew to amazing proportions. And, despite the matter-of-fact way in which he transferred personal and political friendships into loyal party support, he became known as an honest politician and as a man who never forgot a friend. The honesty phase became in time a rare quality, and his sincerity in opposing a third term is credited in a great degree for his final break with the President, which has existed covertly for the last 2 years. Little by little Jim has been losing favor with the more rabid disciples of the third-term idea, and his voluntary removal from the scene doubtless has caused a great sigh of relief in official quarters, despite the sentences of highest esteem that have been spoken in the last few days.

Despite Jim Farley's defeat in the Chicago convention, where he fought valiantly to retain its appearance of adherence to democratic processes, he emerged a bigger man than when he went into it. He lost, but he lost fighting for a principle.

[From the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY'S SECOND RESIGNATION

The resignation of Postmaster General James A. Farley was handed in yesterday to the President whom he twice put into the White House. Because he disapproved of the third term for Mr. Roosevelt—and undoubtedly for other reasons—Mr. Farley prefers to dissociate himself from the administration.

Thus are two of the ties severed which bound him closely to Mr. Roosevelt. As chairman of the Democratic National Committee and as manager of Mr. Roosevelt's campaigns, Mr. Farley has been more indispensable to Mr. Roosevelt than Mr. Roosevelt is to the country.

In these columns we too recently paid our sincere tribute to the high personal character of James A. Farley to make extended reference necessary at this time. We can only point again to the picture of Dropping the Pilot, and revert to what lengths ambition will lead a man who does not know when enough is encugh.

Mr. Farley is entering business. He is expected to retain his post as chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee. The country admires his sturdy adherence to his principles.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Times of August 9, 1940]

LAST TIE SEVERED

In refusing to continue as chairman of its national committee, James A. Farley cut himself loose from the political implications and embarrassments of the New Deal. Resigning as Postmaster General, he severs the last official tie that had held him courteously subject to the wishes and the whims of Mr. Roosevelt. It is a sad sort of climax to a sagacious and sometimes brilliant career in political manipulation. Farley's friends feel he has been badly treated.

Should you ask Mr. Farley and find him in an easy mood, no doubt you would be told that he means to vote for Mr. Roosevelt just the same, despite declared antipathy to a third term and somewhat more veiled distaste for the New Deal in general. But it seems unlikely that he will manifest any more of that zeal and energy which made easy sailing for Roosevelt 8 and 4 years ago.

[From the Shelby (N. C.) Daily Star of August 13, 1940]

A MAN AND A BUSINESS

James A. Farley is about to leave public life, about to leave a field in which he reached the pinnacle of sacrificial success. For there is no doubt that Mr. Farley applied his genius to the successful administration of the Democratic Party at great sacrifice to his personal fortune. But Mr. Farley is that kind of man. His success in the field of politics has been outstanding in this century. That very success demonstrates to what extent he threw himself and his unsurpassed ability into his work.

As chairman of the national committee of the Democratic Party, as Postmaster General in the Cabinet of President Roosevelt, Mr. Farley will be sorely missed. There has not yet appeared within the Democratic Party or, indeed, on the American political scene a man who can replace him fully.

But the services of Mr. Farley are not lost to the Nation.

He has accepted a high post to direct the export business, particularly the expansion, of the Coca-Cola Co., a far-flung private business enterprise. In that post Mr. Farley can and will do much to further good will for America among other countries of the world, for good will is a habit with Mr. Farley. It is part of his nature. Therefore it is gratifying to observe that one of the greatest individual exponents of democracy will join with one of the greatest of business democracies. Doubtless the connection will be deservedly profitable to Mr. Farley.

Mr. Farley lost no popularity, lost no stature with the people of America when the National Democratic Convention at Chicago failed to nominate him for President of the United States. Indeed, in view of the sacrificial services of Mr. Farley to the Democratic Party and to his country during the last 8 years, failure on the part of political leaders to reward him in keeping with his services has added to rather than detracted from the high opinion of the people of the United States.

[From the Sonoma (Calif.) Index-Tribune of August 16, 1940]

CASUAL COMMENT

Postmaster James Farley is retiring from public life but leaves as fine a record as a man and as an official could ever hope to attain. The official journal, California Postmaster, of August 1940, said of Mr. Farley "a man among men—true to the convictions of principle though steadfastness meant severing ties most dear to him. He stood like a rock amid the ocean breakers as each succeeding wave rolled off and back into his course leaving the great man more firmly cemented in the hearts of his fellow men." Yes; and Postmaster Farley was an exemplary man who stood every test despite concerted effort to find something that political enemies could garble. His character, his everyday life, the official conduct of his office were above reproach. That is the kind of an American to which all good citizens point with pride.

[From the Sioux City (Iowa) Journal of August 10, 1940]

HE'LL BE HAPPY

James A. Farley, having resigned as Postmaster General and having received a "Dear Jim" letter from the White House, shortly will go where, as he told the Chief Executive, he will be happy. That's back into private life after years of as onerous a task as any man ever had to get as little out of it as Jim Farley got. One conclusion is that most of his pay for the loyal service to the administration and the Democratic Party was ingratitude.

In his letter to the President, Mr. Farley wrote that "I know it will please you to learn that I have made definite arrangements for my future in private business where I know I shall be very happy." That statement means far more than what it says. "Big Jim" might have underscored part of it for emphasis, but, perhaps, he did not think that would be necessary, since everybody including the President was aware of the fact that Mr. Farley had not been happy for years in his official position.

Mr. Roosevelt wrote that "all of us in the administration will miss you deeply; we count on seeing you often." Yet for the last 2 years Mr. Farley, a Cabinet officer and chairman of the Democratic National Committee, almost needed a "jimmy" to get into the Chief Executive's office in the White House. It is doubted that the White House will see much of Jim Farley for the remainder of this administration and probably not at all if there is to be a 4-year extension of the New Deal occupancy. In other words Jim knows when he has had enough.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Daily News, Friday, August 9, 1940]

GREAT POSTMASTER GENERAL LOST IN RETIREMENT OF JAMES A. FARLEY

On the last day of this month the Roosevelt administration will lose one who has been one of its most important figures since it came into office in 1933 and the United States Government will cease to have the services of one who has been among the ablest and most efficient heads of a Federal department in the history of the Nation.

On August 31 James A. Farley will retire from the office of Postmaster General. In this action there will come a complete breaking of political ties which have formed a successful team unprecedented in this country. Mr. Farley's definite opposition to the principle of a third term has been made so well known that his continuance either as a Cabinet member or as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, a post he has resigned as of August 17, had been made impossible. His departure from the Cabinet, therefore, comes as no surprise. It will occasion regret that a highly competent official through the exigencies of politics feels that, following his well-defined principles, he must divorce himself from the public service.

Mr. Farley's early connection with the aspirations of Mr. Roosevelt for the Presidency, his invaluable work in lining up delegates for the Chicago convention of 1932, his later masterful conduct of the election campaign placed him in the minds of many of the voters, particularly those of the Republican Party, as just another politician, a good one if you will, but still just a politician. His appointment to the head of the Post Office Department was looked upon as in the nature of a reward for political services and not in any real sense as an expression of confidence in his executive ability.

Mr. Farley has been at the head of this important Department for nearly 8 years. His record of accomplishment in almost every feature of the administration of this great governmental agency, which comes closer to the everyday life of all the people than that of any other department, speaks for itself. The extension of the air mail, the reduction in the hours of labor, the development of an impressive esprit de corps among the Department's employees, the reduction of expenditures while doing a record business, the placing of the Postal Service on a self-sustaining basis, and the valuable services rendered to other branches of the Government, all these bespeak the directing hand of a man of outstanding ability. This the Postmaster General has. This he will take into private life in a business enterprise, already arranged, according to his letter to the President. The best wishes of all Americans will go wholeheartedly to one whose great abilities are equaled by that courteous geniality of manner toward all which has earned him the universally and sincerely affectionate title of "Jim" Farley.

[From the Springfield (Ohio) Sun of August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY RESIGNS

However important the duties of a Postmaster General may be in connection with the conduct of the United States Postal System, it has been recognized for many years that the man who occupies this place in the Cabinet is a sort of liaison officer between the administration and its leading local supporters the country over.

That Mr. Farley filled this position with exceptional ability is certain. It is equally certain that he was a highly efficient chairman of the Democratic National Committee and that he was a resourceful and successful director of Roosevelt's campaigns for the first and second terms.

Mr. Farley's resignation from posts which he filled so well and which, undoubtedly, the President would be very glad to have him continue in, is a matter of conscience, of sincere conviction that to seek a third term is not for the best interests of the country or of the party.

It is rarely that a man can step down from such positions under such circumstances and carry with him so fully and emphatically the high opinion and good will of his fellow party members, as Mr. Farley has been able to do. And the fact that this has been possible speaks in no uncertain terms as to the conviction of those who know him best of the sterling quality of his character and the complete integrity of his purposes.

[From the Tampa (Fla.) Morning Tribune of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY GETS OUT

James A. Farley has severed his last connection with the Roosevelt administration by resigning as Postmaster General, effective August 31. There was a cordial exchange of compliments incident to the resignation, and the President assured "Dear Jim" that he would be missed and that their "friendship will always continue."

The only political position Farley retains is chairman of the New York State committee, which he has promised to hold through the campaign. But, to all intents and purposes, the man who has been the foremost political figure of the Nation since 1932 is getting out of politics. He has not himself disclosed his new job, but the Washington Merry-Go-Round recently stated that it will be in the automobile business, with the presidency of the New York Yankees "on the side." Farley told the President, "I have made definite arrangements for my future in private business, where I know I shall be very happy."

Jim Farley deserves a good and lucrative job because he has practically sacrificed 8 years of his time to the service of the party, as its political manager, and of the Nation, as a member of the Cabinet. In those 8 years, however, Farley lived down the general impression, prevalent when he first appeared in national public life, that he was just a small-time State politician. He has proved himself to be a man of extraordinary ability, of keen political perception, a party executive of the highest type, and an all-round good and valuable citizen. His honesty has never been questioned. He has given the Post Office Department a sound and progressive, yet economical, administration. No man ever called the national election result as accurately as he did in 1936, when he predicted the phenomenal outcome of 46 States to 2. That was just a demonstration of his political acumen and his skill in sizing up a national election situation.

New Chairman Flynn has announced a plan to divide the country into geographical areas, with a district chairman for each, to direct the campaign. This, in itself, is a compliment to Jim Farley, confessing the need of additional organization and extra effort to do the work which he did in the last two campaigns.

The people of the United States, without regard to party lines, think well of Jim Farley. They wish him well in his future activities.

[From the Toledo (Ohio) Blade of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT

James A. Farley, when he leaves the office of Postmaster General this month, will retire with the great satisfaction of being held in the highest respect by members of both political parties. That is the most convincing praise that can be given a man who has served as national chairman and has fought hard for his party's success.

In the years Mr. Farley has been before the public, he has proved that he is a skillful politician. But at the same time he has built an equally sound reputation as a gentleman and as a fair dealer. The testimonial party given him by newspapermen at the recent Chicago convention was conclusive proof that in public and private life Mr. Farley has attained a distinction won by few in political life. Newspapermen are trained to detect deception. They must not be fooled by the "phonies," and they seldom are. They found in Jim Farley that personal sincerity and admirable manliness that mark him as exceptional.

In high office, Mr. Farley has had a record that will long stand as a shining civic example. Because he has so much of honesty and directness, he naturally takes his departure from the campaign for a third term.

[From the Topeka (Kans.) State Journal of August 12, 1940]

ONLY TWO JOBS FOR JIM

Distance seems to lend enchantment even in business. Here is Jim Farley, retiring Democratic chairman, who probably knows more Americans by their first name than any other person, taking charge of the export business for Coca-Cola. Instead of pushing its sales at home, where everyone knows him, his job is to increase them in other countries.

The export connection is a surprise. Previously it had been reported he would have other business interests in addition to the New York Yankees after he left the Cabinet. But that was to take him into the motorcar field. It is said now that he is to limit his activities to soft drinks and baseball. If he added motorcars it would be evident that he expected to work as hard for himself in the future as he had been working in the last 8 years in politics.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Record of August 9, 1940]

FARLEY RESIGNS

Postmaster General Farley handed in his resignation to the President yesterday. The President accepted the resignation with "real regret"—which was his way of saying that, inasmuch as Mr. Farley would not play ball, he might as well go, for Farley no longer has a proper place in the Cabinet. General Farley is a Democrat; the Roosevelt Cabinet is not.

One can assess the services of Farley easily. As a Postmaster General he was not distinguishable from the rest of the line. For many years this portfolio has been a place for the chief pap man of an administration. And Farley, as chairman of the State and National committees, was naturally put there to attend to the tasks of patronage. These he performed admirably. He won votes and made friends in the usual way.

When it comes to the labors of his office, for which the Nation paid him, all one can say is that his outside duties presumably meant that the work was largely entrusted to deputies, after the manner of one sort of politics, prevalent at the present time. Therefore the deficits of the Department, haltingly excused or explained, were inevitable. Some day we will have a businessman in this job and will cut costs to something commensurate with the Service. But that time has not come yet.

The Postmaster General's retirement is due to a conscientious objection to third-term politics. Mr. Farley knows well that the President is aspiring to a dictatorship and that the third term he now is seeking is, in the Executive's mind, the necessary gateway to his heart's desire. And Farley, being a Democrat in both the philosophical and the party sense, will have nothing to do with it. One admires him for this.

One also admires him for his political skill—under rules of play, perhaps, of which many would not approve. As to his Department in Washington, he has carried on. He will be longest remembered there, unfortunately, for his commercialization of postage stamps for income from collectors, for the gifts of valuable stamps to the President, and for his cancelation of air contracts. As for the rest, we are constrained to believe that if he had dropped politics and attended solely to postal affairs he might have left as fine a record in the Department as he has left in his political party. And that is saying a great deal.

[From the Troy (N. Y.) Times Record, August 10, 1940]

EXIT JIM FARLEY

So much has been said and written concerning the coming resignation of Postmaster General James A. Farley that the actual resignation, and its acceptance with "real regret" by the President, have come as something of an anticlimax.

Little remains to be said about it, partly because the subject has already been pretty well covered in all its aspects by the press and partly because it speaks for itself.

Jim Farley loved the political game and over a period of many years he demonstrated a very unusual aptitude for it. As a Postmaster General he has not been particularly outstanding. His particular talents lay in another direction. It was his job principally to "win friends and influence people" and in this field of endeavor he made himself invaluable to the Roosevelt administration.

His resignation—and the acceptance of that resignation—have come because he was no longer in sympathy with the purposes of that administration and because he was no longer wanted in it.

Jim Farley, unlike many of the New Deal leaders, is a real Democrat. His conscientious objections to a third term are too well known to require comment. These things alone were enough to make him a misfit, so far as the New Deal leadership is concerned; and so, Mr. Farley is out.

He has not taken a walk, in the Al Smith sense. It can be depended upon, however, that many of his friends and admirers will get out their walking shoes. Some have already done so. In fact, there is already a pretty well-marked trail leading over the hills from the Roosevelt camp to that of Wendell Willkie. Needless to say, the footsteps all point in one direction.

[From the Vallejo (Calif.) News, August 8, 1940]

GOOD LUCK, JIM

Genial Jim Farley has set the dates for his resignation as chairman of the Democratic National Committee and as Postmaster General.

And when Jim steps out the Democratic Party will feel the loss. He has been the most valuable national chairman in so many decades that no one today can recall an equal.

During 8 long years in office his popularity increased. He wore well. There were so many things about Jim which the people of America liked.

He was an admitted politician. He made no bones about it. There was nothing of the hypocrite about him. It was his job to know people, and as a result he could probably call more persons by their first names than any other man in the country today. He became famous for his ability to recall faces and facts about those faces.

Furthermore, he was an honest politician. Throughout Washington he became noted for his integrity. Letters sent by him to his thousands of friends over the country bore 3-cent stamps. He did not take advantage of his Postmaster Generalship and the free mailing privileges that went with it. Personal mail called for stamps, he ruled.

He is going to try to recoup some of his financial losses caused by service in office, losses out of his own pocket.

For the Republicans, it is a good thing that the "General" is dropping the control of Democratic Party politics. He was the kind of a man the G. O. P. couldn't hate, even though he were on the other side. He was a tough opponent.

We wish Jim well in his new venture and hope he meets with the best of luck, realizing he deserves every bit of it.

[From the Ventura (Calif.) Star Free Press of August 9, 1940]

JIM FARLEY'S GOODBYE

Jim Farley, the man who has given a greater degree of service to the Democratic Party machine's organization work than any other man, will soon leave the President's Cabinet and will end his tenure as chairman of the National Democratic Committee.

Jim Farley did his job well, and his return to private life is a move he has wanted to make for a long time—in fact before the third term issue was more than a whisper.

His service to the Post Office Department has been good, too, and that branch of the governmental service will miss him as much as the democratic machine will miss him—but he leaves both organizations with good will on both sides.

It is significant to note, too, that Farley will retain the job of chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee and will work actively in that important State for the New Deal ticket in November.

Jim Farley is leaving his public jobs to adjust his financial condition through private industry. But in his work for the party in New York he will be continuing his work for the party that he helped raise to power.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post of Saturday, August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY'S MANTLE

President Roosevelt will probably end his second term with only three of his original Cabinet members still on the job. Postmaster General Farley will take his official leave on August 31. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will resign or go on leave without pay before his campaign for the Vice Presidency begins. Only Secretary of State Hull, Secretary of the Interior Ickes, and Secretary of Labor Perkins will remain.

Death claimed three members of the first Roosevelt Cabinet—Secretaries Woodin, Dern, and Swanson. Resignations were handed in by Homer S. Cummings and Daniel C. Roper, of the original New Deal Cabinet, and by several members appointed since 1933.

It is not surprising, of course, that many changes should be made in the President's official family during the course of 7½ years. Yet the trend of these changes is significant. The effect has been to weed out of the Cabinet every Jeffersonian Democrat, except Secretary Hull.

The resignation of Mr. Farley greatly emphasizes this fact. So long as the genial New Yorker remained a member of the President's official family he served as a binding tie between the old-line Democrats and the new dealers who took control when President Roosevelt was elected. His personal popularity and his tremendous political influence were factors of the greatest importance in keeping the two wings of the Democratic Party flapping harmoniously.

With Mr. Farley out, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins becomes the chief political influence in the Cabinet. Indeed, it was Mr. Hopkins and not the Postmaster General who served as a one-man steering committee, under direction of the President, at the Chicago convention. An ardent new dealer whose name is to Jeffersonian Democrats as is a red flag to a bull, Mr. Hopkins has no chance of healing the breach in the majority party's ranks with the same degree of success attained by Mr. Farley.

Thus at the beginning of his third-term race Mr. Roosevelt has lost one of his greatest political assets. And that loss is the more poignant because the President and Mr. Farley came to a parting of ways over the third-term issue. The man who led the 1932 and 1936 campaigns has walked out because he believes his chief is making a serious mistake. That decision will necessarily influence many Jeffersonian Democrats who have always been a little skeptical of the New Deal and hostile to the idea of a third term for any President.

As the contest is now shaping up, the President will have to rely far more upon his immediate followers, as distinguished from the old-line Democrats, than he has ever done before.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Evening Star of Friday, August 9, 1940]

RESIGNATION

It was inevitable that James A. Farley, retiring from the chairmanship of the National Democratic Committee, also should resign his position as Postmaster General. The announcement issued yesterday, therefore, was not unexpected. But it does not follow, necessarily, that the news was received by the public without regret.

Mr. Farley earned his place in President Roosevelt's Cabinet by political assistance rendered, then justified it by proving again as he had on several previous occasions the simple fact that he is a man of sound business acumen, skilled in the management of affairs and of people, efficient in the performance of administrative duty. His term as head of the largest organization of its kind in the world has been eminently successful. Understanding as he did that "the final test * * * for any official is the record of his service," he applied his "efforts and energies to the job of making substantial improvements * * * and to saving money for Uncle Sam rather than bothering about petty criticism in regard to details which, after all, were not extremely important."

Certainly there were mistakes during Mr. Farley's tenure. But of more lasting importance were such achievements as the inauguration of transoceanic air-mail, the development of a vast building program for the rehousing of postal facilities throughout the Nation and the gradual improvement of postal revenues for work done for hire.

Mr. Farley is honorably proud of his career in the Post Office Department. He has the right to look back upon it with satisfaction. The public in appreciation of his labors wishes him well in his new venture into private enterprise.

[From the Waterbury (Conn.) Democrat of August 9, 1940]

PRIVATE CITIZEN FARLEY

Announcement of resignation from the Cabinet by Postmaster General James A. Farley finally pins down to a definite date his return to private life. On and after the end of this month you'll still find Jim Farley in the ranks of stanch Democrats supporting the party and its candidates through thick and thin, but he'll be like most of the rest of us, reporting for work at 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning, out for lunch at noon, home for dinner at night. In short he'll have a regular working job for the first time in a good many years.

The Post Office Department is going to miss Farley. He may not have been the best Postmaster General we ever had. No one is going to make any such claims as that about him for he'd be the first to raise an objecting voice. But he ran the Department pretty well and saw to it that his assistants did their work properly. He managed to bring the Department's finances down to a point where you didn't have to whisper its deficit in a whisper. And he did sell stamps for Uncle Sam.

Philatelists will probably argue for years to come the value of the Farley regime in the Post Office Department. He gave them all sorts of new issues to add to their collections; he put stamp collecting on the front pages of all American newspapers. He played up the hobby for all it was worth, ably seconded by his stamp-minded boss, the President. As in almost every other job he accepted, he did a pretty thorough job of it. We'd call it a successful one. His private endeavors henceforth can't help but be similarly upward.

[From the Wheeling (W. Va.) News-Register, August 9, 1940]

A GREAT DEMOCRAT RETIRES

No Cabinet officer ever retired from his post with a finer record for service than Postmaster General Farley.

No national chairman served his party so conscientiously and effectively as Jim Farley. He knew more about politics than Edison did about electricity.

In a nation saturated with some of the good and much of the bad in politics, Farley stood out like the Koh-i-noor. His political record is as clean as a hound's tooth.

The Democratic Party owes Mr. Farley a great deal. It should value his counsels more than any other man in the country.

But Jim Farley may not take a very active part in politics in the future. He is going back to his first love—sport. He has been drafted to head one of New York's great baseball clubs.

Perhaps it was and still is his devotion to clean wholesome sports that made Jim Farley unique in the political vortex. He was a politician sincere in his convictions and above the machinations of the current school of politics.

America would not have much to worry about if it had more Jim Farleys.

[From the Wichita (Kans.) Beacon, August 8, 1940]

JIM RETIRES AFTER 8 YEARS

James A. Farley is retiring as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, ending a job that he took up after making the first succesful drive for the Democratic nomination in behalf of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932.

It was in the late fall of 1931 and the early spring of 1932 that the Nation at large began to know Jim Farley. The tall New Yorker went from coast to coast, from the Canadian border to the Gulf, interviewing political leaders, talking with party groups, contacting Democrats wherever he had the opportunity and selling to them the new leader of the party.

These trips accomplished one thing. They definitely stamped Jim Farley as the most widely acquainted political leader of the entire Nation. The intervening years have cemented that acquaintanceship into friendship that will far outlast any political relationship.

Jim Farley goes out of the national chairmanship highly respected for his ability in politics, his personal charm which has gained thousands of friends, and for his sincere character. It is difficult to follow any man into a job he has filled as long as Jim Farley has served as national chairman but the ball player from Grassy Point is leaving a vacancy so big that it will be doubly difficult to follow him.

The new national chairman, Edward Flynn, is an experienced and capable leader. He will have the advice and counsel of other leaders of the party and undoubtedly that of Jim Farley, but there will only be one "Genial Jim" in American politics.

[From the Watertown (N. Y.) Daily Times of August 10, 1940]

MR. FARLEY LEAVES WASHINGTON

Mr. James A. Farley came to Washington in 1932 as Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee. He was the man who had made Franklin D. Roosevelt President of the United States. Next to the late Louis McHenry Howe, he was the President's closest acquaintance and confidante. This remarkable phase of his career now ends. President Roosevelt, in Hyde Park, has his resignation as Postmaster General. He resigned as national chairman on July 17.

Mr. Farley will be happier probably in private life than he has been during the last few years of his public life. He was not enthusiastic over the Court-packing bill. He considered the attempt at a senatorial purge, which followed, the poorest kind of politics. He said publicly many times that he did not believe in a third term. The New Deal lost its glitter before his eyes. In Chicago, at the Democratic convention, President Roosevelt, through his representative, Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins, went over his head, engineered the draft of the President and named Secretary Henry Wallace as the Vice Presidential nominee.

Jim has three lucrative jobs waiting for him, it is said. First, he will become president of the New York Yankees within a few days. This will pay him $25,000 per year. Second, he will be chairman of the board of the Coca-Cola Export Corporation. Third, he plans to complete the writing of his memoirs which will sell widely, without doubt. His "Behind the Ballots," the inside story of the 1932 Democratic Convention, was a best seller.

Jim Farley is a thoroughly capable man, a brilliant organizer, and a most pleasing personality. As president of the Yankees he may still be able to coax some base hits out of them and put them back in the pennant race. As board chairman of Coca-Cola's export corporation he should be able to sell plenty of soft drinks. And into his memoirs will go 8 years of intimate memories of political life carefully listed in the detailed diary which he has kept during his entire career in Washington.

[From the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Record of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY QUITS CABINET

The friendly tone of the letters exchanged between James A. Farley, as he retired as Postmaster General, and his Chief does not disguise the fact that Farley is quitting as a matter of principle. His leave taking from the Cabinet is a natural sequel to his relinquishing of the national chairmanship of the Democratic Party, and no matter what has been said on the subject for public consumption, there is a deep conviction that Farley no longer is the national chairman because he differed from "the Boss" on the third-term issue.

President Roosevelt in his letter to Farley gave him credit for improving the business efficiency and the public service of the Post Office Department, and for bettering the morale of more than 300,000 employees.

In his letter to the President, Mr. Farley pays a high tribute to those employees. He insists that whatever success he has had in the conduct of the affairs of the Postal Service was due to their assistance and cooperation.

Postmaster General Farley retires to private life respected for having had the courage of his convictions. Demonstrations of this is too often wanting in American life.

Less than 5 months ago he planted himself solidly in the fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination. He told newspapermen at Boston that his name would be presented to the national convention at Chicago. And it was, even after it became clear that Mr. Roosevelt wanted the nomination. Probably, under the circumstances, it wouldn't have been very pleasant for Mr. Farley had he elected to remain in the Cabinet.

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Gazette of August 9, 1940]

JIM FARLEY RESIGNS

On the last day of this month, at the close of business, James A. Farley will cease to be Postmaster General of the United States. He has resigned and the President has accepted his resignation. It is generally recognized today that Mr. Farley has been an excellent Postmaster General; and in winning that recognition, Mr. Farley had to overcome some rather discouraging odds.

When he took the post and at the same time held on to the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, it was the depressing expectation that, following an old political tradition upheld by Postmasters General for many years back, he would devote himself mainly to the dispensing of patronage to deserving Democrats and what time might be left over he would give to the post office.

Well, Mr. Farley dispensed the patronage all right, and in such a thorough manner that he evoked many outraged protests from the political purists in the administration; but he also proved himself to be an admirable and hard-working executive in the Post Office Department.

During the first few years of the New Deal opposition spokesmen were impressively eloquent about "Spoilsman Farley" and "Farleyism." They said he had dug up Adlai Stevenson's old ax and was ruthlessly chopping off the official heads of innocent and worthy Republican jobholders. But as the years rolled on the cries of anguish ceased, and Mr. Farley emerged in the public eye as a good and kindly man who, as it happened, was also a most thoroughgoing politician of the practical school.

Jim Farley has a positive talent for making friends. He is affable, equable, good-natured, and intelligent. Anyone who has read his autobiography must have sensed the instinctive decency of the man—and his sensitiveness. One of the most memorable episodes in the book has to do with a dressing down he once received from Alfred E. Smith, then Governor of New York.

Farley, a youthful county chairman, was delegated by his committee to ask a favor from the Governor. The request, as it turned out, was improper, but neither Farley nor the county committee realized that. Smith realized it, however, and he lit into Farley in raging style. Farley was deeply hurt. After recounting the episode in his book, he adds—and there is a plaintive note in it—that he has made many similarly improper requests, always unwittingly, of Mr. Roosevelt, and always he has been turned down but always in an amiable fashion which left no scars.

If it is true that Jim aspired to the Presidency or the Vice Presidency, it is apparent that once again he has been turned down by the amiable Mr. Roosevelt. One cannot but wonder whether this time the Roosevelt amiability was again nonscarifying.

At any rate, during this Presidential campaign Mr. Farley is going to be sorely missed at Democratic G. H. Q., and missed most sorely of all by the amiable Mr. Roosevelt, the expert in thistledown refusals. But, then, it doesn't matter much this year, from the looks of things. The New Deal seems due for an out, and it is not likely that even Mr. Farley's political generalship could save it.

[From the Wilmington (Del.) Journal-Every Evening, August 9, 1940]

JAMES A. FARLEY

With the letter of resignation handed to the President yesterday, Postmaster General James A. Farley has finally bowed himself out of the New Deal after 7½ years of service to the Government.

For Mr. Farley these have been years of growth—both in personality and in public stature. He entered the Cabinet with the reputation of a likeable, practical politician who had done a good job of getting his candidate nominated and elected. He had no pretensions to statesmanship and the public gave him no credit in this field.

During the early years of the New Deal, as the man chiefly responsible for the distribution of patronage he became the favorite "whipping boy" of the opposition and he cheerfully accepted all of the criticism for the vast spoils system instituted by the New Deal.

This month, as Mr. Farley leaves the Cabinet, it is safe to say that there are not many men in American public life who are more widely and genuinely liked and respected. He has given the Post Office Department a business-like administration which stands out in sharp contrast to much of the rest of the New Deal and is justly proud of the achievement. He has been modest, unassuming, and loyal to his chief as long as his principles would allow. He has stood up under snubs that would have deeply embittered a lesser man. And finally when the President's decision to seek a third term brought Mr. Farley's loyalty to Mr. Roosevelt and his deep personal convictions into irreconcilable conflict he stepped aside with dignity.

In the past this paper has said many things in disagreement with Mr. Farley. It deplores now, as it did then, the vast spoils system of which he was the visible head. It disagrees as firmly as ever with many of the things he and the Roosevelt administration have stood for. But it recognizes him as a man of courage and conviction and it wishes him well in his new fields of endeavor.

[From the York (S. C.) Yorkville Enquirer, Monday, August 12, 1940]

JAMES A. FARLEY

The resignation of the Honorable James A. Farley as chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee, and his resignation as Postmaster General, which office he has efficiently filled for nearly 8 years, after twice directing political campaigns that landed Franklin Delano Roosevelt in the White House, reminds us very much of a political cartoon of more than 50 years ago in Puck.

The strong man of Germany 50 years ago was Bismarck, who served under Kaiser Wilhelm as Chancelor or Premier. He was a mental and political giant. As the Kaiser's chief adviser he steered Germany through many pitfalls. In time Kaiser Wilhelm reached the point in his career where success went to his head. He got to thinking that Germany's progress was entirely due to his own wisdom. It wasn't. Finally he did things that caused Bismarck to resign his portfolio, which certainly weakened the Government of Germany.

The cartoonist pictured the German ship of state, with Kaiser Wilhelm in command. Bismarck was pictured as climbing down a rope ladder on the side of the ship to get into a small boat. He was through. The cartoonist labeled his picture thus, "Germany loses its safe pilot."

Farley in his relations to the Roosevelt administration was much like Bismarck. He piloted Roosevelt through two campaigns and elected him President. When Franklin decided to offer for a third term, Mr. Farley became lukewarm to that proposition. He first resigned as national chairman and now has resigned as Postmaster General. To be sure it is possible that Mr. Rocsevelt may be elected for a third term, but of one thing we are sure, the Democratic Party has lost the services of a most efficient political pilot, and it is not at all uncertain that the third term urge of Roosevelt may prove to be his Waterloo. He would certainly stand a better chance if Mr. Farley were still at the helm of the Democratic political ship.

[From the Winston-Salem (N. C.) Journal of August 10, 1940]

FARLEY'S RETIREMENT

James A. Farley, who recently has resigned as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, now announces his retirement as Postmaster General on August 31. He retains only one political job, continuing as chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee.

The record of Mr. Farley as Postmaster General possibly is not as remarkable as that which he established as chairman of the Democratic committee. But by all standards of comparison, it measures up to the point of impressiveness. Under his direction the Post Office Department became largely self-sustaining, according to President Roosevelt, and it functioned throughout with efficiency. During his incumbency Mr. Farley also endeared himself to thousands of philatelists by causing many special stamp issues to be printed. In this field of governmental service, as well as in the office of Democratic national chairman, he showed outstanding ability as an executive.

With Mr. Farley retiring from the post-office portfolio on August 31, and Mr. Wallace probably resigning a few days or weeks from now, President Roosevelt will have two Cabinet positions to fill. His selections for these posts may have an important bearing upon the Presidential campaign.

In the meantime, the loyalty of Mr. Farley to the administration, which was so forcefully demonstrated at the Chicago convention, is expected to manifest itself in yeoman service among the voters of New York State, despite the obligations imposed by private business demands.

[From the Gopher (Minn.) Postmaster of August 1940]

GOOD-BYE, JIM, AND GOD BLESS YOU

Developments in Washington in the last month have made it impossible for our beloved Postmaster General to be with us at our convention, as he had anticipated. And it is safe to say that no one will regret James A. Farley's absence more than Mr. Farley himself. "Genial Jim" always made special efforts to attend State conventions, and the programs were always better because of his presence. News of his decision to enter private life came as a surprise to us all, but each and every member of the Department will wish him the best of luck. The eloquent tribute paid him by President Roosevelt in accepting his resignation gives ample evidence of his ability and integrity. And when he steps out of office on August 31 he will carry with him the best wishes of every postal employee in the Nation and a record of being the most successful and the most popular Postmaster General in the history of the United States.

[From the National Rural Letter Carrier, Washington, D. C., July 27, 1940]

POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY'S RETIREMENT CAUSING SINCERE REGRET

Postmaster General James A. Farley's impending retirement surely must be regretted by every postal employee, whose good will, respect, and affection he undoubtedly will hold throughout his lifetime.

During his more than 7 years' administration he not only has wiped out the postal deficit and placed it as one governmental function operating on a sound financial basis but he has molded a personnel imbued with an enthusiastic esprit de corps and efficiency without parallel in postal history.

It is most gratifying to observe the deserved enconiums being bestowed upon our Postmaster General by editorial writers and columnists throughout the country.

One able editorial writer, never given to fulsome praise, refers to him as "the greatest Postmaster General since Benjamin Franklin."

Rural carriers have particular reason to be proud that a man of Farley's stature, whose wholesome influence has stamped an indelible imprint upon the vast army of postal employees, should have passed along their horizon.

It was Postmaster General Farley's wise policy of "career appointments" that caused the appointment of a popular and trusted member in your ranks, Superintendent J. Ed Cooper.

It was your association's proud privilege to have Postmaster General Farley as a speaker at the Denver and Washington national conventions.

It was Postmaster General Farley's proud boast that there was an indefinable "something" about rural-carrier conventions that set them apart from others he attended and caused him to look forward to them.

Washington newspaper men and women have an uncanny ability to evaluate persons in high office.

That they hold him in their hearts as the noblest public personage in the National Capital is only natural because it is too seldom that they find a man who measures up to every high attribute of life.

Jim will take his deserved niche among other Postmasters General.

Jim will leave Washington as a man of intense loyalty and unswerving devotion to duty.

Jim will live forever in the hearts of the thousands whose good fortune it has been to relax under his sunny smile as a man who never violated his word and never let a friend down.

Jim is one man who will never receive as much as he has given.

C. C. McDEVITT, Publisher.

For Conscription—With Reservations

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN JARRETT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE OIL CITY (PA.) DERRICK OF AUGUST 28, 1940

Mr. JARRETT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial appearing in Oil City Derrick, Oil City, Pa., August 28, 1940.

FOR CONSCRIPTION—WITH RESERVATIONS

Assuming that the war in Europe imperils the United States and that there is no way we can raise and train an adequate defense army without conscription, let us have conscription without hysterics.

But where will this army come from? Largely from the unskilled class of young Americans, from the high-school and college graduates of the past few years who have not been able to pick up jobs, and from other young men holding good jobs which are not necessary to defense.

But not many conscripts will come from the ranks of the saboteurs, from the ranks of the Communists, or from those 6,000,000 "fifth columners" who are said by Congressman DIES to be making good livings in the United States.

It might be dangerous to put these fellows in the Army, but there is lots of war work they can do under military direction and for military pay.

We have no idea how much sabotage is practiced in the United States, but we will say this: There is not another country on earth where it would have greater play. We have subversive aliens in this country that we cannot get out because the Government in Washington thinks deportation would be too rough on them. It may be the policy to reform these individuals through kindness, but the administration does not know the nature of the beasts.

There is entirely too much political pandering to these dangerous elements. It would be a crime to send some fine boy to a possible death fighting for his country while some saboteur drawing good pay in an airplane plant would tamper with an Army plane so it would fail in the second of stress.

The one arm of defense in this country which needs building up even more than the Army is the F. B. I. The process of checking up and branding those "fifth columners" and saboteurs should be under way in every community in the land. This is much more important right now that raising an army.

Probably one-third of the American people do not remember the draft in the World War, or, if they do, they were so young they cannot tell much about it. We saw a trainload of those boys, many of them without overcoats, pull out of a station one evening when the temperature was 10 below zero. The day coaches were crowded. They had to sleep sitting up. They did not know when or where they were going to eat next, and when they left there was a feeling in every mother's breast she would never see her boy again.

We remember all the miserable excuses which were set up by slackers. As we remember the going away, we also remember the coming home. Many did not come back. Many came back physical and mental wrecks. This is what war does to humanity.

Maybe we Americans are no better than the English, who may be facing annihilation, but we say our American boys are too precious to be sent into war lightly.

True, this draft is only for a year's training, but we know what the temptation is when dictators find themselves in possession of great armies. What do Hitler or Mussolini or Stalin care about cannon fodder?

We repeat that if the war in Europe makes it judicious or necessary for us to draft and train an Army, let us go ahead and draft it, but let us be sure that those 6,000,000 "fifth columners" that MARTIN DIES speaks of be made to do the rough work of the Army and for Army pay.

National Recovery and Preparedness

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RALPH O. BREWSTER

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 12, 1940

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, during the World War in the decade of the twenties the production of material necessities and comforts in the United States steadily mounted until it reached a peak measured in terms of a national income of $90,000,000,000 in a single year.

Then came a world-wide depression in which the economy of the United States joined the general collapse. Other countries emerged more rapidly than did the United States. Our recovery lagged behind that of almost every other industrialized nation.

THE AMERICAN GOAL

Our national income has never reached much more than two-thirds of the mark attained in 1929. Yet the Brookings Institution, after a careful survey, finds American resources capable of producing a national income of $125,000,000,000 a year.

This is obviously our goal. Such an income would solve jobs for youth and ample provision for the older citizens of the United States and the end of that desperate struggle for existence that has affected workers everywhere, both in our factories and on our farms throughout recent years.

THE AMERICAN IDEAL

"Man shall not live by bread alone," but even this authority recognized bread as most desirable in our existence even while it emphasizes the prime importance of those spiritual values in liberty of life and conscience which we like to think of as characteristic of America.

The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is disappearing elsewhere in the world. The preservation of these hard-won rights in America is the clear responsibility of this generation.

AMERICA LOOKS AND LISTENS

America listens with concern to a constantly increasing rumble from the explosions across the sea. More and more America feels the impact of events outside our bounds. American resolution is steadily hardening to see that America is adequately prepared to meet any menace that may offer either from within or without.

Disruptive influences of any character are being more and more closely scrutinized. America must unite under the broad principles of the American Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and on that platform presents a program that will not tolerate attack from outside our bounds nor submit to subversive influences operating from within.

America enters the valley of decision to determine how this unity may be achieved.

AMERICA SEEKS PEACE

America seeks no quarrel with any other nation on this earth. America simply wants to work out its manifest destiny within its ample bounds and to realize the unlimited supply of the good things of this life which its boundless resources so amply afford.

America stirs restlessly, however, as it realizes the threat to its liberties that are offered in doctrines that are gaining ever broader currency in other portions of the globe. America consequently decides it must be adequately prepared.

How to realize the fruits of our boundless resources by the normal, natural functioning of our national economy and at the same time prepare to meet the totalitarian threat is the challenge of this next decade.

Americans are realists and they are always ready to move in uncharted waters if necessity demands. The entire story of the amazing American progress of 3 centuries is written in the readiness for adventure characteristic of the pioneer.

AMERICAN TRADITION

This does not mean, however, that Americans abandon a trusted tradition without reason. The men who conceived this Nation in all the stress and strain of the struggle for American independence laid down also the protective principle that no man should hold the office of President for more than 8 years. Washington established the precedent. Jefferson enjoined it upon his fellow countrymen.

Their counsel born of a close acquaintance with the totalitarian systems of their day is not to be lightly cast aside.

Once again the world turns from democracy to seek solace in the theory of the indispensability of a man.

Germany, Italy, and Russia are all giving that ancient system another trial.

BY THEIR FRUITS

Today America cries out for a leader capable of coordinating the manpower and the machine power of America to bring about domestic recovery and to provide an adequate defense.

A great task lies ahead. Millions of idle hands are waiting to be put to work to build a better America.

No reflection is necessary upon the good intentions of these who in 7 years have had seventy billions of dollars and unlimited authority, and yet have not been able to bring about domestic recovery or an adequate defense.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." Ten million unemployed still stalk our streets in a vain search for jobs. One million boys and girls each year pour out of our schools ready and eager to work at jobs they seek in vain to find.

Seven years and seventy billions should give us more results.

Now it is time that America consider its next step. Time is running fast. The next few years must see American recovery or America will be profoundly changed.

A few years more of unbalanced budgets and America will go the way of the other democracies that have succumbed to a steadily mounting debt.

Is there no hope?

The answer is plain. America may still choose the better way and the hard way.

By the same path our forefathers trod we may still restore America.

The vast resources of America are still at the service of a people who are willing still to work. The ninety-billion income of 1929 may become the one-hundred-and-twenty-five-billion income of the 1940's.

AN ALL-AMERICAN TEAM

The only obstacle is our own failure to recapture American confidence and get an all-American team once again into the game.

A change of leadership would certainly seem warranted by the record of recent years.

Confidence is the keynote without which recovery can never be achieved. Confidence is the cornerstone upon which must rest the sound structure of that economic recovery that every American desires. The complicated framework of our modern American economy cannot be held together except by the cement of a mutual confidence in the sincerity of purpose of all those elements that make up our industrial machine. Recrimination does not develop trust.

A NATIONAL ELECTION

Maine is the first State to go on record in the campaign of 1940. In electing a United States Senator and three Members of Congress Maine must very definitely determine its viewpoint in national affairs. Maine will continue to play a part in the progress of America. No State has a finer record of steadfast devotion to principles that are fundamentally American. Maine citizens will ponder well their course.

WASHINGTON WATCHES MAINE

The first act of the gentleman from Massachusetts, Representative JOSEPH W. MARTIN, as chairman of the Republican National Committee, was to express the hope that Maine would give 75,000 majority to the Republican ticket on September 9. The gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, has been in politics too long to speak without taking thought. His amazing success has been a result of using words with care. This expression regarding the Maine election was not a random utterance but a carefully thought-out letter to the Republican State Committee as it started the campaign.

Back of this statement lay Joe's conviction that Maine must approximately double its majority of 4 years ago in order to give the Willkie candidacy significance. The 40,000 majority of 1936 would simply mean that Charlie Michelson would sharpen his poison pencil to tell the country the Maine election indicated that once again Vermont was going Republican.

To be sure it sounded rather cocky and self-confident to discuss a campaign so early in terms of so substantial a majority, but Joe decided in favor of nailing his banner to the mast.

Curiously enough the first Gallup poll gave some substance to Joe's hope by showing Maine at the head of all the Republican States in the Union with a Willkie lead of 2 to 1, which would mean a majority of 90,000.

With only a short time to go to the election, this would indicate that if the voters of Maine heed the appeals of Wendell Willkie and the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, to roll up a record-breaking Republican majority on September 9, the country may see the start of a most impressive sweep.

Meanwhile, Mr. Edward J. Flynn, of New York, the new chairman of the Democratic National Committee, announces that this week he will turn his attention to the State of Maine to stop the Republicans at the very start of their national campaign.

Republicans may well ponder the meaning of this attention to Maine by the two national campaign managers in what seems likely to be one of the hardest-fought campaigns of this century.

Many new to politics have thought the talk of "as goes Maine" was simply an outworn shibboleth. Washington does not so regard it. Washington watches Maine.

The Maine barometer will surely be called into the picture by the opposition in case the Maine majority falls down. Local conditions will furnish no alibi so far as the Nation is concerned.

THE HISTORY OF PREPAREDNESS

The solid Maine Republican delegation in the Congress has stood firmly for a program that would contribute to domestic prosperity and the protection of the Americas from foes both from within and from without.

The situation this fall is very simple. In the past 7 years the present administration has spent $70,000,000,000. The American people now have the right and the duty to ask what have we to show for it.

Ten million are still unemployed. America is woefully unprepared. Certainly, Republicans are not responsible for the 7 long, lean years through which we have just passed. Certainly Republicans are not responsible for the tragic confession of the Chief of Staff before a congressional committee that America this spring had only 50 planes fit to go upon the western front, as all others were outmoded by the revelations of the current war.

Planes "on order" contain no terror for the disciples of Mr. Hitler. The 484 antiaircraft guns possessed by the American Army today are not sufficient to defend a single port in the State of Maine, according to the standards now prevailing in Europe.

During the 12 years of Republican control that followed the previous 8 years of Democratic administration the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps were kept at all times adequate for any force with which they were at all likely to be faced.

DEMOCRATIC OPPOSITION IN 1920'S

It is interesting also to note that throughout that period the expenditures of the Republican administration for preparedness were constantly under attack from the Democratic Party, not because we were spending too little but because we were spending too much. This reached its climax in the Democratic platform of 1932 with a denunciation of "expenditures on armaments fast approaching $1,000,000,000 a year" as entirely too much of a burden on the people of the United States.

This record is of interest and value if anyone seeks to make a comparison between conditions of the 1920's and the 1930's.

THE RISE OF HITLER

Soon after the present administration came into power Mr. Hitler took over control of central Europe and has steadily expanded his influence in the world by military might.

Yet in 1938 the present administration proposed to limit naval airplanes to 3,000 although England already had 12,000 and other nations were spending 10 times what we were for experimentation in aeronautical defense.

Much of the campaign of the opposition rests upon the proposition that there is only one man today in America capable of coping with our problems in either domestic or foreign affairs. The trusted tradition of a century against a third term for any President must be violated because of the crisis with which we are confronted and the indispensability of a single man to cope with this crisis.

Certainly no one will contend that in 7 years any appreciable progress has been made in the solution of our domestic problems, but we are frequently told that in the field of foreign affairs the New Dealers present a leader with a most uncanny sense of timing.

THREE THOUSAND PLANES

Let us look at the record. The proposed limit of 3,000 airplanes for the United States Navy in 1938 seems incredible in the light of what has since been revealed. Yet it was only the protest of a militant minority of Republicans that prevented that limit from being imposed.

Today we talk in terms of 50,000 planes. Yet the failure to develop plane-building facilities in the past 2 years is now a most serious handicap both for ourselves and for those nations that are fighting for their liberties and their lives.

DEFENSE AT KITTERY AND BATH

In the same minority report of 1938, as a Republican member of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, I pointed out the continuing failure of the administration to provide 11 submarines and 34 destroyers in accordance with the then existing authorization. At that time the administration was decidedly battleship-minded. Events have changed all that.

The peril now to Maine shipyard employees is in the possible development of facilities elsewhere that may some day offer a competitive threat to Maine shipbuilders. We do not want to see again repeated the story of a feast and a famine.

Steady work at steady wages is the sound way to proceed. The country could easily bear the burden if a sound recovery were here.

As a Member of the United States Senate I should hope, because of my experience in the House, to succeed Senator HALE on the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and thus have a definite voice in the development of our naval policy and program.

Maine was happy to welcome the President recently for an inspection of our submarine shipyard at Kittery. We shall hope that he noted the utterly inadequate condition of its defense—typical of the coast of Maine and of the New England area, which would be the first to invite attack if any European devotees of collective security should ever seek to extend their system to our shores.

THE LATEST RECORD ON DEFENSE

But let us come down to even more recent days. In June of this year the President publicly announced he saw no reason vital to national defense for Congress to stay in session except, as he cynically remarked, for the "laudable purpose of making speeches."

The gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, promptly declared that during the period of the current crisis he would oppose any attempt to adjourn the Congress, and he was joined in this position by all the Republicans and by a sufficient number of the majority party to defeat the Presidential proposal to send the Congress home.

What has happened in the 2 months that have since ensued? The Congress has made the following provisions for our defense:

First. Provided a $5,000,000,000 rearmament program which in July the President described as "essential to the preservation of our democratic institutions."

Second. Authorized the creation of a two-ocean navy although the creation of such a navy had not even been recommended to Congress in mid-June.

Third. The Congress has made provision for training the National Guard, without delay, for any emergency that may arise.

Fourth. The House has adopted an excess-profits tax designed to take some measure of the profits out of the preparations for war and to raise $300,000,000 to help meet the costs of the defense program.

Fifth. Congress is now considering proper provision to provide the men that are required to handle the billions of dollars of defense equipment that is now in process. This certainly seems vital to defense.

Can it not fairly be said that the determined attempt of the administration to adjourn the Congress in June did not reveal as much foresight as the determination of the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOE MARTIN, to keep Congress on the job?

RECOVERY AND DEFENSE

The relation between national recovery and national defense is all too often ignored.

While the Nation calls insistently for planes and for all the other instruments of a mechanized defense and for the facilities for their production, we yet recognize that the first essential of our defense must be a sound national economy with a Budget that is balanced and an industry that is geared to go. The first bulwark of our national security is to be found in a contented, happy people, old and young, ready and anxious to defend the things their country means.

There has been much discussion in recent years of old-age assistance. Two theories regarding this problem have definitely emerged.

RECOVERY AND RELIEF

One point of view urges a program which insists upon using the reserves paid in as premiums by one part of our population to pay benefits to another part of our population. This borrowing from Peter to pay Paul leaves no provision by which the reserves will ultimately be restored to pay the benefits to those with whom the Government has contracted. Such a program is doomed to failure because it violates every principle of honesty and fair play. Both the current contributors and the current beneficiaries are being deplorably deceived. Some day soon the day of reckoning must inevitably arrive. Discrimination is in determining the beneficiaries and the benefits since it all rests in the decision of a person rather than the determination of a law.

The other point of view urges an honest, simple system by which each year the budget will be balanced and current dollars honestly obtained and current benefits honestly bestowed.

Each generation each year will pay such benefits as it can afford. Each age group in succession will receive the benefits as they accrue.

One of these plans is the New Deal proposal to solve our social ills and can only mean the increase of these social and economic difficulties from year to year as the American people become more and more bitterly disillusioned with the entire working of the program.

The other program is sponsored by millions of Americans and is in essence the Republican proposal sponsored by the Republican platform of 4 years ago and by the Republican platform this year and offers the only sound basis on which assistance can be successfully carried on without disrupting our economic life. It rests upon the firm foundation of paying as you go. It offers no discrimination among our population on grounds of race, religion, or political affiliation. To this simple fundamental American program every American may cordially subscribe with the conviction that it will do justice to all Americans, young and old.

We shall no longer quarrel over a name, but recognize and apply sound principle as enunciated in the Republican platforms of 1936 and 1940.

The essence of this program is recovery rather than relief and that means opportunity for youth and adequate provision for the aged.

This program also provides ample for American defense, as only upon the basis of a sound national economy can a permanent defense be built.

THE REPUBLICAN OFFER

In this critical period in the affairs of mankind the Republican Party approached the problem of the nomination for the Presidency in a clear and simple spirit of placing patriotism above party.

In Wendell Willkie the Republican Party offers to the Nation a leader trained in the best traditions of America—a lifelong disciple of the principles of Thomas Jefferson, and a believer in their application to the conditions of modern life.

MAINE LEADS

Four years ago Maine seemed to be out of step with the majorities in most of our sister States, although 17,000,000 Americans even then agreed with us. Today there are constantly growing indications that the country is ready to fall in step with Maine. The stone which the builders rejected seems likely now to be the head of the corner. The Nation turns once again to follow the leadership of the land of the rising sun.

The motives of those in power for the past 7 years do not need to be challenged in order to justify a change of administration. Time is getting short to put America back on the track and start again upon the journey that in the last century made America the envy and the inspiration of the world.

Hard work and firm determination were the gospel of America throughout 300 years. Those same principles will prevail today as yesterday.

In this procession of principle Maine is privileged once again to play the part of a pioneer. Let us carry on worthily of our traditions by a resounding majority for sound American principles that will send ringing across this country the message of an America that is about to be redeemed.

The Government's Case Against the Lowell Sun

REMARKS
OF
HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I trust every Member will read the editorial of the Lowell Sun of yesterday. It is a very vigorous editorial and is entitled "The Government's Case Against the Sun." The Sun has presented a strong case. It is a very severe arraignment of the administration of the Wage and Hour Act. I am puzzled, because hitherto I have had a high opinion of Colonel Fleming. I read in part from this editorial:

There is an answer to the question, "Why this attack?"

This attack represents in sugar-coated and easily digestible form the first concerted drive against the freedom of the press in the only nation on the face of the earth where a free press still exists.

Will freedom of speech and of assembly be the next targets? Every American might ponder his answer to that question, and begin on the premise that if they also are attacked it will be via some such similar exalted and praiseworthy channel as the Wage and Hour Act.

Mr. Speaker, that is the way the attack on the press which took away its freedom began in Spain and in other countries.

The editorial referred to follows:

THE GOVERNMENT'S CASE AGAINST THE SUN

The administrator of the Wage and Hour Act, Philip B. Fleming, has brought the Sun into court on the assumption that this newspaper has not fully lived up to the letter of that act.

NO INSTANCE OF VIOLATION CITED

In his court action Mr. Fleming has not given a single instance of where or how the act was violated by the Sun.

There is nothing whatsoever to indicate that any Sun employee has filed a complaint with the administrator.

The case has been continued to October 7. Until that date the Sun will not know the nature of the offense with which it is charged. And on that date it must be prepared to defend itself against that charge, whatever it may be, if indeed there be any.

Long before the Wage and Hour Act was even dreamed of, the average Sun pay envelope was far above the present requirements of the act. The many thousands of Lowell people who read the Sun made this possible for the many people who help print the Sun.

And during the entire depression not one Sun employee suffered a pay cut. This newspaper has always taken what it believed to be pardonable pride in this maintenance of a high wage and salary scale.

Now the administrator of the Wage and Hour Act brings the Sun into Federal court. Why?

He cites no instance of any violation of the act. Why, then, has he taken such court action? There is an answer.

The Administrator, or his representatives, apparently desire to conduct a fishing expedition through Sun employment records. He hopes he can find a violation of the act. If—we repeat, if—there has been any violation of the act the Sun likewise hopes he can find it so that the mistake may be corrected.

THIS IS NO ISOLATED ACTION

But this action against the Sun is no mere accident, no isolated effort. Nor can we believe that it came at this time of year and in this particular year by chance.

Two newspapers in Easton, Pa., are the objects of a similar attack by the Government in Washington.

Some few weeks ago a representative from the office of the Wage and Hour Administrator sought to go on a fishing expedition through the records of both of these papers. The management of each paper refused the demand. Today both newspapers are likewise in court defending themselves against the Federal Government.

The Dallas (Tex.) News was faced with a similar demand. It permitted the examination, believing—as the Sun believes today about its observance of the Wage and Hour Act—that its record was clean.

But the investigators from Administrator Fleming's office claimed they found the dirt they had been seeking, and forthwith ordered the News to dispense $3,000 in back pay.

Now, the Dallas News is one of the largest newspapers in the South. Three thousand dollars would hardly put it into bankruptcy. But it refuses to meet the $3,000 demand of the Administrator because it believes his charges to be groundless, and possibly even malicious.

The result is that the Dallas News is also now in court defending itself against the Federal Government.

WHY THIS SUDDEN ATTACK?

Why this sudden and below-the-belt attack against the press? Wages and salaries paid to newspaper employees rank among the highest in the land. If all employers paid the same high wages and salaries as do newspaper publishers, and if working conditions were on the same high plane in every industry, there would probably be no need for the Wage and Hour Act.

There is an answer to the question, "Why this attack?"

This attack represents in sugar-coated and easily digestible form the first concerted drive against the freedom of the press in the only Nation on the face of the earth where a free press still exists.

Will freedom of speech and of assembly be the next targets? Every American might ponder his answer to that question and begin on the premise that if they also are attacked it will be via some such similarly exalted and praisworthy channel as the Wage and Hour Act.

The press is now about to be smeared and coated with a choice selection of mud, unless the attack proves a boomerang. Because the attack is made through the Wage and Hour Act, the implication to be gained is that newspapers run sweatshops. Thus, the confidence of the people in their newspapers is supposed to be weakened. The calf is then considered well fattened and ready for the Government abattoir.

A DOUBLE-EDGED NEWS RELEASE

An interesting news release from the Boston office of the Wage-Hour Administration came to the Sun just yesterday. It told how a concentrated effort was going to be made in this part of the Nation to enforce strict observation of the Wage-Hour Act in five key industries. Concede that the motive behind this belated enforcement of a law which is almost 2 years old was altruistic despite the approach of November, and there is absolutely nothing wrong in this effort. In fact, it is only fair and proper, even if late in coming.

The newspaper business did not happen to be included in the five industries referred to, and probably therefore should not expect the civil treatment accorded the big five.

And now to the point we wish to bring out in this news release:

"A majority of the factories," reports the news release, "* * * are complying with the Fair Labor Standards Act, or have shown a willingness to do so as soon as inadvertent violations are pointed out to them by Wage and Hour inspectors."

The Sun has this comment to make: As soon as, and if, any inspector of the Fair Labor Standards Act points to a single violation of the Wage-Hour Act by the Sun it will be immediately corrected. The Sun has yet to be charged with a specific violation of the act. But it nevertheless has been brought into court on the charge that "the Administrator" has "reasonable grounds to believe" that the Sun has committed a violation of the act.

Further along the news release says: "The drives are not punitive."

In answer this newspaper might ask by what method of reasoning the Administrator's office feels it necessary to explain that the drives are not punitive. It may be that after all they are punitive.

CLAIMS LEGAL ACTION ONLY AS LAST RESORT

To quote again from the news release: "They (wage and hour inspectors) will first locate violations, and then by explaining to the noncomplying employer the requirements and purposes of the act * * * attempt to bring him into voluntary compliance. Legal action will be taken if necessary, but only in obdurate cases."

Well, nothing has been explained to the Sun, nor, we repeat, has any instance of a violation been pointed out. If this newspaper's attention had been drawn to any violation, its "voluntary compliance" would be immediate and apologetic for permitting such a violation to unwittingly occur. The Sun was at no time "obdurate," but is nevertheless the target of legal action. This newspaper's refusal to permit an investigator to fish through its records without complaint or charge of violation could hardly be called "obdurate." Or could it?

Why, may we ask in all fairness and sincerity of purpose, should the wage-hour enforcement office issue a news release which at best is certainly very misleading? Or are newspapers to receive special handling?

AN ATTACK ON ALL NEWSPAPERS

This drive is not only against the Lowell Sun, or the Easton Express, or the Easton Free Press, or the Dallas News.

It is a drive against all the newspapers in America, and if successful will quickly engulf all magazines, and then all radio stations which even now operate under very limited Government license anyhow.

It is directed at the heart of every newspaper in the United States which has had the courage to stand on its own two feet. If the Sun were willing to bend on both knees before the power that cracks the whip it probably would not today be faced with the attack which confronts it.

The method of governmental attack on the press is well known. Fundamentally it has been the same everywhere. We saw it in Germany, and in Italy, and in Spain, and now in conquered France.

We also saw the result of it—a people fed on propaganda, half-truths, and even lies; a people that could read only what its government wanted it to read.

Other American newspapers are scheduled to be attacked soon. Indeed, the Sun takes pleasure in being the fourth choice in the Nation in the potentially historic war of the Government in Washington against a free American press. We only regret that we were not No. 1 on the list.

SUN STRONGLY FAVORS WAGE-HOUR ACT

In conclusion let it be said with all the emphasis at our command that the Sun is just as strongly in favor of the intent and purpose of the Wage and Hour Act as any agency or individual in the country. Undoubtedly every newspaper in the Nation is. In their own field the newspapers have generally far exceeded the minimum requirements of the act.

But when the enforcement of the act is used as a shield for an attack upon one of our constitutional liberties, that act becomes a powerful and destructive weapon in the hands of dictatorial-minded Government officials. This attack is not only directed against the newspapers, but against every man and woman earning a living by working on newspapers, and every man and woman who reads a newspaper.

Needless to say the Sun will meet this attack with every effort it can muster. It does so, encouraged by the belief that it has the moral support of the people of Lowell and northern Middlesex County.

Must We Sacrifice Another Generation of American Manhood Because of English Stumble-Bum Diplomacy?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS D. THILL

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, August 26, 1940

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, when England declared war on Germany she was unprepared for war. Why did the leaders of England thrust their country into the jaws of death at a time when they knew the Nazis were well equipped and well trained to fight a modern war? To say the least, British diplomacy has been weak during the last 8 years.

If England had prevented the rearming of Germany, the war in Europe would never have come. After the last war, after America had made the rescue, England was dominant in Europe. But the fatuity of English statesmen permitted a conquered Germany to rise up from the ruins and develop the greatest air force in the world. Now that England is being battered by the Frankenstein she nurtured, war propagandists, misguided zealots, and others are urging America's entrance into the war. Why must we sacrifice another generation of American manhood because of English stumble-bum diplomacy? The following news article discusses the problem:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 24, 1940]

THE CONSEQUENCES OF STUMBLE-BUM DIPLOMACY

We refer to British diplomacy. The expression we have used may be offensive to some Englishmen, but it is used because it describes British diplomacy with the greatest economy of words. Our sympathies, and those of the majority of Americans, are with England.

BRITAIN KNEW IN ADVANCE

What brings diplomacy to mind is that yesterday, August 23, marks the first anniversary of the Soviet-German nonaggression pact signed in Moscow by Von Ribbentrop for Hitler, and by Molotov for Stalin. On August 24, 1939, Sir Neville Henderson reported from Berlin to Lord Halifax in London that the pact had been made. Britain thus knew of this world-shaking agreement 11 days before she went to war. She went ahead, nevertheless, exactly as if hypnotized, as if moved by some strange nemesis.

The cards were stacked against Britain. This did not stop her diplomats. France followed—to eventual ruination. These two countries, holding the whole fate of Europe, were like two fluttering birds fascinated by a snake.

Now, there is danger that Britain is going down to destruction. We are called upon to underwrite this fatuousness, to spread the war to all corners of the world because Henderson, Halifax, Chamberlain, Daladier, et al. could not shake off their war hypnosis.

THE RULING HAND LOVES ITS MAGIC

The situation seems to be this: If Britain makes a mistake, it immediately becomes incumbent on us to pull her out, whatever the risk. We shall probably end up by attempting to do just that. It is tragically evident that the ruling class of Britain had lost its touch with realities before this war was brought upon the world. It isn't the same ruling class as in 1914, inept though those gentlemen seemed at the time. We question if it's the same Britain.

Win or lose, it can never be the old Britain again. The war has lowered, if it has not demolished, the old class barriers. If Britain wins, we cannot imagine its barnacled aristocracy being trusted once more with the conduct of foreign policy; at least, not without the working classes as kibitzers. If Britain loses, we don't know whether the King and ruling classes will move to Canada and try to give 'em what's left of the Empire from there.

COOPERATION? YES; TO A DEGREE

This is one reason why we can't bring ourselves to support the transfer of 50 destroyers to Britain, overage though they may be. Defense pacts, such as our agreement with Canada, make good sense because they are based on this hemisphere and its safeguarding. The transfer of destroyers, however, immediately mixes us up in Europe.

Prime Minister Churchill, in Commons the other day, spoke proudly and defiantly of the manner in which American-British interests were becoming intertwined. He is probably correct. Some joining of interests is essential. We question whether this jointure should go so far as to become well-nigh indissoluble. The transfer of destroyers would bring that about. Added to which is the well-known fact that such a transfer would be largely a gesture, a token of friendship. The big battle is under way; by the time these destroyers are reconditioned it probably will be over.

The prime mover of this war was the present Prime Minister of England, Winston Churchill. In his book, Step by Step, he proves that Britain was far outraced in armaments, woefully unprepared for war. Churchill was not then in the Cabinet; he was one of the loudest critics of appeasement. He urged Britain to back Poland on the Corridor question, even to the extent of war. So Britain did, knowing she herself was unprepared and where Russia stood. That's what we mean by stumble-bum diplomacy.

The Geyer Anti-Poll-Tax Bill

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

EXCERPTS FROM THE HEARINGS BEFORE THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the committee hearings were completed on May 17, 1940, and as yet they are not printed, it becomes necessary for me to get some of the testimony before the public in this manner. I have urgently been requesting that the complete hearings be printed in the usual way, but up to the present time the chairman of the subcommittee has not seen fit to order them printed.

The testimony used today is that of Mr. Paul Sharrenberg, legislative representative, American Federation of Labor, and that of Dr. Herman Nixon, visiting professor of history, University of Missouri.

The testimony follows:

FORBIDDING POLL TAX REQUIREMENTS

Wednesday, April 3, 1940

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 4 OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The committee met at 10 a. m., Hon. FRANCIS E. WALTER (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The hearing will please be in order. Is Mr. Scharrenberg present?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you state your full name to the reporter?

STATEMENT OF PAUL SCHARRENBERG, LEGISLATIVE REPRESENTATIVE, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. My full name is Paul Scharrenberg and I am legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor.

The American Federation of Labor in its last annual convention, held in Cincinnati, Ohio, October 1939, by unanimous vote, "declared its approval of the principle that all citizens, regardless of color or race, should be equally entitled to the full rights of adult suffrage."

By virtue of this declaration and because of our knowledge that in eight Southern States payment of a poll tax or head tax is a prerequisite to voting we favor the enactment of H. R. 7534, introduced by Mr. GEYER of California.

While it is generally assumed that payment of the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in eight Southern States is designed primarily to disfranchise the Negroes it has become evident that by the levy and manipulation of this tax white citizens, in the low income bracket, are being disfranchised in increasing numbers.

In evidence of this assertion the percentage of the total vote cast at the general election of 1936 in the before-mentioned eight Southern States, supplies its own highly illuminating comment. The percentage of the total normally eligible vote cast in these poll-tax States is:

Tennessee 33.5 percent; Texas 26.2 percent; Virginia 25.7 percent; Alabama 20.4 percent; Georgia 19.6 percent; Arkansas 18.5 percent; Mississippi 16.2 percent; and South Carolina 14.1 percent.

This is an average of about 22 percent for these 8 Southern States. The United States average is 64 percent and the average for the 40 States that do not use the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting is 72 percent.

In considering these percentages it should be borne in mind that since 1901, the percentage of Negroes in all Southern States has declined from 38.1 to 29.8. According to the 1930 census, only Mississippi has a majority of Negroes, and the new census will probably show this changed.

Just how difficult it is for the poor citizens of these eight Southern States to pay the poll tax is further illustrated by a 1935 tabulation of the per-capita income by States.

It shows that while the average annual per-capita income of the United States was $432—the per-capita income of these eight Southern States was among the lowest, ranging from $316 in Texas to $170 in Mississippi.

Mr. MURDOCK. The figure you quoted as the voting average for all States was 64 percent?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. Yes, sir; that is the average for the entire United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that includes the Southern States?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. All States.

Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I would like to file the tabulation for the record. I might say this was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator CONNALLY of Texas on August 5, 1939, showing the per-capita income by States for the year 1935.

The CHAIRMAN. Has it been brought up to date?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. I haven't any later information.

Mr. MURDOCK. Could you give us the reason for or in what connection did Senator CONNALLY insert it in the RECORD?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. Oh, that was an entirely different connection. Senator CONNALLY was talking about old-age pensions but nevertheless it is in the RECORD on his authority.

And so, Mr. Chairman, if your committee in its wisdom should deem it best not to report H. R. 7534, notwithstanding the evidence submitted, then it would appear to be your solemn duty to give serious attention to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Section 2 of the fourteenth amendment reads as follows:

"Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State."

Section 5 places a duty and an obligation upon Congress to enforce this amendment. To quote section 5: "The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article."

Mr. Chairman, there was a time in the history of our country when countless children were "too poor to attend school."

Today poverty is no longer an excuse for nonattendance at school, but millions of American citizens in eight Southern States are denied the right to cast their votes because they are too poor.

Surely the evidence is overwhelming that the poll tax requirement in the eight Southern States is deliberately intended to disfranchise the poor.

We therefore appeal to this committee either to report H. R. 7534, the bill introduced by Mr. GEYER, or else invoke the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution and reduce the representation in Congress from the poll-tax States that have so outrageously abridged the right of the poor to exercise their franchise as American citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Scharrenberg, you, of course, examined the statutes in these eight States?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. Only in part, but we have some witnesses on our side who are constitutional experts and will fully cover that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Do all the constitutions prescribe that it is a prerequisite to the right to vote that all poll taxes be paid?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. I am not sure. I could not answer that. I know the taxes are provided for in the constitutions.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, that is the effect, but I am wondering whether the statutes themselves contain any such provisions?

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. I am sorry but I cannot answer that.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have somebody look into that.

Mr. SCHARRENBERG. As stated, Mr. Chairman, that will be done. That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have none.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. Scharrenberg.

The next witness is Dr. Nixon.

Per capita income by States, 1935, submitted by Senator Connally, of Texas. Congressional Record, p. 11137, Aug. 5, 1939

United States	$432
New York	700
Connecticut	607
California	605
Delaware	590
Rhode Island	561
Nevada	545
Massachusetts	539
Wyoming	526
New Jersey	517
Illinois	500
Montana	482
Pennsylvania	478
Michigan	473
Maryland	473
Wisconsin	467
Ohio	460
New Hampshire	438
Washington	434
Minnesota	416
Maine	414
Colorado	406
Indiana	402
Arizona	401
Oregon	394
Iowa	370
Missouri	366
Vermont	366
Kansas	365
Nebraska	361
Florida	353
Utah	348
Idaho	344
New Mexico	322
West Virginia	318
Texas	316
Virginia	305
Louisiana	300
South Dakota	275
North Dakota	260
Oklahoma	259
North Carolina	253
Georgia	253
Kentucky	240
Tennessee	232
South Carolina	224
Alabama	189
Arkansas	182
Mississippi	170
District of Columbia	966

STATEMENT OF HERMAN C. NIXON, VISITING PROFESSOR OF HISTORY, UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please state your full name for the record?

Dr. NIXON. Herman Clarence Nixon. I am visiting professor of history at the University of Missouri. I am a native of Alabama, with a permanent registration in Piedmont, Ala., in the Fourth Congressional District, where I am a landowner, and have been for some years since my father died.

I have been interested in this question particularly since I checked on the voting of 16 white men who were sharecroppers or share tenants on my father's farm in 1912.

Not over three of those men were voting and possibly one other might have voted but didn't. The others were not able to vote. These were white men. And this was a year before the comparative prosperity period or a comparative prosperity period for farmers, when everyone of these tenants had paid out the preceding year and had a balance. The minimum balance was $25 after he paid out his crop land debt and went home for Christmas. Some of them had $100 or $200. That sounded mighty good for tenants. They had not paid their poll taxes.

As I say, these were white men and there has been some connection between the rise of tenancy among whites and the rise of nonvoting among the nonwhites.

That gave me an interest in the subject and I also lived through, as a boy, the campaign for the present constitution of Alabama, which was put in in 1901 and there was agitation over restricting the vote at that time.

That followed a period of Alabama history which I might go into briefly from the constitutional point of view just to illustrate what we have had.

Alabama came into the Union in 1819 with provisions in its constitution for general adult male white suffrage. There were no general restrictions or exceptions, I believe, except soldiers of the United States Army could not vote.

In the next constitution, 1861, when the South was getting ready for the Confederacy, that provision was repeated. They didn't worry about United States soldiers then but they did have provision for general adult male white suffrage.

In 1865 after, as we say down there, the "surrender"—after the surrender there was a new constitution adopted by and put in by southern whites. It came into effect, I believe, in December 1865.

This constitution practically repeated the language of the preceding constitutions as to the enfranchisement of adult male whites, barring the Negroes from voting.

Sometimes we overlook the point that in the series of mistakes in the Reconstruction Period the South really made the first move by declining to accept the outcome and undertaking to bar all Negroes from voting, which was really contrary to the advice of Lincoln and Johnson and we might say a few southerners like Lamar of Mississippi.

So that, coupled with what we still call black codes applying to Negroes, was a factor in bringing on what we still call the radical rule in the South, which was not completely gotten rid of until Hayes came to the White House.

Alabama had a new constitution, another one in 1868, and that reversed for the first time the suffrage provisions and provided for general suffrage including—I mean for males, particularly, including Negroes but, of course, barring a large group of whites, particularly important whites, as in line with the fourteenth amendment, which put a penalty on Confederate voting. That was the 1868 constitution.

In 1875 Alabama came through again with a home rule constitution, as we say in the South, and that constitution swung around to general manhood suffrage without racial discrimination.

That constitution was in operation then from 1875 to 1901. In the 90's we had spreading over the South pretty wide-sweeping agrarian unrest and a challenge to the conservative or reactionary government in the South, including some criticism of the L. & N. Railroad, which spent thousands and more of money for control of southern legislators and southern officeholders.

There was a populous rising within the Democratic Party in South Carolina succeeding under Tillman within the Democratic Party, in Texas led by Hogg who was elected Governor. First within and then without the Democratic Party in Alabama, really led by Rubin Cobb, who was not technically a Populist but endorsed as a Populist—as a farmer's alliance man. According to very good opinion, including my opinion, which may not be so good, he was elected Governor of Alabama and counted out in 1892.

The other side had control of the government, and there were no provisions for contesting unless the Governor would call a special session of the legislature to investigate the election to prevent the incumbent from succeeding himself. He did not call the legislature into special session and that led to no little agitation.

So Republicans were busy in the Southern States, as Democrats were in Northern States, lining up with this third party. Then the Cobb movement was defeated and when this was over they got busy to restrict the suffrage.

The convention of 1901 was carried on by delegates, the majority of whom were pledged to Negro disfranchisement; and it was stated rather generally in that State at that time that no white men would be disfranchised, and the constitution was ratified under that kind of an understanding.

That was widely preached, particularly in the hills. They put up two hurdles in that constitution. One hurdle was registration examination requirements by which the applicant should own $300 worth of property, as shown by the tax books, or his wife might own it for him, or 40 acres of land.

If he did not own property, then he had to show an educational qualification and also the names of his employers for the past 5 years.

He had to stand an educational test, an employment test, or property test in order to register.

Then there was a second hurdle, namely, the poll tax. The first hurdle was adequate to prevent the Negro from voting. The second hurdle to some extent, comparatively, was kept in the background and the third hurdle does not discriminate between races—it was a dollar and a half in that State, cumulative up to 45 years of age. So if a man, born and registered in the State, goes from 21 to 45 without paying his poll tax he is liable for a dollar and a half for the preceding period from 21 to 45. That was the poll-tax requirement with an exemption, however, for war veterans.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you the language of the statute?

Dr. NIXON. It is in the constitution. I don't have the language of the statute. I have paid the poll tax and I know that the probate judge has the registration lists turned over to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand you to say that that constitutional provision is in the present Constitution of Alabama?

Dr. NIXON. Yes, sir. It has not been changed except for a special exemption for war veterans, and that was made after the World War. That saved me, because I got behind with my poll taxes and did not get back until 1920, being with the Peace Conference. They helped us out by passing an exemption for war veterans' poll taxes.

The polling list is made up by checking the names that appear on two lists—the two lists being the registration and the poll-tax list. The two lists were sent to the probate judge's office. The probate judge makes a list of names that appear on both lists. A fellow has to be on both lists to be on the polling list. If you are not on both lists you are not supposed to vote, and generally they don't vote, because if there is any monkey work it is made up in making up the lists, and there is not much check on making up that list. That is the way it is in that State.

Now, this poll-tax requirement for voting is specified in the constitution in these eight poll-tax States. It is very definitely and very clearly in at least seven of them. In Tennessee it is not quite clear, because they rocked along for some time after the constitution without requiring it and then proceeded to require it and enforce it. Enforcement there, however, has varied. I believe theirs is the constitution of 1875.

Mr. GWYNNE. You mean seven of the eight States have these requirements in their constitutions?

Dr. NIXON. They are definitely in the constitutions and there is language in the other constitution in the other, but since they went 15 years without enforcing it and not being a lawyer, I don't want to speak categorically about it, but they do have the poll-tax requirement for voting in Tennessee and it is being enforced at the present time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we could ask some witness, and ask Mr. Geyer to see that it is done, to put those different constitutional provisions in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. I think we discussed that at the last meeting. It was understood that that would be supplied the committee.

Mr. GEYER. Yes, sir; we will get that in the record. (See appendix 1 at end of hearing.)

Mr. MURDOCK. What about the Georgia Constitution?

Mr. GIBBS. It has been there since it was created.

Dr. NIXON. Yes, sir. Now, the constitution in the poll-tax States, with the exception of Tennessee, came in, roughly, between 1890 and 1910, and statutory enforcement and administrative enforcement came in Tennessee in 1890. One of the Arkansas statutes was held unconstitutional because there was some irregularity in the adoption of the statute—a technical irregularity. That was created, maybe, in 1908.

Two of these States' constitutions were not ratified. That is, the conventions were given power to adopt and, you might say, promulgate constitutions. I don't know of any other State in the Union that has, you might say, an unratified constitution today except Louisiana, which has just escaped the poll-tax column, but is not really completely moved over into the other column. I was 10 years teaching in Louisiana, in New Orleans. In that State a man, instead of paying a poll tax, gets a poll book. He signs it one year and gets a poll certificate and he signs it another year and gets a poll certificate and must have two separate certificates for the two preceding years prior to the time he votes. He also has a registration certificate and he must take these three pieces of paper to the polls, secured at three different times and at two different places. If I had not moved from Louisiana I could not have voted in the last election, because I don't remember where I put one of these certificates.

That is, incidentally, the limitation that the Long regime put through in Louisiana. It abolished a monetary payment but retained all the features of the red tape without minimizing it.

The constitution I am speaking of is the 1921 constitution in Louisiana——

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Nixon, I am interested in a question and I am sure the other members of the subcommittee are. Perhaps you can throw a little light upon it. Do you think that Congress can by a statute nullify the provisions of a State constitution?

Dr. NIXON. I think that Congress has something to say about the election of Congressmen and Federal officers, according to the United States Constitution.

After all, I understand the proposed bill applies only to these Federal officers and Congressmen and Senators, and it seems to me that Congress has some power to provide a certain amount of democracy in the election of these officers and Senators and Congressmen.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, it is understood that the bill we are considering will probably be redrafted and introduced in a different form, but in that bill, in the section that probably will be contained in any measure that is introduced, is this language on page 2, line 11: "At any election." That certainly means a primary election. I am just wondering whether or not we could, even assuming that the Congress had the right under the constitutional authority, make it unlawful to require the payment of poll taxes and extend that to the selection of candidates for national office.

Dr. NIXON. In the primary? Well, I believe you could find Supreme Court decisions both ways on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Dr. NIXON. You have the Newberry case which would work against your having power and you would have one or two of these Texas cases. Incidentally, there is an intelligent Negro over there by the name of Nixon. He got a case through the Supreme Court and he won, I believe once or twice, and finally they kept changing the tactics on him and he had difficulty in getting through, but there is a decision where it seems to me that something might be worked out.

The CHAIRMAN. I have in mind exactly that case and the Newberry case. I have been trying to read the two cases together and frankly I am confused. I would like to have somebody discuss it.

Dr. NIXON. Of course, the later cases are in your favor, if that means anything. The Newberry case is about 15 years old or something like that.

Mr. GWYNNE. Dr. Nixon, I think this whole question of how far the Federal Government can go in these elections some day has to be met and I think it would be a great service if someone during these hearings would go into that subject from a legal standpoint.

Mr. GEYER. We have planned that and we will have witnesses on that.

Mr. GWYNNE. I will be very interested in hearing that.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there is confusion in the courts because of these two lines of decisions, and, just as Mr. GWYNNE has said, sooner or later the courts are going to be called upon to flatly decide the question.

Dr. NIXON. It started off in the beginning with Congressmen being picked by the States in any manner they wanted to and if they got any pay the States paid them. Then they moved over to a Federal system with a certain amount of Federal control, and, of course, the Congress certainly exercised a certain control over Southern States after 1865, not only on the theory of rebellion but on the theory, as I understand, of not having republican governments among the Southern States.

I might point out, and then I am through, that this expansion of suffrage in the United States, to a great extent, got its first impetus in the South, through Thomas Jefferson and his followers and his original party.

It is based on, as I see it, an acceptance of belief in the goodness of the common man, and we might include colored men. The majority of people are inherently good and the majority of people are competent to take education and participate in government. That was given a coonskin democratic meaning under Jackson, another President hailing from the South.

I think you will find from Jefferson to Jackson a development of democratic suffrage in the United States with a removal of economic limitations on suffrage, and we had by the time of the Jackson administration the emergence of the common man into the place of political power. I am not counting the colored man; and with the emancipation the South began to toy with the idea of limiting the vote, first to limit Negro voting, and they wound up by limiting white voting, illustrating the old saying of Booker T. Washington that you cannot keep a man down in the ditch without staying down with him.

We prevented Negroes from voting, and when we got through we found we were preventing the poor whites from voting, too. In most of the Southern States, except Mississippi and South Carolina, anyway, there are more whites of voting age unable to vote than there are Negroes, and the poll tax is a large item in that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the poll tax in those States?

Dr. NIXON. It varies from $1 to $2 per annum. As I say, it is cumulative in Alabama and some other States. Two years must be paid before you can vote, and then some of them have penalties. I believe in one of the States it is doubled if you don't pay by a certain date. Anyway, it is a minimum of $1 if paid on time and in advance—you might say in time to vote—and some of them are cumulative and some of them limited cumulation and some of them penalties. A financial field chairman of the W. P. A. told me that in 11 Southern States we had 1,500,000 families in 1938 with incomes of $200 or less, including what was produced at home, as well as cash income. It is pretty hard for a family like that to vote.

Now, going back to my 16 white men. Of the 15, there were 12 who could not vote. Of the 16, there were 3 voters. There was 1 who might have been limited by residence, so we will count him as the fourth one. There were 4 voters out of the 15 families—between 20 and 25 percent. Of course, not all of them were of age. That was prior to women's suffrage, but that is a pretty small vote for that group of men.

Mr. GWYNNE. In the States that have poll-tax requirements do they also have educational requirements for voting?

Dr. NIXON. Yes, sir. It is generally educational or property requirements. Tennessee does not, I believe. Tennessee has no registration of property except residence, but there is a poll-tax requirement in Tennessee. I believe all these other States have some kind of educational requirement.

Mr. GWYNNE. If the poll-tax requirement is removed, would the educational requirement continue to restrict voting a great deal?

Dr. NIXON. It would. You would still have an educational requirement in Alabama and Tennessee, you would have it in Virginia, and you would have it in other States.

There were three Negroes in my community voting after the Alabama constitution of 1901 because they were landowners and they always voted, but no other Negroes in that precinct did vote, and somehow or another they paid their poll taxes, at least until they got to be 45. It is not required after you are 45, provided you have them paid up when you are 45. That is the way it works there. It all means a decline of civic interest in these rural communities. The political forums in the country stores disappeared because so few people were concerned with voting. They found other subjects to talk about.

I grew up in a country store behind a counter in this little possum-trot community where I got my real human evidence. That is all I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Nixon, you have testified as to the percentage of people who vote in the States where poll taxes are required. I wonder if you could throw any light on the question of what percentage would vote if that requisite were removed but the requisite as to education still remained.

Dr. NIXON. Well, we have three States which have removed it in the last 20 years, and there is an increase in the voting. North Carolina has no poll-tax requirement and neither has Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. North Carolina has no poll-tax requirement, but an educational requirement?

Dr. NIXON. That is it; but when they removed the poll tax they got an increased vote and they got a vote that is way ahead of South Carolina and Virginia. The vote moved up with the removal of the poll-tax requirement. The vote in Louisiana moved up, and the big vote in the last election can be partly explained by that. And the vote moved up in Florida. So at least we have that collateral evidence that the votes in these States run ahead of the votes in the neighboring States.

You have a direct comparison. There is a poll tax here and no poll tax over here. Of course, in Louisiana we were very much concerned at times about qualifying to vote—whether we voted or not. Sometimes we figured that the vote wasn't worth anything and that some of us were going to lose our votes anyway, as the saying goes, but we wanted to have a vote for civic purposes.

There is a connection between civil rights and the vote.

Incidentally, the same group that worked for expansion of the suffrage among the founding fathers also worked for the Bill of Rights amendment to the Constitution of the United States. There is a connection between those two points historically and constitutionally, you might say, and there is a connection between the vote and the protection of civil rights in all communities, including our own South. I am through.

The CHAIRMAN. Any questions? Thank you very much, Dr. Nixon.

Mr. GEYER. Mr. Chairman, I might state that Senator THOMAS will be here at one of our hearings to discuss the constitutionality of this thing—Senator THOMAS of Utah, so I think we will have a good discussion on that. Mr. Nixon has a few more words he would like to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, Dr. Nixon.

Dr. NIXON. I have a little statement that I picked out of Constitutional Congress of 1901. May I read it?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Dr. NIXON. This is by one of the delegates to the convention. He says:

"There will be, Mr. President, when the battle comes between the Anglo-Saxons and Africans, things said here that we do not want to go before the court of the United States. We will say things down here in our own southern way and in the great old Commonwealth of Alabama that we do not read and criticize day after day."

Now, that is Judge Tom Heflin, a member of the convention, supporting a motion not to keep stenographic notes of the convention. The motion was defeated.

Mr. GEYER. Our next witness is Mr. Collins, if you will call him.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Henry Collins.

Mr. GIBBS. May I ask where you reside?

Mr. COLLINS. Byrn Mawr, Pa.

Acceptance Speech of Hon. Henry A. Wallace

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. HENRY A. WALLACE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD the text of the speech recently delivered by Hon. Henry A. Wallace accepting the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congressman JONES, Chairman Valentine, ladies, and gentlemen, you are officially conferring on me tonight the greatest honor of my life. The office of Vice President under the Constitution serves in a unique way as a link between the executive and legislative branches of our Government.

And it is an unusually great honor to be the running mate of the one man who, more than any other, represents security for democracy in the modern world.

For nearly 8 years President Roosevelt has battled for democracy and freedom, for their preservation at home and abroad.

Both Germany and the United States were shaken to the depths by the crisis of 1932. Germany met that crisis with dictatorship and Hitler. The United States met it with democracy and Roosevelt.

Hitler believed in government by a band of Nazi overlords, with Hitler himself as the dictator at the top. Roosevelt believed in government by the people and for the people.

Hitler believed in reducing the status of working men and women to that of serfs. Roosevelt believed in putting the common man first—improving his wages and working conditions and upholding in law the right of collective bargaining.

Hitler believed in dominating both individuals and nations by force. Roosevelt believed in the good-neighbor policy, among individuals and among nations.

Hitler believed in war through preparedness, that preparedness was meant for war. Roosevelt believed in peace through preparedness, that preparedness was meant for peace.

Hitler believed in barter deals, so as to fight his economic war preliminary to military war. Roosevelt believed in freer world trade and a higher standard of living for all nations.

Hitler believed that all freedom must be crushed. Roosevelt believed in freedom of speech, press, and religion—those safeguards of free men which we in America hold dearer than life itself.

HITLER AS ENEMY OF DEMOCRACY

Adolf Hitler was the implacable enemy of all democracy. Franklin Roosevelt was its eager servant and faithful defender before the whole world.

Tens of millions of Americans shared the Roosevelt belief in 1933. But not one in a million saw so early and so clearly as he the world-shaking significance of the Hitler doctrine.

Only Roosevelt had the unusual combination of many months spent as a boy in European countries, a comprehensive knowledge of history, experience as Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the first World War, access to the day-by-day information brought in by the trained observers in the State Department, and wisdom to relate that information to its significance for America.

Thus it was that Roosevelt, earlier than almost anyone else, saw that the dominating world issue was freedom and a higher standard of living versus slavery and a lower standard of living for all except the Nazi governing class. Week after week and year after year I have sat in Cabinet meetings and heard the complete accord between the President and Secretary Hull on this issue at a time when most Americans were not aware of the terrible storm cloud on the horizon.

Time after time the President voiced the broadest possible warnings to the public in an effort to stir our people from their slumber. For these efforts he was charged with being a warmonger. But the President kept on telling the truth as he saw it and events have proved both the sincerity of his warnings and the accuracy of his judgment.

Roosevelt has striven with greater vigor than any other President to build international good will, international trade, and a higher standard of living. In these efforts Adolf Hitler was stumbling block No. 1.

Roosevelt's task was rendered difficult enough by the opposition of Hitler abroad, but his handicaps were multiplied by a continuous and bitter partisan opposition at home.

The dominant leadership of this Republican opposition has never understood, and has apparently been unwilling to find out, what the rise of Hitler meant to farmers, workers, and businessmen in the United States.

This blind leadership believed that the United States could be prosperous, no matter what happened to Europe, no matter what happened to Asia, no matter what might be our relationship with Latin America. When Roosevelt tried to adjust the internal affairs of the United States to a sick world they fought him at home as Hitler fought him abroad.

Some of the bitter attacks on Roosevelt's program were directly inspired by agents of Hitler in this country. Others were merely blindly partisan. But, whatever the motive, the effect was the same—these attacks on Roosevelt and his program played into the hands of Hitler. Every evidence of opposition to Roosevelt within the United States has been reason for rejoicing in Berlin.

For more than 7 years Roosevelt has been working steadily to help the American people build an up-to-date democracy capable of bringing security to the families of this Nation. Farm income and factory pay rolls, the two strong legs of recovery, have both been more than doubled. Business profits have been restored and increased.

The danger to democracy from within, which threatened us in 1932, has been safely met. The Roosevelt remedy was not a resort to dictatorship, which so many conservatives were demanding in 1933, but simply more democracy. The Roosevelt programs gave more power to the people.

DEFENSE EFFORT IS SURVEYED

Now we have launched on a great national effort to build up our defenses against the threat from abroad. Under the leadership of Roosevelt this effort was begun several years ago. We now have nearly twice as many airplanes as in 1933 and double the tonnage of fighting ships afloat or under construction. We have more than doubled our Army. This is a splendid start, but it is only a start. It will be pushed until America is fully prepared to defend herself against any emergency.

Like the measures of economic adjustments, defense preparation also met with short-sighted obstructionist tactics. Why build so many airplanes? Why build another set of locks at the Panama Canal? Why spend Government money to store up strategic war materials? Why create a Tennessee Valley Authority to harness the power and water and soil resources of a great Nation against a day of military need?

To some extent those interests obstructing the national defense did have their way. They caused appropriations to be whittled down and brought needless delays. The T. V. A. was fought in Congress, in the courts and in the press. Even a few weeks ago this opposition was still trying to block the building of one more T. V. A. dam, the power which is needed to produce aluminum that is indispensable in our airplanes.

Fortunately that particular opposition has been overcome. But of the 93 votes cast against this measure in the House on July 30 every one was a Republican vote. Such resistance to our military progress was encouraging Hitler, but it was definitely injurious to our own welfare.

Now, at last, some of the Republicans are beginning to see that the Nation really is in danger. National defense is going ahead, and the whole country can give thanks that the program is in such wise and experienced hands.

The total defense of modern war requires thousands of officers and men skilled in the mechanics of the gas engine, the airplane and the tank. We must not only construct a giant air force but know how to operate and service it. We must protect the Panama Canal. We must enforce the Monroe Doctrine with an increased Navy, with air bases and through cooperation with Canada and the rest of the Americas. By preparing completely now, we shall have the best chance of keeping out of war.

But we must face the fact that the dictators have definite designs against this hemisphere. Their tactics here as in Europe are to divide and conquer. They hope by propaganda and bartering agreements to set one nation against another. They hope to set each class against another class. They inspire a multitude of angry voices in every democratic nation. Out of the confusion which they have created they hope to build political power and eventually military power.

The fact that our Presidential campaign and election come now is most welcome to the dictators. They hope to get rid of the unyielding Roosevelt. They know that a political campaign is distracting to our people. And they know that in the many months that would elapse before a new Administration could act effectively they might have their chance.

I do not wish to imply that the Republican leaders are willfully or consciously giving aid and comfort to Hitler. But I do want to emphasize that replacement of Roosevelt, even if it were by the most patriotic leadership that could be found, would cause Hitler to rejoice. I do not believe the American people will turn their backs on the man that Hitler wants to see defeated.

ROOSEVELT IS CALLED SYMBOL

In the opinion of the world—in the eyes of the Nazis and the stricken nations under their heel—Roosevelt has become the symbol of democracy. And more important, he is the symbol of democracy to all the nations of this hemisphere. He has proved his friendship for them by more than 7 years of fair dealing as a good neighbor. Hitler must not be permitted to break the solidarity of the Americas.

If the Americas present to the Axis powers the same divided front as the democracies of Europe presented to them we shall assuredly walk the same path of destruction and lost freedom. In the United States as well as in the other Americas we find certain men who for purposes of their own profit want England to give up her fight against Hitler and who are strong for economic appeasement between the Americas and a German-controlled Europe.

In that direction lies slavery, even though it is sugar-coated with promises of prosperity. Those who stand for business appeasement with Germany are the backbone, even though unwittingly, of the most dangerous of all "fifth columns." For the sake of profit in 1941, they would sell out their own future and their children's freedom.

The businessmen of western Europe followed this path to their sorrow. If we of the Americas are not made of sterner stuff, we shall go down as they have gone down. Our weapons are unity for total defense and a determination not to engage in economic appeasement.

Here in this country we are developing preparedness on all fronts.

On the agricultural front, we have stored in the ever-normal granary tremendous reserve supplies, while at the same time by commodity loans we have protected farm prices and the purchasing power of farmers for city products. We have increased our soil fertility. In every county and every township, there are farmer committees which are prepared to meet any defense need involving agriculture.

REPUBLICANS' VOTE CITED

The farm program has been such a success that Republican leaders are now commending it in the hopes of getting farm votes next November. But the real attitude of the Republicans, which for many years has been against farmers' interests, has been revealed anew by two things which have happened in the last few weeks, since the Republicans adopted their platform and nominated their candidate.

One is a selection of a Republican campaign manager who in 15 years in Congress has never voted for one vital and constructive farm law. The other is the vote in Congress 4 weeks ago on funds for commodity loans—the loans on corn, on wheat, on cotton, which bring about the storage of reserve supplies and protect farmers' prices and income.

Democrats voted 100 percent for these loans. Republicans, led by the personally selected Republican campaign manager, voted 106 to 38 against them. Mind you, this attempt to deal a mortal blow to the farm program was made only 5 weeks after the Republican Party in convention had solemnly pledged itself to help the farmer, including in such help commodity loans.

And it was made only 4 days before the farmers were given assurances by the Republican standard bearer right here in Des Moines that their program would not be harmed. The Republican leaders say nice things about the farm program to get votes from the farmer. But when it comes to voting for the farmer they just don't deliver the goods.

There are now enough Democrats in Congress to protect the farmers against attempts like this to hamstring their program. Those Democrats will be needed again and again after the November election.

HUMAN VALUES ARE STRESSED

On the social-security preparedness front, the administration has started the job of taking care of our aged and unemployed. Continually we have put human values first. We believe that no one who is willing to work should be allowed to starve. We have improved the health of millions by means of food-stamp and school-lunch programs.

We have stood at all times for national unity. To aid in our national defense we have called in the best men regardless of party. In terms of action, the National Defense Commission represents splendid cooperation between agriculture, labor, industry, and government.

We are obtaining national unity on the "fifth column" front by enlisting in a common-sense way the cooperation of local and State authorities. We are determined to break up the gigantic international conspiracy through which the Nazis are trying to subjugate our country.

A materialistic religion of darkness, based on force and lies and led by prophets of evil, is striding across the world. This war is more than a clash of rival imperialisms. It is a war to destroy freedom and democracy.

It is a war to prevent the people of North and South America from developing their resources without paying tribute to Europe and without being the victims of European secret police serving a self-appointed master race. There is no denying the strength and the fanatical zeal of this satanic doctrine.

It transcends economics and politics to invade the personal life. It proclaims might as the supreme god and the new Nazi master race as the mightiest of all, with a special destiny to direct and exploit and enslave every people in the world.

Against this dark and bloody faith we of the New World set the faith of Americanism, of Protestantism, of Catholicism, of Judaism. Our faith is based on belief that the possibilities in an individual are not determined by race, social background, or wealth.

We believe in the maximum freedom which can be obtained without anarchy or intolerance. Democracy is the very heart of the religions which have the largest following in the United States. Democracy and Americanism are identical.

Both are utterly opposed to totalitarianism, with its exaltation of might, its suppression of freedom, and its claims to racial supremacy.

PUTS FAITH IN DEMOCRATIC PARTY

I am happy to respond to the notification ceremonies this evening with an acceptance, because I believe the Democratic Party under the leadership of President Roosevelt is far better equipped than the opposition to preserve the freedom of the Americas. He has understood the Hitler menace from the start.

Powerful elements in our opposition will, if the Republicans come into power, force us to make one economic concession after another to the totalitarian countries. These appeasers will have their way if the Republicans win, because they will have contributed so largely, both politically and financially, to the Republican cause.

These people believe the Republicans in power would give them profitable business with a German-controlled Europe at the earliest possible moment. Most Republicans may not yet realize it, but their party is the party of appeasement in the United States today. It is the party which the totalitarian powers will back in every way possible. Of all the men in the United States, Roosevelt best knows the danger of making economic concessions to the dictators.

Between now and November I propose to do everything I can to arouse the American people to the need for peace through preparedness, to the importance of the solidarity of the Americas, and to the duty of businessmen, workers, and farmers to cooperate together for full employment and for the national defense.

For I sincerely believe that the Democratic Party under Roosevelt will best give us a higher standard of living, unity within our country, safety from external aggression, and freedom on this hemisphere for ourselves and our children.

United States Export Trade During European War Period

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FRANK CARLSON
OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to include the following remarks and tables on the United States export trade during the European war period.

Hitler and the European war have prevented the further bogging down of the Roosevelt-Hull reciprocal-trade program as it affects our export trade. In comparing our export trade for the first 9 months of the European war, September 1939 to May 1940, with the corresponding months of 1938 and 1939, it will be seen that the trend of our export trade in the 1939 period was downward from exports of the 1938 period in all groups of exports. Then, in the war period of 1940, exports were somewhat stimulated in some groups due to war demands.

Wheat and other crude foodstuffs are the only export group not benefiting from the European war. (See table 3.)

Table 3 shows conclusively the serious loss of foreign markets by the farmers of the United States. You will note that in 1938 crude foodstuffs exported totaled $190,409,000, and this has been reduced to $65,230,000 for the same period in 1940. This table shows about a 66-percent reduction in exports of farm products from 1938 to 1940. Agriculture has already suffered a severe dislocation and inequality because of the present European war. The purchasing power of the farmer's dollar at the present time is 78 cents, using the 1910–14 period as a hundred. In my opinion, we will not have economic prosperity in the United States until agriculture is placed on a parity with labor and industry.

UNITED STATES EXPORTS OF RAW MATERIALS, FOODSTUFFS, AND MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS DURING THE FIRST 9 MONTHS OF EUROPEAN WAR, SEPTEMBER 1939 TO MAY 1940, BY WORLD TRADE AREAS

TABLE 1.—Total domestic exports of United States

[Source: U. S. Department of Commerce figures]

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total exports of United States	$2,590,636,000	$2,197,625,000	$2,928,674,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	224,652,000	201,575,000	257,938,000
South America	257,992,000	210,476,000	332,839,000
Total, Latin America	482,644,000	412,051,000	590,777,000
Canada, etc.[1]	364,942,000	300,351,000	442,052,000
Europe	1,151,911,000	939,676,000	1,238,915,000
Asia	410,075,000	395,973,000	484,568,000
Oceania	75,898,000	61,804,000	72,547,000
Africa	105,166,000	87,770,000	99,815,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

TABLE 2.—Exports of crude materials (cotton, tobacco, crude petroleum, coal, phosphate rock, undressed furs, etc.)

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total crude materials	$372,377,000	$400,369,000	$539,205,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	6,702,000	4,625,000	7,239,000
South America	5,513,000	5,799,000	11,660,000
Total, Latin America	12,215,000	10,424,000	18,899,000
Canada, etc.[1]	84,687,000	72,785,000	106,922,000
Europe	382,616,000	242,070,000	300,244,000
Asia	84,248,000	74,400,000	103,918,000
Oceania	6,568,000	7,389,000	8,858,000
Africa	2,043,000	2,301,000	2,364,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

TABLE 3.—Exports of crude foodstuffs (wheat, corn, and other grains, apples, oranges, and other fresh fruits, potatoes and other fresh vegetables, etc.)

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total crude foodstuffs	$190,409,000	$111,034,000	$65,230,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	8,188,000	6,904,000	5,969,000
South America	3,948,000	1,663,000	2,058,000
Total, Latin America	12,136,000	8,567,000	8,027,000
Canada, etc.[1]	45,936,000	21,957,000	19,892,000
Europe	129,050,000	74,990,000	34,227,000
Asia	2,326,000	4,598,000	2,392,000
Oceania	309,000	274,000	206,000
Africa	652,000	648,000	486,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

TABLE 4.—Exports of manufactured foodstuffs (wheat flour, meats—Hams, bacon, pork, and canned meats—Lard, edible oils and fats, canned vegetables, fruits and fish, butter, cheese, sugar, oil cake and meal, etc.)

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total manufactured foodstuffs	$144,113,000	$147,886,000	$170,124,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	27,642,000	24,972,000	28,905,000
South America	7,479,000	8,737,000	12,020,000
Total, Latin America	35,121,000	33,709,000	40,925,000
Canada, etc.[1]	8,172,000	8,236,000	13,932,000
Europe	84,211,000	87,220,000	94,939,000
Asia	11,604,000	14,305,000	15,554,000
Oceania	1,742,000	1,914,000	1,963,000
Africa	3,263,000	2,502,000	2,811,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

TABLE 5.—Exports of semimanufactures (lumber and sawed timber, wood pulp, cotton yarn, naval stores, leather, gas and fuel oil, crude sulfur, scrap iron, ferro-alloys, aluminum, copper and brass, coal-tar and chemical products, pigments, etc.)

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total semimanufactures	$445,411,000	$380,380,000	$624,343,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	38,161,000	31,686,000	45,419,000
South America	32,969,000	25,960,000	74,585,000
Total, Latin America	71,130,000	57,646,000	120,004,000
Canada, etc.[1]	45,052,000	37,437,000	72,605,000
Europe	199,433,000	169,173,000	275,049,000
Asia	106,746,000	99,211,000	129,181,000
Oceania	10,029,000	7,788,000	11,104,000
Africa	13,021,000	9,125,000	16,400,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

TABLE 6.—Exports of finished manufactures (machinery, iron and steel-mill products, aircraft, motortrucks and passenger cars, explosives, firearms and ammunition, lubricating oil and gasoline, cotton and rayon goods, leather, rubber, glass, and paper products, etc.)

Exported to—	9 months ending May 31—
	1938 (pre-war)	1939 (pre-war)	1940 (war period)
Total finished manufactures	$1,238,326,000	$1,148,956,000	$1,529,772,000
Latin America:
Mexico, Central America, Cuba, and West Indies	143,959,000	133,388,000	170,406,000
South America	208,083,000	168,317,000	232,516,000
Total, Latin America	352,042,000	301,705,000	402,922,000
Canada, etc.[1]	181,095,000	159,936,000	228,701,000
Europe	356,601,000	366,223,000	534,456,000
Asia	205,151,000	203,459,000	233,523,000
Oceania	57,250,000	44,439,000	52,416,000
Africa	86,187,000	73,194,000	77,754,000

[1] Includes Newfoundland, Labrador, Miquelon, and Greenland.

My Record in Congress

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the problems of the Fourth Congressional District of Louisiana are many and varied. Much study is necessary before one can be fully informed as to the nature and needs of all of the industries of the great section of northwest Louisiana, comprising this congressional district. For instance there is the agricultural industry, lumber industry, pulpwood industry, oil industry, gas industry, and innumerable other industries which require consideration in the handling of their affairs in Washington.

Flood control: I early sensed the necessity of aggressive action in reference to curbing the floods which almost yearly come down the Red River Valley, inundating our lands, destroying our crops, and injuring our people. During the time I have been in Congress I have worked aggressively to aid in bringing about the construction of the Dennison Dam, carrying with it an authorized appropriation of $54,000,000. During this same time I have worked to obtain the building of the Wallace Lake Dam and reservoir in Caddo and De Soto Parishes, at a cost of $812,000. Today I have assurances that actual construction of this dam will begin within 60 days and will be prosecuted to completion. As to the Bodcau Dam and Reservoir, I have appeared in Congress twice to obtain amendments to the law making the construction of the dam possible, and each time I have had to ask that the appropriations authorized for this purpose be increased—until now it is expected to cost three and one-half million dollars. Work has been delayed on this project because of the high flood waters this year, which prevented the beginning of actual work; but this work also will begin at an early date.

During the time of my service in Congress, I have obtained more than $100,000 for cleaning out and developing Bayou Pierre which runs from Broadmoor subdivision in Shreveport, La., south through De Soto and Red River Parishes into Natchitoches Parish. I have worked, and am continuing to work, to obtain the building of a levee along Red River in Red River Parish between Coushatta Bayou and Loggy Bayou, and for a dam on Black Bayou.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Farming is still the largest single industry in northwest Louisiana. For years my friends on the farms have lived without the opportunities that the city dwellers have. Within recent years good roads have been built throughout the countryside so that the farmers can bring to the market the products of the farm. Electricity, which is a God-given right of every man, has not kept pace with the progress of the building of roads. Hundreds of thousands of farms in Louisiana are not yet equipped with electricity and are without the aid of what is now a simple necessity of life. As a result of my work in Congress, almost half a million dollars has been allotted by the Rural Electrification Administration to the Fourth Congressional District of Louisiana. The valley membership corporation project from Grant Parish has been granted extensions through Red River and De Soto Parishes. The Panola County (Tex.) R. E. A. project, at my insistence, was brought into De Soto Parish and has been made to serve hundreds of farm people in this area. I have obtained funds for the beginning of the Bossier-Webster-Bienville project. Only a few days ago I obtained an allotment of $147,000 for extensions to the Claiborne project. I will continue to work until funds are available to build the lines necessary to place low-price electricity at the doorstep of every farmhouse which desires and wants a means of lighting the home at night and of furnishing power to operate the machinery of the farm during the day and all of the conveniences of a modern country home.

WORK FOR AGRICULTURE

The plight of the cotton farmers in the United States has been pitiful. It has been growing worse year by year. As I have lived on the farms in Louisiana and know the problems of the Louisiana farmer, I immediately went to work 4 years ago on behalf of our farming population. I have supported every appropriation for parity payments, soil-conservation payments, all appropriations for the purpose of controlling the boll weevil and other insects, and for the purpose of building up our farms and relieving suffering among our farmers. I have received letters from the Soil Conservation Service thanking me for speeches I have made on the floor of the House of Representatives, and for the active work which I have given to the cause of the Soil Conservation Service, which, in my opinion, gives to our farmers invaluable assistance in restoring the soil, preventing wash and soil erosion, and putting into effect soil-conserving practices.

Since I have been Congressman more money has been appropriated for the farmers of the United States, and more money has been received by the cotton farmers of Louisiana than at any other time during the history of the United States from the Federal Government. The appropriation has gone as high as $1,250,000,000 per year for farm purposes, and I have voted for every dollar of this amount.

Oat loans: One of the things which I have accomplished and in which I take pride was the cancelation of the oat loans. In 1934 these loans were made to our farmers as relief loans. They were never intended to be collected, but year by year the Department of Agriculture constantly reminded our farmers of the fact that these loans were still owing and unpaid. Several thousand farmers in the Fourth Congressional District owed from $10 up to several hundred dollars, and could not pay these loans. In the State of Louisiana alone the sum of $980,000 was owed by our farmers under this oat relief loan. As a result of my efforts, these loans were canceled off the books of the Department of Agriculture, and notes returned to the farmers without charge. This saved our hard-pressed farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Purchase of surplus commodities: When the farm commodities in north Louisiana ripened in the field and no purchasers were obtainable, I have gone to work to help our farmers. Twice during my tenure of office I have caused the Federal Surplus Marketing Corporation to purchase large quantities of tomatoes from all parts of the Fourth Congressional District, especially in the areas around Keithville and Logansport. I have also obtained the purchase of other farm commodities and have obtained widespread distribution of foods to hundreds of needy people in our midst.

W. P. A. and P. W. A. activities: I have placed my influence behind applications for W. P. A. and P. W. A. projects in every section of the Fourth Congressional District. As a result of my efforts, millions of dollars have been brought into the Fourth Congressional District, and countless numbers of projects have been approved and construction has begun, thereby giving relief work to thousands of our needy people. In almost every community either new school buildings have been constructed or old ones have been repaired with funds coming from these projects. Roads have been built, parks created and beautified, sewing projects established, and countless thousands of other projects have been placed in the Fourth Congressional District.

National defense: As a member of the Military Affairs Committee, the burden of the national-defense program has fallen upon the members of this committee. Every bit of legislation having for its purpose the expansion of the Army, to insure our national safety, has had the approval of this powerful committee. I can honestly tell the people of the Fourth Congressional District that I have had my full part in the writing of the national-defense program.

It is this committee on Military Affairs that has recently reported out the National Guard bill, which permits the President to call into active service for training purposes the entire National Guard of 342,000 men. This committee has before it now for consideration the bill to provide for selective military service as a further means of giving the Nation adequate protection against our enemies. If the Army now is beginning to have more airplanes, tanks, guns, motorized equipment, ammunition, searchlights, range finders, and all kinds of mechanism and equipment necessary for a highly trained modern protective force, it is due to the constant efforts of the members of the Military Affairs Committee who have not forsaken their post of duty in an emergency.

Barksdale Field: I have considered Barksdale Field as a Federal institution belonging to the entire Fourth Congressional District. Since I took office 4 years ago, the sum of $2,000,000 has been spent upon further expansion of the facilities of Barksdale. The War Department tells me today that within the near future the facilities of this great Army air post will be expanded fully 33 percent more in making it one of the prime keys in the air-defense system of America. We who live in northwest Louisiana take pride in the knowledge that we have in our midst such an important cog in the national-defense system, and I pledge my further efforts to the continued growth and expansion of this Army post.

For months I nurtured through the Military Affairs Committee the thought that the Fourth Congressional District of Louisiana should have an antiaircraft National Guard unit. This unit is now a reality, and it is a matter of pride to our people.

Army maneuvers: I have had my part in interesting the War Department in Army maneuvers in central Louisiana. The greatest Army peacetime maneuvers were held in April and May out of Camp Beauregard, near Alexandria, La. Almost equal in importance are the National Guard maneuvers, which are still continuing in central Louisiana at the present time. Louisiana has had its part in national-defense preparation.

Americanism: I have always believed that we in the United States have the finest land under the shining sun. An alien who comes to our shores should love and revere our institutions. A foreigner who comes to live among us, not intending to respect our laws, should immediately be returned to the land of his birth and be made to live in the land from which he came. With this in mind, I have always supported the Dies Americanism committee and have voted for every bit of legislation which will place a penalty upon disloyalty and a badge of honor upon patriotism. I have been instrumental in having many of my ideas written into laws of the United States, and these laws now serve as a means of protection to the God-fearing, law-abiding people of America, who love her traditions and glory in her institutions.

Conclusion: In this short summary I have omitted many of the important matters which I have handled for our people. It has always been my pleasure to hear from every constituent within the Fourth Congressional District and to handle any matter of Federal Government business which may be brought to my attention. I believe that your Congressman is your servant and that his office should be made to serve.

Just an English Lecturer

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Wednesday, August 28 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY HON. RUSH D. HOLT, OF WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by me entitled "Just an English Lecturer."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUST AN ENGLISH LECTURER

When Senator WHEELER told the story of Sir George Paish advising him that he was in our country to get the United States into the war, some of the critics stated that the English economist was here only as an English lecturer.

This is not the first experience that our country has had with English lecturers. One of the most tragic experiences we had with them was in 1915, 1916, and 1917, when the drive was being made to get America in the last World War.

When Sidney Rogerson wrote his now famous book on propaganda for Great Britain sometime ago, he told us that the Englishmen would be over here "just to lecture." The words of Sidney Rogerson are:

"We shall, as before, send over our leading literary lights and other men with names well known in the United States to put our point of view over the dinner table."

The procession has not only been large but regular since the beginning of the war. The New York Times of October 13, 1939, notes the arrival of one of the more famous ones. It says: "One passenger was Lord Marley, deputy speaker of the British House of Lords, who is here to fulfill a lecture engagement arranged several months ago."

Ten days later, another famous Englishman arrived. The Times notes that: "Duff Cooper sees revolt ending war—ex-Lord British Admiralty here, predicts conservative insurrection in Reich—holds monarchy likely—Otto von Hapsburg may rule, he says upon arrival on the Manhattan to lecture." It states that he will go to the west coast to begin his lecture on the subjects The Survival of Liberty and The World We Live In.

But that ship did not bring Lord Duff Cooper, now director of the English propaganda, but the article says:

"S. K. Ratcliffe, British writer and lecturer, another passenger, said that fear of public opinion was dominating the strategy of the commands.

"Besides Mr. Duff Cooper and Mrs. Ratcliffe, there were four other visiting British lecturers aboard the Manhattan. The others were Cecil Roberts, former war correspondent and novelist; I. O. Richards, lecturer at Cambridge University; R. Ellis Roberts, journalist and author; and Miss Phyllis Bottome, novelist."

MY WAR WORK

It will be recalled that about this time Mr. Cooper's book, The Second World War, appeared on the scene. His wife advised reporters that her trip to accompany Mr. Cooper was "my war work." This was similar to the statement of the English actors who replied to a challenge of why they were not in England fighting with the words that they were of more value to England in the United States than they were fighting, and, furthermore, that Lord Lothian himself had advised their staying to be soldiers over the footlights.

Herbert Elvin, vice president of the British Trades Union Congress, was also a visitor to get the viewpoint over to the labor leaders. It will be recalled that similar representatives had come over for the same purpose before the previous World War.

Lord Marley came soon thereafter, as did many others. They were carrying out the work of Sir Gilbert Parker, who had been here 25 years before. Sir Gilbert said that these lecturers were not particularly in America "to make speeches or give lectures, but to meet people, particularly those connected with the universities, and explain the British case." It is interesting to note that one of the well-known English propagandists was using Harvard University as his post-office address to carry on his activities, but the officials of that university were willing and cooperative in the cause of getting America to agree with the British view.

The list of English lecturers and propagandists runs into the dozens. One of their best forums is the Pilgrims Club, where they can get the contacts with the financial circles and with the powerful eastern press.

The exposure of Sir George Paish has caused quite a stir in the English Embassy here. It was embarrassing that he got caught or that he was so indiscreet as to say those things to the wrong person.

LORD LOTHIAN ADVISED THEM NOT TO GET CAUGHT

Lord Lothian had been doing his best to keep the English propaganda activity under cover. He had written in the London Observer sometime before these words:

"If America became persuaded that the United States was being maneuvered into commitment to war by foreign intrigue or for reasons of politics and finance, it might swing back violently to the ultra isolationism of the Ludlow amendment."

Sir George had worked hard for the English cause. He wanted us to participate in the war, but he got caught doing it.

However, he will be safe from much publicity on his work, quite different than if he had been doing the work for another country. He will not be checked by the reporters of certain eastern newspapers. He will go back to England as a man who talked too much to the wrong person. Both the English Embassy officials and many of our high Government officials hope the matter will soon be forgotten and that in Sir George's place will be sent another English lecturer who will not get caught.

Army Construction Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN TABER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

STATEMENT FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement issued by the War Department on August 24, 1940:

ADDITIONAL CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS FOR ARMY SHELTERS

The War Department announced today that construction of cantonments in cold-weather climates and the establishment of tent camps in warm climates are being initiated in order to provide additional shelter for troops of the Regular Army and the National Guard under the present expansion program.

Due to lack of funds only a start on these camps can be made, and the full construction program to make them habitable must wait further appropriations which cannot be requested until full authority for calling the National Guard and legislation for selective service has been enacted.

In all cases existing facilities are to be utilized to their maximum capacity. Construction at the following listed locations is contemplated for units as indicated:

Location	Units to be provided for	Approximate strength	Type of construction
Fort Clark, Tex.	1 square division	18,300	Utilities and hospital facilities for tent camp.
	Miscellaneous troops	537
Fort McClellan, Ala.	1 square division	18,300	Do.
Do	1 observation squadron	163
Camp Jackson, S. C.	1 square division	18,000	Do.
Do	1 antitank battalion	547
Do	1 Field Artillery regiment	1,245
Do	Miscellaneous units	1,450
Fort Sill, Okla.	1 square division	18,000	Do.
Do	1 observation squadron	163
Do	1 Field Artillery regiment	1,448
Do	Three Hundred and Forty-ninth Field Artillery.	1,194
Do	Increase to present organization.	65
Massachusetts Military Reservation, Falmouth, Mass.	3 regiments	5,625	Cantonment, with necessary utilities and hospital facilities.
Do	Coast Artillery (antiaircraft).
	Later:
Do	1 square division	18,300
Do	1 battalion Infantry	700
Total		24,625
Harbor defense of Boston, Mass.	1 harbor defense regiment	2,319	Do.
Harbor defense of Long Island, N. Y.	do	1,798	Do.
Harbor, defense, Narragansett, R. I.	do	1,798	Do.
Harbor defense, Portland, Maine.	do	1,798	Do.
Harbor defense, Sandy Hook.	do	2,319	Do.
Harbor defense, Chesapeake Bay.	do	1,798	Do.
Fort Dix, N. J.	1 square division	18,300	Do.
Fort Bragg, N. C.	Ninth Division and miscellaneous troops.	11,050	Do.
Do	1,000-man recruit-reception center.
Camp Custer, Mich.	Fifth Division and miscellaneous troops.	9,000	Do.
Do	1,000-man recruit-reception center.
Fort Benning, Ga.	Armored division	16,000	Do.
Do	Fourth Division
Virginia State Camp, Virginia Beach, Va.	1 Coast Artillery regiment (155-mm. guns).	1,986	Do.
Total		70,106
Camp Blanding, Fla.	2 square divisions	36,600	Necessary utilities and hospital facilities for tent camp.
Do	2 Field Artillery regiments	2,800
Camp Shelby, Miss.	2 square divisions	36,600	Do.
Do	Miscellaneous units	5,250
Fort Monmouth, N. J.	First Signal Company (construction).	148	Cantonment with necessary utilities and hospital facilities.
	First Signal Company (repair).	134
Fort Belvoir, Va.	Miscellaneous engineering units.	420	Do.
Fort Brown, Tex.	Increases to Twelfth Cavalry.	364	Do.
Fort Crockett, Tex.	Coast Artillery units	446	Do.
Fort Sam Houston, Tex.	Miscellaneous units, including recruit-reception center.	4,000	Do.
Normoyle General Depot.	Miscellaneous increases to garrison.	307	Do.
Fort Lewis, Wash.	Miscellaneous units	675	Do.
Do	1 square division	18,300
Do	Recruit-reception center for 1,000 men.
Camp Ord, Calif.	Seventh Division and miscellaneous units.	10,000	Do.
Total		34,794

Location	Units to be provided for	Approximate strength	Type of construction
Camp McQuaide, Calif.	1 Coast Artillery Corps regiment (155 mm. guns).	1,986	Necessary utilities and hospital facilities for tent camp.
Camp Robinson, Ark.	1 square division	18,300	Utilities, hospitalization for tent camp.
Do	1 Infantry regiment	2,776
Fort Devens, Mass.	1,500-man recruit-reception center.		Cantonment, with necessary utilities and hospital facilities.
Fort Sheridan, Ill.	1,000-man recruit-reception center.		Do.
Fort Snelling, Minn.	500-man recruit-reception center.		Do.
Total		36,294
Fort Leavenworth, Kans.	do		Do.
Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.	1,000-man recruit-reception center.		Do.
Fort George G. Meade, Md.	1,500-man recruit-reception center.		Do.

Specific designation of the units which will occupy these camps will be announced at a later date.

Why Not Use All the Tax To Build Nation's Defense?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD D. COOLEY

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE RALEIGH (N. C.) UNION HERALD

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial which was recently published in the Union Herald, of Raleigh, N. C.:

WHY NOT USE ALL THE TAX TO BUILD NATION'S DEFENSE?

America—man, woman, and child—is wholeheartedly backing the national-defense program, a program which will cost untold billions of dollars, but provisions which have been made for paying this staggering bill do not meet with general public approval.

John and Jane Public know that they, and they alone, in the final analysis, shall have to pay the bill. John and Jane, being Americans, would not for a moment consider avoiding their obligations of citizenship. They are ready, they have placed their shoulders to the wheel. That is the American way of doing things.

John and Jane feel, and rightly so, that Congress should build a national-defense tax structure so designed that every dollar paid by them as a direct result of the defense program shall go into the Federal Treasury to be used in building up the country's Military and Naval Establishments.

The citizens of this country have the right to resent the fact that the "defense tax" on beer is five-twelfths of a cent a bottle, and yet they, the consumers, have to pay a cent extra a bottle because of the tax.

Then take the tax on cigarettes. The defense tax on this item is half a cent a package. But the purchaser of a single pack must of necessity pay a cent extra per package. This means the consumer is paying the defense tax, and in addition a sum equal to the tax which is not going into the defense fund.

The smallest unit in our monetary system, of course, is the penny, and there is where the trouble lies. There is no reason to meddle with the monetary set-up to correct this evil. A simple amendment to the tax structure will solve everything and at the same time get the bill paid quicker.

All that Congress has to do is to enact into law a schedule providing that a tax of 1 cent shall be paid on each bottle of beer and on each package of cigarettes. And similar action should be taken on all other items coming under the defense tax where the single unit purchased by the consumer is taxed less than 1 cent.

In fairness to the consuming public Congress should take immediate action along these lines. Such an increase would cost the public no more than it is paying today, but—and this is important—it would add hundreds of millions of dollars to the fund being collected to bulwark the Nation's defense structure.

Those who framed the national defense tax structure did not contemplate that the manufacturer or the dealer would absorb the tax. That just isn't done. The ultimate consumer always pays the bill. That has been true in the past. It will continue in the future.

That fact being recognized and acknowledged, let's turn into the defense fund 100 percent of each penny now being paid by the consumer as "defense tax" instead of only five-twelfths or one-half of each penny as is the case where beer and cigarettes are involved.

And while the tax structure is being overhauled why not impose a defense tax of 1 cent a bottle on soft drinks?

Let's get this staggering defense bill paid. Soft drinks, like beer, whiskey, and cigarettes, are a luxury. They come well within the class of items upon which a tax for national defense can, and should, be imposed.

The nations of Europe in arming to the teeth, making necessary now the girding of our loins for defense of our shores, did so by forcing near unbelievable sacrifices upon the people. May the day never come when in America similar action will be necessary. Let's avoid this danger.

It can be avoided by building a tax plan which will bring into the defense fund every penny paid by the consumer "for defense," and by taxing luxury products which, if necessary, could be dispensed with entirely.

John and Jane don't want to be forced to do without any of the luxuries they have come to like so well. That is why they want to get the bill paid as rapidly as possible. Being intelligent, they know if only approximately one-half of what they pay for national defense goes into the defense fund, it will be a long time before "Paid in full" is stamped across the face of the bill.

It must be recognized that Congress, in enacting the defense-tax bill, was working against time. There was little opportunity for study and research. Something had to be done and done quickly. It was done. Now the time has come to perfect the emergency-builded patchwork. Congress should lose little time in accomplishing the task.

Machines, Not Men, Are the Country's Most Urgent Need

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HINSHAW

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ARTICLE BY MAJ. AL WILLIAMS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the Washington Daily News of yesterday:

[From the Washington Daily News of August 29, 1940]

MACHINES, NOT MEN, ARE THE COUNTRY'S MOST URGENT NEED

(By Al Williams)

Air power smashed this war wide open, but the greatest casualty has been the collapse of the Army and Navy General Staffs of France, England, and the United States.

Not only has air power demonstrated that traditional machinery, such as infantrymen and the old-type sea power, cannot withstand air attack, but the men who refused to change their minds to conform to mechanized standards have proved their unfitness. General in their text, these indictments have a special place at this moment in this country.

Few, if any, high-ranking officers in our Army and Navy seem to have more than a vague idea of what modern air power or its organization means. Our experts have been caught flat-footed, having given only casual attention to all that has been happening in Europe in the last 5 years. They scoffed at the Italian conception of the modern air arm, modeled after the plan of General Douhet. They ignored the concentrated and sustained German program toward air-power domination, which got under way with the rise of Hitler in 1933.

COULDN'T BELIEVE IT

There never was any secrecy about the Germans' belief that air power would win the next war or about their gigantic plans for building air-war machinery. Our war experts just did not believe that the old order of things could or would be changed. And, since conscription is a great issue before the American public today, it is fitting that we consider why it happens to be an issue at all.

If our Army General Staff had kept itself thoroughly open-minded and alert, we would never have been caught short on antiaircraft guns of all calibers and on tanks, to say nothing of planes. Time and again American Army leaders talk and preach about the two and three million men required to defend America. They are still thinking in terms of the last World War requirements. They cannot get away from millions of infantrymen armed with rifles, bayonets, and hand grenades.

PRIMING CHARGE NEEDED

Despite all that has happened in Europe, they have not caught the basic formula for modern war power, and they may never change their minds until disaster forces them.

The way to forestall this dire eventuality is to create quickly a supreme defense council of outstanding American business executives who have proved their ability to get things done. The priming charge to change our military and naval oligarchies must come from outside the services.

But to cover up their delinquencies in vision, military leaders scream vaguely for millions of men and more planes and tanks. If we must rearm, and we certainly must, we should tackle the job in a sensible way. This, to my way of thinking, would mean immediately equipping the Regular Army with thousands of planes and tanks and antiaircraft guns and teaching that Army to use them. Next would come the National Guard, and then we might think of further expansion.

MACHINES, NOT MEN

Official Washington would not believe when flying men predicted the present type of war as a dead certainty, and forecast every development before it happened. We can't expect official Washington to heed insistence upon the necessity for modeling our national defense on the lessons of this war—that air power and mechanized forces are supreme, with foot soldiers only for policing.

When French resistance broke, American Army experts immediately asserted that millions of Germans, superior in number of the four or five million men claimed to be under arms for France, explained the catastrophe. I claimed that, when the truth was known, it would be found that not more than 500,000 German troops had been used in the continental campaigns.

Recently Col. William (Wild Bill) Donovan returned from Europe and stated that the German masses were not numerically impressive—that it was a "spearhead (operating airplanes and tanks) of 50,000 men that beat France."

The actual fighting force need not be huge; the job requiring the big use of men is construction and maintenance of machinery.

The Eagles' Pledge to America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, one of the most patriotic organizations in existence in America is the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

This patriotic fraternity has extended its influence through hundreds of American communities and has always fostered a program designed to promote the well-being of the citizens of this great Nation.

Commencing with a deep interest in the American home, and recalling the adage that "home is a brilliant setting in which the brightest jewel is mother," for years the Fraternal Order of Eagles has championed the idea of the annual observance of Mother's Day.

Credit is given this splendid organization for writing the first mother's pension law. It is interesting to note that the author of the first workmen's compensation law was a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. In like manner the first old-age pension law that was deemed constitutional was written by this great humanitarian fraternity.

Thus, through the years, love of God, country, and the American home have been a trinity of ideals to which the nearly 2,000 lodges of the Fraternal Order of Eagles in the United States have given forceful expression. Founded on such ideals, and fortified with a burning desire to promote the best interests of America, therein lies the cause for the constant growth of one of America's most favored fraternal organizations.

Through the frenzy and stress of 1917–18, when the whole Nation was united in an effort to save democracy, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, through thousands of members, enlisted in the fight to preserve the ideals of democracy by membership in either the military life of the Nation or in the many civilian tasks that counted so greatly in the effort to preserve world civilization.

As a member of the Altoona, Pa., Aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, I am proud of the true patriotic fervor that dominated the national convention of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and which inspired the following resolution adopted at Chicago during the period of August 15 to 19.

In conjunction with the resolution, the 1940 delegates to the convention, representing nearly 700,000 Eagles, adopted the Eagles' pledge to America, which is a forceful and inspiring message during these trying days.

The Eagles' pledge may well be recited in every school in the land, and uttered from the lips of every red-blooded American as a proper antidote for the poisonous stream of propaganda emanating from un-American sources in our fair land.

The pledge and resolution are as follows:

THE EAGLES' PLEDGE TO AMERICA

Injustice and hatred have achieved their end. Over there, the fertile fields where grain should be growing are gashed with shell holes and wet with human blood. The soft clouds of midsummer are pierced with the bulletlike speed of death-dealing planes. And the quiet night shudders with the death cries of women and children.

Six of the seven primary powers of the world are at war. More men are under arms today than ever before in the history of the world. To build swift instruments of death, the blessings of science have been prostituted. The bones of boys and men who fell a quarter of a century ago have not dissolved into dust; yet over them, this very day, new bodies, distorted and mangled, rot by the roadside or lie twisted and misshapen upon the battlefield.

Ours is a country dedicated to the belief that men have certain inalienable rights. Among these are "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." To bring this Republic into existence, men and women suffered and died. Today, as never before, America is threatened by forces from beyond the seas and by forces from within.

To foreign armies that would desecrate our shores and to their leaders, we say: "America was built by men and women who crossed the seas to escape political and religious persecution. From the forests and rivers, from fertile valleys and plains, they built a nation dedicated to God and to the finest ideals alive in the soul of man. These ideals we hold more precious than life. Deprived of them, we count life not worth living. To our children, to the next generation, we have promised to hand down this heritage of freedom. No matter what the sacrifice, no matter what the suffering, we will keep the faith. No foreign army shall invade our continent so long as there are men and women in this country who find inspiration in American history and who deserve the privilege of living under the Stars and Stripes."

To those within our midst who would betray our country, who would seek to surrender the keys of America to those that hate our form of government, covet our wealth, and envy us the happiness that, through the grace of God, has found here its abiding place—to these traitors we say, "Take the first ship to the country whose government you serve. Take your crafty minds and Judas hearts to the dictators whose slimy gold supports you. Leave forever a country whose blessed soil is too decent to hold your faithless bodies."

For any of this treacherous group who are caught in acts or crimes harmful to our Government, we demand immediate and condign punishment. We have witnessed the successful invasion of peaceful countries that had been betrayed and weakened beyond hope of adequate defense by the creatures that, in paragraphs bitter with contempt, future historians will characterize as the "fifth column." And, having witnessed the deeds of these traitors, we pledge our individual and group strength to the work of exposing their acts, both of omission and of commission, wherever opportunities present themselves to us.

Resolved, to the Governor of our State and to the President of the United States, we pledge, individually, and as a fraternal group that numbers almost three-quarters of a million men and women, our loyalty to the Constitutions of State and Nation. We pledge ourselves to the service of America. And, with the full understanding of what this vow entails, we pledge our willingness to give the priceless gift that men call life so that our children may inherit the blessings of freedom.

We dedicate, in this hour, ourselves and the Fraternal Order of Eagles to the preservation of America and for what it stands among peace-loving peoples of the world. May God and our fellow citizens help us keep this vow!

(Unanimously adopted August 16, 1940, by annual convention of Fraternal Order of Eagles.)

RESOLUTION IN RELATION TO THOSE MEMBERS OF THE FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES WHO ENTER THE MILITARY SERVICE OF THEIR COUNTRY

You have just approved a resolution that has the fitting title, "The Eagles' Pledge to America." The resolution is timely. It is in keeping with the patriotic ideals of our order. We have again set forth in very definite terms the fraternity's loyalty to our country. Now, we must think of our obligations to those Eagles who have or will become a part of the Military Establishment of the United States and Canada.

We believe that the United States must be made so strong defensively that no power or powers on earth will seriously consider the invasion of the Western Hemisphere. We believe that our defenses must be built as rapidly as our citizens from all walks of life can achieve. We must have an adequate supply of airplanes and tanks and every necessary type of ordnance from heavy artillery and antiaircraft guns to the most formidable machine guns, rifles, and all firearms between.

But the mechanical equipment of war must be directed and operated by Americans who understand the technique of the weapons they use, and who have had such invaluable hours of training on the ground, in the air lanes, and through the channels of the seas as to insure, in the event of war, ultimate victory.

Among Eagles the term "equality" has always had a special significance. For almost a half century we have obligated new members in the sunlight of this term. The worthy president of every aerie sits at the station dedicated to equality. For most of us, the golden years of peace have meant equality of opportunity. But now when our beloved land is facing the possibilities of a defensive war, we must understand and accept the equality of responsibility.

When the Congress of the United States and our brother, the President of the United States, have agreed upon the best way in which each of us can discharge his responsibility, we Eagles, loyal to the institutions of our country and to the principles of our revered democracy, must stand stalwartly behind this constituted authority.

Let us assure every Eagle in the military service of his country that his problems, his duties, his individual fate, is of concern to each of us. Let us so legislate that an Eagle who wears the uniform of his country shall have his name continued on the roster of his aerie, and that it shall be the duty of the aerie to keep him in good standing while he is in the military service.

His dependents shall have the services of the aerie physician as provided by law in those aeries that furnish such services, and they shall be entitled to such rights and privileges in the aerie home, as they would have if he were there. And I recommend that the grand aerie remit the per capita tax on those in military service.

At the beginning of the World War, the Eagles were the first among all organizations to provide for the welfare of its members who were in service. I urge this grand aerie to be the first among the legislative bodies of national fraternities to make known to the world our attitude toward our country, and to the members of our order who enter military service.

Resolved, That the Grand Aerie Fraternal Order of Eagles approve this statement and that the judiciary committee shall submit sometime during this convention such recommendations as will give life to what I have read.

Let us increasingly insist that Eagles emphasize not only equality of opportunity in time of peace, but equality of responsibility in time of war or possible war.

(Unanimously adopted August 16, 1940.)

For Democratic Debate

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOSEPH B. SHANNON
OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from today's issue of the New York Times:

[From the New York Times of August 30, 1940]

FOR DEMOCRATIC DEBATE

Surely some sort of happy medium, not to speak of mere sanity, is possible regarding the length of congressional debate. The usual practice under our present system is for the Senate to talk far longer than is necessary, and for the House, with more than four times as many Members, to talk far too little. Believers in the democratic system of parliamentary debate are made to feel something like lovers of sea food who are forced to choose between whales and minnows.

The conscription bill supplies one of the two latest illustrations. The text of the bill as drafted by the Senate Military Affairs Committee was published on July 27. Sporadic debate upon it began in the Senate on August 6 and formal debate opened on August 9. It continued with a few interruptions until August 28, when the bill was passed. As compared with this period of 20 days, it is planned to allow only 2 days for general debate in the House. Now, though the Senate debate was needlessly drawn out, particularly in view of the urgency of the conscription plan, the House will have too short a period to allow individual Members to express themselves on a question of such cardinal importance. If the time allowance were increased, the gain in democratic expression would be important enough to outweigh the loss of a few days.

A much worse example, however, is the excess-profits tax bill, under which the Rules Committee voted to limit debate for the entire House membership not to 2 days but to 2 hours, and which has now been rushed through on that schedule. In view of the circumstances such a rule and such hasty consideration were shocking. For the bill is a complicated and abstruse document of some 25,000 words. No copy of it was available until the day before the debate, so that even the most conscientious Congressmen who were asked to vote on it did not have a fair chance even to read it. It is no answer to say that most Congressmen would not be able to understand it anyway. Such an answer not only implies little respect for our Congressmen but it overlooks the fact that a congressional debate is never merely congressional. Surely several days ought to elapse between the first publication of a bill of such crucial importance and any final action on it by the House. At least such a period is required for persons directly affected and for expert opinion to call attention to possible ambiguities, jokers, or dangerous provisions.

Where Is the Recovery?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE TAMPA (FLA.) TRIBUNE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from a recent issue of the Tampa (Fla.) Sunday Tribune, entitled "Where Is the Recovery?"

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune]

WHERE IS THE RECOVERY?

In his acceptance speech, Candidate Wendell Willkie said:

"The New Deal believes, as frequently declared, that the spending of vast sums of money by the Government is a virtue in itself. They tell us that Government spending insures recovery. Where is the recovery?"

That question is answered by Alan Freeman, a member of the Ohio bar and a widely experienced businessman, now sojourning at Auburndale who recently gave, in this column, a thorough and convincing statement of New Deal principles and achievements.

Mr. Freeman referred to his up-to-date and authentic store of financial and business reports, and he fully and specifically answers Mr. Willkie's question, "Where is the recovery?"

First, dealing with big-business interests, he gives us this incontrovertible statement of fact:

"Comparative earnings of 12 of the largest and most successful industrial enterprises in America: Du Pont, General Motors, Chrysler, Republic Steel, Bethlehem Steel, Montgomery Ward, Goodyear, Goodrich, General Electric, Sears-Roebuck, Westinghouse, Penney. These 12 firms, employing billions of capital and millions of workers, made no profit or practically no profit in 1932. These same firms made a net profit of $554,000,000 in 1936, and these same firms made a net profit of $549,000,000 in 1939."

Mr. Freeman accompanies this assertion with the individual statements of the companies named—and that is the answer, in specific financial and industrial instances.

Then he shows where is the recovery in the various lines of national industry and activity, with the following verified comparative figures:

"Employment—1932, 37,704,000; 1936, 44,783,000.

"Unemployment—1932, 12,478,000; 1936, 7,568,000.

"Automobile production—Passenger cars, 1932, 1,186,185; 1937, 4,068,935. Trucks, 1932, 245,282; 1937, 947,502.

"Radio sets in use—1932, 18,000,000; 1940, 40,000,000.

"Iron (gross tons)—1932, 8,781,000; 1937, 37,137,000.

"Steel—1932, 13,681,000; 1937, 50,569,000.

"Electrical energy (kilowatt-hours)—1932, 82,376,772,000; 1937, 121,836,813,000.

"Building industry—Dwellings built, 1932, 27,380; 1938, 157,104. Value of all new buildings, 1932, $481,219,448; 1938, $1,175,841,359.

"Industrial stock prices—1932, low 41.32; 1937, high 194.40.

"Railroad stock prices—1932, low 13.23; 1937, high 64.46.

"Public-utility stock prices—1932, low 16.53; 1937, high 37.54.

"Prices received by farmers for various commodities—1932 compared with 1936. Wheat, 32.9 to 92; corn, 19.1 to 53; hogs, 3.8 to 8.91; beef cattle, 4.3 to 6.22; sheep, 2.5 to 4.34; wool, 12.5 to 24.1; cotton, 5.6 to 11.1; potatoes, 47.1 to 65.4.

"Rayon production—1932, 134,000,000; 1936, 277,000,000.

"Value of manufactured products—1935, $44,993,698,000; 1937, $60,993,600,000.

"Total foreign trade—1932, $2,933,790,000; 1937, $6,432,835,000.

"Total exports—1932, $1,611,016,000; 1937, $3,349,167,000.

"New and refunding capital issues—1932, $1,751,000,000; 1936, $6,214,000,000.

"New capital issues—1932, $720,000,000; 1936, $1,949,000,000.

"Bank failures—1930 to 1933, inclusive (Hoover administration)—5,730; total deposits, $3,619,000,000. Nineteen hundred and thirty-four to nineteen hundred and thirty-seven, inclusive (Roosevelt administration)—194; total deposits, $76,000,000. (Thirty times as many under Hoover as under the first 4 years of Roosevelt, with 50 times the amount of deposits.)

"Commercial failures.—1932, 31,822; liabilities, $928,000,000; 1937, 9,490; liabilities, $183,000,000."

Do we again hear from Indiana the plaintive inquiry: "Where is the recovery?"

There it is, in the plain, unmistakable terms of statistical fact.

Without exception, since the advent of the New Deal in 1933, in each and every essential item of national financial and industrial activity, there has been strong and substantial recovery. And the wonder is that many of the big business interests which have conspicuously benefited by that recovery are joining the Republican Party and its nominee in asking, "Where is the recovery?" when they know it and see it and feel it in their own businesses and all around them.

Mr. Freeman is justified in commenting: "There was absolutely no foundation for the claim made by Mr. Willkie as to the nonsuccess of the New Deal. It has worked and has worked magnificently, and if he thinks for one moment that this Nation would tolerate a Hoover again, serving as an adviser, a President emeritus, or perhaps in the Cabinet, he just doesn't know the American people."

Migratory Camps Are No Mystery

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. REID F. MURRAY
OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1940

STATEMENT FROM UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement, issued by the Department of Agriculture:

Migratory labor camps—Expenditures by States and by fiscal years

States	1936	1937	1938	1939	Total cumulative as of June 30, 1939
Arizona			$2,638	$224,861	$227,499
California	$48,773	$577,429	847,062	999,274	2,472,498
Florida				11,451	11,451
Idaho				31,282	31,282
Oregon				7,200	7,200
Texas				12,792	12,792
Washington				32,201	32,201
Total	48,733	577,429	849,700	1,319,061	2,794,923

Mr. Speaker, from observing this table my colleagues will see the increasing public expenditures being made for these migratory camps. These migratory camps are the result of the land and loan policy of the New Deal. The New Deal is now appropriating millions to correct a condition they have squandered millions to create.

MIGRATORY CAMPS AND THEIR CAUSES

First. Thousands of farmers were driven from their homes by the New Deal, because the farmers could not pay $112 average annual interest.

The reasons why the farmers could not pay their interest was due to droughts and other adverse weather conditions, and also due to the low agricultural prices that prevail, due to the New Deal.

Second. The New Deal set up thousands of nonfarm-owners on new farms under the guise of help to the downtrodden, when at the same time they were driving thousands of the old farm owners from their homes and farms.

Third. The New Deal lowered the tariff on 167 farm products, and thus reduced the farmers' income by millions. The price of cheese was 17 cents per pound the 7 years before the New Deal and only 13 cents per pound the 7 years of the New Deal.

Fourth. After driving the farmers off their farms, they started to erect the migratory camps for them. Even Texas, that has had $365,000,000 in New Deal agricultural subsidies, or one-eighth of the total agricultural subsidies from the Federal Treasury, has had to have migratory camps. The New Deal land and loan policy drove people in great numbers from their farms, even in Texas, that in 1 year had 27 percent of the total parity payments of the Nation.

Fifth. After the New Deal had driven these thousands off their farms, and had built public migratory camps for them, the New Deal again appropriated thousands of dollars. This was appropriated for the Civil Liberties Committee so that the committee could go out and call on the people living in the migratory camps built by the New Deal to house the people that were driven from their farms by the New Deal. The committee spent the hard month of January in the California sunshine instead of being in Washington attending to the affairs of the people of the States they represented. The California farmer with New Deal farm prices could not pay a satisfactory New Deal wage. While this committee was so busy in 1939 making arrangements for the visit to the migratory camps, the New Deal drove more farmers from their farm homes in Wisconsin than had ever before been foreclosed on in the whole history of the Federal land bank. In other words, the new dealers shed crocodile tears and practiced fake humanitarianism.

Sixth. After all the foregoing cross-purposed schemes as followed by the New Deal, we now have another joint committee of the Senate and House appointed, and legislation with additional appropriations. The purpose of this committee is to find out why the farmers left their farms. It is not for the purpose of making a social call, as the Civil Liberties Committee evidently did. No legislation to help the unfortunate has resulted to date from the Civil Liberties appropriation.

So we have the New Deal driving the farmers off their farms, appropriating money to build migratory camps, appropriating more money to call on them and see how they are getting along, and then another committee to call on them to see why they left the farms in the first place.

The farm people of this Nation should remember that President Roosevelt has twice vetoed legislation to give the farmer the lower interest rate he now enjoys. I am pleased to say a Republican was able to further equalize and lower the interest burden of the farmers to an extent that it represents a saving of millions of dollars to the farmers of this Nation.

The New Deal causes more diseases than they can muster medicines to cure.

Hon. James A. Farley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MILTON A. ROMJUE
OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to incorporate the following letter addressed by the special committee, in behalf of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, to the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General, which letter is as follows:

AUGUST 30, 1940.

The Honorable JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

DEAR MR. FARLEY: At its meeting on this day, August 30, 1940, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives noted that tomorrow would witness your voluntary retirement from the office of Postmaster General of the United States, and the chairman of the committee has designated the undersigned to draft this letter of resolution.

The 7½ years of your administration of the Post Office Department have been one of the four longest terms of office of any Postmaster General since this committee was established in 1808; namely, Gideon Granger, 1801–14; Return J. Meigs, Jr., 1814–23; Albert S. Burleson, 1913–21; and James A. Farley, 1933–40. Your administration of the Post Office Department has also been one of the most successful in history when measured by the standards of business management, the requirements of postal service to the people, and the conduct of public office.

The committee has noted with sincere appreciation the spirit of cooperation you have displayed, the support you have given to the committee's program, and your recognition and observance of the mutual relationships of the legislation and administrative functions to the benefit of the public welfare.

May your future endeavors be as pleasant as has our relationships.

A copy of this letter is being recorded in the permanent minutes of the committee.

Cordially and sincerely,

THOMAS G. BURCH.
NOAH M. MASON.
ALBERT E. AUSTIN.
CARL T. DURHAM.

As chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, it gives me pleasure to most heartily concur in the sentiment and good wishes expressed by the committee in behalf of James A. Farley.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to have been associated with him in connection with the work affecting the Postal Service of our country. I have always found him, as have others who have worked with him, to be most helpful, generous, kind, and ready and willing to cooperate in every proper and reasonable manner with which the Post Office Committee has had occasion to work, and it has been a pleasure to cooperate with him at all times.

His voluntary retirement is a personal regret on my part. His untiring service to his country in this position is now a matter of history, and as time goes on the record he has made in the position of Postmaster General will be recognized by all thoughtful students of postal matters as one of outstanding achievement and brilliant accomplishment.

I wish him, along with the other members of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, many years of continued happy and successful life.

Funds for the T. V. A.—A Peculiar Omission

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLAUDE PEPPER
OF FLORIDA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE TAMPA (FLA.) TRIBUNE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial from the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune, issue of July 18, 1940, entitled "A Peculiar Omission."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune of July 18, 1940]

A PECULIAR OMISSION

The Tennessee Valley Authority has been a storm center of national politics. A lot has been said for and against it. It is scheduled for even more discussion, especially considering Wendell Willkie's nomination and his past record of fighting T. V. A.'s every move.

We thought a story the other day about T. V. A. made real news, but a check of several northern newspapers caused some doubt. That story concerned a request by Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Knudsen, members of the National Defense Council and two of the Nation's biggest Republican business leaders, for more funds for the T. V. A. They asked a congressional subcommittee for the immediate grant of $25,000,000 to add 300,000 kilowatts to the production capacity of the great project.

These men are interested in doing the best job for national defense. Yet a great portion of the American press either ignored the real news or deliberately soft-pedaled it.

Now, it is true that, under the free press we enjoy in the United States, newspaper editors have the privilege of selecting those items of news which they feel will be of most interest to their readers. But we wonder if some of these editors omitted the story simply because two outstanding business leaders gave supporting evidence to the fact that T. V. A., which Willkie and many Republicans have fought from the beginning, is proving of immense value to the industrial and national-defense needs of this Nation.

Addresses at Convention of the National Colored Democratic Association

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SHERMAN MINTON
OF INDIANA
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ADDRESSES BY HON. HARRY S. TRUMAN, OF MISSOURI; HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY, OF KENTUCKY; HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA; HON. SHERMAN MINTON, OF INDIANA; LAWRENCE W. ROBERT, JR.; WILLIAM J. THOMPKINS; AND ROBERT I. MILLER

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, on Sunday, July 14, 1940, the National Colored Democratic Association met in convention at the Eighth Regiment Armory, Chicago, Ill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and I, myself, as well as Dr. Thompkins, the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia, and Mr. Robert, secretary of the Democratic National Committee, and Robert I. Miller, a distinguished lawyer of Washington, addressed the convention. I have had an estimate made of what it would cost to print the addresses in the RECORD, which estimate accompanies the speeches. I ask unanimous consent that the addresses be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. HARRY S. TRUMAN, OF MISSOURI

There is much being said these days about the Negro and what should be done with him instead of what should be done for him. Much is written about his rights as a person, but it has been up to the present administration to take the problem in hand and provide necessary measures for his life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.

That the administration has already done much for the Negro is clearly evidenced by the results of recent elections in such cities as Kansas City, St. Louis, and Chicago. In these and other large cities, the Negro wards showed a much larger proportionate Democratic vote than in the white wards, and to my notion this is as it should be since the Negro race has received treatment at the hands of the present administration that should justify its continued support.

Up until the time of the emancipation Negroes were in an entirely different status from their fellow men in America. Besides the injustice of enslavement they were held far beneath the white population in almost every measure of modern civilization. This was anything but a reflection on the ability of the black men. With education positively forbidden to him and the fact that he was forced into a culture, civilization, and climate absolutely new to him, is it any wonder that his progression has been at times a disturbed one? Can any of you picture yourselves planted suddenly in the wilds of Africa and forced to make your own way in a hostile society utterly different from anything you have ever known? That has been the problem of our Negro population.

In the years before the Roosevelt administration, plotting politicians attempted to defeat Negro suffrage which was gained only after the toil and heartbreak of three constitutional amendments. First of all they imposed a property qualification for the privilege of voting, but the colored people acquired property so rapidly that the politicians were temporarily baffled. It was necessary to resort to other measures. They required educational attainments, but for once the demand was reasonable.

It was a double blessing to the Negro since it opened the way to the polls and inspired the colored people to learn at least the primary requirements of education. It was a wise provision insofar as a certain amount of learning should become a requirement of any American citizen. Of course, this also supposes that the means of education shall be provided. No citizen can fulfill his mission at the ballot box unless he is able to read and write to inform himself about public men and measures. Naturally, the rule should apply to white and black alike. Here was the Negro's big chance to remove the last obstacle between himself and the polls as well as to advance in culture.

Up to the time of the Emancipation, the Negro's slavery forbade him education and kept him in a completely dependent state. During the period of freedom, he was almost equally handicapped. Being under servile conditions for over 300 years, and naturally, unused to constructive thinking, how could he be expected to have accomplished more than he has within a single generation? No one could hope that the Negro would become a nation-illuminating legal, industrial, or literary light the day following the Emancipation Proclamation. Notwithstanding, the Negro has done amazingly well.

That old time slave owner felt that an educated Negro would be a menace. If the slave knew too much it was feared he would learn to revolt and become haughty. We all know that the old-time slave owner was mistaken. The educated Negro learns quickly so that in order to protect himself, he must obey the law, not break it. He can only blunder in performing his civic duties if he does not understand them.

Fear that Negro education may menace the white race's conception of racial safety displays nothing more than a narrow conception of good citizenship and an amazing ignorance of Negro characteristics. Always, it is the uneducated person, regardless of color, who is the dangerous citizen. It is your ignorant class among the people that is the criminal class.

In this light, let us see what the present administration has done for the Negro. As I have stated, it has given him $2,000,000 for improvements at Howard University and Freedman's Hospital; $262,000 to Virginia State College; $87,000 for Lincoln University in Missouri; $500,000 for the Wendell Phillips High School at Chicago; $40,000 for West Virginia State College; paid $100 per month to 114 colored school teachers in Chicago engaged in the work of reducing adult illiteracy, and has extended this benevolent aid in many other directions.

Ignorance breeds all of the festering prejudices of our human family. The fraternizing sentiments of mankind are products of education. In my opinion, greater educational facilities for the Negro would be a blessing to him and at the same time a great boon to society at large. If white men wish to do better for themselves, it would be well for them to give more definite attention to the education of the Negro.

By this I mean not merely more and better buildings and equipment, but very careful attention to what is taught in these buildings. We exert no little care to see what white children are taught in our public schools, but seem to have little or no concern about what the Negro child is taught. Especially now right teaching on patriotism, morals, and race relationship in our schools, both white and black, is an essential element in any program for the solution of the Negro question. When we are honest enough to recognize each other's rights and are good enough to respect them, we will come to a more Christian settlement of our difficulties. Education of the Negro guarantees safety to the white people and certainly is to their interest. All dark people, except the Negroes, are against the white race.

Some say that the Negro is not capable of assimilating cultural study. I have always denied this and have studied the problem sufficiently to know that given an equal opportunity with white students, the Negro can more than hold his own.

Take for example, the story of Phyllis Wheatly, the first colored American poetess. When she was but 7 years old, she was captured in Africa and sold to a right Boston family named Wheatly. Mrs. Wheatly educated the girl and the development of her mind was phenomenal. This little waif from the African jungle was writing rhymes at 14, at 17 reputable verse, and at 20 published a book of poems. She visited London and was feted by royalty. It was she who originally spoke of George Washington, as "first in peace." When Washington died, Congress extended the phrase to read "first in peace, first in war, first in the hearts of his countrymen," but Phyllis Wheatly, who first gave birth to the idea was a Negress. Don't forget, too, that one of the world's foremost agricultural chemists who has done so much for the South is a Negro. George Washington Carver, of Tuskegee Institute, is a Negro and a fellow of the London Royal Society of Arts. He has done more for the welfare and upbuilding of his race than any living person.

I repeat, the Negro needs only the opportunity for cultural study. He has the ability.

Before I go further, I wish to make it clear that I am not appealing for social equality of the Negro. The Negro himself knows better than that, and the highest types of Negro leaders say quite frankly that they prefer the society of their own people. Negroes want justice, not social relations. I merely wish to sound a note of warning. Numberless antagonisms and indignities heaped upon any race will eventually try human patience to the limit and a crisis will develop. We all know the Negro is here to stay and in no way can be removed from our political and economic life and we should recognize his inalienable rights as specified in our Constitution. Can any man claim protection of our laws if he denies that protection to others?

Under the Roosevelt Administration, more has been done to give the Negro equal legal, economic, and cultural rights than has ever been done before. The Honorable JOHN M. HOUSTON, of Kansas, has said that President Roosevelt has appointed more Negroes to responsible governmental positions than the last three Republican administrations combined. While these things are individual honors, the colored people will benefit by the Roosevelt policies. Every law passed by our present Congress for direct relief or otherwise gives the Negro his equal rights. For the first time in our history, the administration has given us a colored man in the White House on the secretarial staff. This is absolutely unprecedented.

The colored man was taught through the years that the Republican Party, and that party alone, freed him from slavery. Naturally he felt grateful to that party and thought it no more than right that he should vote for it. He knows now that from the Civil War until the present administration he has been exploited by the Republican Party. During the campaigns, of course, the Republican candidates were the friend of the Negro and his greatest benefactor. Between campaigns, however, these fine "friends" forgot the Negro.

As the generations of Negroes went on and became better educated they began to sense that something was wrong. They began to wonder if their race still owed a "debt of gratitude" to a party which did nothing for them except in election year. Finally the Negro voters realized that with the Republican Party it was all "take" and no "give." In short, what the Negro was fighting for was his constitutional right of equal opportunity under law for himself and his children. He needed a redeal in the game of life.

That he got it, no one will or can deny. Doctor Thompkins, Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia, has said: "The administration has given us representation as economists in National Recovery Administration. It has given us several architects and engineers in the Subsistence Homestead Division of the N. R. A. It has given us representation on the legal staff of the Public Works Administration and in the Post Office Department; it has given us a representative in the Farm Credit Bureau of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to look after the needs and opportunities of the colored farmers of the country; it has given us a clearing house in the Department of Interior, presided over by a highly efficient representative of the race, assisted by a competent staff to promote the economic status of the race; it has given us representation in the vast welfare operations of the W. P. A. under Colonel Harrington; it has given us significant representation in the Department of Justice and in the Office of the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia; it gave us our first Federal judge in the person of William H. Hastie, and upon his resignation, Attorney Moore, of Chicago, was appointed as his successor; it has given us 25 outstanding high-salaried posts of distinction, including representation among the conciliators of the Department of Labor, and an adviser to the Secretary of Commerce on racial matters."

Who can look upon a record so humane and just and not thrill with pride at the very mention of the President and his entire administration?

The administration has also undertaken a far-reaching program of slum clearance to better the wretched living conditions of thousands of Negro families. I believe, and I think you will all agree, that one of the prime requisites of a sound democracy is good housing.

We must not forget that every community owes the Negro a fair deal in regard to public utilities, lights, and sewers, street improvement, and water mains. We owe the Negro legal equality and a fair chance in the world for several reasons, not in the least of them because he is a human being and a natural-born American. Because his political power is yet weak, he cannot be denied his rights. Never must we forget that if we sink the Negro to the depths of hopeless degradation and make no provision for his comfort in housing or any other necessity of life, the law of compensation will take effect and the whites, too, will go down with him.

The famous Booker T. Washington often said, "You cannot hold a Negro in the gutter unless some white man stays in the gutter to hold him there."

The housing project of the administration will not hold the Negro in the "gutter" but instead will remove him and the "gutter" too.

The final result of its program will be to provide modern, comfortable dwellings for these thousands of families so that their children may grow up to love their country in a decent environment with the modern conveniences and playground facilities so necessary to a happy and healthful life. And whenever it is possible, Negro managers will be employed in the housing projects tenanted mainly by colored people. Although our work has just begun, already we have completed or are working on, projects in such cities as Atlanta, St. Louis, Kansas City, Chicago, New York, Nashville, New Orleans, and others. Compare empty platform promises of the Republican Party with the real achievements of our administration and you cannot fail to see that the New Deal is the hope of the Negro as well as every other group or class in these United States.

That the Negro is entitled to every right under law is sometimes contested on the very weak grounds that he had no worthy part in American history. Turn to your histories then, and you will see the record of patriotism the colored man has written for himself in the pages of our Nation's development. The first American Negro to give up his life for our country's liberty was Crispus Attucks who was shot down in the Boston massacre of 1770. A Negro, Peter Salem, was the hero of the Battle of Bunker Hill and is credited with the death of the British commander, Major Pitcairn.

Gen. Andrew Jackson, in speaking to the Negroes after the Battle of New Orleans, said, "To the men of color—soldiers from the shores of Mobile I collected you to arms. I invited you to share in the perils and divide the glory of your white countrymen. I expected much of you but you surpass my hopes—the President of the United States shall be informed of your conduct on the present occasion and the voice of the representatives of the American Nation shall applaud your valor, as your general now praises your ardor."

Commodore Perry spoke in high praise of his Negro sailors in the Battle of Lake Erie. Negroes distinguished themselves in the Spanish-American War at the battles of Guasimas, El Caney, and San Juan Hill.

In the World War, four entire Negro regiments received the coveted Croix de Guerre for heroism in action. Gen. John J. Pershing said of the Negroes' World War record:

"The only regret expressed by colored troops is that they are not given more dangerous work to do. I cannot commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troups, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work." The Negroes' flag is our flag, and he stands ready, just as we do, to defend it against all foes from within and without.

The Negro wants love, not compassion; human understanding, not abstract resolutions. He wants to be helped, not crushed. He wants opportunities to better himself, not relief. He wants just wages, not alms. He wants stability, security, and friendliness. He knows that the Roosevelt administration has been his salvation in these days of turmoil, strife, and depression.

He must not switch now from the Democratic Party, which has done so much for him and will ever continue to work in his best interests. He must not switch from the party which embodies every ideal upon which this country has been built to a party which thrives only on broken promises.

We must all love, honor, and serve our country together.
This can be done successfully only under the Democratic Party.
Thank you.

EXCERPTS FROM ADDRESS OF HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY, OF KENTUCKY

Dr. Thompkins, my friends, no Senator likes to speak when any other air mechanic is in progress; that's why I waited for that noise to cease.

I appreciate the invitation given me to deliver to you a word of greeting. When I had a letter from Dr. Thompkins I was unaware at that time that I was scheduled to be the permanent chairman at the Democratic convention. With my duties in the Senate during the last few weeks, it was even impossible for me to be successful in my efforts to prepare an address to deliver Tuesday night at the Democratic convention. I discovered, along with my other business, that I am a mere boy, as I have become sunburned, which resulted in blisters to my face, but this affliction is about to clear up now.

Well, I am glad to be able to come here and greet you, and I am glad to find that you are here today, and those whom we all represent are members of a political party of long standing. We are the political descendants of not only one of the greatest Democrats in history, but one of the greatest personalities, one of the greatest humanitarians. I speak of Thomas Jefferson. During the declaration of independence Jefferson uttered these immortal words:

"All men are created equal."

Not equal in physical strength; perhaps not equal in an intelligence sense, nor equal in the opportunities in grasping this world's goods. But all of us are equal in the opportunity, without race, creed, or color, to stand before a free and just Government without apologizing to any man.

It has been the history of the Democratic Party from Thomas Jefferson to Franklin D. Roosevelt that those who have paid the price, as the members of your race have, for you have shown your loyalty—from the Revolutionary War to the present time—and I can say without apologizing that we fear no "fifth column" activities among the Negro race, and they only demand what they are justly entitled to—freedom and equality under the law—and I say that they deserve it, and the Democratic Party will see to it that they get it. I can pledge that. It has been the policy of the Roosevelt administration not only to work for the colored men and women but for all the underprivileged citizens in the United States of America, and this we are pledged to see to it that all citizens have economic independence.

I was a member this morning of my own delegation who received your committee on resolutions. I was inspired by the representation made by the delegates you sent there, and I want to tell you right now that they acquitted themselves well, and I think that I can carefully say that the suggestions which they made will receive the very earnest and careful consideration of our national convention.

Reference has been made here with reference to the antilynching bill, and I certainly thank Dr. Thompkins for his words. Under the previous administrations it is true that legislation of this sort was sent by the House and Senate to committees, where it would remain and die, but not until the Democratic Party came into power was there an effort made to pass this bill. Unfortunately, in the Senate we were not able to bring it to a vote.

As the majority leader of the United States Senate, I think my record will show that I exerted every possible effort to bring that bill to a vote. Time after time I have asked for the vote. Now, understand, I am not criticizing any Senator, but when I found it was obvious that a vote could not be had, then I got a petition to circulate for cloture, which is, as you know, a motion to close debate, and even after a closed debate each Senator can speak for an hour if they so desired. The petition came up for a vote, but we did not get the necessary two-thirds, and it was impossible to bring the antilynching bill to a vote. It has now been reported by committee, and the reason why we haven't taken it up is because we have been concerned with our national defense; but I can say this, that this bill will be brought up, and it would not surprise me, in fact, it is my opinion that the bill may be voted upon before this Congress shall have adjourned.

I do not wish to indulge in any personalities, but last month in Philadelphia the Republicans had a meeting and selected a man to run for President—Wendell Willkie. I suppose they had to go back and take a former Democrat, if he (Willkie) ever was a Democrat in the real sense of the word. I think I will just give you my picture of the Republican nominee for President:

A wonderful bird is Willkie,
His body was bigger than his Bilkie.

He, Willkie, has said he wanted to fight the champion—which is the Democratic Party. So did Tony Galento want to fight Joe Louis, but, my friends, Joe Louis is still the champion. But I am not afraid of Willkie, who wants to fight, which is the only respect that he is like Joe Louis. For this Democratic Party with 150 years of democracy, is not afraid of anybody on earth.

We are living in trying times, and this is not a campaign for which "frivolity" can be the word. We have seen one democratic nation after nation go down. We have seen ideals of self-government and liberty-loving people destroyed; all because they were not prepared to meet the onslaught of autocracy and totalitarianism. Ours is a peace-loving nation—not unwilling to have peace, but we are resolved not to send our boys away from home, but we are preparing to the fullest extent to protect the United States of America—and Negroes must help. They deserve to serve in every branch of the armed forces of the United States. There shall be but one motto for the American people: All Americans for one America and for one conception of American democracy.

I am not welcoming one race or creed to participate in the American form of government, but like other people, the colored people, with all other races, must join hands with us to make America the beacon light to all the nations of the world. And we must have liberty and equality for all men, regardless of their color. I believe in that and I will fight for that.

There is a place and will be a place in the ranks of the Democratic Party for those who have the ability, and I honestly believe that when the Democratic Convention shall write its platform that your desires will be included.

When we write this platform it will be an honest platform that says what it means and means what it says—we shall write a platform for the American people—all races—and I know that the voters will go to the polls and give us 4 years more of American democracy.

I am reminded at this point of an employer who had a colored man working for him. The man had worked so well that the boss decided he would give him a quart of liquor. The next day he said:

"John, how was that liquor?"

"Fine," John said. "It was just right."

"What do you mean, it was just right?" inquired the boss.

"Well, boss, if it had been any better you wouldn't have given it to me, and if it had been any worse, I wouldn't have drunk it."

If the Republican Party had anything to offer they would have offered us something better, but the Democratic Party stands on its record. I am glad that I come from a State that has never disfranchised the Negro (Kentucky) from the right to vote, and I say that the Democratic Party has done a lot for the Negro and that we are going to do more. Our State does not exact the payment of any poll tax to aid in the disfranchisement of the Negro. Of course, I am not criticizing any State that does, but I stand on my record.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, OF PENNSYLVANIA

My fellow Democrats, we meet at an auspicious moment. Within the next few days the Democratic Party will name a candidate for President of the United States, and its decision will have an important effect upon the future history of our country.

I'm for Roosevelt.

Some months ago I wrote a book on the third-term question. That there was no tradition in American politics against a third term.

In the months since that book was published, the people seem to have accepted that view.

The agitation against a third term was never anything more than political ballyhoo and they have seen through it.

More than 2 years ago I said that the people, and not Roosevelt, would decide the third-term question.

He had been placed in office practically as a receiver in bankruptcy to clean up the mess left by three preceding Republican administrations.

If your memory goes back to that tragic era between 1929 and 1932, you will remember just what a mess it was.

I felt then, and I feel now, that the people would not willingly see Roosevelt leave office until he had finished the job they gave him to do.

I saw that he was being hampered and hamstrung at every turn by powerful individuals and groups which were attempting to make either private profit or political capital out of the Nation's distress.

Had there been wholehearted patriotic cooperation with the President from the beginning, we would be much further ahead today than we are.

I felt then, and still feel, that the people were not going to place an arbitrary time limit on the job.

Since that time much has happened.

It was not our country's good fortune to be permitted to continue an uninterrupted program of internal reform.

Instead we were faced with the problem of war in Europe.

Any great eruption such as war anywhere in the world affects the tides of commerce.

We have all felt the impact of the "blitzkrieg." We all realize that American history, as well as European history, is being made on the foreign battlefields.

We know that international developments have created vast diplomatic problems for our President and his administration. We know they have faced those problems with courage and foresight.

We know that the President has handled crisis after crisis in a manner that has earned him the confidence and respect of the American people, Republicans as well as Democrats.

We know that after more than 7 years as President he is better informed and more familiar with the tangled cross-currents of dilpomacy than any living American.

We know that we need the best man we can find for the tough job that lies ahead.

We know that he saw further than any of us when he began fighting years ago for a more adequate national defense.

All of these things lead to only one conclusion so far as the Democratic convention of 1940 is concerned.

We must draft Roosevelt.

I have no doubt the President would like to retire to Hyde Park when his term is over.

He has worked hard for the past 7½ years at the biggest job in America.

During that time he has done more for his country and his fellow men than any other living American.

Under normal conditions he would be entitled to a well-earned rest, but conditions are not normal.

If there were only domestic conditions to be considered, it might be said that the New Deal program is sufficiently developed to be carried forward with someone else in the White House.

Yet we all realize that the New Deal is not the question at this moment.

The Republicans have admitted as much, for if you will examine the platform they drafted at Philadelphia you will see no criticism whatever of the broad basic measures of the New Deal.

This was a great implied tribute to the President, although the platform drafters probably never thought of it in that way.

It does show, however, that the great issue today is not so much the New Deal, which has already become a basic part of American life, but instead the broader questions of international policy.

The President is familiar with them.

It would be a sad comment upon our democracy if for purely political reasons we were to take our best man out of the game at a crucial moment and send in an untried, inexperienced substitute.

I feel that in this matter the President awaits the will of the people.

I am convinced that he does not seek a third term, but that the public interest and welfare demand it. It is up to the people to draft Roosevelt. It is up to the Democratic Party, representing the political majority in America, to draft him.

We have a duty to ourselves and our country.

We must, in our own way, with such wisdom as we can command, meet the immediate problems facing our Nation.

We owe that to those who have gone before us, those whose efforts and sacrifices through the years have made our Nation preeminent.

We owe it to history, because we must give to those who come after us an even greater democracy.

The responsibility rests heavily upon us.

It is not a partisan responsibility, but a patriotic duty.

I am entirely satisfied that we, as Democrats, will discharge that duty honorably and well within the next few days, and I call upon all Democrats to see that this duty is so discharged through the renomination of our greatest living American as the standard-bearer, not only in our party, but of our country, Franklin Delano Rocsevelt.

ADDRESS OF HON. LAWRENCE WOOD ROBERT, JR., SECRETARY, DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Chairman, members of your association, and fellow Democrats, some few weeks ago when I received an invitation from your distinguished president, Dr. Thompkins, to appear upon this program today, my first inclination was to decline. Not because I did not value and greatly appreciate the invitation but because I knew the tremendous pressure every officer of our Democratic National Committee would find themselves under on this particular day. As you recall, the Democratic National Convention convenes here in your city, starting tomorrow, and already we have no less than 3,000 delegates and alternates and 10,000 camp followers on hand and on our necks, and I believe every one of them have tried to get in General Farley's office and my office this morning since 8 o'clock.

While I was in the very act of dictating my letter of regrets I read further in Dr. Thompkins' letter and noted that this meeting was scheduled to be the largest Negro political assembly ever gathered together in these United States. This in itself was of tremendous interest and caught my eye. Then, while still hesitating, I turned to a copy of the convention manual which Dr. Thompkins had enclosed in his letter and as I hesitated I commenced to read the foreword of this manual. I would like to stop here to say that I hope that every member of this association and every one of you gathered here in attendance have very carefully read this foreword and if you haven't you find a manual and read it thoroughly until you understand its import.

This foreword reads as follows: "The National Colored Democratic Association was organized and incorporated in 1892 by a group of far-sighted Negroes in Missouri who early in their political life came to the realization that the future and hope of the Negro race would not be advanced by mass membership in the Republican Party. It was organized by men of vision who could see the Republican Party handing out a few paltry plums as bait for the Negro vote, without doing anything materially to elevate the economic, social, or political standards of a downtrodden race."

When I got to that point I stopped and reflected how many times I had that same reaction in days gone by and wondered just when you people would wake up to these misleading and false promises which had so long been preached to you.

Reading further from the manual, which continued thusly: "There were many who scoffed at this assembly. They were rebuked and scorned by Negroes who termed as traitors any fellow Negro with the 'audacity' to desert the Republican ranks. It was very unpopular in 1892 and as late as 1928 to be a Negro Democrat. Those Negroes of yesterday and the Negroes of today who are following in their footsteps are today termed 'liberals' rather than 'radicals' and are being hailed today as the real carriers of the torch. The National Colored Democratic Association is proud that today it has grown from four or five men who founded it in 1892 to millions of Negroes in every State in the Union, with hundreds of clubs holding chartered membership throughout the Union."

When I had read this far I turned to my secretary and said, "Please change my letter and say to Dr. Thompkins that I will be delighted to attend this great meeting and to follow any schedule that he might lay out for me." After finishing my letter of acceptance, I took time out to read this convention manual thoroughly, and it left me with the profound reaction and impression that your leaders and your association have a sounder and more comprehensive program for the betterment of your race than anything I had ever seen promulgated before. I really was surprised at myself for not knowing more about the background and efforts of your association than I did, because for years and years I have taken a very particular interest in your people and worked diligently for them along educational lines in particular.

The founders of your group had seen the light and seen it clearly many, many years ago and to them goes the credit for the courage they had in facing false gods and laying down a doctrine which you people could follow out with a proud feeling of anticipation that it would lead to success.

The last 8 years under this administration have given a great impetus toward that goal. The sound doctrines of your founders are netting results. In my travels over the country—and I travel much—I see it on every side, and the great spirit and results of your success I believe is clearly exemplified by this audience here today and the convention it represents. I am sure that my great leader, General Farley, has made the same observation, because we have often discussed it.

I think it quite fitting at this particular time to pay my highest respects to the Rosenwall Foundation and the great work they are doing throughout my section of this country for the members of your race. I mention it particularly because it originated in this great city and operates from here as headquarters, and I only wish that there were a dozen other similar foundations who would conduct themselves on such a high plane and expend their funds and energy for the promotion of your people.

I wish every one of you could visit with me in the State of Georgia and see the work they are doing there. I happen to be a member of the board of regents of the university system of my State, and the Rosenwall Foundation has enabled us in the last 5 years to build up three complete units of junior college activities for the Negroes. They have further enabled us to expand every class of social and educational facilities which we had mapped out in our program. I mention this in passing because I wanted you to know that I especially appreciate the tremendous amount of constructive work there is to be done and that I can see so clearly how your great association can and will play a leading part in this work.

I am not here to make you an address, because the great chairman of our Democratic National Convention, Senator GUFFEY, and others will do that in a way I could not even approach, but I did want to come here (1) as a citizen of the United States and congratulate you and your leaders on the sound and sensible way in which they are approaching your problems. As a southerner, born and raised in the South, I have been traveling in every nook and corner of this country, and I think I can appreciate this work as much, if not more, than the average citizen.

(2) I am here as secretary of the Democratic National Committee to bring to you an added word of welcome and to let you know how much we value your efforts in our party and the great fight you are carrying on. I am well acquainted with many leaders of your group, and they well know that I am accessible at all times when it comes to you and your people.

You will no doubt find, if you will notice carefully, many honorary assistant secretaries among your group which very clearly should indicate how I feel.

I thank you again for having invited me here and for this opportunity to appear before you even for just a brief moment.

I thank you and again thank your able president, Dr. Thompkins.

ADDRESS OF HON. WILLIAM J. THOMPKINS, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL COLORED DEMOCRATIC ASSOCIATION

Fellow Democrats, it becomes my pleasure at this time to bring you greetings from the President of the United States, his wife, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee and Postmaster General of the United States, the Honorable James A. Farley, and a host of Members of both Houses of Congress.

I am happy to announce at this time that on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock the Honorable James A. Farley will be the principal speaker. He will be accompanied by the secretary of the Democratic National Committee, Mr. Lawrence Wood Robert, Jr., the majority leader of the Senate, Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY; the majority whip of the Senate, Hon. SHERMAN MINTON; those staunch new dealers, Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, Senator HARRY S. TRUMAN, Senator ELMER THOMAS, Congressman JENNINGS RANDOLPH, Congressman JACK NICHOLS, and many others who have indicated that they would be present for our gigantic mass meeting Sunday afternoon.

We have come a long way since this organization was incorporated in 1892 by a group of Missouri Democrats. Our progress is indicated by the large number of delegates here in attendance, representing hundreds of clubs scattered throughout 37 States, having a total membership of 1,800,000.

We meet here in Chicago, one of the greatest and most liberal cities in the West, to think together, work together, and act together in an effort to adopt a great and liberal program which, if adopted and adhered to, will emancipate the Negro from economic and social slavery that is now common to him.

As is stated in your convention call and manual, when such a program is adopted by this organization, a delegation representing it will call upon the resolutions committee of the Democratic National Convention and seek to have our wishes incorporated in the great platform that it is expected the national convention will adopt. If we are successful in having incorporated into the Democratic platform a plank which sets forth the party's promises to the Negroes of this country it will be the first time this has been accomplished in the history of the Democratic Party. Indeed, it will be history for the National Colored Democratic Association. I am confident that this association will be successful in making that history, for we have demonstrated to the Democratic Party our political strength. We have demonstrated to them that we believe in party loyalty the same as any other group, and it is our belief that when the party platform is read to the convention for adoption it will have planks contained therein to safeguard the welfare and protect the interests of all races, all creeds, and all colors.

There are those of you with us today who are joining hands with us for the first time. We welcome you with outstretched arms. We stated in our call for this convention that our doors stood ajar to all Negro Democrats and urged all Negro Democrats to join with us in putting over a program which will reflect credit upon ourselves and upon the Democratic Party, of which we are an important part. We believe in the saying that more music makes the band play sweeter still.

No doubt some of you have heard it said, since you have been in Chicago, that this is a "Jim Crow" organization. This accusation is being perpetuated by a gentleman from Alabama whom we all know has never raised his voice to end segregation since he has been in a position of influence. We all know that it was this same Alabama gentleman who has repeatedly advocated a "Jim Crow" industrial commission; we all know that this same Alabama gentleman sponsored in Congress an appropriation bill of $75,000 for a "Jim Crow" expedition. This same Alabama gentleman was one of the directors of the Negro Democratic campaign in 1936, and I understand is an aspirant to direct the Negro campaign in 1940.

I would like to raise this question: When in this land of the free and home of the brave have Negroes reached the point that it is blasphemy for them to assemble themselves together to work out the problems most peculiar to them? By what other means can any minority group of any race, creed, or color, expect to aid their cause without themselves striking the first blow? No Negro, whether he be a Congressman, judge, recorder of deeds, or whatnot, can expect to bring economic, political, and social justice to his race by going off by himself, expounding what he believes, as an individual, will enhance the progress of 15,000,000 people. The problems confronting our race are not the problems of one man; and their solutions are not the responsibility of one man, nor can they be solved by one man. The strength of the wolf is in the pack; the strength of the Negro comes from organization. Through organization and only organization can the Negro hope to reach the degree of strength wherein he can demand equal civil rights.

Organization of all forces is what brought success to our great party in 1932 and again in 1936. Organization is the only thing that will bring success to the party in 1940. If a party can win by organization, so can a race.

Look at the condition of the Negro Republicans today. Due to their bickering, their selfishness, each thinking in terms of self rather than in terms of the whole, our race lost under Republican administrations every important position of trust and influence that Negroes ever held. The Republican Party was never able to get Negro Republicans to come together and agree on any one thing for the advancement of the race. Let not the Negro Democrats be guilty of the offense of selfishness; let us put up a solid and united front before our party for those things that will bring prosperity and civil rights to our race. Negroes are not foolish enough to believe that the solutions to the problems of a race of 15,000,000 people are held in the hands of one Alabama gentleman or any other individual.

In speaking of this organization by these critics, might we say that the pioneers of democracy have come up through the sweat of blood. We were down in Houston, Tex., in 1928 with three members and with the citizens of Houston furnishing the background, adhering to the tradition of holding our national quadrennial session while the Negroes who are complaining now were in the Republican ranks sponsoring the cause of Hoover and came over gradually to our organization as independents. We who went to Houston, Tex., remember that we were scoffed at by the Negro political leaders of New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, who could not condescend to attend a National Democratic Convention in Texas, but we went and will continue to go. Wherever democracy goes we go.

Now that the organization has grown, we are to be criticized by those who attend Negro churches, Negro schools, Negro N. A. A. C. P.'s, Negro clubs, Negro bathing beaches, Negro Y. M. C. A.'s, Negro lodges, and Negro hotels. If the few of us had not formed the reception committee these 24 delegates who are here by our efforts would not have found their way into the Democratic Party. We shall continue our efforts to bring the Negroes of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, South Carolina, Texas, and Arkansas into the folds, and we shall not pause; we shall not abdicate until black men of the South can share in every phase of enfranchisement, until peace and political tranquillity shall preside over every Negro fireside of the South, as well as the North. To this our association has dedicated itself. In this we shall not fail.

Through our organization we are constantly winning back the positions once held by us, but which were lost through the bungling of Negro Republicans. We are able to win them back because we are together and know what we want. Not only have we begun to win back our lost portfolios but we are gaining new ground.

For the first time in the history of this country a Negro sits on the Federal bench at a salary of $10,000 per year. We occupy positions of trust in every branch of the Government in larger numbers than ever before. Through our organization we have been able to win for Negro Democrats a Congressman, State senator, and alderman in Illinois; assemblyman and judges in New York; legislators, magistrates, and tax commissioner in Pennsylvania; State senator and representative in Michigan; representative and councilmen in Indiana; justice of the peace and constables in Missouri; justice of the peace in North Carolina; justice of the peace in Oklahoma; legislators in California, and numerous other positions, both appointive and elective, which attest the progress not only made by the National Colored Democratic Association, but also indicates the depth from which it has come.

Through our organization we have coming here to the Democratic National Convention two dozen Negro delegates and alternates; we have Negroes who have been appointed to positions in the convention of assistant to the secretary, assistant secretaries, doorkeepers, ushers, special officers, and every other position held by members of the other race. I ask you in all frankness and sincerity could one lone Negro Democrat have brought this to pass? No. It is the result of the joint effort of Negro Democrats from all over the country, who for the past 48 years have been meeting in quadrennial sessions just like this one, waiting for the day when it had grown to sufficient strength to merit the considerations which we are now enjoying.

None of us need be ashamed of our affiliation with the Democratic Party; as a matter of fact, we all should feel proud that we are members of a party that has given to this country a man of stature, a statesman, a humanitarian, a great benefactor—Franklin D. Roosevelt. No President since the administration of George Washington has kept the faith with the people as has President Roosevelt. Never before in the history of this Government has the Negro shared in the phases of the Government as he has under the New Deal administration of the Democratic Party.

Confronted with the worst depression and panic this country has ever seen, and brought about as a result of the horrible mistakes of three successive Republican administrations, our great President set about to bring calm out of chaos by every means at his disposal. With unlimited power granted him by the Congress, and with the universal approval of the citizens of this country, he began to use the Nation's credit to relieve the distressed, to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, and to house the homeless. No one said anything then about the Budget; no one cared, not even the Republicans, because they were just as poverty-stricken and in need as anyone else. We were not as interested in a balanced budget as we were in a balanced ration. Our rations have been balanced; the hungry are being fed; the naked are being clothed; the homeless are being housed; the illiterate are being taught to read and write; the idle are being put back to work; the delinquent boys are being given pensions; persons becoming unemployed are receiving unemployment insurance. The country has been removed from Wall Street and once again restored to the American people.

Are we going to return the Government back to the Wall Street gang, the utility magnates, and others of the group who are responsible for the mess that was dumped into the Democrats' lap in 1932. No. We are going to see to it that this country remains a country of the people, by the people, and for the people, and not a country of Willkie, by Willkie, and for Willkie.

Permit me to pay my respect to another great Democrat, who during the last two campaigns led this great party of ours to overwhelming victory—the Honorable James A. Farley. He is a man who understands the problems of all minority groups, and no one has done more than he to help these groups solve those problems. He is a man who graces every cause he espouses, dignifies every task he touches, ennobles every duty he performs—a man of vision, courage, and character. His realization of the part the Negro played in the two Democratic successes, his policy of being fair to all members of the party, his belief that the one who helps plow the corn should help eat it, is responsible for the thousands of Negroes now on the Government pay roll. Negroes have never had a better friend and Democrats have never had a better leader than James A. Farley.

Fellow Democrats, we have a great task before us. But there is no mountain that cannot be surmounted. There is no failure except in no longer trying; there is no defeat except from within; no really insurmountable barrier save our own inherent weakness of purpose.

Let us all rally together, work together, pull together for the good of our race, for the good of our party, for the good of our country. May God bless our great leader and give him strength to carry on his humanitarian fight of equal justice to all, special privileges to none.

ADDRESS BY HON. SHERMAN MINTON, OF INDIANA

Dr. Thompkins, distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen, there are two classes of speakers on the program today—those who have a prepared manuscript and those who are just to speak. I belong to the latter class, and it may seem strange to you to see a United States Senator who does not want to talk.

I am glad and delighted to have the opportunity to come here this afternoon and to meet with you in your convention and to greet you.

As Dr. Thompkins has told you, during my present service in the Senate of the United States I have supported everything that the colored people stood for—supported those measures because I wanted to, because I knew that what they stood for was right.

This morning when your own Earl Dickerson appeared before the resolutions committee and made his splendid statement on your behalf I was proud of him; he acquitted himself well, and I can say that the resolutions committee, of which I am a member, will give your request their earnest consideration. You asked no more than what you are entitled to; and I for one can assure you that I shall do everything within my power to see to it that you get what you ask for. There is no administration in the history of this great country of ours that has done so much for the colored people as the Democratic Party under this present administration. I am glad to be a member of that party and to assure you as a representative member of that party that the Democratic Party is not done yet. We intend to see that the colored man and woman is recognized and given the right of the ballot; we intend to see that they are given every opportunity to serve in the armed forces of this Nation. Why shouldn't you? Your are citizens. And the Democratic Party is proud to have your support.

This is a critical period in the history of our country. We do not know at what moment we may be challenged to take up arms in defense of our Nation; and I have been sitting as a member of the great committee of the United States Senate that has under consideration some of these problems. There are many persons who give excuses and apologies for not wanting to take up the arms of their country if the opportunity should present itself, but I can say that there has never been a member of your race who appeared before that committee and asked to be excused from bearing the arms.

We do not want war in this country, and we are not for war, if war will stay away from us; but we are definitely for defending the shores of America; and you are for that; you believe in being prepared to defend these shores. That is all that the Democratic Party is trying to do.

I am glad to be talking to Americans and I can say that if war should come, I and the American people will find as they have in the past the members of your race marching in the four columns and there will not be, nor has there been, any colored people marching in the "fifth column." You are loyal, and I say that the Democratic Party means to be loyal to you, and I believe that if one should peruse the record of this administration they would conclude that all citizens, regardless of race and creed, have been treated with fairness.

And so my friends I know you for what you are—as loyal American citizens who have done much for the life and welfare of the American nation and the principles of freedom, and if there is any one thing that makes the colored man stand out it is his loyalty to his country.

I know that you are going to rally around the standard of democracy because you people came from the common walks of life and I know the things that worry you and things that are of great concern to the colored people of this country. I know that you have a right to live as any other American citizen and the Democratic Party has tried to give you that right. And I know and you know that your race has the greatest friend that you have ever had in the White House today—the greatest friend to the colored people in the history of America. You are loyal to your friends and it is because of your honor and loyalty that I know that the colored man is not going to stand for the attempt to transfer the government of this country from Main Street back to Wall Street. We will have none of Wall Street Willkie.

Coming as I do from the State of Indiana, where Mr. Willkie lives, I know Mr. Willkie. I know him well. I went to school back in Indiana with Mr. Willkie; I was on the university debating team with him and I think some of my colored friends will remember Mr. Willkie. You know Willkie comes from Elwood, Ind., and you (colored people) have to have a special permit for colored people to come there—and that is the way the Republicans can conduct their town in Indiana. There is one thing that I can say and that is this—you do not have to have any visas on that permit to get to the Democratic nominee.

You know that I know Willkie; they call him Wendell Willkie—Willkie on the wrong side of everything. He can change his position as fast as Joe Louis can shift. This is the only respect in which he resembles Joe Louis: he is shifty, that's all—always changing. As I say, I know him, but when I knew him his name was Louis W. Wilkie and he spelled it with one "l" and now its Wendell Willkie—with two "l's". He has even shifted his name. When he was in school he was the leader of the antifraternity men. But what did he do later? He joined a fraternity—Willkie always changing.

I knew him when he was a Socialist and I have known him when he was a capitalist; I knew him when he was a Democrat and that was not very long ago—and he was not all right then. He was then as he is now—"A Wall Streeter." Then he was not all right and so I checked up with the papers the other day. They gave his religion as a Presbyterian, but when he lived in Indiana he was a Methodist—just on each side of each question, social, business, and political. He is therefore worthy to run on the Republican platform. They (Republicans) look in all directions and cover everything.

Now, Dr. Tompkins, I am delighted to be here this afternoon to assure you all my friendship and good will and I hope that with the support of your friends in Indiana that I may go back to the United States Senate and represent you for 6 more years.

ADDRESS OF ROBERT I. MILLER, PRESIDENT OF THE ROOSEVELT REPUBLICAN CLUB OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dr. Thompkins, distinguished guests, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, when I say ladies and gentlemen of the jury I mean that you are, this coming election, going to act as a part of the American jury to determine from the evidence whether or not our great President shall get 4 more years at Washington. I am satisfied that your verdict will be guilty and that each and every one of you will do all in your power to see that he stays in the White House.

It was very gratifying to me to hear General Farley, Senator BARKLEY, Senator MINTON, Senator GUFFEY, and Congressman RANDOLPH eulogize our great President. If time permitted, I could stand here on this platform and say many kind things about the President and his administration, but the speakers who preceded me have been clear, concise, and convincing in their remarks for President Roosevelt and his administration. I want you to know that there is someone else in Washington who deserves your utmost praise and support; that is our gallant lady, Eleanor Roosevelt. You know that when Marian Anderson, the nightingale of the air, was refused permission to sing at the Convention Hall and was snubbed by the Daughters of the American Revolution, that grand lady, Mrs. Roosevelt, through her fine efforts, arranged it so that she sang from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. So you can see that the Lady of the Land deserves high praise for her fine efforts.

I have been a Republican all of my life and closely associated with the late Vice President Curtis for many years, and the last 3 years of his life I was associated with him in the practice of law. I have again organized the Roosevelt Republican Club to help the President this fall.

I could not be partisan from a political standpoint in these trying days of our country. We should all glory in the fact that we have a man in the White House whose experience is such that he can steer the ship of state from the rocky cliffs that are just ahead and bring it into waters of calmness, peace, and happiness. There were no partisan politics in 1776, and there should be none in 1940.

I therefore beseech all who believe in America, the America that brought forth the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution with its amendments, which gives to all the right of freedom of expression, the freedom of the press, and the freedom to worship an Almighty who guides the destiny of all, to reelect Franklin D. Roosevelt.

And in conclusion, I ask everyone of you in this audience to pray to the Almighty to give our great President his health and strength so that he may carry on the good and fine work he is doing for our country.

There Are No Islands Any More

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

POEM BY EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD a poem written by Edna St. Vincent Millay, entitled "There Are No Islands Any More."

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THERE ARE NO ISLANDS ANY MORE"

Lines written in passion and in deep concern for England, France, and my own country

(By Edna St. Vincent Millay)

Dear Isolationist, you are
So very, very insular!
Surely you do not take offense?
The word's well used in such a sense.
'Tis you, not I, who insist
You are an Isolationist.

And, oh, how sweet a thing to be Safe on an island, not at sea!
(Though someone said, some months ago—
I heard him, and he seemed to know;
Was it the German Chancelor?
"There are no islands any more.")

Dear Islander, I envy you:
I'm very fond of islands, too;
And few the pleasures I have known
Which equaled being left alone.
Yet matters from without intrude
At times upon my solitude:
A forest fire, a dog run mad,
A neighbor stripped of all he had
By swindlers, or the shrieking plea
For help, of stabbed Democracy.

Started, I rise, run from the room,
Join the brigade of spade and broom;
Help to surround the sickened beast;
Hear the account of farms fleeced
By dapper men, condole, and give Something to help them hope and live;

Or, if democracy's at stake,
Give more, give more than I can make;
And notice, with a rueful grin,
What was without is not within.

(The tidal wave devours the shore:
There are no islands any more.)

With sobbing breath, with blistered hands,
Men fight the forest fire in bands;
With kitchen broom, with branch of pine,
Beat at the blackened, treacherous line;
Before the veering wind fall back,
With eyebrows burnt and faces black;
While breast in blackened streams perspire,
Watch how the wind runs with the fire
Like a broad banner up the hill—
And can no more * * * yet more must still.

New life!—To hear across the field
Voices of neighbors, forms concealed
By smoke, but loud the nearing shout:
"Hold on! We're coming! Here it's out."

(The tidal wave devours the shore:
There are no islands any more.)

This little life, from here to there—
Who lives it safely anywhere?
Not you, my insulated friend:
What calm composure will defend
Your rock, when tides you've never seen
Assault the sands of What-has-been
And from your island's tallest tree,
You watch advance What-is-to-be?
(The tidal wave devours the shore:
There are no islands any more.)

Sweet, sweet, to see the tide approach,
Assured that it cannot encroach
Upon the beach-peas, often wet
With spray, never uprooted yet.
The moon said—did she not speak true?—
"The waves will not awaken you.
At my command the waves retire.
Sleep, weary mind; dream, heart's desire."

And yet, there was a Danish king
Assured he governed everything
He bade the ocean not to rise.
It did. And great was the surprise.

No man, no nation, is made free
By stating it intends to be.
Jostled and elbowed is the clown
Who thinks to walk alone in town.

We live upon a shrinking sphere—
Like it or not, our home is here;
Brave heart, uncompromising brain
Couldn't make it seem like home again.

(There are no islands any more.
The tide that mounts our drowsy shore
Is boats and men—there is no place
For waves in such a crowded space.)

Oh, let us give, before too late
To those who hold our country's fate
Along with theirs—be sure of this—
In grimy hands—that will not miss

The target, if we stand beside Loading the guns—(resentment, pride,
Debts town across with insolent word—
All this forgotten, or deferred

At least until there's time for strife
Concerning things less dear than Life;
Then let, if must be, in the brain
Resentment rankle once again,
Quibbling and Squabbling take the floor,
Cool Judgment go to sleep once more.)

On English soil, on French terrain,
Democracy's at grips again
With forces forged to stamp it out.
This time no quarter!—since no doubt.

Not France, not England's what's involved,
Not we,—there's something to be solved
Of grave concern to free men all:

Can Freedom stand? Must Freedom fall?
(Meantime, the tide devours the shore:
There are no islands any more.)

Oh, build, assemble, transport, give,
That England, France, and we may live,
Before tonight, before too late,
To those who build our country's fate
In desperate fingers, reaching out
For weapons we confer about,
All that we can, and more, and now!
Oh, God, let not the lovely brow
Of Freedom in the trampled mud
Grow cold! Have we no brains, no blood,
No enterprise—no any thing
Of which we proudly talk and sing,
Which we like men can bring to bear
For Freedom, and against Despair?

Lest French and British fighters, deep
In battle, needing guns and sleep,
For lack of aid be overthrown,
And we be left to fight alone.

Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACES' FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD five editorials from Wallaces'

Farmer on the subject of the foreign policy of the United States.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallaces' Farmer of June 18, 1938]

GET OUR PEOPLE OUT OF WAR ZONE

The United States is taking too many risks in the Chino-Japanese war. Those risks need not be taken. The fact that they are being taken is the direct responsibility of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull.

Corn Belt farmers, like Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead, dislike to make such charges against the President and the Secretary of State. Both are good friends of agriculture. They have done much to raise and stabilize farm income since 1933. But even the best of men have their blind spots.

The Chinese situation seems to be the blind spot for the Roosevelt administration. Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead has pointed this out before.

The United States still has troops and warships in China and in Chinese waters. They run the risks that all innocent bystanders run who foolishly walk through a riot. The sinking of the Panay showed what could happen.

Our soldiers in China are too few to do any fighting and too many to be killed. Let's bring them home.

Our neutrality law forbids the shipment of munitions of war to nations at war. Certainly China and Japan are at war, even though Japan calls it something else. But the neutrality law has not yet been invoked to bar shipments of munitions to both countries.

It has been rumored that our State Department doesn't want to use the neutrality law because it might help Japan and might hurt China. What business is that of ours? We are not an ally of China nor an enemy of Japan. We are neutral. Let's put the neutrality law to work and stay neutral.

If we do not do this, a Japanese warship will sooner or later stop or sink an American ship loaded with contraband of war and bound for China. And the yellow press will howl about national honor and scream for war.

Under the Neutrality Act, properly enforced, no munitions would be sold to either Japan or China. And if there seemed danger to American shipping in handling other goods, those goods could be sold by us at the water's edge to whatever foreign shipper wanted to take the risk of transport.

Up to date, we have been very lucky in this Chino-Japanese affair. We have only lost one warship and a few men. We have had no merchant ships sunk.

But we can't trust that luck to continue. Unless we want an excuse to fight Japan, let's get our troops, ships, and citizens out of China. And let's enforce the Neutrality Act!

[From Wallaces' Farmer of November 4, 1939]

TO VOTE ON GOING INTO WAR

Iowa farmers are apparently friendly to the idea behind the Ludlow amendment, the plan to make a national vote necessary before the Nation engages in a war overseas. Our survey, reported on page 8, shows 57 percent of Iowa farm people in favor of it, 26 percent against, and 17 percent doubtful.

Wallaces' Farmer and Iowa Homestead would agree with Iowa farmers in a mild approval of the desirability of a referendum as a last-ditch defense against war. It might give the Nation a final chance to draw back from the precipice.

But actually we fear the issue of war or peace would be settled long before the referendum would be taken. The day-to-day decisions of the administration, the speeches on one side or the other, the warnings, the note-writing, the propaganda of the press, the impact of events overseas—all these things determine the mood of the country long before a vote is called for.

That is why the Neutrality Act seems to us so important. If we keep away credits from foreign buyers, if we keep our ships out of the war zone, and if we keep our citizens off belligerent ships and out of dangerous territory, there is a chance of avoiding the incidents that make nations see red.

We would do still better if we limited exports of all kinds to the amounts normally shipped in times of peace, and avoided any economic dependence on a war boom. And we would be particularly wise if we could bring ourselves to look on the war as just another struggle to see who is to run Europe, and not as another war "to save the world for democracy." We should have learned in 1918 that war doesn't save democracy; war ruins democracies and creates dictatorships.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of October 7, 1939]

WHAT ABOUT THOSE NINE BILLIONS?

How much do Great Britain and France owe the United States in unpaid debts hanging over from the first World War? The total is considerably over $9,000,000,000, with Great Britain owing us five and France four billions. Neither country has made any serious effort to pay on the principal, and both stopped paying even interest several years ago. American taxpayers are paying the interest on the bonds that financed these loans, and will eventually have to pay the principal.

There will be suggestions soon that the United States ought to lend these countries more money, or at least that these nations should be allowed to sell their bonds in the United States. It might be a good idea to wait until they pay off the old debts before handing over any more cash.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of February 11, 1939]

WHAT GUAM MEANS TO FARMERS

Iowa farmers will be seeing a lot in the newspapers about Guam shortly. From an insignificant little island part way from Hawaii to the Philippines, it has turned into a major issue in the congressional debates on war and neutrality.

The Navy board, in its report on naval bases, said quite properly that whether the United States fortified Guam was a question of national policy. But it intimated that a fortified Guam would help greatly in defending the Philippines, and would be a threat to Japan and to any expeditionary force from Japan headed toward the Philippines.

The question before Congress, therefore, really is not on fortifying Guam but on what we want to do about the Philippines.

The Nation is already on record for returning the islands to the control of their own people. The Philippines, by our own act, are on the way to independence.

Now what do we want to do? Four courses are possible:

1. Stand by Philippine independence and assume no responsibility for the defense of the islands.

2. Stand by Philippine independence but secure an agreement with Great Britain, Australia, France, and the Netherlands (all these powers are strong in that area), guaranteeing the independence of the islands.

3. Abandon Philippine independence, treat the islands as American soil, and prepare to defend them.

4. Permit the Philippines to be half-way independent, but be prepared to go to war to defend them if necessary.

The question really boils down to this: Is the United States ready to go to war to protect the Philippines if the islands are threatened by Japan?

From the naval standpoint, defense of the islands is a big order. It means a much bigger Navy than we have now. It means expensive naval bases, not only on Guam, but on the islands themselves.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives which provides for additional defense of Guam. A fortified Guam is not needed to defend the United States. It is needed only if the United States has made up its mind to defend the Philippines as if they were American property.

But has the United States made up its mind? We think not. And we are sure it is ridiculous to start spending money for defense before we have made up our minds what we want to defend.

We all know that we want adequate defense for the continental United States and for the Panama Canal. Most people—including military and naval authorities—are doubtful about defending the Philippines.

Then why not spend our money where we are sure we want to spend it, and hold up appropriations for Guam and other far eastern points until the Nation makes up its mind whether it really wants to get ready for a war with Japan over the Philippine Islands?

[From Wallaces' Farmer of June 15, 1940]

DEFENSE TAKES MORE THAN GUNS AND PLANES

"Cut out all those farm appropriations." That has been the first response of some reactionaries to the movement to re-arm the Nation in accordance with the new methods of warfare uncovered in Europe.

We can expect to see a determined drive, not only to cut out farm appropriations, but to abolish Federal expenditures for relief, education, health, housing, and the like, and to abandon national planning for social ends.

Yet one of the important items in a defense program is to have a nation which affords such good opportunities for work and security that men and women will be willing to struggle and, if necessary, to die for it.

Take a man who has been out of a job for years, or a farm tenant who was crowded off his farm. They must see something better in store for their children before they can work and fight with spirit for the defense of our society.

Mr. Willkie's Stand on Draft

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SHERMAN MINTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE PHILADELPHIA RECORD

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Philadelphia Record of Friday, August 30, 1940, under the heading "Wilkie's Stand on Draft To Aid F. D. R.—GUFFEY."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of August 30, 1940]

WILLKIE'S STAND ON DRAFT TO AID F. D. R.—GUFFEY—SENATOR SAYS POSITION ON PLANT SEIZURE ASSURES ROOSEVELT VICTORY

(By Thomas P. O'Neil)

Senator JOSEPH F. GUFFEY last night declared that Wendell Willkie's stand against conscription of industry assures the re-election of President Roosevelt.

GUFFEY, Pennsylvania's No. 1 new dealer, here for a political conference, said:

"There must be no draft-dodging dollars in America.

"If we can draft American boys to safeguard our liberties we can draft our American dollars to back them up."

GUFFEY FOR IT

"I voted to draft the boys and I voted to draft the dollars.

"Wendell Willkie, the wallflower of Wall Street, by his stand in favor of drafting American boys but not American dollars, has made the issue of this campaign clear. It is the old story: Human rights against property rights.

"I predict here and now that the Willkie philosophy will be repudiated in Pennsylvania by a margin of upward of 600,000 next November. In the Nation he will be another Landon.

"Wendell Willkie's policy of draft the boys but not the dollars assures the reelection of Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

STANDS ON RECORD

GUFFEY, who is being opposed for reelection by Republican City Chairman Jay Cooke, added that "on my vote on the draft bill, plus my 6-year record of 100-percent support of the Roosevelt New Deal, I am willing to stand or fall in my campaign."

The Senator said he will not open his campaign until mid-September, but will make an important political address tomorrow at Lakewood Park, near Pottsville, Schuylkill County.

GUFFEY conferred with his campaign manager, Luther Harr, at the Ritz Carlton Hotel, but had no comment to make on local or State political affairs. It was learned, however, that the Senator is in favor of withholding distribution of important Federal jobs in Pennsylvania, including the United States district attorneyship here, until after the November election.

DECISION DELAYED

"I may have something to say about the Philadelphia Federal prosecutor's place in Washington after the holiday," was all that GUFFEY would say.

Principal contenders for the position are State Senator Harry Shapiro and former United States Attorney General Gerald A. Gleeson, both of whom supported GUFFEY for renomination last spring when he defeated Turnpike Commissioner Walter A. Jones.

GUFFEY was the first nationally known new dealer to take a rap at Willkie's opposition to the industrial draft.

The Pennsylvania Senator was one of the first Members of Congress to openly declare himself against sending American soldiers to Europe.

NATION ACCLAIMS

In a speech at the Labor Lyceum here, April 9, he declared:

"I would never vote to send a single American boy overseas to fight in a foreign war."

His declaration won Nation-wide acclaim.

GUFFEY was a leader in the drive to include in the draft bill provision that service should be limited to the Western Hemisphere.

Plain Economics

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

ARTICLE BY JOHN T. FLYNN

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, about 2 years ago, I began to feel that the time would come, the time being conjectural, when there would be another World War in Europe and great effort made to interest Americans to the extent of again participating in an affair that was no business of ours. As a result I thereafter from time to time took occasion to warn the American people that propagandists would simply flood this country with a view to getting us into a European war when it did come. Before and since September 3, 1939, when war was formally declared in Europe, we have been deluged with propaganda on every hand and from every direction—through the press, over the radio, by the newspaper columnists, radio commentators, organizations, and lecturers from foreign shores. They have put in their deadly work unquestionably. In this particular connection I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by the pen of Mr. John T. Flynn which recently appeared in the columns of the Washington Daily News under the heading of "Plain Economics."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News]

PLAIN ECONOMICS

(By John T. Flynn)

NEW YORK, August 29.—There is nothing surprising in the declaration by Senator BURTON K. WHEELER that Sir George Paish boasted to him that he had helped to get America into the last war and was going to do the same thing now.

Sir George Paish is not unknown in America. He is one of a group of British economists—Sir Arthur Salter is another—who are continuously used as unofficial agents of the British Government whenever it has a bill of goods to sell to the United States.

This writer has been calling attention to the arrival and activities of these gentlemen for a number of years. There are four of them, and I have several times referred to them as the "four economic horsemen of the British Government."

England has had a number of requests to make of this country since the last war. A leading one, of course, has been cancelation of her $4,000,000,000 war debt to us. At intervals Sir George Paish or Sir Arthur Salter or several other British economists appear here. They never come as representatives of the British Government. They come as economists.

In America an economist is merely a poor student or teacher, with nothing but his professorial title to distinguish him. But in England an economist who has propaganda talents can be made a knight—"Sir George" or "Sir Arthur."

When he arrives here, thus decorated, he is promptly taken up, feted, dined, wined, introduced by American allies to the circles he wishes most to influence. He delivers lectures to colleges, chambers of commerce, business groups, learned societies, industriously infecting them with the particular virus he carries. One of these economist propagandists is Sir George Paish.

In the last war England spent $265,000,000 for propaganda in America. Does anyone suppose she is spending less now? And what she wants is, first, to get America to commit an act of war of some sort against Germany and to bring about repeal of the Johnson law, which prevents loans to debtors in default to the United States.

If the United States turns over part of her Navy—50 destroyers—to Britain now, that will be an act of war against Germany. That is being urged in Congress and on the President. Also, Congress is being asked to consider a plan by which Britain will turn over a group of bases in this hemisphere and we will cancel the war debt—$4,000,000,000.

Who do you suppose cooked up these two schemes? Does anyone suppose that they originated in the minds of American supporters of England? Or did they blossom in the minds of the British Government, to be planted in the minds of American statesmen by British agents like Sir George Paish?

This incident brings Sir George Paish into the limelight. Why not identify and expose all the other agents, British and German, who are trying to implicate us one way or another on their respective sides?

America Finances Japan's "New Order"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ARTICLE BY HENRY H. DOUGLAS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I insert in the Appendix an article from Amerasia for the month of July 1940.

It is self-explanatory. The article was written by Henry H. Douglas, who is a student of oriental affairs.

The article is as follows:

[From the Amerasia for July 1940]

AMERICA FINANCES JAPAN'S "NEW ORDER"

(By Henry H. Douglas)

The United States has not only continued to send immense quantities of war materials to Japan for the prosecution of its war on China, but it may also be said that Japan's aggression has been largely financed by American money.

The gold and silver purchases of the United States Treasury have, in large measure, assisted Japan in her war on the Chinese people and in the financing of Japan's so-called "New Order in East Asia." Many millions of dollars worth of gold and silver have been converted into dollar balances here and used to finance purchases of arms and raw materials from the United States and Europe, principally from the United States. Not only have we furnished Japan the means with which to buy these war materials, but we have furnished them in unlimited quantities, even to the detriment of our own defense requirements. These war materials, in 1939, constituted over 70 percent of all our exports to Japan.

We have aided Japan by our gold- and silver-buying policies, by our wheat and cotton subsidies, by the acceptance of the Japanese valuation of cotton goods shipped into this country, and in other ways.

During the 3 years, 1937–39, the United States purchased $580,816,000 worth of gold from Japan at the very handsome price of $35 an ounce. The world price being $20.67 an ounce, Japan naturally was glad to sell all her extra gold to us. In view of the disparity between our price and the world price, in this item alone, we made an outright gift to the Japanese of $240,000,000.

The total silver bought directly from Japan during this same 3-year period was:

	Ounces	Amount
1937	2,872,000	$1,273,000
1938	6,887,000	2,929,000
1939	10,618,000	4,234,000
	20,377,000	8,436,000

As is readily apparent, there was a sharp rise in American silver purchases from Japan during this period, the 1939 figure showing an increase of 270 percent compared with imports for 1937, and 54 percent compared with imports for 1938. This increase coincides directly with the course of Japan's war on China and her increasing need for foreign exchange.

In addition to these direct imports, there were indirect purchases of Japanese silver by the United States via the London market. Handy & Harman, one of the foremost authorities on precious metals, estimates Japanese sales of silver to the United Kingdom at about:

	Ounces
1937	21,579,000
1938	18,500,000
1939	15,000,000
	55,079,000

No doubt a major portion of this silver was finally resold to the United States. In 1937, 43 percent of the total British silver exports went to the United States, in 1938 the proportion was 90 percent, and in 1939 it was 58 percent (the 58 percent being based on data for the first 8 months). Assuming that practically all the silver imports into the United Kingdom were finally reexported, as is indicated by a virtual balance between their imports and exports over the last 10 years, that part of the imports from Japan which was resold to the United States may be roughly calculated as approximately amounting to the same percentages as the above. The value of this Japanese silver resold to the United States by the United Kingdom would then have a value of $14,762,000, the yearly quantities being:

	Ounces
1937	9,279,000
1938	16,650,000
1939	8,700,000

Totaling the amount of silver thus bought from Japan by the United States, directly and indirectly, we have:

	Ounces	Amount
1937	12,151,000	$5,438,000
1938	23,537,000	10,126,000
1939	19,318,000	7,634,000
	55,006,000	23,198,000

It has been generally known that a goodly proportion of the silver sold by Japan during the past 3 years was of Chinese origin. This Chinese silver was acquired by Japan either through distressed selling by the Chinese, or by forcible seizure from Chinese banks, business houses, private homes, and peasants' farms in the occupied territories. This silver amounted to at least 12,000,000 ounces (U. S. $5,386,000) in 1937; 15,212,000 ounces (U. S. $6,575,000) in 1938; 15,118,000 ounces (U. S. $5,908,000) in 1939; making a total for the 3-year period of 42,330,000 ounces at a value of $17,869,000. These estimated figures have been arrived at by deducting from total Japanese silver exports to the United Kingdom and the United States the Japanese domestic mine production, as shown in the following table:

	Ounces
Total mine production, 1937–39	33,126,000
Exports to the United States	20,377,000
Exports to the United Kingdom	55,079,000
Total to United States and United Kingdom	75,456,000
Silver of Chinese origin:
Excess of total exports over domestic production (value $17,869,000)	42,330,000

Quantity ratio of silver of Chinese origin to total exports makes an average, for the 3 years, of 56 percent.

It is also quite obvious, now that the Japanese and the British have come to an agreement over the 50,000,000 ounces of Chinese silver in the Tientsin banks, that the United States Treasury is going to pay the Japanese about $20,000,000 in valuable foreign exchange for the privilege of storing it in one of our fool-proof vaults. This silver-buying policy of the United States not only confers a gratuitous subsidy on Japan, but adds insult to injury to the Chinese, not to mention the insult to the sentiments of over 80 percent of the American people who have repeatedly expressed their opposition to any participation in Japan's aggression.

The injury to China resulted from America's buying policy which nearly doubled the price of silver. Though Chinese silver stocks were accordingly boosted in value, our policy at the same time raised the value, in China's silver money, of Chinese goods and, of course, of foreign money. This increase in price made it that much more difficult to sell China's goods abroad, with the result that China quickly became a debtor rather than a creditor nation, a factor which was largely responsible for China's going off the silver standard in 1935.

Now to sum up, in some very simple figures, the extent of the principal items in our policy of assistance to Japan from 1937 through 1939. Our total exports to Japan during this period were $759,625,000, while our imports were $483,044,000, giving Japan an unfavorable balance of $276,581,000. However, we more than compensated Japan for this unfavorable balance because during this period we purchased from Japan:

Gold	$580,816,000
Silver	23,198,000
Imports of goods	483,044,000
Total	1,087,058,000
Less our exports to Japan	759,625,000
Favorable balance for Japan	327,433,000

In other words, we not only completely financed Japan's purchases in this country during this period, but for the same period we provided them with a balance of $327,433,000.

Still further, Japan's world imports for 1937–39 were $2,431,000,000, while her exports were $2,333,000,000, giving Japan an unfavorable balance of $98,000,000. We enabled Japan to write off this deficit while still retaining a favorable world balance of $229,433,000.

The vast majority of our people deplore our continued shipments to Japan of war materials of direct use in the prosecution of her war, yet this material amounted in 1937 to $168,382,000, or 53 percent of our exports to Japan; 1938 to $165,247,000, or 63 percent of our exports to Japan; 1939 (9 months) to $96,577,000, or 71 percent of our exports to Japan, totaling over $450,000,000 for the 3 years.

We have also aided Japan in many other ways, the difference being merely one of degree. Some of the ways are briefly described in the following paragraphs.

Under the stimulus of our cotton export subsidy, Japan, in the latter part of 1939, stepped up her purchases of American cotton to over six times the amount of the purchases during the similar period in 1938. Thus this subsidy, during the 6 months of its operation, bestowed a bounty upon Japan of approximately $7,000,000.

Under the export subsidy policy, designed to increase foreign purchases of surplus American cotton, buyers abroad were able to purchase the raw fiber at prices about $7.50 per bale below domestic quotations, the American Government paying the difference.

Anticipating inauguration of the American export program, Japan, as well as other foreign users of American cotton, reduced their old stocks and replenished their supplies at the reduced prices offered under the United States subsidy program.

Not only did we sell this raw cotton to Japan at reduced prices, but by our tariff policy we have been making it possible for the Japanese to sell us the finished textiles in such a way as to undermine seriously, eventually, our economic structure and our standard of living. As Congressman JOSEPH R. BRYSON said in the House last February 12, "Attempts to equalize Japanese and American costs of production have failed because the Japanese have utilized the device of lowering the declared value of imports. The Japanese have found that they can defeat the purpose of our tariff restrictions by simply declaring lower values, and prices in Japan cannot be checked because these goods are practically all sold for export. * * * By declaring this lowered value on their cotton goods, the Japanese were able to ship into America over 1,500 percent more square yards of cotton cloth during 1939 than they shipped during 1932.

"It is obvious that we shall never be able to protect the American textile industry against this viciously destructive competition as long as we accept the values on cotton goods which the Japanese declare. The only effective way to deal with this problem is to base tariff duties on known American costs of production."

This practice which we have been following grants Japanese manufacturers a virtual subsidy on textile exports to the United States in competition with American textiles.

In addition to all the items I have already enumerated, American arms, ammunition, and materials of war can no longer be shipped to China on American ships, but they can be shipped to Japan. The only ports of entry to China are now through French Indochina and British Burma, since Japan has occupied all the Chinese ports, and the Neutrality Act provides that American ships cannot carry arms to belligerent ports anywhere in the world. The United States Maritime Commission also subsidizes American ships carrying on trade between Seattle, Tokyo, and other ports.

The United States grants Japan most-favored-nation treatment, but does not grant the same to China.

The United States allows tourists to visit Japan and spend valuable United States dollars there, but refuses tourist visas to China.

The Japanese authorities in China are now exacting "contributions" from American merchants for the release of goods purchased in the interior for shipment abroad. A flagrant case of this kind is reported by George E. Anderson in the New York Herald Tribune for February 18, 1940.

Up to the time of the present crisis one of the things that was holding up the more rapid manufacture of equipment for the Army and Navy was the fact that so many United States factories were sending machine tools to Japan.

Fortunately this condition has now been remedied, but the War Department recently completed a survey of the machine-tool industry only to find that most American plants were working on orders for the Japanese. Apparently, the Japanese have all the machine tools they need for the present, and are storing all they can get for future emergencies.

What has all this gracious assistance to Japan gained us? Has it brought us increased good will and a more solid basis for confidence? We have another lesson in Italy. It has been reported that one of the deciding factors in Mussolini's declaration of war was the fact that the Allies failed to stick to their original decision to ration his oil supplies, allowing him to accumulate oil stocks sufficient for many months.

Is the United States to continue this shortsighted policy of giving unlimited aid to a nation under the domination of unscrupulous militarists, who, even now, with our help, are building up the means by which they will eventually be able to dominate the whole Pacific area? We have now ceased to finance aggression in one-half of the world. How long are we going to continue to finance aggression in the other half?

NOTE.—The silver data in this article was compiled by the Chinese Council for Economic Research.

Acquisition of Air and Naval Bases

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, Let's Get the Title First is the subject of a most interesting editorial recently published in the columns of the New York Daily News. I direct attention to this editorial for its particular value in reference to outposts in the Atlantic. May I say in this connection that several years ago I advocated the securing of outposts in the North and South Atlantic for hemispherical protection. Later, I introduced a resolution authorizing the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with Great Britain and France with a view to acquiring these islands by way of agreeing upon a price and later crediting such price agreed upon to the billions that are due us from Great Britain and France, as a result of loans made during the World War, in which, unfortunately, we participated. We need outposts in the Atlantic, both north and south. We need them badly, but I contend that if we owned them outright it would be much better than leasing these bases, air and naval. If I were building a house I would rather build it upon land that I actually owned and had full control of rather than making construction of a dwelling upon leased property that belonged to someone else. The first would certainly be more satisfactory, particularly to the owner of the house. I ask leave that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Daily News]

LET'S GET THE TITLE FIRST

The leasing of air and naval bases from Britain is a pretty hot topic right now. So is the proposed transfer of 50 over-age destroyers to Britain.

It might be possible for us to make a really good deal if we can swap those destroyers for long-term leases on bases in Newfoundland, Bermuda, Trinidad, etc. They ought to be very long-term leases, judging from past experience with Britain. The British are shrewd businessmen and even shrewder traders. They do not always keep their promises. As witness there is Lawrence of Arabia. At a time when the Allied cause in the Near East looked hopeless during the last war, Lawrence was dispatched to Arabia to bring Emir Feisal into line, avert an Arab revolt, and to push back the Turks. He did all these things by a combination of personality, savvy, and promises—among them a promise that Feisal would be given control over Syria. When the war ended, Feisal was euchered out of Syria, which became a French-mandated possession.

DOUBLE-CROSS; ITALY GOT THE SAME

Lawrence felt that his honor had been besmirched. He resigned his post, entered the British Army as a private, and died there, ashamed of his country's perfidy.

Mussolini and Italy felt the same way after the last war. To bring Italy in (she was pledged to stand by Germany) the Allies promised her a variety of concessions and possessions, none of which she got. Italy felt she had been made a fool of. She never forgot that double-cross. Which is one reason why she lined up with Berlin before this war.

In our own case, Britain promised to pay us some $4,000,000,000. She didn't do so, either because she couldn't or wouldn't. Instead she began to call us Uncle Shylock, a name which originated in France but which got there deviously from Britain. None of this sort of monkey business is calculated to increase confidence in the promises of Britain.

WE CAN USE THOSE BASES

From the practical standpoint, there is no doubt that we urgently need and can immediately use the bases the British are offering to us. Newfoundland, for example, has plenty of deep harbors for anchorage, plus good airport facilities already being used for war purposes. Newfoundland stands as our first line of defense against an invasion via the St. Lawrence and the Mohawk-Hudson Valleys. Ditto Bermuda, accessible from the Spanish (German?) dominated Canaries and only 700 miles offshore. Ditto Trinidad, protecting the southern entrance to the Caribbean and the Panama Canal. Ditto, to a lesser extent, Jamaica and British Guiana. Even if we don't develop bases at all these points, we most certainly should option some land at each place, just in case we need it later.

And, of course, we need some bases in the South American countries; perhaps one at Natal, on the bulge of Brazil; perhaps another across the continent in Chile or Peru; that is, assuming that we mean what we say when we talk of hemisphere defense. For that matter, a base or two in Mexico wouldn't be amiss; and if that country ever gets its affairs in order, perhaps this can be arranged. Hemisphere defense calls for cooperation from every country within the hemisphere. Such cooperation has been notoriously lacking from Mexico under its present Government.

From what we have said above about British promises, it shouldn't be inferred that this country is still mad at Britain. We're not; we're willing to let bygones be bygones.

But, if we intend to lend Britain 50 destroyers, which may be the prelude to our full-time entry into the war, let's get the title to those air and naval bases first; let's get the title and occupancy before we hand over the destroyers.

Inspection of Coal Mines

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID J. WARD

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to sign the petition on the Speaker's desk to discharge the Committee on Mines and Mining to permit the House to consider S. 2420, relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases there, and for other purposes. My reason for not signing the petition is that the objectives sought in the bill are now authorized by existing law—that is, the Bituminous Coal Act—and department practices. I am in accord with the report of the subcommittee appointed to consider the bill, in which it is stated that the subcommittee, limited by the bounds of proper legislative procedure, cannot recommend the passage of repetitious legislation which would only serve to confuse and duplicate existing legal authority.

Quoting from the report of the subcommittee:

Since it is the subcommittee's views that the provisions of S. 2420 are found in existing law, the arguments on the merits of the measure are purely academic and reference is made to certain objections to the measure only to acquaint the committee with some of the grave problems involved in its consideration. This bill would establish a dual system of inspection which would terminate only in the abandonment of the States' systems. It also gives rise to the problems of States' rights, expanding Federal bureaucracy, and to the constitutional rights of operators. The solution of these problems cannot be arrived at without careful deliberation and certainly not under the emotional pressure that follows disasters such as have been recently experienced. Yet the fact that these disasters do occur and the belief that it might be possible for the Congress of the United States to do something to lessen the possibilities of such disasters, prompts your subcommittee to refuse to dismiss this question simply because the instrument under consideration does not provide the proper remedy.

The hearings on this bill indicate that education and not inspection is the most effective preventive of accidents. I am in thorough accord with the recommendation of the subcommittee that the chairman of the committee be requested to introduce immediately legislation that would provide for a thorough and complete investigation by his committee or a subcommittee of the conditions existing in the production of coal in the mines in the United States, and for this purpose, that a sum of $10,000 be asked of the Congress to enable this body to make the proper field investigation.

I am also in accord with the further recommendation of the subcommittee that the committee petition the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives for a substantial increase in the appropriations for the Bureau of Mines so they may expand their educational program.

The National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OVERTON BROOKS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

LETTER TO CONSTITUENTS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter sent by me to residents in my congressional district:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 31, 1940.

DEAR FRIEND: I am making this final appeal to you. The Nation faces an appalling crisis today. The forces of bigotry, intolerance, and despotism are running wild in the Old World, threatening to extinguish democracy from the earth. It behooves us to get all of our defenses in perfect readiness for any storm which might occur.

I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee. Through the spring and summer months I have sat here in Washington at my post of duty, working on the expansion program of our national defenses. Congress has just passed the excess-profits tax, a new appropriation bill of $5,000,000,000 for further defense, the National Guard mobilization bill. Provision has just been made for the building of 19,000 new airplanes; work of building camps and cantonments to take care of the mobilizing troops is going forward; tanks, ammunition, uniforms, guns, and other equipment are now being turned out in sizable quantities; and the Nation is moving in a fair way toward complete preparedness. Even as this is written the House is getting ready to consider, and probably will pass, the selective military training bill, which will call into service 1,200,000 men between the ages of 21 and 45.

The Americanism program is approaching a solution. Already the registration of aliens has begun and many laws and regulations are being brought to bear upon the would-be spy, traitor, and hostile alien to give to him the treatment which he so justly deserves.

The program of national defense and Americanism is dear to the hearts of the American people. We who fought in 1917–18 know the horrors of warfare and do not want it visited on our own land and on our own shores. I am, therefore, appealing to you in this hour of crisis to set aside petty politics and give me your united support and cooperation. I am appealing to you to endorse the program which I represent in Congress and to at once go to work on its behalf.

Because I have been here in Washington, working on the preparedness program, I have not been able to get around and see and talk with you. To have been permitted to return home would have given me an opportunity of explaining many of these problems to you and showing you some of our difficulties. I have, therefore, been forced to write these reports from time to time to keep you informed.

If you endorse the program of national defense to the utmost, 100 percent Americanism, and to rid the country of all spies, traitors, and "fifth columnists," I claim your active support.

Yours for a safe and happy land,

OVERTON BROOKS,
United States Congressman.

New Frontiers

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, OF VIRGINIA

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, by leave granted, I take pleasure in inserting in my extension of remarks, an address delivered by our brilliant and beloved colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], which is aptly styled New Frontiers.

The gentleman's cogent and forceful analysis is representative of much thought and study and is an expression in luminous words of his idealistic philosophy and understanding of some of the aspects of the world of today.

The address of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] follows:

During the 8 years of my service in the Congress we have been faced with some serious domestic problems, largely growing out of the World War. Just 1 year ago today I had the honor of addressing the graduating class of the Woodstock High School, at which time I referred to the fact that in addition to paying for the last war the world was also paying for a war that had not yet been fought. That war is now being fought and as the German juggernaut has rolled over Poland, Norway, Holland, Belgium, and France, I have thought of the gloomy prediction of H. G. Wells who said, "Mankind, which began in a cave and behind a windbreak, will end in the disease-soaked ruins of a slum." In the face of such unparalleled destruction and of a barbarism unsurpassed in the period of recorded history no government and no social order can longer feel secure. Without seeking to minimize the gravity of the situation that confronts us, I come before you today to ask that you treat the present crisis as a challenge to your patriotism and to your creative courage.

FRONTIER FROM EDEN

In a recent round-table discussion at the University of Rochester, Owen D. Young said that the problem of new frontiers began with the exit from the Garden of Eden and will continue until the last survivor of man, like the dinosaur, through failure to adjust himself to new conditions shall have passed away. The early settlers in this country adjusted themselves to new frontiers of virgin land. Their problem was the annual production of farm crops and the building of sailing ships by which those products were carried to foreign markets. Let no one assume that the adjustment of the early settlers to new frontiers did not involve human qualities of the highest degree. The elements as well as the savages were threats to their personal and financial security. Those pioneers had courage, and no machine that man can invent is a substitute for that human quality. And with that courage they combined energy, vision, and a willingness to make sacrifices. Those are the qualities of character to which we refer when we speak of the spirit of the pioneer; the qualities in any day or age which are essential to success.

The invention of the steam engine by James Watt in 1769 opened a new frontier both here and abroad. The early part of the nineteenth century saw the construction of railroads and of factories and the commencement in this country of the competition of industry with agriculture—a new frontier for the farm boy in the industrial city. In 1824 the struggle of industry for a protective tariff commenced in the Congress, culminating in 1827 in victory for the industrial interests although at that time there were only about 10,000 factories in the Nation and the value of farm exports far exceeded that of manufactured goods.

WON BATTLE; LOST GOAL

The battle between industry and agriculture over a protective tariff for industry continued through the intervening years until in 1930 industry won what it regarded as its biggest tariff battle, namely, the Hawley-Smoot tariff. But in winning that battle industry lost the economic war because in paralyzing the foreign outlets for surplus farm products industry lost its best customer, namely, 30,000,000 domestic farmers, and was plunged into the worst depression it has ever known.

There are those who believe that this Nation has reached a stage of matured economy to which our productive capacities must be geared. To accept that theory would be to admit the need for a planned economy and regimentation. It is my firm belief, however, that modern scientific research holds for us unlimited new possibilities and that there is no inherent reason why the frontiers of the future should not be broader and brighter than any of the past.

The new frontiers of the nineteenth century were marked by the development of transcontinental railway systems, the telegraph and telephone, the automobile and many other useful devices that grew out of the imaginations of practical-minded men. Railroads and factories not only drew men to the cities, they likewise drew the wealth of the country to the industrial centers as we began to tap our rich deposits of coal, iron, oil, and lumber. Under the stimulus of these devolpments the twentieth century was ushered in as the golden era, although sometimes referred to in this country as the era of dollar diplomacy.

RECALLS THOMAS EDISON

Many of you have no doubt seen the recent moving picture in which Mickey Rooney plays the part of the young Tom Edison, the boy who was considered to be too dumb to stay in school, but who turned out to be the greatest inventive genius of his age. In that picture the mother of Tom Edison defends the lack of her son's interest in what was recorded in his textbooks by saying: "Tom is interested in causes not in effects." Practical-minded men, like Edison, using the empiric technique, made up for what they may have lacked in scientific education by initiative, courage, and an inexhaustible capacity for taking pains. If the capacity for taking pains is not genius it is a good substitute for it. Last week a friend of Edison's was telling me of dining in the Edison home when Edison was working on his new storage battery. Edison came in, his clothes disheveled, his hands covered with grime. For 6 consecutive days and nights he had been in his laboratory with little food and still less sleep, dreaming, planning, working on his new invention. Finishing the first regular meal in a week's time, Edison arose to return to his laboratory. His wife begged him to rest and to get fresh clothes before returning to his work, but Edison's only reply was, as he went back to his workshop, "Froth may be good on beer, but not on my battery."

SACRIFICES KEY TO PROGRESS

That determination, that tireless energy, that willingness to make personal sacrifices was the key to the progress made in this country during the nineteenth century, the foundation upon which we proceeded to build a great edifice in the twentieth century. Viewing the progress made in the field of invention in the latter part of the eighteenth century and the early part of the nineteenth, Commissioner of Patents Carroll D. Wright stated in 1888 that he saw no hope for future inventions nor any chance for an advance in science in the next 50 years comparable to that of the previous half century. But the gradual shift in the twentieth century from the previous methods of trial and error to those of scientific research showed the smallness of Wright's horizon. Speaking of that change in method, David Sarnoff recently said:

"The foundation of our new industrial growth goes down to a bedrock of basic knowledge of the elements and forces that are the raw materials of modern industry and public service. Upon such a base can be reared a structure a hundred times loftier than one erected upon any foundation less deep and secure.

"Therefore," said he, "both in quality and quantity, the goods and services of this new age of creative science should far outstrip those of the preceding age, in which industry called in science only after the foundation had been built."

A recent Pathe News showed the finishing in California of a lense of a new telescope that is 200 inches in diameter, twice as large as any heretofore built, and to be mounted on a platform and carriage that weighs 500 tons. As I looked at that twentieth-century instrument with which man was to view a new horizon, I thought of Aristotle counting the stars with his naked eye and recalled the fact that the schools and colleges in the early seventeenth century taught that there were 1,027 stars in the sky because that was the number counted by Aristotle 1900 years earlier. But when Galileo prefected the telescope, he revolutionized the science of astronomy. And the scientist who developed the electron microscope found a new frontier in the field of what was infinitely small as Galileo did in what was infinitely large. By the combined use of such a microscope with photography bacteria can be enlarged 100,000 times, making visible bacteria, viruses, and other objects which are smaller than the length of a light wave. And by putting electrons to work in vacuum tubes, we have developed what is known as the electric eye, which will open doors, operate timing devices, ring burglar alarms, operate fire-prevention apparatus, count and sort merchandise, match colors, measure humidity, and control temperatures. A Persian rug can be scanned by an electric eye in Teheran, the instrument readings cabled to New York, and the pattern reproduced exactly, even though the American maker never saw the rug or a photograph of it.

BREAK-DOWN IN DISTRIBUTION

Time will not permit me to further elaborate the theory that the pessimistic view of some that there are no new frontiers and no new horizons, is not justified, assuming, of course, that the war now raging in Europe does not spread and continue until civilization itself be destroyed. It is true there are many who are unemployed; it is true that production appears to have outstripped consumption; and it is true there are no new frontiers of virgin land. Yet I tell you that those who disparage the opportunities for the youth of the present generation ignore the possibilities of scientific research, ignore the greatest accumulation in history of bank credit to finance new enterprise, and mistake a tragic break-down in the distribution of goods and services for overproduction.

After the World War we were living in a new world but many failed to see or refused to concede that fact. For over 20 years we have ignored the economic problems of other nations, forgetting that these are our economic problems as well. We have been so smug and complacent over our own progress that we have ignored the fact that laboratories and groups in widely separated parts of the world are largely responsible for our scientific growth. For instance, in 1939, five of the six Nobel prizes in science were awarded to Europe and only one to the United States.

We have paid lip service to the theory that liberty under law is the hope of the world, while totalitarian governments have been systematically crushing liberty not only at home but in adjoining democracies where it still survived. We have closed our eyes to the fact that new ideas were on the wing and that ideas laugh at boundaries. Last week a well-meaning but misguided woman in Illinois wired Speaker BANKHEAD, "Please save America. Let God save the King." Of course, the safety of America, the protection of our own firesides, will always be our primary concern, but we are living in an age in which we can see not 1,000 but 3,000,000 stars. In the new world in which we live we are not an independent, isolated, and self-contained unit. Many years ago it was recorded "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." Those words were spoken in a small world dominated by the Roman legions—in area and population about that of the United States. Science has brought the mighty nations of our modern world jostling together, and man's mastery of the air has given a new significance to the ethical teachings of the first century.

When Orville Wright, in December 1903, flew over the sand dunes of Kitty Hawk he envisioned a new horizon, he sought to open to the human race a new frontier. In the exultation of that first successful flight of a machine heavier than air, Wright no doubt felt that through his remarkable invention civilization could be lifted a step nearer to the New Jerusalem, where there is perpetual peace. Little did he dream that the invention intended for the benefit of man would in the short period of 37 years be turned into the most barbarous instrumentality of destruction in the history of civilization. "Let God save the King"—the king who represents the struggle of democracy against the blind and cruel forces of autocracy; the king who represents religious and political freedom and an economic system based upon personal initiative and free enterprise; the king who represents the destroyed homes of Poland, Finland, Holland, Belgium, France, and eventually those of the British Isles; and the millions of homeless refugees, bombed and machine gunned as they desperately struggle to escape from being crushed under the iron heel of war. In a word, the king who represents everything in government and society for which the decent Christian people of the Nation stand.

The barbarian, as well as the Greek, was told in the first century that a policy of isolation was not compatible with the ethical principles of the new dispensation. Lincoln gave national application to the principle when he said that a nation could not remain half slave and half free. But through the invention of the Wright brothers, the world of today is smaller than our Nation in Lincoln's day. Even if it were our disposition to be callous to the suffering of other nations, indifferent to their economic ills, unmoved by the destruction of democratic governments elsewhere in the world, we must realistically face the type of world in which we are living and calculate the impact upon our economic order, and our civilization, of disastrous world events.

It is the considered opinion of informed leaders in this country that if the democracies of Europe be destroyed our democracy will next be challenged and that those prophets who tell us otherwise are as false as those denounced by Jeremiah when Jerusalem was threatened by the Babylonian hosts. In such a contingency, the first move against us would be against our foreign trade. We would trade upon the dictator's terms or be driven from every market in Europe. One thousand and fifty economists in 1930 denounced the prohibitive rates of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff, but that act merely restricted our foreign trade. It did not totally destroy it. A total destruction of our foreign trade would mean a depression in this country of unprecedented proportions. During the Napoleonic War, President Jefferson placed an embargo on shipments to Europe. In less than 6 months the value of farm products had dropped 50 percent and caused such a depression Jefferson was forced to lift the embargo.

DEPRESSION BREEDS REVOLUTION

In Russia, in Italy, and in Germany depression has been the seedbed for revolution, leading to a change in the form of government. The depression that started here in 1930 brought a change in government, but in a constitutional way through the ballot box and not by the bayonet. At that time, however, democracy in Europe still survived and totalitarianism was not a world force. Since that time we have had an opportunity to learn how totalitarianism operates. In its frontal attack it is the impersonation of imperial force and murder. And it operates behind the battle lines by means of the "fifth column." When one of Franco's generals, during the Spanish Revolution, was marching on Madrid, he made a radio address to the defenders of Madrid in which he stated that he was marching on the city with four columns and at a proper time would be joined in the city by a "fifth column." Unfortunately for that "fifth column," it was stood against a wall and shot by the Loyalists before the other four columns reached the city. But when Hitler moved into Austria, into Czechoslovakia, and into Poland, "fifth column" was there to cooperate with him to the destruction of those countries. When the orders to destroy a key bridge over the Meuse to delay the German advance into France were not carried out, there were those who wondered if the "fifth column" was likewise operating in France.

And there are those who wonder how much of a "fifth column" is operating in our country today, counseling us in the name of neutrality and peace to take no steps for our self-defense. No responsible leader in the Government has advocated more than an adequate defense program. The President and all other responsible leaders have promised to do what they can to keep us out of war. But a strict neutrality and a desire to stay out of war saved neither Holland or Belgium. They were not prepared to resist the invader and were overrun and destroyed, indicating that there are two ways of getting into a war—one by going to war and the other by having war brought to you.

At a meeting of international surgeons at Hot Springs last September I heard a great surgeon from Brazil say: "It is the destiny of the United States to preserve democracy for the world." We must meet that challenge. We must at home preserve American constitutional liberty, and from the standpoint of national honor, as well as of self-defense, discharge the obligations of the Monroe Doctrine.

Yes, young graduates, there are new horizons, there are new frontiers. When the future looks darkest to you remember that Thoreau said, "To him whose vigorous and elastic thoughts keep pace with the sun, the day is a perpetual morning." But if you are to see the new horizons and possess the new frontiers scientific aids will not be enough. The human equation will be as vital a factor now as in any previous period in our history. And possibly more so, if we are to believe Woodrow Wilson, who said in 1923, "If our civilization is to survive materially it must be redeemed spiritually." In other words, moral rearmament should be a part of our national-defense program.

May the crisis of the present hour be a challenge to your patriotism and to your creative courage for "who knoweth but that thou art come into the kingdom for such a time as this."

Total Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, OF VIRGINIA

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the most important problem in the minds of the average American today is that of properly providing for our national defense. Much is being said and written upon the subject. Unfortunately, at times, an effort seems to be made to get this vital question mixed up in the current national political campaign. That is unfortunate. Coming generations will not likely be greatly interested in the more or less commonplace considerations that enter the political discussions, but let us realize fully that our whole course of life—indeed, our very continued existence as a great democracy—may be affected by what we do and what we fail to do in safeguarding our country in this tragic hour, when the forces of might are on the march. The defense of America—the Western Hemisphere—is the question of the hour. It overshadows all else.

As acting chairman of the committee that has handled in the House practically all of the defense appropriations, I have been in a position to observe the workings of our defense program. Naturally the American citizen is deeply concerned. On August 28 I addressed the Roanoke Kiwanis Club on the subject Total Defense. In these remarks I endeavored to give an up-to-the-minute picture of the program. Since this address, two important things have happened that measurably expedite our effort. On August 29 the House passed the excess-profits tax bill. We hope the Senate will act quickly. On the 28th, the day of my address, the Senate passed the so-called conscription bill and the so-called $5,000,000,000 appropriation bill. These vital measures now appear to be well on the road to final enactment. That will break the log jam and let our orders for equipment go forward, as well as the all-important process of recruiting our reserve forces.

Herewith is the address:

The people of America have watched with heavy hearts as our ideals of democracy and freedom have fallen in one country after another before the relentless and ruthless march of the dictator. With the fall of each succeeding democracy, the threat has been brought closer to the door of America, until today I believe we generally appreciate the fact that our heritage of liberty and freedom and the democratic way of life is gravely menaced. From the beginning of this world conflagration, President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull have steered the American ship of state through these troublous waters in a manner and on a course which is in accordance with the finest American traditions of peace and security. Time and again the political and economic influence of America has been brought into play in a manner consistent with our position as a neutral nation, in an effort to prevent this catastrophe and to stop the horrible economic waste and indescribable human misery that will follow in the path of this conflict. When it finally became apparent that the tragedy could not be averted, the President called Congress into special session for the purpose of repealing the embargo provision of the Neutrality Act. In addressing the joint session of Congress on the 21st of September 1939, he said as follows:

"I should like to be able to offer the hope that the shadow over the world might swiftly pass. I cannot. The facts compel my stating, with candor, that darker periods may lie ahead. The disaster is not of our making; no act of ours engendered the forces which assault the foundations of civilization. Yet we find ourselves affected to the core; our currents of commerce are changing, our minds are filled with new problems, our position in world affairs has already been altered.

"In such circumstances our policy must be to appreciate in the deepest sense the true American interest."

"THE LAST CITADEL"

Today we find ourselves as a Nation preserving on this continent and in the Western Hemisphere the last remaining citadel where there really and truly abides liberty and freedom of action and democratic government.

We, in America, cherish above all else our heritage of personal and political freedom. And what are the essential elements of this heritage which we prize so highly? First and foremost is the privilege of freedom of speech and freedom of the press; next the right of religious worship, that is, our privilege to kneel at an altar and worship God freely and in a manner and form of our own choosing; the right of assembly, to meet freely and openly discuss matters affecting our freedom and our individual rights; the rights of labor, the right to bargain collectively, and to have the protection of the law against exploitation; freedom of enterprise, the right of a citizen to engage in competitive business with the assurance from his Government, so far as that assurance can be lawfully given, that he will have a fair break in the scheme of things; individual liberty, the right to work, to labor, to acquire and own property, indeed the distinctively American right to start at the bottom and go to the top, and the crowning right of citizenship, to be governed and ruled by representatives of our own choosing. These are precious rights, but let us never lose sight of the fact that there are corresponding obligations and duties that go with these rights.

Here in our own country, as I have said, is the last altar under the shining canopy of heaven whereon there yet burns brightly the symbol of these rights and privileges. Someone has said, "He only deserves liberty who is prepared to win it for himself every day." We in America in these tragic days have had indelibly impressed upon our hearts the real meaning and value of these tenets of free men, and I think we have individually resolved that while we shall continue to respect our traditions as a peace-loving people, that yet never will we permit the iron heel of the dictator to press upon the soil of the Western Hemisphere. Americans have decided that this freedom and liberty of which we boast is well worth fighting to preserve.

I think perhaps sometimes we forget that the present struggle in Europe is not alone a contest between the German dictator and Great Britain, but that it is undoubtedly the part of a world movement wherein on one side are the forces of Christianity and democracy and on the other side are the forces of dictatorship and unbelief. If the time ever comes when America is seriously threatened, we will find allied against us most probably a combination of all of the dictators of Europe and Asia. It is well for us to realize clearly the implications involved in such a struggle.

The President appeared before a joint session of Congress on May 16, 1940, asking for approximately $5,000,000,000 for a gigantic defense program. In concluding his address he made the following memorable statement:

"Our ideals, our objective, is still peace—peace at home and peace abroad. Nevertheless, we stand ready not only to spend millions for defense but to give our service and even our lives for the maintenance of our American liberties.

"Our security is not a matter of weapons alone. The arm that wields them must be strong, the eye that guides them clear, the will that directs them indomitable.

"These are the characteristics of a free people, a people devoted to the institutions they themselves have built, a people willing to defend a way of life that is precious to them all, a people who put their faith in God."

DEFENSE NOT ALONE GEOGRAPHIC

Whether we are at peace or at war, we must be prepared on the economic as well as the military front. Total defense therefore is not confined to a geographic military defense. We must have within our control sufficient economic strength to be prosperous in peace, as well as impregnable in war. Military preparedness alone will not preserve us unless it is buttressed from within by an economic policy that is sound—a policy that will demonstrate to the world that Americans are not only politically free, but that democratic processes can and do operate to bring us economic security. What I am trying to say is that while our military preparations are of the most transcending importance at the moment, we are a foolish people if we do not constantly remember that a "house built upon shifting sands of economic instability" will surely fall. In these remarks I wish to confine the discussion to our military preparations.

HAVE WE NEGLECTED DEFENSE?

As the shadow of war falls nearer and nearer our door, we look with deep concern to our defenses. The statement has been made of late that somebody has neglected to provide an adequate defense for this country, and an effort has been made seriously to invoke political penalties against those responsible. In my 18 years in Congress, I do not remember when any gentleman or group of gentlemen ever arose in their seats to demand substantially greater preparations for defense. I do remember quite well however that little more than a year ago when the President sought to impress upon Congress and the American people the seriousness of the situation, and asked but that we repeal the embargo provisions of the Neutrality Act, that American industry might get in production, and that needed defense arms might be purchased by the Allies—I remember certain gentlemen promptly called him a warmonger and howled from one end of the country to the other that the President was trying to lead us into the war.

The embargo was ultimately repealed. The airplane industry went into production—at that time the output was about 200 planes per month. Today it is nearly 1,000. We have furnished much-needed assistance to Great Britain—have maintained our status as a neutral—and we have not been led into any war.

THE TASK OF PREPARATION

We are making very substantial and notable progress in our defense program. I do not for a moment say there have not been delays, snags, and bottlenecks, but considering the magnitude of the task, and what it involves, considering the further fact that we are functioning as a democracy and not a dictatorship, we have made and are making rapid strides. I wish I might entirely absolve the House of Representatives from all blame for delay, but I cannot. The tax bill, containing the excess-profits tax and provisions for the amortization of defense plant expansion, and so forth, is still tied up in the House. It is a difficult problem no doubt, but it should have been enacted before now. I think very shortly it will pass the House. With one exception, appropriations have been promptly provided. The so-called $5,000,000,000 bill for defense reached the House committee, of which I am acting chairman, on July 10 and on July 31 it had been reported and passed the House. We conducted exhaustive hearings on it, and also in that time was the recess for the Democratic Convention. That bill is still in the Senate.

BLAME ON CONGRESS

So there are the two principal causes for the delay. The American people are sick and tired of this "rag chewing." They want, and have a right to have action. Any reasonable person knows that there will of necessity be some delays in a matter of this magnitude, but there is absolutely no excuse for a failure to get this tax bill out, and for the dilatory tactics of the Senate which has not only delayed conscription but prevented the placing of orders for planes and other equipment by holding up this appropriation bill. I want to absolve the administrative branch of the Government. So far as I have been able to observe, they have been on their toes, and are most impatient over these delays.

THE DEFENSE COUNCIL

Here is what Mr. Knudsen, of the Advisory Council on Defense, had to say in a recent radio interview. Radio Commentator Baukhage was the questioner:

"Mr. BAUKHAGE. Is it true that not a single combat plane has been contracted for out of money appropriated by Congress up to August?

"Mr. KNUDSEN. No; it is not true. The Navy, for example, contracted for $7,000,000 worth of combat planes in July. But, more important than that, Mr. Baukhage, is the over-all picture. Take the money appropriated by Congress thus far for the defense program. They cover about four-thousand-two-hundred-and-odd planes. Money in the defense appropriation bill now before Congress will add 14,000 more planes to the total. We cannot make complete plans and arrange final details with the manufacturers until we know that the appropriations are passed. We won't know that definitely until the Congress passes the bill. However, we have received from the principal manufacturers complete estimates on the plant space necessary for the whole program. I would like to add that of money made available to us on July 1, 5 weeks ago, contracts have already been awarded for 45 percent of the entire Army funds and 75 percent of the Navy's funds."

On plane production, Mr. Knudsen replied to a question from Mr. Warner as follows:

"Mr. WARNER. There seems to be a difference of opinion, Mr. Knudsen, on the present production of airplanes. Can you tell us something about that?

"Mr. KNUDSEN. Present production, Mr. Warner, is approximately 900 planes per month. By January 1 the number will have risen to 1,500 planes, and the volume will increase steadily thereafter. You might also be interested in knowing that in January 56,800 people were employed in aircraft factories. Today the number is nearer 75,000."

On the question of raw materials, Mr. Edward Stettinius, of the Defense Council, answered Mr. Baukhage:

"Mr. BAUKHAGE. People are asking, Mr. Stettinius, why, with the billions of dollars available, these raw materials can't be gotten together more quickly?

"Mr. STETTINIUS. People who ask that question must realize that American industry cannot be completely mobilized and coordinated within a week or a month or several months. It is a long job. It isn't easy. It calls for full cooperation and, may I add, patience.

"It can be said, however, that no effort is being spared to serve them. We are assisted by the cooperative effort of industry and through the splendid aid given us by other divisions of this Commission, the Army, the Navy, and the various agencies of the Government."

You may comprehend something of the magnitude of the task of providing these raw materials and critical items when I remind you that there are 70,000 items of Army supplies of which no less than 1,200 are "critical," that is, not in production, and not available except from specifically equipped plants. This means in many instances that there must be not only great plant expansion but new plants. For instance in the matter of gunpowder. We must build new plants, hence the new plant at Radford. That project is going forward.

WHY HAVE WE WAITED?

Following the World War, a wave of sentiment swept over the world for peace. It was hoped humanity would profit by that sad experience and stop the tragic resort to arms. America took the lead in those efforts. I do not criticize them. They were well-intentioned. It was what the American people wanted. It culminated in scrapping our great Navy in 1922. We let our Army dwindle down to 75,000 men.

Now let us look at the record. During the 12 years preceding 1933 not a single battleship was laid down and only 20 other types of combatant vessels such as cruisers, submarines, and gunboats were constructed. Since 1936 we have completed 115 combatant naval vessels. We have under construction 188 vessels, consisting of 10 battleships, 5 aircraft carriers, 4 heavy cruisers, 17 light cruisers, 61 destroyers, and 41 submarines. In addition to that we have provided for additional craft to give us a two-ocean Navy by 1946, that can defend the Western Hemisphere against any combination of powers that may attack us.

Let us look further. In 1933 we had an Army of 75,000 men. Today we have equipped and under arms an Army of 241,000, and the present Congress is authorizing an increase to 1,200,000 with a possible ultimate Reserve strength of 2,000,000.

WHAT WILL WE HAVE?

Today we have a one-ocean Navy of 399 warships. In 1943 we will have 521 warships afloat, and in 1946 a two-ocean Navy.

Today we have 5,500 war planes (production 900 per month). Nineteen hundred forty-one production will be up to 1,500 per month. July 1942, 25,000 war planes will be ready. October 1943, 50,000 war planes will be on hand.

Today we have 500 tanks. Production is 3 light tanks daily. July 1941, 1,500 tanks will be ready. January 1943, 200 heavy 70-ton tanks will be ready.

By August 1941, arms and critical equipment ready for a million men. That's 1 year hence. October 1943, complete arms and equipment ready for an Army of 1,200,000 men, and a Reserve strength that will give us 2,000,000.

This is an ambitious program. It is in the hands of experts, and as one who has been intimately associated with its every detail I can say that there is harmony and coordination, and that red tape and departmental routine have been reduced to a minimum.

WE PREPARE FOR PEACE

It would be impossible to improve on Washington's formula for peace. "Prepare for war," said Washington. America prepares for peace. Americans do not wish to become involved in this European war. While we stand ready to do what we can to aid the fight to preserve democratic ideals, we must not depart from our traditional policy of noninvolvement. We must not become the aggressor. We must not in our emotion, and because of our sympathies, commit a thoughtless act that will plunge this country into war. Let us think calmly of all of the consequences of such hasty action. But, on the other hand, let us not be diverted from our firm determination to see to it that our defenses are impregnable, because only by so doing will our liberties be secure.

Our Relations With Latin America

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. FRED L. CRAWFORD, OF MICHIGAN

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent granted me, I submit a radio address delivered by me on the National Farm and Home Hour on the subject Our Relations With Latin America.

South of the Rio Grande border and 30 degrees latitude lies our next great battlefield. I now refer to trade. The area is now to become the cockpit of the world where giants of commerce and industry will vie with each other for control. I would not, however, exclude the possibility of military action.

The total area to which I refer, constituting the 20 Latin American countries, embraces 8,000,000 square miles of territory. Here we find South America with 10 separate countries covering almost 7,000,000 square miles; Central America with 6 countries covering 218,000 square miles; and the West Indies consisting of Cuba, the Dominican Republic, and Haiti which, along with old Mexico, covers another 837,000 square miles.

It will interest my audience to know that the area of the 10 South American countries alone is about two and one-third times that of our own States. Brazil is 300,000 square miles greater in area than the United States, and she occupies nearly one-half of the South American Continent.

Latest population figures tell us that in these combined areas there are 130,000,000 people—about equal to the population of continental United States.

In the areas I have mentioned, let me remind you that I have not included those great momentary question marks about which we hear so much these days—the possessions of European countries—British Honduras, Jamaica, British and French Guianas, Trinidad, and the Netherlands West Indies, all occupying such important positions resting between the United States and South America.

There has been in operation during the last one-half century what is known as the Pan American Union. It is an international organization, created and maintained by the 21 American republics. The purposes of this Union are to promote peace, commerce, and friendship between the republics of the American continents by fostering economic, judicial, social, and cultural relations. The Union is supported by annual contributions from all the countries, in amounts proportional to population. Its affairs are administered by a director general and an assistant director, elected by and responsible to a governing board composed of the Secretary of State of the United States and representatives in Washington of the other American governments.

The Pan American Union serves as the permanent organ of the international conferences of American States. With a growing spirit of cooperation, the Pan American Union has been combined with a constantly strengthening unity of ideals and policies.

At four recently held conferences, the one at Buenos Aires in 1936, the Lima Conference of 1938, the Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs held at Panama in 1939, and at the conference in Cuba only last month, it was more evident than ever before that there is a unity of policy to a great degree to preserve and further develop democratic institutions on the American continents.

But world events crowd the 21 republics of the Western Hemisphere into closer cooperation. The time element becomes very important. We are forced to consider more details looking forward to the designing and execution of plans that have to do with economic, political, and military protection.

In addressing the conference at Habana, Cuba, only last month, Secretary of State Hull said:

"The war has brought a disruption in the channels of international commerce, a curtailment of foreign markets for products of the Western Hemisphere. This has meant to many American nations a loss of purchasing power sufficiently serious to place severe strains on their national economies. In some cases stagnant surpluses of commodities, the exportation of which is essential to the economic life of the countries concerned, have accumulated and continue to accumulate. * * * The nations of the Western Hemisphere should undertake the fullest measure of economic cooperation. Progress has already been made toward the forging of new tools to carry out certain phases of economic cooperation on an inter-American basis. The Inter-American Financial and Economic Advisory Committee, which was established last November pursuant to a resolution of the Panama meeting, has proven itself to be an efficient body for considering and working out such mechanisms.

It prepared the framework for the establishment of an inter-American bank to foster cooperation in the spheres of long-term development and for money and foreign exchange. The Government of the United States is taking steps to implement the Inter-American Bank Convention and urges that the governments of the other American republics give their cooperation so that this important institution may be placed into operation as rapidly as possible."

July 22 last, the same day Secretary Hull spoke the words I have just quoted, President Roosevelt placed before the Congress a special message dealing with part of the same subject matter, and in which he said:

"I therefore request that the Congress give prompt consideration to increasing the capital and lending power of the Export-Import Bank of Washington by $500,000,000 and removing some of the restrictions on its operations to the end that the bank may be of greater assistance to our neighbors south of the Rio Grande, including financing the handling and orderly marketing of some part of their surpluses."

Wednesday of this week the Banking and Currency Committee of the House favorably reported a bill authorizing the Export-Import Bank to proceed with an economic program in Latin America. This bill will be called up for approval by the House next Tuesday. With its enactment the United States Government will be implemented to proceed with economic penetration of the countries to our south.

Thursday of this week the House approved the National Guard bill. Previously approved by the Senate, it now goes to the President. It will authorize him in his judgment as Commander in Chief of the Army to dispatch our National Guardsmen to any and all points in the Western Hemisphere, which, of course, includes all of Latin America. To this extent, we have indicated to the people south of us that we are prepared to go along with them in helping to preserve our freedom from European domination in North, Central, and South America, Cuba, and Mexico. We should keep in mind that a vast part of Latin America is located in the tropical zone. Historically, temperate zones have almost entirely supplied tropical zones with their manufactured goods, and in turn, have drawn from the tropical areas certain fruits, sugars, oils, and other products. It is true that in parts of Latin America there are products grown which directly compete with many of the agricultural products of the farmers of the United States. For instance, certain of these areas rank high in importance in the production of cane sugar, cotton, beef and hides, wool, corn, and other grains. These particular areas have heretofore greatly depended upon western Europe for export markets for foodstuffs and fibers, shipped in exchange for manufactured goods from Europe. From Cuba and Brazil, the Argentine and Chile, we have taken a considerable volume of sugar, coffee, canned meats, and nitrates. On other areas we depend for our principal source of supply of tropical fruits such as bananas. With Latin American countries our Secretary of State has consummated many reciprocal-trade agreements in recent years.

In Europe we find 400,000,000 souls divided into hostile camps who have for centuries jostled one another about through internecine war. When we look to overcrowded Asia, we find more than 1,000,000,000—almost one-half the population of the world—going about silently, laboring the longest hours with a shortage of food and land area, eking out a bare existence, and with many millions facing actual starvation and disease all of the time.

Lying between these peoples of the European and Asiatic Continents, we today become conscious of our position here in the Western Hemisphere. In land area, in natural resources, in undeveloped riches, in our standard of living, in our progress in science, in agriculture, and in production, we hang suspended between the other continents as a luscious peach hangs on a tree, ready to be picked. The industrial "have not" countries of the world, particularly Germany, Japan, and Italy, have in years gone by depended greatly on the production of the Western Hemisphere for much food, fats, and fibers. In the years to come these same countries will again look to America for additional supplies.

At the moment, due to the loss of their European markets for exports and as a source of supply for manufactured goods in exchange for their raw materials, the Latin American countries are a prey to economic, political, and military penetration. Economic conditions in those countries are rapidly deteriorating, due to the substantial loss of markets for their exportable surpluses because of the European war.

The administration takes the position that this situation offers the United States a golden opportunity to be of real help to Latin America and at the same time take a forward step in our defense program.

It is claimed that if we refuse to extend economic and military, and perhaps political help when desperately needed by Latin America, we can confidently expect many of the Latin American countries to fall into the laps of European and Asiatic dictators as soon as the war is over. In Latin America political and military penetration follows economic penetration very easily.

Thus the people of the United States, along with the Congress, must now make, in this regard, many decisions involving high policy of government. At this hour it appears that we can no longer live in the realm of fiction, insofar as the Monroe Doctrine is concerned. If our people believe in the doctrine, desire to enforce it; if they are now unwilling to withdraw from the area involved in favor of the European and Asiatic countries that are aggressively promoting their interests there, then we shall have to proceed without hesitation. World events have placed grave problems on our doorsteps. There is no simple or easy way out. The people and the Congress must now act.

At a time when we have vast stocks of foodstuffs, fats, and fibers in our granaries and warehouses we find world-trade channels destroyed. We have passed our market. The situation holds true with the Latin American countries. Furthermore, the whole Western Hemisphere has tremendous potential undeveloped productive capacity, and for this and for the goods we now have stored the balance of the world starves. With the agricultural efforts of North, Central, and South America about to be coordinated, the handling of the problem in a manner that will prevent disaster to our farm folks will require a degree of agricultural and economic statesmanship never before exercised by those occupying seats of responsibility in our Government, finance, and marketing activities.

Construction of Superhighways

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, August 30 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a most worth-while article in the form of an editorial from the columns of the New York Daily News, entitled "Let's Borrow This Back From Hitler." This article pertains to superhighways. I am highly in favor of superhighways from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the North to the South. Such highways might be used as military highways in time of war and as commercial highways in time of peace. A network of highways of the super type would be of tremendous value to our Nation in solving its transportation problems and in providing rapid transportation of troops and supplies during time of war. In addition thereto, may I say that I advocated, a number of years ago, the construction of a highway from northern Washington, Seattle, directly north through British Columbia to Juneau, the capital of Alaska. At the time that I first made the suggestion it was not well received and, in fact, I was scoffed at by those who claimed that the idea was simply fantastic. However, I note that many of those who said that such an idea was merely visionary are now inclined to believe as I have for many years. Such a highway would provide intercourse between our last frontier and the United States proper, thus serving as a military highway in time of war, and in time of peace would serve commerce well and provide thousands upon thousands of American tourists the opportunity of viewing the most gorgeous scenery in all the world.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Daily News]

LET'S BORROW THIS BACK FROM HITLER

Superhighways were an American development. Hitler borrowed the idea, made it bigger and better in his Reichsautobahnen. These are high-speed parkways, double-laned, laid out for a speed of 60 miles per hour in the mountains, 100 miles per hour in the flatlands. In peacetime, these parkways were useful. In wartime, they have proved invaluable for the swift transport of troops. This country has continued to build parkways—but with emphasis on the "park" phase. We refer to the Westchester and Long Island parkways, in particular. They are marvelously scenic roads, bowered with trees to cut off the driver's vision on the corners, laid out to make it well-night impossible to travel at any really high speed. As military roads, they are impractical.

Pennsylvania, meanwhile, boasts the only superhighway in the Nation. We refer to the new soon-to-be-opened Pennsylvania turnpike from Pittsburgh to Harrisburg, a 4-lane divided road with no level crossings.

This 162-mile road, built at a cost of $70,000,000 with Government loans, is designed for speeds up to 80 miles per hour or higher. Its use will save the driver hours of time between New York and Chicago. Its cost is being absorbed by tolls.

THERE SHOULD BE MANY MORE SUCH

Unfortunately, the roads east and west of the turnpike are the same old winding, congested routes we have always known. From a military standpoint, the turnpike thus begins and ends nowhere. It should be extended east to Philadelphia and New York; west to Chicago. There should be many other such roads in the industrial East, notably from Washington through New York to Boston, and up the east bank of the Hudson along Lake Champlain to the Canadian border—the probable route of any enemy invasion. Plenty of spur roads for military shuttle service also will be essential.

These reflections are all based on an interview with Parks Commissioner Robert Moses, printed in one of the New York papers recently. He has one particularly significant thing to say, and we quote:

"What too many of our war planners don't seem to realize is that if we should clog the roads of the metropolitan section with mechanical equipment, moving trucks, and heavy trucking to supply them, we wouldn't be able to get food in for the civilian population or carry on our normal and necessary business operations."

Quite right. We need superhighways, and we think Moses is the man to build them. He isn't, however, the only man available. If Washington should rule him out, we suggest another candidate.

ST. LOUIS DOES A GRAND JOB

It's the man who designed the magnificent new Lewis and Clark Bridges north of St. Louis. The Clark Bridge crosses the Mississippi; then there's a 5½-mile speedway to the Lewis Bridge across the Missouri. By using a series of link roads it's possible to get on a superhighway that leads right to the edge of St. Louis. Across the town is another project, an express highway, something like our West Side Highway in New York, which cuts through the crowded sections below grade and eventually leads into another bridge across the river. St. Louis has done a grand job in bypassing and expediting traffic.

If we are going to build Nation-wide superhighways, let's not forget that we'll need something to travel on them. We refer to armored cars and other high-speed military equipment. We need more of these, and we need men to run them; that is, we need conscription now.

Failure of the New Deal

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY SANDAGER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

LETTER FROM WALTER I. HIRD

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter I have received from Mr. Walter I. Hird, an independent voter from my home city of Cranston, R. I. The letter is as follows:

Hon. HARRY SANDAGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Twenty-two miles northeast of Greenville, Maine, near the beautiful Lake Kokadjo, there is a signboard which reads, "This is God's country. Why set it on fire and make it look like hell."

At first the sign leaves but a slight impression on one's mind, but after a few days you begin to realize that it is God's country, quiet, peaceful, and calm. You awake in the morning midst the sound of wild canaries, the wind whispering in the pines, the smell of wood smoke mingled with that of boiling coffee and frying bacon. You feel just on the edge of civilization, wild and beautiful, which makes one think more dearly of God, and man's relations to man.

It is God's country, just one of the little spots that make up this great country of ours. For 7 years as an independent voter I have watched a New Deal try to set it on fire and make it look like hell. I am convinced that this year will tell the story whether the fire will start to burn and destroy all that past generations have built up.

We are living in a world of economic evolution, where one system of economics has broken down because of greed and ambitions, and another economic system must take its place. World history shows us that this has taken place before and will take place again until man learns to live with his fellow man. The New Deal has had its day and failed. Will this failure bring war, unbearable taxation, and economic ruin to cover up its imported philosophies? These questions must be answered this November. Let us read again the sign, "This is God's country. Why set it on fire and make it look like hell?"

WALTER I. HIRD.

CRANSTON, August 18, 1940.

World War Veteran Wendell L. Willkie

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, through the columns of the press, and by medium of the radio, the name of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican nominee for President of the United States, is on the lips of every man, woman, and child in America.

Aside from the politics involved when mere mention of his name is made, I want to briefly describe Wendell L. Willkie in another role as a World War veteran, serving his country as first lieutenant, Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Artillery, Eighty-fourth Division, American Expeditionary Forces. Lt. Wendell L. Willkie's record as a soldier, taken from the files of the War Department, speaks for itself, and is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington.

Wendell Lewis Willkie, first lieutenant, Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery, Eighty-fourth Division

The records show that Wendell Lewis Willkie, resident of Elwood, Ind., made application in April 1917 for a commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps and admission to attend a training camp for officer candidates. He reported on May 11, 1917, at the first Reserve officers' training camp, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., organized under section 54, National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, and trained as a civilian candidate for a commission until the close of the camp on August 14, 1917. He was reported by the examining officers as fitted for a commission as first lieutenant, Infantry, and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the Officers' Reserve Corps, August 15, 1917. He was assigned to active duty the same date and, after a period of attendance at the training camp, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., he joined the Eighty-fourth Division at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., and was assigned on September 15, 1917, to duty with Battery F, Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery. He was on special duty at the Infantry School of Arms, October 12 to 25, 1917, and commanded Battery F, Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery, January 24 to March 25, 1918. He attended the school of fire for Field Artillery at Fort Sill, Okla., from March 30 to June 7, 1918, when he satisfactorily completed the war course for Light Artillery (horsed), and returned to duty with the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery, then at the Field Artillery firing center at West Point, Ky. He was transferred on June 28, 1918, to Headquarters Company, Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Artillery. He sailed with the regiment on September 9, 1918, for France, where the regiment took station at Camp De Souge, and served again for a period with Battery F, and later as battalion adjutant, second battalion, returning to the United States, February 15, 1919, arriving at Newport News, Va., and proceeded with his regiment to Camp Sherman, Ohio, where he was honorably discharged, February 28, 1919, by reason of demobilization of the emergency forces.

The records further show that in letter of October 26, 1918, addressed to the commanding officer of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Field Artillery Brigade, Lieutenant Willkie was recommended by the commanding officer of the Three Hundred and Twenty-fifth Field Artillery for promotion to the grade of captain. This recommendation was approved and forwarded to the division commander, thence to general headquarters, American Expeditionary Forces. However, before final action was taken thereon the armistice was signed, when all appointments and promotions then pending were, by direction of the President, suspended. With reference to the recommendation for his promotion the division commander described Lieutenant Willkie as an efficient and capable officer. At the time of discharge Lieutenant Willkie's commanding officer recommended him for a subsequent appointment in the Regular Army or Reserve Corps and stated that he was "an excellent officer. Would be glad to have him in my command."

Official statement furnished to Hon. JAMES E. VAN ZANDT, House of Representatives, with the consent of Mr. Wendell Willkie, on August 7, 1940.

By authority of the Secretary of War:

E. S. ADAMS,
Major General, The Adjutant General.

The records of the War Department fail to reveal the human side of Lieutenant Willkie. From the lips of his comrades who served with him overseas we learn that following the armistice and prior to his honorable discharge from the service Lieutenant Willkie, a lawyer, toured the United States Army cantonments in France defending his wartime buddies before general court-martial trials without fees. For days and days he devoted his time and ability to the cause of the common soldier. He fought to give the American doughboy a square deal and was successful because he talked and understood their language.

On February 28, 1919, Lt. Wendell L. Willkie received an honorable discharge from the armed forces of the United States after 23 months of service to his country. Returning to Akron, Ohio, to accept a position in the law department of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., he continued his service to his country and his fellowman by becoming a member of America's two great veteran organizations—the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

As a charter member of Post No. 19, the American Legion, Akron, Ohio, which he joined in June 1919, his leadership was recognized by his fellow veterans when they elected him as a first vice commander early in 1921.

In a few months he was elected post commander and enjoyed the honor and distinction of being reelected, serving as post commander for two consecutive terms. As commander of Post No. 19, Wendell L. Willkie established a reputation as an all-round veteran, ready and willing at all times to further the program of his post.

On August 26, 1922, Wendell L. Willkie became a charter member of Post No. 967, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, at Akron, Ohio. Immediately his comrades who served with him overseas elected him as post judge advocate, in which position he served for many years. During this time he was elected repeatedly as a delegate to the Ohio State convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and in that capacity took an active part in the election of department officers and in the formulating of departmental policies in the State of Ohio.

As a member of his Legion and V. F. W. posts in Akron, he was an outstanding veteran and so recognized because of the great demand upon his time to address luncheon clubs, student assemblies in the Ohio schools, preside over patriotic gatherings, and serve with his other comrades in conducting military funerals for ex-servicemen.

This ability to serve in any capacity reveals the true character and congenial nature of Wendell L. Willkie.

There is an old saying that if you want to learn a man's true worth ask his neighbors and friends. Recently William P. Lockwood, of Frankfort, Ind., who served with Wendell L. Willkie overseas, said, "Willkie was a real soldier, and the men all loved him."

Robert M. Wiener, commander of Post 19 of the American Legion, Akron, Ohio, says: "Past Commander Willkie's comrades in post No. 19 feel that without him our post quite likely would have ceased to exist in June 1922. Aside from the fact that we love him as a comrade and respect him as a great American, we feel that we owe him a debt of gratitude for holding our post together during its most trying period."

Many similar praiseworthy remarks are being said of Wendell L. Willkie that reveals him as a lovable human being concerned with the welfare of his fellow citizens.

In concluding the presentation of Wendell L. Willkie as a World War veteran, it is interesting to note that for the first time since the signing of the Armistice on November 11, 1918, the American people on November 5, 1940, will have the opportunity of elevating to the highest office in the land a World War veteran who served his country 23 months, 10 months of which were spent on the battlefields of France.

Wendell L. Willkie served his country well during the World War and is ably equipped with a wealth of talent and ability to become this Nation's Chief Executive.

Is America in Danger of Invasion?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEWIS D. THILL

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, August 27, 1940

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, we hear from many sources of the real or imagined danger of invasion. Now we all know about the difficulties involved in fighting a foe on his soil. The invader must sacrifice more men to gain his objective than the defender. The following news article discusses the problem of invading America at the present time. In the future, it seems to me, more reliance will be placed upon air transports than upon the Navy to carry troops.

The conflict in Europe has demonstrated that the belligerent who gains control of the air will, all things being equal, conquer his foe. We in America must build up our air force to a dominant position in world affairs.

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 26, 1940]

HITLER CAN'T INVADE AMERICA FOR 2 YEARS, SAY EXPERTS—EVEN THEN HE'D PROBABLY FAIL, THEY CLAIM, IN CITING HANDICAPS

(By Walter Trohan)

Invasion of the United States would require the largest and most intensely organized military and naval effort the world has ever seen, and even in the face of the meager defenses America has today the chances of success of such an invasion are extremely remote.

This was the verdict of responsible Army and Navy officers and defense experts to whom was put this question: "Just what would it take to invade America with 500,000 or 1,000,000 men, and what chance would the invading force have?"

NO THREAT OF INVASION

Despite all the war hullabaloo in the country today, the experts agreed that America faces no serious threat to immediate invasion, because it would take upward of 2 years to prepare a force for invasion, and within that time the United States could make herself impregnable against any invader.

Germany spent 5 years preparing for her invasion of Britain by way of France and the Low Countries. Even at her present state of preparation for war—assuming she defeats Britain and wants to invade the United States—it would take at least from 2 to 3 years to get an invading armada organized.

ONE MILLION MEN NEEDED

In the sixteenth century Philip II of Spain spent 8 years in gathering together his Armada of 135 ships, manned by 8,000 seamen and 19,000 troops, which were to constitute the vanguard of an invading force against England. The Armada met disastrous defeat at the hands of a far smaller foe.

Experts fixed the need of a twentieth-century armada for a force of 1,000,000 men with ample weapons, ammunition, and merchant vessels. Any attempt at invasion with a smaller force would be absolute suicide, they feel. However, the needs of any army of 500,000 would approximate half that of the larger force. The greater army would have more corps and army weapons.

WHAT INVADER NEEDS

The experts fix the needs of the force of 1,000,000 as follows:

Weapons:	Quantities
Rifles	300,000
Pistols	100,000
37-mm. antitank	2,500
Machine guns	15,000
Mortars	5,000
105-mm. howitzers	3,000
155-mm. howitzers	2,500
155-mm. field guns	1,000
240-mm. howitzers	250
37-mm. antiaircraft guns	1,000
90-mm. antiaircraft guns	2,000
Tanks	1,500
Scout cars	1,800
Motor vehicles	200,000
Airplanes	7,500
Ammunition:	In rounds
Rifle	445,000,000
Pistol	50,000,000
Machine gun	200,000,000
37-mm. antitank	15,000,000
105-mm. howitzer	3,000,000
105-mm. field gun	2,000,000
155-mm. howitzer	2,000,000
105-mm. field gun	1,000,000
37-mm. antiaircraft	7,000,000
90-mm. antiaircraft	8,000,000
Mortar, ammunition	5,000,000
Bombs, tons (up)	100,000
	Average tonnages
Number of merchant ships:
1,000 transports	10,000
2,000 freighters	5,000
500 supply ships	7,500
250 oilers	8,000

NEED HUGE WAR FLEET

Many of these vessels would turn to supply service to maintain the army should it get a foothold.

In naval craft the invading fleet must have a force equal to if not superior to the 400 ships in the American Navy, and because such a fleet would be operating far from home it would need a full complement of tenders and auxiliary craft of all kinds.

Granted a foreign invader had driven the American Navy from the seas—and that is quite a job, because it is acknowledged to be the best trained and best equipped navy in the world—experts say the invader would still face a mass of difficulty.

The Dominion-News Editor Writes Strong Editorial for Increased Air Force in National-Defense Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE MORGANTOWN (W. VA.) DOMINION-NEWS OF AUGUST 28, 1940

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, editorial writers of this country mold public opinion. In the present crisis a splendid public service is performed by those individuals who place before our reading public thought-provoking, factual, and challenging comment.

In this connection, I place in the Appendix of the RECORD portions of an unusually virile editorial, written by Walter Hart, editor of the Dominion-News, published at Morgantown, W. Va., which appeared under date of Wednesday morning, August 28.

NONE SO BLIND

Probably at this very moment the fate of England is being decided in the clouds over that island that for 1,000 years has been the symbol of the British Empire.

Admitted on all sides is the fact that the chances of Hitler succeeding in invading England would be reduced to the vanishing point if England had air superiority. Indeed, had England or France had air superiority last year there undoubtedly would have been no war.

Yet in this Nation, allegedly the most enlightened in the world, there are still far too many people who say we do not need a great air fleet nor do we need to prepare for any eventuality. There are those who believe that you can stop a raging animal by throwing meat to it; appeasement is the term used in statesmanship. France tried it when it permitted Hitler to rearm the Rhine; England tried it when it permitted Hitler to take Czechoslovakia, Poland, and other nations.

We are still "appeasing" when we say we do not immediately need a great air force and a more adequate Army and Navy. Thanks to President Roosevelt's great devotion to the United States Navy, our sea fleet is in far better shape than when he found it upon taking office from Herbert Hoover, whose mistaken philosophy in life seems to be feeding everybody except Americans.

Right now every aircraft factory within the borders of the United States should be working 24 hours a day on coordinated designs to produce a few essential types of ships so badly needed for our own defense. Does any person realize that in all this Nation today we have only 30 up-to-the-minute combat airplanes? Think of that.

That does not mean that we do not have combat ships capable of doing much damage and capable of performing yeoman service in the defense of this hemisphere, but it does mean that our productivity is not being pushed, chiefly because of the appeasement and obstructionist tactics employed in and out of the Congress of the United States by many well-meaning persons who should know better.

This Nation, the United States of America, is the next on the list should England fall. It is now probably too late to do anything for England, and it may be too late for us to do anything for ourselves; but at least we have a fighting chance if we stop thinking in terms of hemisphere isolation and ox-cart means of transportation. There is no such thing as hemisphere isolation now, based solely on mileage, whether it be over water or over land. France tried the ox-cart method of fighting Hitler and everybody knows what happened to France; it was outflanked and crushed in such a startling short time that most of the citizens of these United States do not realize it today, months afterward.

Furthermore, we do not have the pilots to man our fighting ships, even if we had them. And we are not getting them fast enough simply because some mistaken people in and out of Congress are still yelling that we should give the volunteer system a chance to work. A chance to work? Why, for months on end the United States Army Air Corps, offering every sort of inducement, including money up to a $500 bonus for completion of the course, has had vacancies in every class going through its principal air schools. What is that but a chance for the volunteer system to work? In addition, some have deluded themselves into believing that these basically trained pilots could be used in case of war. Certainly, they would make excellent cannon fodder if they were able to get a fighting plane off the ground without killing themselves. The blunt truth is we do not have 500 pilots in this Nation who can safely fly P–36's. And this type of ship is four models behind the latest thing some of our factories could produce if they could or would. Some divisions of big business are as much at fault as the obstructionists in Congress. Big business, or a portion of it, is insisting upon knowing about profits when the very life of the Government under which it has prospered and grown strong and big is at stake.

* * * * * * *

Thousands upon thousands have been blown to bits in France and England because far too many people believed in those countries that somehow, some way, the war would not come, despite the fact that every day found Germany rolling out more war planes, training more pilots for 7 long years. Are we going to have the same blood upon our hands because we have permitted some persons in high or low office to continue to obstruct our program of defense? That is a matter for the American people to decide, because the force of public opinion in this Nation is the most powerful factor on earth.

Let us all hope that before it is too late we shall get the planes and the pilots and the ground crews in sufficient numbers to prevent the wholesale slaughtering of our citizenry, such as is occurring today in England because a few men thought you can stop a maniac by giving him a stick of striped candy.

Hopkins' Influence

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR.

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ARTICLE BY ERNEST K. LINDLEY

Mr. HENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I take pleasure in inserting an article by that distinguished commentator, Ernest K. Lindley, which appeared in the Washington Post of August 28, 1940.

No man who knows Harry Hopkins, can honestly question his sincerity, his ability, or his nobility of purpose.

He is, and has always been, frank and forthright of expression, and has been motivated by realistic altruism. He is in the highest concept of the term, a real humanitarian.

His name will live long after those of some of his traducers have been forgotten. I cannot add to his stature, nor can anyone detract from his greatness, by fulsome expression at this time.

However, Mr. Lindley, in this glowing tribute to Harry Hopkins, has expressed in part sentiments with which I am sure there is almost unanimous concurrence among the membership of Congress.

Upon his retirement from public service, we wish him godspeed and the continuance of a long, happy, and useful life.

Mr. Lindley's article follows:

[From the Washington Post of August 28, 1940]

HOPKINS' INFLUENCE—CHAMPION OF LOWER ONE-THIRD

(By Ernest K. Lindley)

The departure of Harry Hopkins from the Cabinet is being cheered, chiefly by people who never knew him and are still unable to accept the policies for which he fought. It would be deeply regretted by many others if it meant the complete loss of his influence on the course of public affairs. It will not mean that. His exchange of letters with the President hinted of the strong ties between them. He is, in fact, probably the President's most intimate friend. At the White House, at Hyde Park, and on week-end cruises, he has been almost continually at the President's side for many months.

The friendship between the President and Hopkins is relatively new, although they met in 1928. Three years later, when New York, under Roosevelt's leadership, became the first State to recognize an obligation to aid the unemployed, Hopkins was made head of the State relief agency. When Roosevelt set up the first Federal Emergency Relief Administration in 1933 he put Hopkins in charge of it.

Hopkins rapidly became one of the President's more important advisers, but this close official relationship did not at once develop into intimate friendship. At first Hopkins' best avenue of approach to the President was through Mrs. Roosevelt, whose deep sympathy for the underprivileged was in tune with Hopkins'. When the President's oldest son, James, came to Washington as his father's secretary in 1937, Hopkins took him under his wing and gave him much good advice. The tragedies in Hopkins' life—the loss of his wife and his own serious illness—brought him into even closer contact with the Roosevelts. By 1938 he was almost a member of the Roosevelt family.

His quick mind, gift for jaunty repartee, and good fellowship seemed to appeal to the President. Certain of his deep-seated convictions jibed with the President's. And he was unquestionably loyal; ready, when beaten in argument, to carry out the President's decision. Temperamentally he is not unlike the President; mercurial on the surface but consistent in his major purposes.

Few realize that Franklin D. Roosevelt is really a lonesome man. He talks much, but rarely unfolds himself to anyone. Hopkins seemed to suit him, although there is a trace of father-son relationship between them.

Hopkins and Robert H. Jackson were the protégés whom Roosevelt seemed to regard as best fitted to succeed him. Henry A. Wallace, with whom he was less intimate, was not far below them.

The influence of Hopkins has trickled into so many fields that it is difficult to trace. Always he has been a tenacious champion of the lower one-third of the population. He knew their problems as a welfare worker in the good old days when those problems were more largely individual than they became when the great depression struck. But when the times required it, he lifted his sights.

Hopkins was the head and symbol of the first great acknowledgment that the resources of the Nation, through the Federal Government, should be used to keep American citizens from starving. His own most notable contribution was the further idea that it was better to let them keep themselves from starving through useful public work than to hand them baskets of groceries or cash doles.

Hopkins fought incessantly for work relief. In 1933 he put across the civil-works program, which at its peak gave employment to more than 4,000,000 persons. When that was abandoned, he resorted to an emergency work program through the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. And in 1935 he ushered in the Works Progress Administration.

There were many faults in the execution of these programs—although probably no more than with other programs of comparable magnitude, including the mobilization and training of the United States Army during 1917–18.

Hopkins shares with the President the responsibility for making useful work, instead of idleness on the dole, the chief means of Federal aid to the unemployed. This was an important step toward the establishment of the fundamental principle of the right to work.

Hopkins was crucified in the press. The attack was more often on the performance than directly on the fundamental principle; but the most relentless attacks came from those who, in the last analysis, were opposed to the principle. It has not been openly accepted even yet by the Republican Party or by its present nominee for President.

With all of his determination to help the under dog, Hopkins is not open to the accusation of inciting class consciousness. He was never much interested in the reform of business or financial practices. He saw much earlier than many of his New Deal colleagues, and advocated, a rapprochement with business leaders. That was one reason why the President made him Secretary of Commerce. It was an interesting experiment. If Hopkins had recovered his health, he might now be recognized throughout the country as a socially minded friend of business.

As a practical politician Hopkins is not much, although he may be useful in this campaign in mustering the progressive and independent vote for Roosevelt. His mark is registered at the higher level of national policy. It will be visible, I believe, long after those who have attacked him in recent years have been written off by their descendants as persons of unaccountable obtuseness.

When Will the President Be Entirely Frank With the Public?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROY O. WOODRUFF

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there has been a very great deal of confusion and misunderstanding concerning the preparation of the national defense.

Figures regarding the defense are so contradictory that nobody short of an expert accountant could make them jibe or translate them. The administration apparently is committed to the technique of mixing up in the most inextricable way the "on hand" figures, the "on order" figures, and the "contemplated" figures. In the finality, there is just one figure that has real significance to this Nation; there is just one kind of equipment that will be worth anything to an army, and those are the "on hand" figures covering "on hand" equipment.

The blame for this condition of affairs has been laid by the President at the door of Congress. Several Members of the Congress have laid the blame directly at the door of the executive department. Others have been inclined to blame business and to claim that there has been lack of cooperation; that business is more interested in making munitions and machines for Great Britain, on which there is no limit to the profit, than they are in making munitions and machines for the United States, on which there is a probability of a profit limit.

Of course, the country generally has been led to understand that the administration considers that the most vitally important thing to be done at this time is to provide Great Britain with all the help we can give her. The administration itself, from the President down, has urged that very thing. In fact, the President stated to the Congress that our program would not be permitted to interfere with deliveries to the Allies.

It is time, however, for us to look at this defense question squarely and to face some of the defects which are responsible for the situation as it exists today.

The President has insisted that this Nation faces an emergency. Now, is it an emergency or is it not? If we actually do face an emergency, if time is of the vital essence, then we ought to get about this business of the national defense in a sensible and orderly manner. We ought first to decide what we are going to defend and where the line is. Obviously, we cannot prepare a rational defense unless we know the scope and location of that defense. No such decision has yet been made.

We have been committed by the President to a Western Hemisphere defense. If we are to carry out such a defense, it is obvious we will have to have many naval and air bases in Latin America. As was recently pointed out editorially in the Saturday Evening Post, it will take years to get these bases by diplomatic persuasion, and there is apparently no thought of taking them any other way.

An army of 2,000,000 men under some circumstances might not be a big army at all for a country the size of ours. We have no definite specifications. We have no unified defense program. The President himself decides everything. His ideas seem to evolve, and they have evolved from a billion dollars for defense to fourteen billions of dollars for defense, and apparently the evolution of ideas is still going on.

The truth is there does not exist today an intelligent defense policy. The reason for it is because the President has led us into this activity by leaps and bounds and not by orderly, carefully considered steps. We are told by the administration that our defenses are not as weak as some people say they are; and that there is nothing in the present emergency to justify a retreat from any of our present social objectives.

On May 28, at a White House press conference, the President said there was no reason for the country to become "discomboomerated," whatever "discomboomerated" may mean in the New Deal language. But we hear from Secretary Knox that "it is later than you think." Assistant Secretary of War Patterson tells the Nation "a year is a luxury we may never enjoy."

It is time for plain talk from the President. It is time for candor in this question of the national defense. It is time for the administration to take some of the politics out of this defense question and inject more of the genuine defense of the Nation into it.

Henry A. Wallace Notification Ceremony

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. JACOBSEN

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

LETTER FROM THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND ADDRESSES BY HON. MARVIN JONES OF TEXAS, AND HON. HENRY A. WALLACE

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the addresses delivered by Hon. MARVIN JONES of Texas and Hon. Henry A. Wallace at the notification ceremonies at Des Moines, Iowa:

AUGUST 21, 1940.

HON. HENRY A. WALLACE,
Des Moines, Iowa.

MY DEAR HENRY: I was named by the Democratic National Committee officially to notify you of your nomination for Vice President on the national Democratic ticket. The request that I perform that happy mission was coupled with the suggestion that if it were found impractical for me to leave my duties here as Speaker of the House that I should designate some other person to act as chairman of the notification committee. My sense of duty to the country in these critical days of national legislation persuades me that because of my official position I should remain in daily touch with proceedings in the House of Representatives.

I have, therefore, designated Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, to act in my stead at the notification ceremonies in Des Moines.

To use a farming term, you and MARVIN JONES have been yokefellows for over 7 years in working out and executing an agricultural program for the country that has been so sound and serviceable that even the Republican platform and their candidate for President unite in endorsing its unchanged continuation.

Please allow me again to express to you my most cordial and unreserved congratulations upon the high honor bestowed upon you by our party, as well as the assurance of my earnest desire to cooperate in every possible way to secure a great victory for the Roosevelt and Wallace ticket in November.

Sincerely your friend,

W. B. BANKHEAD.

ADDRESS BY HON. MARVIN JONES, OF TEXAS

Mr. Wallace, on July 18 the Democratic National Convention nominated you for Vice President of the United States. The Speaker of the House of Representatives, who has the respect and affection of all who know him, has asked that I notify you of the action of the Convention.

It is altogether fitting and proper that you should return to your native State for this ceremony. It is in the center of a great producing area. It has been the home of the Wallace family for generations. Here you are closely linked to the soil in the conservation of which you have played so vital a part, and in which every man, woman, and child in America is interested.

The Government of the United States is not yonder in Washington. That is merely the machinery of government. The real Government of our country is here in Iowa and in the various communities that make up our land. What is the divine note that swells the chorus of the Union and makes of this a mighty Nation, respected throughout the world? Up amid the hills of New England, out on the prairies of the West where they grow corn, wheat, and livestock, and down in the South where cotton is king, are folk—just plain, honest, homespun people. In the heart, strength, and character of these, our citizens, is the true Government of America. Back of every form of government, that is of every free government, is the citizen. There can be no great government without a great people.

From the heart of these people came Henry Wallace. It has been my privilege to work with him for years. I know his motives. I have been impressed with his character, his sincerity, and his singular devotion to the public interest. He has that engaging candor that fits him always as a garment. You, the people of Iowa, have a right to be proud of your native son. He is a magnificent tribute to the manhood of the West, and is a worthy running mate for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Industry and agriculture are the twin evangels of modern civilization. Their interests are mutual. Paralysis in one produces paralysis in the other. They should not fight each other, but work together in a closely knit harmony. The rights of labor are intimately linked with every form of American activity.

I salute you, Mr. Wallace, as one of the pioneers of this philosophy—the creed of fairness to all.

The implications of agriculture run into every part of the business structure. In the study of its problems, therefore, you have become a deep student of all phases of our national life.

At the close of the decade, ending with 1932, what did the farmers of America have? They had the Farm Board and the panic.

They now have soil and water conservation, low interest rates, rural electrification, marketing agreements, commodity loans, parity payments, the stamp plan, and distribution of surpluses.

The Democratic record of performance reads like a Republican platform of promises.

No one has advocated the repeal of any of these acts.

The same is true along other lines. Is there any man or woman with even a short memory who does not recall the dark days of chaos, despair, and bank failures that prevailed in the previous era?

The world has both critics and builders. It is easy to criticize. It is difficult to construct. We class Henry Wallace among the builders.

To him, more than to any other one man except the President himself, must go the credit for the great progress that has been made. He has shouldered the responsibility. He has faced the criticism that always comes with any new great undertaking. He has borne the brunt of the battle and has shown the courage of a deep conviction.

The granary or storage plan assures America an adequate supply of basic raw materials at all times. We all remember the times when the hot winds came and swept with blistering trail across the prairies of the West, when the heavens were brass and the earth was iron and the people were greatly discouraged. The stored reserves assure against the scarcity and suffering that such a period always causes. Agriculture is prepared to meet any national emergency.

Our chosen standard bearers have lifted up their eyes and have seen all the way across this broad, big country. They know that every portion of our country should share in the opportunities which our Nation affords. The principle of equality was written into the Declaration of Independence before our Nation was founded. It was carried forward into the Constitution. It is the heritage of every American.

Our President has done much to restore our Republic to this ancient principle, from which we had drifted far through legislation and business practices that had favored the few against the many. You have been associated with him in this great undertaking.

The New Deal is not simply a law. It is not even a series of laws. It is a movement. And the various enactments are but steps in the movement.

That movement has kept America a democracy when, under exactly similar conditions, many nations were turning to dictatorships. It has kept our country at peace when, under exactly similar conditions, many other great nations were plunged into war. At a time when brave people in many lands have lost their liberty, we have liberty, equality, manhood, fair play, and freedom from every form of New and Old World caste and privilege; and from the tyranny of wealth and birth. Freemen with free ballots will make a free choice of their leaders whom they feel best qualified to serve them during the next 4 years.

The Democratic Party was fighting for certain great principles of government long before any of us were born. It will be fighting for those same principles long after we have passed from the stage of action. There is, therefore, much at stake for our country. To be called with our great President and leader as one of the standard bearers, at an hour when knowledge born of experience is so vital to our national life, is a great commission.

That commission is not being placed in untried hands.

We have placed our faith in you, and we bid you Godspeed.

ADDRESS BY HON. HENRY A. WALLACE

Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen, you are officially conferring upon me tonight the greatest honor of my life. The office of Vice President under the Constitution serves in a unique way as a link between the executive and legislative branches of our Government.

And it is an unusually great honor to be the running mate of the one man who, more than any other, represents security for democracy in the modern world.

For nearly 8 years President Roosevelt has battled for democracy and freedom, for their preservation at home and abroad.

Both Germany and the United States were shaken to the depths by the crisis of 1932. Germany met that crisis with dictatorship and Hitler. The United States met it with democracy and Roosevelt.

Hitler believed in government by a band of Nazi overlords, with Hitler himself as the dictator at the top. Roosevelt believed in government by the people and for the people.

Hitler believed in reducing the status of working men and women to that of serfs. Roosevelt believed in putting the common man first—improving his wages and working conditions and upholding in law the right of collective bargaining.

Hitler believed in dominating both individuals and nations by force. Roosevelt believed in the good-neighbor policy, among individuals and among nations.

Hitler believed in war through preparedness. Roosevelt believed in peace through preparedness.

Hitler believed in barter deals, so as to fight his economic war preliminary to military war. Roosevelt believed in freer world trade and a higher standard of living for all nations.

Hitler believed that all freedom must be crushed. Roosevelt believed in freedom of speech, press, and religion—which we in American hold dearer than life itself.

Adolf Hitler was the implacable enemy of all democracy. Franklin Roosevelt was its eager servant and faithful defender before the whole world.

Tens of millions of Americans shared the Roosevelt belief in 1933. But not one in a million saw so early and so clearly as he the world-shaking significance of the Hitler doctrine.

Only Roosevelt had the unusual combination of many months spent as a boy in European countries, a comprehensive knowledge of history, experience as Assistant Secretary of the Navy in the first World War, access to the day-by-day information brought in by the trained observers in the State Department, and wisdom to relate that information to its significance for America.

Thus it was that Roosevelt, earlier than almost anyone else, saw that the dominating world issue was freedom and a higher standard of living versus slavery and a lower standard of living for all except the Nazi governing class. Week after week and year after year I have sat in Cabinet meetings and heard the complete accord between the President and Secretary Hull on this issue when most Americans were not aware of the terrible storm cloud on the horizon.

Time after time the President voiced the broadest possible warnings to the public in an effort to stir our people from their slumber. For these efforts he was charged with being a warmonger. But the President kept on telling the truth as he saw it, and events have proved both the sincerity of his warnings and the accuracy of his judgment.

Roosevelt has striven with greater vigor than any other President to build international good will, international trade, and a higher standard of living. In these efforts Adolf Hitler was stumbling block No. 1.

Roosevelt's task was rendered difficult enough by the opposition of Hitler abroad. But his handicaps were multiplied by a continuous and bitter partisan opposition at home.

The dominant leadership of this Republican opposition has never understood, and has apparently been unwilling to find out, what the rise of Hitler meant to farmers, workers, and businessmen in the United States. This blind leadership believed that the United States could be prosperous, no matter what happened to Europe, no matter what happened to Asia, no matter what might be our relationship to Latin America. When Roosevelt tried to adjust the internal affairs of the United States to a sick world, they fought him at home as Hitler fought him abroad.

Some of the bitter attacks on Roosevelt's program were directly inspired by the agents of Hitler in this country. Others were merely blindly partisan. But, whatever the motive, the effect was the same—these attacks on Roosevelt and his program played into the hands of Hitler. Every evidence of opposition to Roosevelt within the United States has been reason for rejoicing in Berlin.

For more than 7 years, Roosevelt has been working steadily to help the American people build an up-to-date democracy capable of bringing security to the families of this Nation. Farm income and factory pay rolls, the two strong legs of recovery, have both been more than doubled. Business profits have been restored and increased.

The danger to democracy from within, which threatened us in 1932, has been safely met. The Roosevelt remedy was not a resort to dictatorship, which so many conservatives were demanding in 1933, but merely simply more democracy. The Roosevelt programs gave more power to the people.

Now we have launched a great national effort to build up our defenses against the threat from abroad. Under the leadership of Roosevelt, this effort was begun several years ago. We now have nearly twice as many airplanes as in 1933, and double the tonnage of fighting ships afloat or under construction. We have more than doubled our Army. This is a splendid start, but it is only a start. It will be pushed until America is fully prepared to defend herself against any emergency.

Like the measures of economic adjustment, defense preparation also met with short-sighted obstructionist tactics. Why build so many airplanes? Why build another set of locks at the Panama Canal? Why spend Government money to store up strategic war materials? Why create a Tennessee Valley Authority to harness the power and water and soil resources of a great region, against a day of military need?

To some extent those interests obstructing the national defense did have their way. They caused appropriations to be whittled down, and brought needless delays. The T. V. A. was fought in Congress, in the courts, and in the press. Even a few weeks ago this opposition was still trying to block the building of one more T. V. A. dam, the power from which is needed in producing aluminum that is indispensable for our airplanes. Fortunately, that particular opposition has been overcome. But of the 93 votes cast against this measure in the House on July 30, every one was a Republican vote. Such resistance to our military progress was encouraging to Hitler, but it was definitely injurious to our own welfare.

Now, at last, some of the Republicans are beginning to see that the Nation really is in danger. National defense is going ahead, and the whole country can give thanks that the program is in such wise and experienced hands.

The total defense of modern war requires thousands of officers and men skilled in the mechanics of the gas engine, the airplane, and the tank. We must not only construct a giant air force but know how to operate and service it. We must protect the Panama Canal. We must enforce the Monroe Doctrine with an increased Navy, with air bases and through cooperation with Canada and the rest of the Americas. By preparing completely now, we shall have the best chance of keeping out of war.

But we must face the fact that the dictators have definite designs against this hemisphere. Their tactics here as in Europe are to divide and conquer. They hope by propaganda and bartering agreements to set one nation against another. They hope to set each class against another class. They inspire a multitude of angry voices in every democratic nation. Out of the confusion which they have created they hope to build political power and eventually military power.

The fact that our Presdential campaign and election come now is most welcome to the dictators. They hope to get rid of the unyielding Roosevelt. They know that a political campaign is distracting to our people. And they know that in the many months that would elapse before a new administration could act effectively, they might have their chance.

I do not wish to imply that the Republican leaders are willfully and consciously giving aid and comfort to Hitler. But I want to emphasize that replacement of Roosevelt, even if it were by the most patriotic leadership that could be found, would cause Hitler to rejoice. I do not believe the American people will turn their backs on the man that Hitler wants to see defeated.

In the opinion of the world—in the eyes of the Nazis and of the stricken nations under their heel—Roosevelt has become the symbol of democracy. And more important he is the symbol of democracy to all the nations of this hemisphere. He has proved his friendship for them by more than 7 years of fair dealing as a good neighbor. Hitler must not be permitted to break the solidarity of the Americas.

If the Americas present to the axis powers the same divided front as the democracies of Europe presented to them, we shall assuredly walk the same path of destruction and lost freedom. In the United States, as well as in the other Americas, we find certain men who for purposes of their own profit want England to give up her fight against Hitler and who are strong for economic appeasement between the Americas and a German-controlled Europe. In that direction lies slavery, even though it is sugar-coated with promises of prosperity. Those who stand for business appeasement with Germany are the backbone, even though unwittingly, of the most dangerous of all "fifth columns." For the sake of a profit in 1941 they would sell out their own future and their children's freedom. The businessmen of Western Europe followed this path to their sorrow. If we of the Americas are not made of sterner stuff, we shall go down as they have gone down. Our weapons are unity for total defense and a determination not to engage in economic appeasement.

Here in this country we are developing preparedness on all fronts.

On the agricultural front we have stored in the ever-normal granary tremendous reserve supplies, while at the same time, by commodity loans, we have protected farm prices and the purchasing power of farmers for city goods. We have increased our soil fertility. In every county and every township there are farmer committees which are prepared to meet any defense need involving agriculture.

The farm program has been such a success that Republican leaders are now commending it in the hope of getting farm votes next November. But the real attitude of the Republicans, which for many years has been against farmers' interests, has been revealed anew by two things that have happened in the last few weeks, since the Republicans adopted their platform and nominated their candidate.

One is the selection of a Republican campaign manager who in 15 years in Congress has never voted for one vital and constructive farm law. The other is the vote in Congress 4 weeks ago on funds for commodity loans, the loans on corn, on wheat, on cotton, which bring about the storage of reserve supplies and protect farmers' prices and income. Democrats voted 100 percent for these loans. Republicans, led by the personally selected Republican campaign manager, voted 106 to 38 against them. Mind you, this attempt to deal a mortal blow to the farm program was made only 5 weeks after the Republican Party in convention had solemnly pledged itself to help the farmer, including in such help commodity loans. And it was made only 4 days before the farmers were given assurances by the Republican standard bearer right here in Des Moines that their program would not be harmed. The Republican leaders say nice things about the farm program to get votes from the farmer. But when it comes to voting for the farmer, they don't deliver the goods.

There are now enough Democrats in Congress to protect the farmers against attempts like this to hamstring their program. Those Democrats will be needed again and again after the November election.

On the social security preparedness front the administration has started the job of taking care of our aged and unemployed. Continually we have put human values first. We believe that no one who is willing to work should be allowed to starve. We have improved the health of millions by means of food-stamp and school-lunch programs.

We have stood at all times for national unity. To aid in our national defense we have called in the best men regardless of party. In terms of action, the National Defense Commission represents splendid cooperation between agriculture, labor, industry, and government. We are obtaining national unity on the "fifth column" front by enlisting in a common-sense way the cooperation of local and State authorities. We are determined to break up the gigantic international conspiracy through which the Nazis are trying to subjugate our country.

A materialistic religion of darkness, based on force and lies and led by prophets of evil, is striding across the world. This war is more than a clash of rival imperialisms. It is a war to destroy freedom and democracy. It is a war to prevent the people of North and South America from developing their resources without paying tribute to Europe and without being victims of European secret police serving a self-appointed master race. There is no denying the strength and fanatical zeal of this satanic doctrine. It transcends economics and politics to invade the personal life. It proclaims might as the supreme god and the new Nazi master race as the mightiest of all, with a special destiny to direct and exploit and enslave every people in the world.

Against this dark and bloody faith we of the New World set the faith of Americanism, of Protestantism, of Catholicism, of Judaism. Our faith is based on belief that the possibilities in an individual are not determined by race, social background, or wealth. We believe in the maximum of freedom which can be obtained without anarchy or intolerance. Democracy is the very heart of the religions which have the largest following in the United States. Democracy and Americanism are identical. Both are utterly opposed to totalitarianism with its exaltation of might, its suppression of freedom, and its claims to racial supremacy.

I am happy to respond to the notification ceremonies this evening with an acceptance, because I believe the Democratic Party, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, is far better equipped than the opposition to preserve the freedom of the Americas. He has understood the Hitler menace from the start. Powerful elements in our opposition will, if the Republicans come into power, force us to make one economic concession after another to the totalitarian countries. These appeasers will have their way if the Republicans win, because they will have contributed so largely, both politically and financially, to the Republican cause. These people believe the Republicans in power would give them profitable business with a German-controlled Europe at the earliest possible moment. Most Republicans may not realize it, but their party is the party of appeasement in the United States today. It is the party which the totalitarian powers will back in every way possible. Of all men in the United States, Roosevelt best knows the danger of making economic concessions to the dictators.

Between now and November, I propose to do everything I can to arouse the American people to the need for peace through preparedness, to the importance of the solidarity of the Americas, and to the duty of businessmen, workers, and farmers to cooperate together for full employment and for the national defense. For I sincerely believe the Democratic Party under Roosevelt will best give us a higher standard of living, unity within our own country, safety from external aggression, and freedom on this hemisphere for ourselves and our children.

Connecticut State Democratic Convention

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. SHANLEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ADDRESS BY HON. PAUL V. McNUTT

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following keynote address of the Honorable Paul V. McNutt at the Connecticut State Democratic Convention on August 23, 1940, in New Haven, Conn.:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I am happy to return to Connecticut and to this ancient seat of learning and to have the privilege of meeting with those who carry the banners and fight the battles of democracy.

Tonight an anxious world awaits the outcome of democracy's last stand in war-torn Europe. Tonight vast numbers of oppressed men and women, and even little children, are looking toward this Nation as the one haven of refuge still remaining in a chaotic world.

Therefore it is peculiarly fitting that we Democrats should assemble at a place which in 1640—exactly 300 years ago—was first named New Haven, the refuge of the oppressed.

New Haven itself has a story all its own. This story should mean much to Democrats, whose party 8 years ago, under a great leader, relighted once more the torch of liberty for all Americans—the torch of Washington and Jefferson, of Jackson and Lincoln, of Cleveland and Wilson.

Here, in April of the year 1638, came the Reverend John Davenport, who had been driven out of London because he believed that the underlying principles of government could be found in the Holy Scriptures.

The unusual feature of Davenport's government was that it was wholly independent of all other sovereigns. The "freeman's charge," which was a substitute for an oath, gave no pledge of allegiance to king or parliament, nor to any other authority on the face of the earth.

And so it has ever been in the grand old State of Connecticut. The "freeman's charge" has echoed through the years. And never did it sound louder than on that memorable evening in 1687 when the General Assembly of Connecticut refused to surrender the colonial charter to a royal despot, but hid it, instead, in the famous Charter Oak on the outskirts of Hartford.

In times of national crises, it is the lot of the Democratic Party to be called to power. Our party is the oldest continuously existing political instrumentality in America. It has played a potent part in every political and economic development since the end of the eighteenth century. It is the party of liberal tendencies and of progressive tradition. History has demonstrated conclusively that it is the only party from which action along those lines can be expected. The opportunity to serve when the need is greatest has been accepted as a high privilege by the party. Such service has demonstrated the genuine and indisputable greatness of Democratic principles, the value and essential soundness of Democratic doctrines, and the inspiring fineness of Democratic achievement.

This is not a static world. Our traditional political opponents thought it was. They held fast to old theories and were at a loss when the old theories did not meet the demands of the new day. They had not had a constructive or new idea in half a century. They were entirely unmindful of the factors which control our well-being. The people revolted and swept them from power.

Whenever the Nation has been confronted with unprecedented situations, calling for unprecedented willingness to consider unprecedented policies, it has placed the Democratic Party in the seats of government. In every instance the party has proved its capacity to meet crises, safeguard the liberties of all citizens, and provide a way of life congenial to our people. The last 7½ years give adequate proof. They have been long years to Republicans out of power. They have been short years to a grateful people on the road to recovery.

It was the immortal Woodrow Wilson, historian and prophet as well as statesman, who said: "Whenever the United States forgets its ardor for mankind, it is necessary that a Democrat should be elected President." A Democrat was elected President in 1932, overwhelmingly reelected President in 1936, and will be unanimously reelected President in 1940. Called upon during this critical period, the Democratic Party produced a valiant leader, the greatest peacetime President in the history of the Nation—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

In that tragic year, 1932, all enterprise was paralyzed, all confidence was gone. So deep and so widespread was the demoralization that recovery by the old methods of individual initiative and piecemeal adjustments had become impossible. There was not merely a financial panic. There was a political and a moral panic. In every town the banks were closing. In almost every community the treasury out of which the unemployed had to be fed was empty. In Washington the Congress and the Executive were in a hopeless deadlock. Nowhere was there any organized power standing around which the people could rally.

It was under these conditions that a new leader took command. He made it his first business to prove to the people that they had in Washington a government that could govern. In the first 3 months he implanted that conviction in the minds of the American people and in the minds of all the world.

Our people had seen the Congress and the Executive so deadlocked that almost no measures could be enacted. They had lost hope not only in their own ability to meet the crisis but in the ability of anyone to do anything about anything. That was the very essence of the crisis. To overcome it the President, inspired as few men have been in our age, drove through a whole series of great measures in record-breaking time, thus serving notice on everyone that the Government was restored to full vitality.

Everybody knew that there was vigor where there had been weariness, unity where there had been disunity, and the power to act where there had been impotency. The impression was driven home that there was no vested interest so powerful that it could block the action of government; that there was no dogma so deep-seated that it could prevent bold action; that there was no important group of people whose problems the Government was not prepared to take in hand. A Democratic President and a Democratic Congress saved the day. In 1932 we found ourselves in disorderly, panic-stricken mobs and factions. By June of 1933 we had become again an organized nation, confident of our power to provide for our own security and to control our own destiny. It was a triumphant achievement under the leadership of one of the truly great men of the century—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

The Republican theory of prosperity has been the reactionary code of privilege from the time of Alexander Hamilton to that of Herbert Hoover. It is a theory of pouring in prosperity at the top of the social structure and letting it trickle down to the bottom. It is the old story of Lazarus gathering the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table. The Republicans help Lazarus by piling more food on the table. The only economic program the Republicans have ever offered the country is a high tariff. That was their remedy after the war for independence, after the War between the States, and after the World War. It is the remedy they offer now.

With millions of unemployed, millions of unemployables, millions of victims of economic forces thrown out of balance by universal world unrest, the Republicans offer a higher tariff.

Jefferson and Jackson had a different theory. And so did Roosevelt. That theory requires that the hungry be fed, that the jobless be employed, and that those oppressed by the debts of an inflated credit structure have an opportunity to recover their economic stability. It is a program of direct action to create the conditions which will enable the farmers, the laborers, and the businessmen to help themselves out of the slough of despair and hardship. It is a theory which calls for the redistribution and extension of the purchasing power of the people. It is a theory which requires the Government to do something for the people it is supposed to serve. It is a dynamic theory of government as distinguished from a do-nothing theory. It calls for action rather than resignation to the havoc wrought by uncontrolled economic forces. It is a theory of courage and hope rather than of defeatism and despair.

The Democratic Party has always been a humanitarian party and it is still a humanitarian party. The Democratic view of government has always been a liberal one, and it is still a liberal one. Democratic leaders have always been the people's champions, and they are still the people's champions.

Who cared about the boys and girls who were out on the roads, sleeping in the hobo jungles, begging their food, and hoping against hope to find a job somewhere? Who was ridiculed when he proposed to set up the C. C. C.? Who cared enough to set up the N. Y. A. to help young people finish their school and find jobs? Was it a Republican? What have the Republicans to do with youth? It was the President and Mrs. Roosevelt who cared enough for youth to take their part and give them a chance in a bewildered world.

You and I know that the reason the vast majority of young people support the Democratic Party is because ours is the party of hope and courage. With this administration, for the first time since Woodrow Wilson, a generation of youth has known a Government that was truly concerned about the welfare of all the people.

What administration took thought for the old as well as the young? Was it the Republicans? Why was our country almost the only civilized Nation on earth that had failed to set up any system of old-age insurance? You know, and so do I, that we fell so far behind because the Republican cared more about saving the pockets of its largest contributors than about giving young boys and girls a chance in life, and creating security for old men and women. It was Roosevelt and the Democratic Party that first took action to start us on the long road to social security.

How can Americans be really free if they must face the terrors of helpless old age, or of blindness or sickness with no one to help them? The vitality and initiative of any people depend on their confidence in one another, in their moral duty to stand by those who get hurt and give them a helping hand. The cynical doctrine of Republican normalcy, with the spoils to the strong and the breadlines for the unlucky, had almost broken our courage, before we shook them off and put in a great humanitarian.

Even while they were complacently contemplating their fictitiously balanced Budget, the liberties of the American citizens were in peril. While they were counting their paper profits, an army of ragged veterans was marching on Washington and hordes of hungry men and women were losing their jobs, their savings, their homes, and, finally, their spirits.

And who worried about the gullies that ate the plowed fields in the South, or the dry lands of the Southwest? Not the Republican administration of the "roaring twenties." They were satisfied to get their profits, eating up the forests and the land, wasting the petroleum, the minerals, and the natural gas, living on capital and calling it income. Calling it economy to let the forests burn to save expenses, to leave the struggling scientists in the Department of Agriculture with no money to fight soil erosion and agricultural pests.

Then came the Democrats, with a President who has lived on the land and who loves the land. You know what has happened. The Government has set up demonstration projects, and has paid for machinery and engineers to show the farmers how to save their land. The Government has hired hundreds of thousands of C. C. C. boys to go on the land and stop the gullies, to go in the forests and stop the fires.

West of the Mississippi the Government has helped the farmers to plant shelter belts across the windy prairies where trees never grew before. The Republicans could sneer at Franklin Roosevelt for this foolish idea. But today the farmers have 11,000 miles of shelter belt growing. It takes courage to try new ways and assume the risk of failure. This administration has had courage, and most of its new ways are proving to be the right ways.

It wasn't the Republicans who gave rural areas a chance to build new schools and water systems and housing. It wasn't the Republicans who made a real attack on disease—who had the courage to go ahead with flood control—who set up power lines to the farmers and learned how to cut the cost of rural lines by half. No, it wasn't the Republicans who did these things.

It was the Democrats and Roosevelt who envisaged the development of great power projects and a program of cheap electricity that would make power available to small, as well as large, consumers, decentralize industry, and turn the stream of population away from congested urban centers.

When this administration set out to reduce the swollen mass of holding companies that had grown like a cancer into the public utilities, there was a prolonged howl. The Liberty League arose to denounce Roosevelt as a dictator. A dictator because he destroyed the freedom of high-powered manipulators to hoodwink the small investor. You remember that battle. Even the gravestones were made to send telegrams to protest against the holding-company bill. But the Democratic Party stood firm and the bill passed. It is no longer easy for unscrupulous operators to sell fake securities to unwary citizens.

And when the administration set out to clean up the whole game of high finance and threatened to establish the Securities and Exchange Commission, there was another howl. The Republicans said Roosevelt was fighting against business and destroying confidence. It is another fight for freedom, and, of course, there are howls at anyone who dares to fight for the people.

The Republicans accuse the Democrats of taking the Nation to bankruptcy. They have a short memory or they would not speak of bankruptcy. They forget what happened a few years ago. They do not seem to remember the sorry spectacle of a proud and rich Nation groveling in despair, helpless and frantic. They don't remember the financial crack-ups of 1929, the suicides of 1930, the bread lines of 1931, the closed banks of 1932, the food riots, the hunger marches, the evictions, the hardships, and the sufferings. All these things escape their memory in 1940.

Consider the incredible experience of those early years of the thirties. They called him a demagogue. A demagogue because he was rallying the powers of the people to fight for the interests of the people.

The Democratic Party is not against business—it has never been against business. I believe there are more businessmen in the ranks of Democracy than the Republicans ever had. I defy anyone to prove the contrary. You know and I know that the greatest enemy of business in America has been the unseen power of concentrated financial interest. It was this power that captured control of one business after another and so mismanaged and corrupted the natural course of all business that, in 1932, it had brought business to a standstill. This administration had to protect business against entrenched wealth, and that job is only begun.

Here is a land which by natural wealth and endowment is the most favorable place for man to live in all the world. It is not overcrowded. With only 6 percent of the world's population, it has 45 percent of the wealth of the world. It has 60 percent of the world's supply of monetary gold. It is able to and does furnish 62 percent of the world's oil production. It mines a third of the world's copper and a third of its coal. It possesses 30,000,000 of the world's 43,000,000 automobiles, 20,000,000 of the world's 40,000,000 telephones. It raises half the world's cotton, half its fruit. What is equally important, this Nation has an abundance of labor, skilled and unskilled. Our technical and scientific knowledge surpasses that of any people on earth.

In such a land and with such a people we were literally prostrate on March 4, 1933. Prostrate because of 12 years of bungling political mismanagement, the like of which has not been witnessed in modern times. Every financial institution in the Nation was paralyzed, the arteries of commerce were dried up, business was at a standstill. And the party which wrought this havoc now has the unmitigated and brazen impudence to charge that the Democratic Party has brought the country to bankruptcy.

But try as hard as they could, the Republican administrations of those roaring twenties could not produce a depression so big that the Democrats couldn't pull the country out of it. Since the nightmare year of 1932 our national income has leaped from $42,000,000,000 to $72,000,000,000 annually.

The increase in national debt about which the Republicans shed so many tears could be wiped out with the increased income of 1 year with $10,000,000,000 to spare, if the people choose to do it. The Republicans bequeathed us 18,000,000 unemployed. Half this staggering number have been put to work and in addition some 6,000,000 new employables have been absorbed into the industrial system. Legitimate business has increased to a point close to the prosperity of the boom years, and industrial activity has mounted from a small fraction of capacity in 1933 to near capacity in 1939 and '40.

And now let us look at the national debt which the Republicans say will break the Nation's back and bring it to ruin. Of this amount two billion was incurred by prepayments of war bonuses already obligated. That leaves eighteen billion.

We have two billion in the reserve account of the old-age insurance fund. That leaves sixteen billion.

In the Treasury of the United States there is three billion in cash, and another two billion in the stabilization fund, leaving eleven billion.

The Government's interest in proprietary corporations amounts to three billion, leaving at this moment, a net debt increase of $8,000,000,000.

This does not take into account the billions of dollars in physical, tangible assets which the Nation enjoys in the form of roads, bridges, dams, public buildings, and other construction.

Eight billion dollars to restore to millions of Americans hope, courage, and an opportunity to live decent, self-respecting lives. Eight billion dollars for the wealthiest Nation on the face of the globe to take feeble and aged citizens out of the poorhouse and to give young boys and girls a chance to live useful and healthy lives in school and in C. C. C. camps. Eight billion dollars to reduce by nine million the ranks of unemployed breadwinners and to provide some insurance against temporary loss of jobs. A net cost of $8,000,000,000 to do all these things and yet to raise the national income $30,000,000,000 a year and increase the national wealth by $100,000,000,000.

Last Saturday the Nation heard an amazing charge brought against the party which has thus served America so faithfully. The Republican candidate sought to accuse our party of neglecting the security of this country and of failing adequately to safeguard its interests. The Republican Convention incorporated in its platform the preposterous charge that the Democratic Party had handicapped the country with respect to its armaments, its productive powers, and its economic condition.

Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the utter inability of the opposition to grasp the fundamental issues of national preparedness than such an accusation.

Their candidate and their leaders appear completely unaware of the basic conditions which made possible the fall of French civilization and which threaten momentarily a blackout of the British.

It was not, as they suppose, the mere fact that the Nazis had built a few thousand tanks or a fleet of bombers which the French could not match. These facts were themselves the result of more fundamental causes.

A civilization is not snuffed out by sheer accident.

There is much talk of Munich, of Neville Chamberlain, of the mistake in Norway, and in Flanders.

But it is the flimsiest of superficial views that the collapse of a great, virile, and courageous people is brought about because somebody guessed wrong.

History will not attribute the fate of the Allies to the failure of their individual citizens. The French fought with valor as the German legions rolled relentlessly through Flanders. But that battle was lost, and it was lost before Hitler's march through the Low Countries was begun.

Something had already happened to France and it had happened to England. And that same thing was happening to the United States of America before 1932.

It was a subtle poisoning of the national life, a dulling of our collective perception, a weakening of the national will. It was an attitude of helplessness, a choking off of our national energies, a short circuit of our national power. It was an attitude of futility and a feeling of impotency.

That is why the richest Nation on earth, in 1932, was prostrate after 12 years of economic mismanagement and political blundering. America during those years had become selfish and crass. We had no national defense. We had lost sight of real values. We were drunk with the heady wine of a booming, roaring stock market. The Government was cold and hard. It had lost touch with the people and had abandoned the liberal, humanitarian traditions of our fathers.

The national character was slowly degenerating, getting soft with decay.

That is why we were as helpless before the economic "blitzkrieg" of 1929 as were the French before Hitler's waves of green-gray troops and roaring bombers.

But America was saved. It was saved by the Democratic Party, by Democratic leadership, and by a courageous, far-seeing Democratic President—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

America was not dead. She was merely in chains.

In 1932 those chains were broken and the pent-up energy of a great people was unleashed to work out their salvation. There was in this land spiritual awakening. Courage replaced fear. Hope reappeared. And the Nation became strong where it had been weak and helpless. The Government became once more the servant of the people, dedicated to their welfare, responsive to their needs.

The years since 1932 have been years of rigorous self-discipline, years of hard work, and years of searching self-analysis. Old ways were abandoned and a selfish, greedy life given up. Americans began again to think about their country—began again to love their country, to love its forests, its land, and its rivers. And loving their country, started to take care of it, to build it up and make it fruitful and beautiful, to prepare to defend it.

These years have also been conscientious years. The callous shell has been removed from the great heart of America and we have once more become sensitive to human suffering, intolerant of injustice and hardship, and responsive to the call of fellow citizens in distress. The hard-boiled, brutal, and cynical attitude of the twenties has been cast off and the warm lifeblood of democracy has again surged through the arteries and veins of the Nation. We have seen on a national scale a return to the old spirit of mutual helpfulness that our pioneer ancestors knew. Like them, in the dangers of a new and more terrible wilderness, we have learned to stand together as comrades. This new sense of comradeship, this feeling that every American is a member of the family, will stand us in good stead as we face the dangers of the future. Let us thank God that we have made this progress toward national strength and unity.

This is what the Democratic Party has done for America.

Today we stand on the threshold of the unknown.

But we face the critical years ahead with restored confidence, with renewed determination, and with a supreme faith in our powers and in our destiny.

Our party has still a great mission to perform. America faces a threat to her freedom. The party of Jefferson and Jackson, of Cleveland and Wilson, and of Roosevelt, the great champions of liberty and justice and righteousness, is ready for that test and is prepared to meet that challenge.

At such times the people always look to the Democratic Party for leadership.

They will do it again in November.

God helping, we will not fail them.

Poll Taxes in the State of Tennessee

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. KNUTE HILL

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE CHATTANOOGA (TENN.) TIMES OF AUGUST 18, 1940

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an Associated Press dispatch appearing in the Chattanooga Times of Sunday, August 18.

It will be seen from this article just how futile it is to expect the poll tax to be repealed by the States themselves. This should be an answer to all those who would have us believe that Federal legislation along this line is interference in local affairs. It is interesting to point out that in Tennessee alone of the seven States clinging to this outmoded system is there any question as to whether or not the removal of the tax by the States would require a constitutional amendment. All of the other seven States have the requirement firmly embedded in their fundamental document.

Again I suggest to the membership that all sign petition No. 34 on the Speaker's desk. The article follows:

[From the Chattanooga Times of August 18, 1940]

POLL TAX REPEAL ISSUE FOR SOLONS—PROBLEM TO FACE LEGISLATURE—BOTH PARTIES IN STATE HAVE CRITICIZED TAX

NASHVILLE, Aug. 17.—One problem with which the general assembly that meets next January almost certainly must deal is the old issue of abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in Tennessee.

Governor Cooper campaigned for the Democratic nomination in 1938 on a platform advocating repeal of the tax requirement and E. H. Crump's Memphis organization also came out for its removal but three bills introduced in the senate and four in the house in 1939 died in committee after passing two readings.

This year both Democratic and Republican State conventions adopted platform planks advocating repeal of the tax and numerous organizations have made the issue one of their prime objectives.

Among these are labor unions affiliated with both the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the Tennessee League of Women Voters, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and others.

COOPER SILENT ON ISSUE

Cooper made no mention of the poll tax in his reelection campaign this summer against George R. Dempster, of Knoxville, other than to say he would "sign a poll-tax-repeal measure if passed by the legislature."

Dempster asked the Governor to call an extraordinary session of the legislature to repeal the act, promising to defray expenses of the session personally. Cooper ignored the demand.

Legal opinion varies as to the procedure necessary to eliminate the poll tax. One school of thought is that an amendment to the constitution is necessary; another holds that the legislature can remove the requirement merely by repealing the poll-tax law enacted in 1890, which requires payment of the tax—$1 State levy and $1 county—60 days before the general election.

Secretary of State A. B. Broadbent, himself an attorney, subscribes to the constitutional amendment theory, asserting:

"The constitution sets up the requirement in section 1 of article 4 and in my opinion this section would have to be amended to abolish the tax."

The section Broadbent referred to reads, in part:

"* * * And there shall be no qualification attached to the right of suffrage except that each voter shall give to the judges of election where he offers to vote, satisfactory evidence that he has paid the poll taxes assessed against him, for such preceding period as the legislature shall prescribe, and at such time as may be prescribed by law; without which his vote cannot be received."

OPINION IS SIDESTEPPED

The State attorney general's office has sidestepped an opinion on the issue, one official explaining that it poses a question which eventually may require a ruling by the supreme court.

Several attorneys, including Broadbent, say no amendment is necessary to remove the barrier as far as primary elections are concerned. This can be done, they assert, by amending the Primary Act.

But to amend the constitution—something which never has been done in its 70-year history—would require a minimum of 3 years and possibly longer.

First, the measure would have to be approved by both houses by a majority; then it would have to be passed by the succeeding legislature by a two-thirds vote, and finally submitted to the people in a referendum with the amendment to become effective on the date set out in the referendum.

In Tennessee a tax of $1 each by the State and county is levied on persons between the ages of 21 and 50. The law exempts deaf, dumb, and blind persons, National Guard men, and those incapable of earning a living.

Disposal of Destroyers to Great Britain

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHAN GURNEY

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 31 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN A. DANAHER, OF CONNECTICUT, ON THE AMERICAN FORUM OF THE AIR PROGRAM, AUGUST 25, 1940

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the text of an address delivered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] on the American Forum of the Air program, Sunday, August 25, 1940.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The question before us for discussion is, "Shall the United States make available to England some of its World War destroyers?" The immediate answer is, "Yes; if the United States wishes to engage in war." Let there be no mistake whatever upon that point. If the United States as a nation supplies war vessels to another nation at war, the United States will be in that war. England knows this, and what she desires really is the political commitment from us; not our old destroyers. In my 6 minutes tonight I approach the question as one whose first duty is owed to the United States of America as a nation, and I regard our own national interests as paramount.

On June 15, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson approved our statute which reads in part:

"During a war in which the United States is a neutral nation, it shall be unlawful to send out of the jurisdiction of the United States any vessel built, armed, or equipped as a vessel of war * * * with any intent or under any agreement * * * that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation * * * after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States."

Obviously then at the outset, any attempt by anyone to send out such war vessels to a belligerent is unlawful—by our own declaration.

When we passed the Defense Act 8 weeks ago Congress said:

"Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or modify" the statute I just referred to. Only 1 month ago Congress again said:

"No vessel, ship or boat * * * now in the United States Navy or being built or hereafter built therefor shall be disposed of by sale or otherwise, or be chartered or scrapped, except as now provided by law."

This is the law of the United States.

In the Hague Convention, which we signed, we as a Nation expressly agreed that the law among nations should read:

"The supply, in any manner, directly or indirectly, by a neutral power to a belligerent power, of warships, ammunition or war material of any kind whatever, is forbidden."

We have uniformly condemned those nations which have broken their treaties, and I believe our foreign policy should demand a longer view of world affairs than is to be found in advocating a breach by our United States of its own treaties and conventions.

During our Civil War Great Britain fitted out the Alabama and other war vessels for use against the North. After the war our claims against Great Britain led to a treaty concluded here in Washington on May 8, 1871, by which the United States of America and Great Britain solemnly bound themselves and agreed that:

"A neutral government is bound first to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming or equipping, within its jurisdiction, of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended * * * to carry on war against a power with which it is at peace; and also to use like diligence to prevent the departure * * * of any vessel intended to * * * carry on war. * * * And the high contracting parties agree to observe these rules as between themselves in future, and to bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers. * * *"

The United States of America collected from Great Britain $15,000,000 in gold as damages for England's part in the affair.

Since the present war began our own Secretary of State called a conference at Panama, in which, on October 3, 1939, the Foreign Ministers of all the American republics in the Panama Convention resolved in part:

"* * * that with regard to their status as neutrals there exist certain standards recognized by the American republics applicable in these circumstances, and that in accordance with them they * * * (shall prevent) the setting on foot of any military, naval, or aerial expedition in the interests of the belligerents; the fitting out or arming * * * of any ship or vessel to be employed in the service of one of the belligerents, to cruise or commit hostilities against another belligerent * * *."

We called that convention. It was the United States who stimulated this agreement by which our American republics condemned the arming or fitting out of ships or vessels to be employed in the service of one of the belligerents. That is our own language. What status or standing will our word and our position have among these or any other nations if we were to violate what we ourselves said is the law? Suppose Brazil or Argentina turned over their warships to Germany?

No; in her own national interest the United States of America must regard principle even if she's all alone in doing so. Supplying any destroyers to England is a recognized act of war, and the American people should fully realize it.

There is many another reason why we should not send our destroyers to England, but let me read the warning issued by Thomas Jefferson, who said:

"I have ever deemed it fundamental for the United States never to take an active part in the quarrels of Europe. Their political interests are entirely distinct from ours. Their mutual jealousies, their balance of power, their complicated alliances, their forms and principles of government are all foreign to us. They are nations of eternal war."

It doesn't make any difference how old the destroyers are; they're in commission. We have no allies, not even one. Nobody is fighting our war. But if we make available to England some of our destroyers for use in her war, which she declared without conference with us, inevitably we enter that war. So I answer the question—absolutely, no. I believe our Nation should stay out of that war.

Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 31 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE WASHINGTON TIMES-HERALD

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Times-Herald of yesterday showing a comparison of editorial comment on the conscription of men as compared with the conscription of wealth.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of August 30, 1940.]

WHAT HAPPENS IF WEALTH IS CONSCRIPTED?—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

This red-hot slogan, "Conscript the wealth if you conscript the men," is just the kind of catchy business to lead a lot of good people into something they don't want.

Everybody knows what happens when a man is drafted into military service.

Have you done much thinking about what happens to conscripted wealth?

Conscripted wealth doesn't just mean conscripted money. After all, that is just a matter of taxation. The Government always gets what it is after in the tax line. Always has. Always will as long as there's anything to get.

So, if the slogan is going to lead to anything, "conscript the wealth" means that the Government will move in and take over industries—lock, stock, and barrel—in the name of national defense.

Now, for the past several years the same kind of people who are now yelling loudest about conscripting the wealth have been yelling about the necessity to protect labor by higher pay and shorter hours of work. They have backed all kinds of law, State and Federal, to protect the workingman against arbitrary treatment by his employer.

And the great weapon which they have forged to protect the workingman has been the strike. We have a multitude of laws today guaranteeing labor the right to organize for collective bargaining, to strike against what it considers abuse, and to punish the employer who behaves badly when he doesn't like the way things go.

THE EMPLOYER WILL GET BY

Now, under this wealth-conscription project many of these same advocates of labor reform are shouting for, the employer would be kicked all the way out of his plant and the whole put into the hands of the Government to advance the national defense.

Forget about the employer. If he has anything at all saved up, he'll get by, even if the Government doesn't pay him off for his capital investment.

But what about the employees who have, these 5 years past, been enjoying the right to strike, the 40-hour week, the protected wage, and generally a stronger position opposite the table of authority?

Can you fancy a union business agent telling the Army officer in charge of a steel mill where to get off?

When the Government conscripts a chunk of wealth it conscripts all that goes with it, and that includes the filing clerks, the elevator boys, and the janitors as well as the lifters and pushers out in the mill.

Everybody, not just the men drafted into the Army, would be in the service of Uncle Sam.

YOU DON'T STRIKE ON UNCLE SAM

And do you think labor unions can do anything to protect wages, hours, and working conditions when the Government is boss? If you do, ask the boys in the W. P. A. union who tried to pull a strike in New York and another one here about a year ago. They got a message from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue reminding them that "nobody has the right to strike against the Government."

So they silently folded their tents.

If that isn't enough for you, consider the position of the labor unions in Germany. Or in Russia. They don't do much worth telling to protect labor against the Government there, do they?

MADE IN MOSCOW

There are some people in this country who would like to see the Government in charge of everything. That is because they figure they will then be in charge of the Government. But how anybody who claims to believe in the system of civilization under which most Americans were born and brought up and which we are all supposed now to be preparing to defend can fall for their racket is beyond our comprehension.

Every time somebody shouts "Conscript the wealth" they are delighted. But there is no reason for the rest of us to be. That slogan was made in Moscow, if any ever was. The next time you hear it, ask the shouter just what it means.

You'll find out, sure enough, that he doesn't realize what he has been saying or he is working straight toward Government take everything.

Foreign Policy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Saturday, August 31 (legislative day of Monday, August 5), 1940

EDITORIALS FROM WALLACES' FARMER

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several short editorials from Wallaces' Farmer on the subject of foreign policy.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Wallaces' Farmer of May 4, 1940]

WHAT WAR DOES

Whatever happens in the war, there is trouble ahead for American agriculture. We might as well recognize it and begin to prepare for it.

For example, if we hold completely aloof from Europe and Asia after this war comes to an end, it is obvious that our exports will rapidly dwindle to the merest trickle.

That means Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Farm Credit, Farm Security, and all other agencies of the Department of Agriculture will have the biggest task on their hands they have ever faced.

If, because of unusual European buying of farm products, there should be a temporary agricultural prosperity, we must fight attempts that are sure to be made to destroy essential parts of our agricultural adjustment machinery.

For, after the war comes to an end, we will need this machinery more than ever. There must be agricultural preparedness as well as military preparedness. * * *

In any event, it is obvious that Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Farm Credit, and the whole farm program must be improved and not weakened.—Henry A. Wallace, at St. Paul.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of May 18, 1940]

THEY WOULD BE GIFTS AND NOT LOANS

The British have been getting around 400,000,000 pounds of cured pork a year from Denmark. They won't get this again for a good while. Even if the Allies win and Denmark is restored to sovereignty, the chances are that the hog population of that nation will be eaten down to nothing and that the farms will be unable to get back to normal production very soon.

What Corn Belt farmers are wondering is this: How much American pork will the British buy to replace the pork they can no longer get from Denmark?

American exports of cured pork to Great Britain have been only a little better than 40,000,000 pounds a year. If we filled up the gap left by the Danes, we would sell 11 times as much in the next year.

Nobody expects this to happen. The British may buy more American pork, but they are more likely to ration their own people and cut down consumption.

And very probably they will use the yawning British market as bait to secure loans. They will say: "We can't pay cash. But lend us the money and we'll buy a lot of pork and wheat and other farm products."

Farmers will be urged to ask Congress to repeal the ban on loans to nations at war, on the ground that such loans would boost farm income.

Of course, if such loans are made, they will not be loans. They will be gifts. Certainly, we help hog and butter and egg prices now by giving money through the stamp plan to our own people so that relief groups can eat more food. In a similar way, we could aid farm-product prices by giving money to the Allies with which they could buy farm products.

But let's not fool ourselves by talking about loans. The debts of the last war have not been paid. Any debts of the new war will be still harder to collect.

The United States can secure greater consumption of its food products abroad by giving them away. But we can do the same thing at home. Probably at least 11,000,000 families in the Nation are badly undernourished now. It might be well to feed them up first. Then come the victims of war in Poland, in Norway, in Spain, in Finland, in China. If we are going to give food away, they should come next.

After that, if we have any money left, we might consider the desirability of giving away food to the British and French Empires.

[From Wallaces' Farmer of May 18, 1940]

IF ENEMIES TRY TO INVADE UNITED STATES

Nervous Americans, picturing foreign navies landing hostile troops on our shores, may be comforted by what happened in Norway. It took the Nazis 4 weeks, even with the advantage of a surprise attack, and little defense against them, to put about 60,000 men across from 100 to 200 miles of air-protected sea.

And it took the British, with a navy in control of the North Sea, over 2 weeks to put 20,000 men across 800 miles. Both estimates may be high.

The American Navy, in its own waters, is strong enough to defeat the British and Nazi Navies put together. Our coast defenses are in fair shape, and the Army could probably mobilize 100,000 men on the coast in a week, 200,000 men in 2 weeks.

What chance would an invasion, coming over 3,000 miles or more, have against us?

So long as we stick to defending ourselves we can get along very well. Of course, if the British and French and Dutch want us to protect their Asiatic possessions against Japan, we aren't strong enough. But how many Americans really want to fight to help Europe run Asia?

[From Wallaces' Farmer of June 15, 1940]

KEEP SHIRTS ON

Remember the radio broadcast of The War of the Worlds, when a lot of folks thought the Martians had landed in New Jersey?

The same folks—and a few more—are now convinced that the Nazis will land next week in Mexico.

Let's remember that although it has shrunk a bit, the Atlantic is still quite an ocean. And that the Nazis, even if they should win completely, have a long job ahead in consolidating their gains in Europe, if they can consolidate those gains at all.

Hysteria about "fifth columns" and "Nazi spies" is especially to be deplored. Let the professionals do the spy-catching. Amateurs almost always chase the wrong man. Skillful spies have been known to head spy-hunting mobs, just as a horse thief sometimes used to manage the local vigilantes in order to set them on the wrong track.

Because your neighbor doesn't agree with you, it doesn't prove he's a "fifth columnist." He may merely be an American exercising his right of free speech under the Constitution.

The Army and State police forces can look after the spies. We had better keep the weeds out of the corn.

Labor Day

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY ELECTRICAL TRANSCRIPTION OF HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, OF VIRGINIA

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on Labor Day, by means of electrical transcription, I addressed the citizens of Lynchburg. The address was carried over station WLVA. The address was repeated at Roanoke, Va., over station WDBJ the following day. The address follows:

LABOR DAY

There never was a truer statement than the one that "big oaks from little acorns grow." It was on a beautiful May day, the 8th of May 1882, 58 years ago, in the city of New York, and at a meeting of the Central Labor Union of New York City that Peter J. McGuire offered a simple resolution. It was, however, destined to be of far-reaching consequences. This resolution proposed that the first Monday in each September be set aside as a day to symbolize "the industrial spirit, the great vital force of every nation." The resolution was adopted, and New York and the Nation had its first Labor Day on September 6, 1882. It was a great demonstration—a mammoth parade—and followed by the traditional American picnic. Thus began the first national recognition of organized labor. Thus came into existence the ideal of a day each year set aside in honor of America's workers.

The history of the labor movement in America is one of absorbing interest. Because of a diversity of interests, sometimes because of sectional differences, and sometimes because of unfortunate leadership, the going has not always been smooth. When one surveys the whole picture, I am sure that this movement has had a most notable effect in improving the lot of the workers of America. I think that there are a few outstanding facts that are self-evident. The first is that working conditions are more favorable, and standards of living higher in America today than in any other land. Second, there is less friction and a more cooperative spirit between the employer and the employed than in any other country. Like any other great movement, labor has had its trials and difficulties. At times it has been a house divided against itself. It has also had to fight to rid itself of subversive elements that sought to gain control in some of its branches.

Today, 58 years after that first Labor Day, we find much progress has been made in making easier and more bearable the lot of the man who toils. Great social and economic reforms have come. They have been universally accepted in principle. Among them can be mentioned: Social security, old-age pensions, unemployment compensation, railroad retirement, employee liability, the right to bargain collectively, and the principle of minimum pay and maximum hours, and many other protective measures.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Perhaps the biggest economic problem that faces our country today, and in which labor is so vitally interested, is unemployment. The acuteness of this problem may be temporarily alleviated by our huge defense expenditures, but these expenditures cannot keep up forever. We certainly cannot start out on the perilous path of supporting ourselves out of our war industries alone. Some day we will be back again face to face with the problem of trying to coordinate our national economy. The stability of our economic order depends upon an answer to that problem. The problem is a paradox.

IN A LAND OF PLENTY THERE IS WANT

Stated a little differently, it would seem as if God has blessed us with too much of everything. In a land with bursting barns of grain surrounded with fields ripe with golden harvest, there is hunger. Where fields are white with cotton, textile plants are idle and American citizens are naked. In a land of virgin forests and idle men, citizens are homeless. A land where there is much work to be done, and yet millions of our able-bodied citizens are unable to find employment by which to support themselves and their families. A land where our leaders in finance, industry, and commerce have dreams of great industrial and commercial expansion, and yet do not have the formula with which to carry these into effect. The greatest country in the world, and the finest people. Unlimited resources, indefatigable energy, and yet the brain and purpose of America have not been able to piece together this crazy quilt. We have not been able to solve this riddle. We have not been able to coordinate our economy, or to bring stability out of this chaos and confusion. Such is one of the major problems that confronts America today.

MEN MUST WORK

The world does not owe a man a living, but just as surely as the principles of right are essential to civilization the world does owe a man a chance to make a living. Under our system of government, we undertake to guarantee to our fellow citizens an opportunity to support himself and his dependents by honest toil.

May I quote to you a few paragraphs from an address that I made on the floor of the House of Representatives on May 16, 1940. We had under consideration an appropriation for unemployment relief. Here is what I said:

"May we indulge for a moment in a little homespun philosophy. In my judgment, one of the factors that have made America a great nation, a nation which we are proud of and that we like to boast about, is the individuality of its citizens, the individuality of their opportunity, the individuality of their responsibility. We are told that under our system of government there are certain great guaranties, one of the greatest of which is the guaranty of equality of opportunity

"It is the opportunity of an American citizen that our system of government guarantees to him the opportunity to work, to live, to support his dependents, to start at the bottom and climb to the top, to establish himself, to own his own home, to acquire and own property, to educate his children, to support his churches, and to hold his head up as the peer of every free man who lives on the face of the earth.

"Not only that, but he has a responsibility as a citizen, a responsibility to help support this Government under which he lives. He must obey its laws and institutions. He should subscribe to its philosophies and glory in its traditions.

"Bear in mind that this guaranty of equality is not a complete guaranty of property equality. It does not mean that if one man by brain or brawn succeeds in accumulating a few dollars some other less industrious or fortunate citizen has a right by, one way or another, to take half of that and divide it up because of the guaranty of equality of the Constitution. That is not so. That is not the guaranty at all. The guaranty under the Constitution is that under this great scheme of life it will be a fair, equal, open competition on the part of every citizen to work and to live and to acquire property and enjoy the good things of life, the great competitive scheme of America, where 'the race is to the swiftest' and the 'battle to the strong.' Such is the fundamental philosophy upon which our Government was founded, and it is upon that philosophy that it has grown to be the greatest government on the face of the earth.

"When we face realities, what do we find? We find that we cannot always live up to those high ideals. We find that because of a disjointed, illogical economic system which has fastened itself upon our country, this is not an open, fair, equal competition between men, where every man who has the power and the will has as much of a chance to win as every other man. We find that because of the system which has grown upon us we have permitted distinctions to arise, discriminations to creep in, handicaps to be imposed, favoritism to be fostered, until today we cannot say that it is a free, open race; and, therefore, we must try to set in motion, if we can, compensating influences which will seek to help make the race a little more fair, which will help to remove some of these artificial handicaps that have been placed upon some of the fine, splendid people of the country who do not have the open, free competition in this scheme of life.

"In this fierce battle we find that many men have not had their opportunity. There are some, I fear, who are not particularly anxious to enter into the heat of this competition. They are not new. They are not a product of the so-called depression or the New Deal. They have been here all the time. Instead of getting out in the heat of the noonday sun to win the race and to win the spurs that they wear by their brain or their brawn, they prefer to sit in the cool of the shade and let the world go by, hoping to grab something as it passes by. They are not a new element. They have been here all the time. [Applause.] But there are many others who in these last few years were under a definite handicap, strong, honest, fearless, brave American citizens who need a helping hand. I am glad that many of them received a helping hand, but many others who should have received a helping hand have been pushed out of that line by the very system that we set up to try to aid them. We must try to take away those discriminations; we must try to set these men on their feet so that they go forward under their own motive power. [Applause.]

"This should be the objective of this Government. This should be the objective of every relief program that we set up."

I readily recognize the duty of the Government to assist those who are deserving, and who through no fault of their own cannot find employment. I have voted liberal appropriations for such purposes; but I have insisted, and let me make it perfectly clear that I shall continue to insist, upon five things. Namely:

1. That the money appropriated be not squandered.
2. That the localities do their part, and not put it all on the Federal Government.
3. That the funds go to deserving unemployed.
4. That the program be rid of political racketeering, and
5. That the un-American element be driven out.

My experience with the great body of laboring people, certainly those in my "neck of the woods," convinces me that they do not want to receive handouts from the Government. What they want is an opportunity to work.

To secure a benefit of some sort out of the Federal Treasury seems to be the order of the day in some sections and from some groups, but let us remember, however, that the only stable social order, the only society that will stand the test of time, is the one built upon the principle of our ability to be self-sustaining—self-supporting. I repeat, our objective must be to help the unfortunate—to help themselves—and to make a go of it under their own power and by their own efforts.

COOPERATION

Fateful days lie ahead of the world. America is destined to play an important part in this world drama. We may be called upon to defend with arms our way of life. Indeed, now we rush our preparedness efforts. If we are to win in this great struggle, as win we shall, we must march hand and hand, and with a single purpose—labor, production, security, self-sufficiency, cooperation, unity. These must be our great watchwords, with all Americans united in a single cause, "All the forces of evil cannot prevail against us."

I thank you.

Jefferson Changed His Mind and Agreed That Long Terms for Congressmen Desirable and Also Decided One Term for President Not Enough

---

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WRIGHT PATMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting herewith a memorandum prepared by the Library of Congress, Legislative Reference Service, regarding the following:

First. President Hoover supporting Calvin Coolidge for third term.

Second. Mr. Justice Hughes supporting Coolidge for third term.

Third. Statements by Thomas Jefferson on the tenure of Congressman, and a statement by George Washington on third term, and my comments on the reason why Jefferson changed his mind about short terms in Congress and the White House.

STATEMENTS BY HERBERT HOOVER AND CHARLES E. HUGHES SUPPORTING THE CANDIDACY OF CALVIN COOLIDGE IN 1928

In answer to the question whether he would be a candidate for the Presidency, Herbert Hoover said, in the following interview, that he was not a candidate and that he intended to support President Coolidge.

[Excerpt from the New York Times]

"No, I will not be a candidate. I am for Mr. Coolidge, who, I am sure, will be our President for 4 more years."

(Hoover was asked if this were a correct notation of his Chicago declaration.)

"I said that. Of course, I am for Mr. Coolidge," he replied. "It would give offense to my sense of loyalty to say anything else."

New York Times, July 21, 1927, page 13, column 3. (The above statement was made at Rapid City, S. Dak.)

[Statement of Charles E. Hughes, September 1928]

"I am not very familiar with the political situation," Mr. Hughes said * * *, "but I am still of the opinion that Mr. Coolidge will be renominated and reelected and I am for that."

"I read the statement (Coolidge's statement that he did not choose to run) issued by the President while I was in Europe. I accepted it as a perfectly sincere expression of the President's own wishes. It may be that some further information has become available in some quarter regarding his attitude, but what I read led me to believe that the President did not wish or desire another nomination."

[Excerpt from Hughes' statement on his candidacy, 1928]

"I know nothing of the movement (to make Hughes President) to which reference is made. There should be no doubt as to my own attitude. I am for President Coolidge first, last, and all time, and I believe that he will be renominated and reelected. I do not wish my name used in any contingency. I am too old to run for President and I would neither seek nor accept the nomination." (New York Times, September 6, 1927, p. 1, column 3, p. 16, column 2.)

[M. H. Nipe, August 26, 1940]

STATEMENTS BY THOMAS JEFFERSON ON THE TENURE OF CONGRESSMEN

To prevent every danger which might arise to American freedom by continuing too long in office the Members of the Continental Congress, to preserve to that body the confidence of their friends, and to disarm the malignant imputation of their enemies: It is earnestly recommended to the several provinces, assemblies, or conventions of the United Colonies, that in their future elections of delegates to the Continental Congress, one-half, at least, of the persons chosen be such as were not of the delegation next preceding, and the residue be of such as shall not have served in that office longer than 2 years—(1776).

* * * * * * *

No person who shall have served 2 years in Congress, shall be capable of serving therein again, till he shall have been out of the same 1 whole year—(1777).

Source: John P. Foley, edition, Jeffersonian Cyclopedia, page 184.

GEORGE WASHINGTON ON THIRD TERM

As for George Washington, let us refer to his own serious and thoughtful words, written in a letter to Lafayette on April 28, 1788:

"As for instance on the ineligibility of the same person for President, after he should have served a certain course of years, I confess I differ widely myself from Mr. Jefferson and you as to the necessity or expedience of rotation in that appointment. There cannot, in my judgment, be the least danger that the President will, by any intrigue, ever be able to continue himself one moment in office, much less perpetuate himself in it. Under an extended view of part of this subject, I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who, in some great emergency, shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public."

This was the final judgment of the Father of his Country. This was the judgment that prevailed among the fathers when they established our Constitution. Purposely they did not place in that Constitution any restriction on the number of times a man might serve his country in the office of President. It is as if they foresaw just such an emergency that the Nation faces today—a crisis that calls for the man who has guided us through one great era of peril and now, with calm wisdom and a knowledge of international affairs not matched by any other leader in the world, is safely guiding us through another.

Perhaps some of those who have been so violent on the subject of a third term should have a little more of the faith of Washington that this democracy will live, that no man by intrigue could perpetuate himself in office. Perhaps we should get on a commoner ground and use a little sense to remind ourselves that we now are in the midst of a campaign in which the people themselves will vote as to whether or not they want Mr. Roosevelt to serve a third term.

JEFFERSON ON SHORT TERMS

No one reveres Thomas Jefferson more than I. That does not mean I accept every theory he had 150 years ago—and I advise my friends in Congress to be wary of their declarations of adherence in certain respects, too. For Thomas Jefferson not only did not believe a President should have a third term, but he did not believe in third terms for Congressmen and Senators, either. In fact, at one time he did not believe they should even stand for reelection—something that some congressional opponents of Mr. Roosevelt, now serving their fifth or tenth terms, might ponder before they use Mr. Jefferson's name again.

They also might ponder a remark of Mr. Jefferson anent a third term that there is a "circumstance which could engage my acquiescence in another election, to wit, such a division about a successor as might bring in a monarchist," and ponder whether today's menacing threat from the dictators might not be conceived by Mr. Jefferson much more critically dangerous than a monarchy.

JEFFERSON CHANGED HIS MIND

I believe it is now generally understood that although Thomas Jefferson opposed a second term for either a President or a Congressman, he later changed his mind. Not only did he himself accept a second term, but he suggested that there was a circumstance that could arise that would cause him to accept a third term. Not only that, but experience taught him that one had to learn, as the former Champ Clark, of Missouri, said, to be a Congressman; and that he not only changed his mind that no Congressman should succeed himself, but he actually advocated the candidacy of Members, who were running for reelection, who had served a number of terms in Congress.

The fact remains that experience is the best teacher, and a man as great as Thomas Jefferson could be mistaken the same as anyone else; but he was not too big to refuse to change his mind when he discovered that he was wrong.

Compulsory Military Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. ARTHUR ANDERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I stand here on the floor today in the capacity of an individual member of the Military Affairs Committee of this House to implore my colleagues to weigh carefully and consider calmly any measure that proposes to saddle compulsory military training upon the people of this Nation. Before we embark upon any such course, which by its very nature is inimical to democracy, let us ask ourselves a few pertinent questions. The first and greatest question is, What are we preparing to undertake? Is it defense or is it preparation to join in the folly of war? What more could we do than conscript our youth, if we were actually at war or imminently in danger thereof?

The second great question to consider is, Have we learned anything at all of military value from the war in Europe? It strikes me that the American people have learned a great deal from that terrible war that our military and naval experts cannot or will not see because their eyes are dimmed by tradition and their minds are adverse to progress.

If the men who dominate and control the policy of our military machine have given any thought to the military, and not the political, significance of the war in Europe they would not be crying for conscription; for men and more men. They would, rather, be bending their every effort to properly equip and train the troops we now possess or have authorized. Anyone who will take the time to examine the records can see that the so-called progress in the manufacture of essential arms such as planes, tanks, large guns, and so forth, is not adequate nor is it proceeding with proper speed. Witness the maneuvers now being held, with trucks acting in place of tanks, and gunners practicing, schoolyard fashion, with cardboard and wooden guns. The men thus engaged are not conscripts nor raw recruits. They are trained soldiers of the Army and National Guard. The theorists at the War Department may feel satisfied with a truck with a sign on it, Tank, but before they come here and ask to conscript millions of young men, let them devote their energy to the task of equipping the forces we now have. Until that job has been done, the appearance of these men to plead for conscription strikes me as a deliberate attempt to direct the attention of the American people away from the fact from these gentlemen, up to now, have failed to provide our existing Army, including the National Guard, with the essential weapons of modern war. Do they propose to train the conscripts under the tutelage of an officer who has received his own training in a cardboard tank or with a wooden gun?

It seems clear that the dominant forces in our military set-up are still ignorant of the fact that the wars in Europe and in Asia have more than proved that manpower alone means very little to military success and that equipment, machines, real tanks, real airplanes, real guns, are what spell the difference between defeat and victory.

Let us not forget that France had a trained army of nearly 5,000,000 men. These men were not conscripts, but trained, hardened troops, said to be the finest in the world. Yet this supposedly greatest of armies, was utterly routed and destroyed by an enemy admittedly far less trained but one that possessed every modern weapon capable of production. Did our military experts learn anything from the destruction of the French Army? Do they still believe that men and more men are what makes an army? Can it be that they have failed to study the plight of China where manpower exists in its greatest abundance? Are they learning anything? Are they even trying to learn anything from the Battle of Britain? The boys and girls in the street who read the papers and listen to the radio know that the success of the British in defending their island will depend on how long they can keep about 5,000 airplanes in the air and how long they can keep a few thousand antiaircraft guns firing. If these planes are downed or the guns silenced by the enemy an invasion of England would be comparatively easy. All the millions of men in the British Empire will be of little avail unless their air force and antiaircraft guns can offer resistance to the enemy. Machines and equipment mean life or death in modern war. Men alone mean nothing.

Here in the United States we have authorized a Regular Army of 375,000 men. The National Guard number about 250,000 trained men. This number is augmented by the Organized Reserves and by partially trained men who have had C. M. T. C. experience. Together that is a fair-sized army. Properly trained and equipped with the tanks, planes, guns, and so forth, that American ingenuity is capable of giving them, they represent a force well-nigh invincible—if you are speaking of defending the United States.

If the Army we now possess, including the National Guard, was equipped with the necessary planes, with the necessary guns, antiaircraft and otherwise, with the all essential tanks, and with the other machines of modern war, and if that Army was trained fully in the use of such equipment, which it is not at present, then there could possibly be a sounder basis for considering conscripting additional men for military training. Until that point is reached and until a voluntary system of enlistment in both the Regular Army and National Guard has been given a fair chance, agitation for conscription can serve only to disrupt the proper training of a modern war machine, to weaken industry and agriculture by sapping it of the vigor of youth, and to dampen the faith of the people in the democratic form of government.

During my service in this House I have worked conscientiously for a modern and sufficient Army to defend this Nation and the principles for which it stands. I have pleaded for aviation and mechanization. I have supported every defense measure that has come before this House. I have studied every report I could get of the war in Europe for the purpose of being enlightened on the needs of our armed forces in the world of today. Everything that I have done and do now is with the firm conviction that this country will not participate in the European conflict. I have studied the problem from the standpoint of defense only. Having thus defined my course, I cannot conscientiously support conscription at this time.

With our present Army sadly lacking in proper equipment and in the training for use thereof, I cannot perceive a legitimate basis for conscription. I am ready to support any measure for the defense of my country. I am not ready to call millions of young men out of the factories and fields to be trained, if you can call it that, by men who have not had training themselves or very little training, in the methods and equipment that is all-essential in present-day war.

Until such time as we are prepared to train men in the use of modern equipment which is now sadly lacking even in the Regular Army, we are wasting time in talking conscription and we are jeopardizing the defense of this country.

Those who profess to have such great and boundless concern for the future of our Nation would do far better just now to exert their influence in the proper places to see that the Army we now have is equipped with the best planes, the best guns, the best tanks, and the best ammunition that America is capable of producing. Why sabotage the whole defense program by calling in millions of men when we are not yet prepared to school them in modern warfare?

Freedom and Liberty in Danger

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RAYMOND S. SPRINGER

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

ARTICLE BY ADOLPH STARR

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, many of our people are frightened because they see their liberty and freedom slowly vanishing. They are not afflicted with any hysteria when they make their decision on that issue, because they well recall the various forms of regimentation which have been imposed upon the people of our country by the administration now in power; they have witnessed the rise of the "fifth column" until it is now a very serious threat in our land; they have learned that our flag has been disgraced and torn from its place in this Nation; they have witnessed the subversive activities within our borders; and it is time that these destructive agencies be abolished and good and wholesome patriotism instilled into the minds and consciences of our people. We must forever cling to our Constitution, and we must forever forbid the destruction of our liberty and freedom in this Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include therein an article written by Mr. Adolph Starr, past national chaplain of the Navy Club, United States of America, which is enlightening, indeed, upon the subject of freedom and liberty in danger.

The article follows:

FREEDOM AND LIBERTY IN DANGER

(By Adolph Starr, past national chaplain, Navy Club, United States of America)

ACTING LIKE CHILDREN WITH NEW TOYS

To every fair-minded and decent person freedom and liberty are a priceless heritage. We Americans have gloried in our liberties and the freedom of our lives, but many—and I must say even too many—have forgotten how much we have paid for our freedom and liberty and the many sacrifices with which they were purchased. We have been acting like a child with a new toy. We have enjoyed our freedom and our liberties just as though they were presents or gifts which carried with them no respect for obligation, and we have been the most careless and foolish spendthrifts of our inheritance, just like the prodigal son mentioned in our Holy Scripture.

OUR HUMAN GARDENS MUST BE WEEDED

Too many of us seem bored to stand at attention when "Our flag is passing by." Too many of us are reluctant to stand when the band plays the Star-Spangled Banner, and forget that it represents the greatest gift of civilization since the birth of Jesus Christ, that for which our forefathers died that we might live in the "land of the Pilgrims' pride." More than at any previous time in our history, yes, more than any other time since the birth of Jesus Christ, should we be thankful for our inheritance of liberty and freedom. Yes, we should be eager to stand when the band plays our national anthem and when the flag is passing by, and because of what Old Glory means to us. We should be more eager to learn from nature. Nature never pretends! When our flower garden is infected with weeds it is time to weed the garden before the infestation of poison weed destroys the flowers and we have nothing but the weeds left. And so it is with the flower of our manhood and our womanhood. We have been enjoying liberty and freedom without discipline, and if we do not weed our human garden we will, eventually, like the totalitarian countries of Europe, be subjected to brutal discipline without liberty and without freedom, and become systematically hardened to brutality.

Those totalitarian countries have been hardened for brutal combat and we of America have been softened through our self-indulgence and indifference and have been fast losing our respect for law and order, respect for civility, respect for our traditions, our Constitution, and the Declaration of Independence. We have been teaching our children disrespect for Americanism and have allowed the weeds of communism, fascism, and other "isms" to grow up among us without restraint. We have viewed with indulgence leaders of our educational and industrial systems create hatred and race prejudices in our beloved America, and have supinely accepted teachers and educators of subversive doctrines from totalitarian countries. We have accepted with condonation men in high public office who are too spineless, too weak, and too reluctant to protest against the subversive forces and are laying a foundation for the destruction of our democracy, our liberty, and our freedom. The very virtues by which our forefathers were dominated, who by their great sacrifice won for us the democracy with liberty and freedom, and which we still enjoy to some extent, have been depreciated and disparaged and replaced by wisecracking and ridiculed by ignorant sophisticators known for their chicanery and prestidigitation.

How To Insult the United States—By Henry A. Wallace

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES SECCOMBE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE CLEVELAND NEWS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Cleveland News of August 30:

[From the Cleveland News of August 30, 1940]

"HOW TO INSULT THE UNITED STATES" BY HENRY A. WALLACE

A more arrogant and stupid speech has not been made in recent Presidential campaigns than that of Secretary Henry A. Wallace last night in accepting the Democratic nomination for Vice President, which had been voted him at Chicago by order of President Roosevelt and against the apparent will of the Democratic Convention.

It was also a dangerous speech politically. Mr. Wallace's late father could have told his bumptious son of a piece of American history, to the candidate's profit. The elder Wallace, a Republican editor, took part in the backfire to Woodrow Wilson's unhappy appeal to the voters in 1918 to elect Democrats to Congress, because they would prosecute the World War more vigorously than Republicans.

Few Presidents have been rebuked by the people as President Wilson was—the Republican landslide of 1920 really started with the victories in the 1918 Congress election. Or more deservedly rebuked, for patriotism in America has never been a party issue and, God willing, it never will be unless loud blunderers like the younger Wallace get into a majority.

For Secretary Wallace last night set up the theory that President Roosevelt really was running for this third term against Adolf Hitler; that the Republican Party represented appeasement to Hitler and was backed by the totalitarian powers of Europe. We predict the popular reaction to this insulting, un-American falsehood will be like the reaction to the Wilson folly of 1918.

Secretary Wallace has long been notorious for a fantastic mind. He is the great dreamer of our secretaries of agriculture. It never would occur to such a mind that, in this campaign, the Republican Party, by standing for individual rights and liberties against restrictions imposed by the New Deal, by standing for fiscal honesty, by standing for the democracy of the single citizen and against regimentation by classes, is closer to the pure democratic cause than the New Deal candidate or his record.

It is plain that this would not occur to him because of the long and unhappy comparison he made of the acts of Fuehrer Hitler in Europe and President Roosevelt in Washington. To anyone, many comparisons not voiced by Mr. Wallace spring instantly to mind:

Mr. Roosevelt took sweeping emergency powers over American life in 1933 just before similar powers were decreed to Hitler in Germany. Mr. Roosevelt has not yielded many of these powers, the first emergency grants of their kind in our peacetime history.

Mr. Roosevelt, so far as he could, reduced Congress to a rubber stamp to O. K. his exact will. What comparison does this suggest with the present Reichstag?

Mr. Roosevelt constructed a law to enable labor unions to organize the country and, to enforce it, set up a labor relations organization whose members have felt it their unswerving duty to punish American employers, suspend certain rights of speech and trial, and await with eagerness the coming socialist revolution. What comparison with Nazi Germany is possible here?

Mr Roosevelt in 1938 attempted to purge certain leaders of his own party who had refused to surrender all their independence to his wishes. Hitler would have approved these tactics.

Mr. Roosevelt still has fullest powers over American currency and banking, and through the N. R. A. he looked forward to the control vested at Washington over American business and industry. Is there a comparison with the Reich's economy here?

The awfullest thing Hitler has done was to pit class against class on a basis of race prejudice. That the President has not done; but how much less a wrong was it to cultivate the hatred of a class for another class in a democratic nation?

The misrepresentation in the Wallace speech was appalling at some points. His statement that the T. V. A. was set up for military need, for instance; the only purpose ever stated for it by President Roosevelt was yardstick regulation of private utility rates. If military need had been the necessity, why all the salesmen in the South peddling cheap T. V. A. power from door to door? Why couldn't it have kept books honestly if military need was the purpose?

Not a word from Secretary Wallace about the failures, the retreats, or the spending. A promise to the farmer that the New Deal would send him more checks than any Republicans would was the closest he came to one of the biggest issues, no matter who wins the election—economic recovery.

This speech must have had the Roosevelt approval. It sounds as if he had suggested many of the lines. He and his running mate will regret it if we know the American people.

Steps Toward British Union, a World State, and Internal Strife—Part VIII

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. THORKELSON

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article entitled "The International Situation." This article appeared in the National Message, the official organ of the British-Israel World Federation, under date of November 23, 1925. It is also affiliated with the American-Israel Movement, located in Knoxville, Tenn.

The front page of this pamphlet shows the battle map of Egypt and Arabia, with arrows pointing from Ethiopia toward the Sudan; and with three arrows pointing from Persia, Siberia, and Tobolsk, toward Iraq and Arabia. There are also three arrows pointing from Moscow, central Europe, and southern Europe toward Syria, and one arrow from Libya, pointing toward Egypt. This map is therefore to show the direction of attack on these British Mandates, as prophesied by the British-Israel World Federation.

What is our position in this battle plan of British-Israel? Our position is supposed to be on the side of Great Britain, to war in the Sudan, Egypt, Arabia, Iraq, Palestine, and Syria, against all the world powers. It will require a large army to fight the world, so I am not astonished when the Chief insists that we call out 40,000,000 men to fight for the British-Israel World Federation. All of this is to establish Jerusalem as the capital of the world and the center of this world government in Egypt and Arabia.

Our Army will travel by the way of the Pacific and Indian Ocean to India and the South African British possessions, such as Tanganyika and Rhodesia, from which attack will be launched against the forces that are supposed to attack this little parcel of land lying on each side of the Red Sea. This might seem like a crazy plan, but it is that which the British-Israel and Great Britain have in mind in this war.

I have described the map and shall now insert the article which appears on the other side of the pamphlet.

We come to the consideration of the international situation. The attention of the world has been drawn irresistibly to Italy by the movements of Italy. This is focused at the moment on the invasion of Ethiopia. We have not dealt at large with this matter, and we have avoided having much discussion on it in the National Message. It is important, and the events will be the measure of the importance. But, after all, it is but a detail of the larger plan. Italy is moving; Russia is quiescent, and Germany active only within her own boundaries. We consider that Italy is less of a menace to ultimate world peace than either Russia or Germany. We turn to our Book and there find our instructions. We give, in connection with this article, a map of the heart of the world. We call to mind that the city of Jerusalem is placed exactly in the center of the world's population. We further call to mind that the Great Pyramid is the center of the land surface of the world. Around those two centers, including them, we find the mandated territories and possessions of Britain. Taking Jerusalem as a center, and looking eastward and north and south, we have Palestine, Trans-Jordania, Iraq, Arabia. Again taking our stand at Jerusalem and looking southward, we have Egypt and the Sudan; with the countries beyond that we do not now deal; they do not come into the picture. The map shows the British mandated territories and possessions as the heart of the world, and this they are. Whoever possesses them a quarter of a century from now will dominate the world. God has said that Israel shall possess them. We believe that the Celto-Saxon world is Israel. Therefore, Israel, the sons of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with Ishmael, will possess the land.

But Italy has announced the intention to regain that which once constituted the eastern part of the Roman Empire. That is plain enough and needs no explanation.

Russia has long announced her intention and has every plan made to take possession of the Euphrates Valley and Palestine, at the least. That also is historic, plain, and needs no interpretation.

Germany, in the last war, made a definite attempt to hold the land which, through Turkey, she had occupied. She lost the war, but not the cause, and has by no means given up hope or intention in regard to such possession.

The Bible takes knowledge of all this, and prewrites the history of the threefold attempt to obtain possession of the land. The thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters of Ezekiel are very definite on the matter. We shall later quote the necessary passages to illustrate this. The minor prophets have had very clear vision of this upheaval, as they had very clear vision of that upheaval which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem. We recommend the reader to turn to Joel and read that wonderful prophecy. In my copy of the Oxford Bible it begins at page 1112. It embraces less than four pages, and can be read in half an hour. I would recommend then that the reader should turn to Zechariah, chapter XII, and read it to the end. In my copy it is page 1152, and two-and-a-half pages of the Bible embrace it all. In chapter XIV, verse 2, there is this statement: "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle." Now, this is a prophecy which would not have fitted any former period of world history. It is a prophecy which will fit no future period of the world history. It is a prophecy which will have fulfillment now.

All nations, then, are to be gathered against that territory now under the British throne, which has Jerusalem for its center. Three groups will move against this territory, with the intention of occupying the whole or a part thereof. First among them will be the chief prince of Meshech (Moscow) and Tubal (Tobolsk). The second group listed are Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya. The third group listed are Gomer (Middle Europe) and all his bands, the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands, and many peoples with him. In the map on the previous page we have traced arrows to show the lines of approach by which the various peoples will invade the British territories, all aiming at Jerusalem as the central point. Here is the map:

Translated into modern phraseology, Central Europe, Russia, and that power which holds Ethiopia and Libya will be marching toward a common center with one definite purpose; namely, the seizing of the land. Those who would read what will be the final issue of the matter may read the passages already named in Joel and Zechariah and, more specifically, the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters of Ezekiel.

The following passages furnish those details:

"And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

"And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords:

"Persia, Ethiopia, and Libya with them: all of them with shield and helmet:

"Gomer, and all his bands; the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many people with thee."—Ezekiel xxxviii:3–6.

The Lord's army who shall oppose them are:

"Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? To carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?—Ezekiel xxxviii:13.

The gathering of the nations is expected and provided against by the Lord; the King of Israel:

"For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

"Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle."—Zechariah xiv:2–3.

Mr. Speaker, I shall make no comments on this article, except to say that this is a description of the coming war that is planned to take place in Egypt. I shall now include excerpts from other articles, giving the names of the magazines, so that those who read may be better informed of the most devilish plot which has ever been evolved by the brain of man.

I now quote from "The hand of God in the White House," by Edna Bandler:

Franklin D. Roosevelt, ordained and used by God to be His executive—to be the leader and deliverer of His people (like Moses) to deliver them out of the depression and out of chaos.

Only the hand of God could have delivered this man out of the net of the Chaldeans. But he stood alone like a Christian statesman and pleaded the cause of his people. Just he and God—no "party man" or organization could boast. Just the hand of God put him on the throne.

I have seen the hand of God in the White House. From the day the shield of David and seal of Solomon was discovered on the porte-cochere of the White House kitchen, President Roosevelt has been accused of placing the Jew sign on everything: The six-pointed star rightfully belongs to us, and George Washington ordered it on the White House pillar, and it was not an accident that Betsy Ross, whose father and family were the makers of the first Stars and Stripes; Betsy changed the star to the five-pointed star, but God meant it to be so. We, "the preserved of Israel," were lost and hidden until a time appointed to be revealed.

With the David shield, Solomon's seal, the great pyramid message, "A memorial forever," told in the book of Joshua, fourth chapter, and this pyramid coming out on the new $1 bill with the six-pointed star, all has great significance.

"All the shields of the earth belongeth unto Me, saith the Lord, and when the standard and the ensign is set up, ye shall know your redemption draweth nigh." The reason this obverse side of the seal is only on the $1 bill is because "Christ and His people are one." On our early coin with the 13 links of chain, and in the center of the coin "We are one," and on the other side it was written: "Mind your own business." Our shield and all the shields of the nation tell their story. In my new book, Unveiling of Israel, many startling things. A great prophecy has just been revealed.

I shall now quote from a book entitled "The House of Israel":

Much is made of the "perpetuity of the Davidic throne." If the Davidic throne was to be established forever, then it must be found somewhere now. The English throne must therefore be the throne of David, and King George the seed of David, for does not the Scripture say that "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel"? (Jer. 33: 17, 20–21.)

I shall now quote an excerpt from Time, of September 16, 1936, by Mrs. Edna Bandler, whose husband, I believe, was a prominent Jew:

"The coming of the Lord * * * Great confusion upon earth * * * September 16, 1936," was announced last year in Manhattan by a Mrs. Edna Bandler in volume 1, No. 1, of a magazine called the Prophet. Last week Mrs. Bandler turned up in the news again, conducting a "week of prophecy" in Town Hall daily, donning a white veil and prophesying for the 25 to 100 people who dropped in, admission free, to hear her.

Edna Bandler is the white-haired intense-eyed widow of a rich diamond merchant. Until 2 years ago she lived in a mansion, full of gilt and marble, which John D. Rockefeller built years ago in West Fifty-fourth Street for his son, John D., Jr. She now dwells and conducts prophetic services for a small band of followers in a lushly furnished duplex studio in West Fifty-seventh Street, a neighborhood in which flourish many swamis and faith healers.

Mrs. Bandler prophesies in a helter-skelter flow of words which many a listener last week found incoherent. Several of her ideas accord with those of British "Pyramidologists," who believe that in the courses of masonry and many tunnels of the Great Pyramid of Cheops are to be found prophecies of the world's history until the year 2045. Pyramidologists thought September 16, 1936 was to be epochal for the world, but Prophetress Bandler now denies that she predicted anything like the world's end. She insists, however, that, known only to her, 300,000 people were slaughtered on Mt. Carmel on that date. Sample Bandler prophecies:

Fascists are the Philistines. Mussolini is the Biblical "beast of the iron teeth," and he will take over Spain.

The 12 most powerful nations on earth are the 12 tribes of Israel, of which Prophetress Bandler will identify only England (Ephraim), France (Reuben), the United States (Manasseh).

President Roosevelt, to be the last United States President, is God's anointed. Because he is divinely ordained, and also because man's span is 70 years, the President will be allowed to appoint as many Supreme Court Justices as he pleases.

The world's redemption will come through love. "I'm giving the last love-call for the world before the tribulation comes."

When all communications between the United States and Europe are cut off, when radios go dead, when we are forbidden by decree to speak the name of Jesus, when David, Duke of Windsor, takes an airplane to Jerusalem, then we will know the conflict is at hand.

This will give my colleagues an idea of the British-Israel World Federation, an organization which is widely distributed into every nook and corner of the Nation. These subversive teachings which have for their purpose the creation of a world government, with Jerusalem as the capital, should now be clear to all who read this message. This movement has infiltrated our churches, schools, and even the Army itself, as this quotation clearly reveals:

More than a year has passed, but at last we have secured, through the help of Mr. C. H. M. Foster, the honorary secretary of the Keswick convention, testimonials from several men of high rank in the British military and naval service, which we intend placing in the hands of every officer in the United States Army and Navy. As a foretaste of what our readers are to receive in the next months from the publication of these wonderful stories of God's dealing in the lives of great men of empire, we quote a sentence or two, from the letter from Admiral Sir Harry H. Stileman which accompanied the manuscript. "I send it with the earnest prayer that my experience as a reconciled sinner may help some brother officer in the United States Navy to lay down the arms of his rebellion at the feet of the Lord Jesus, the captain of the Lord's host, and accept from these pierced hands God's gift of eternal life." These admirals and these generals are men who won their promotions and highest honors in the Great War. Their testimonies are going to be of great interest, heart warming, thrilling words to put into the hands of young people.

This movement is very subtle, and on its face appears to be a Christian movement. We must, however, take into consideration that the people who fight and die in this war are not only Christians, but include other creeds and races as well. We will conscript an army today, not to protect America, for we are not threatened. We will instead organize an army to fight in the Holy Land on the side of the English. Can we hope to succeed in this war, facing as we will all nations in the world? The answer is absolutely "No." We should, therefore, make it our business to build the defenses of the United States, wash our hands of this deadly international intrigue that is enshrouding common sense and sound reasoning. And this may be done, as I have said many, many times, by returning to our fundamental teachings and to the principles set forth in the Constitution of the United States.

Draft of Wealth

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LELAND M. FORD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE LYNCHBURG (VA.) ADVANCE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Lynchburg (Va.) Advance:

[From the Lynchburg (Va.) Advance]

DRAFT OF WEALTH

Because consideration of human life should come before consideration of human possessions, many have long wondered why the emergency of war should be considered as justifying the conscription of manpower and not the conscription of wealth, why one man should be taken to struggle, to suffer, perchance to die, for the common good, while another is permitted to remain at home acquiring possessions.

Of course, wealth is conscripted, and not just during emergencies. Wealth is conscripted year in and year out during peacetime as well as during wartime. Taxation is nothing save conscription of wealth; and wartime, bringing increased public expenditure, brings also increased conscription of wealth.

The objection raised to Government taking over of industry during war is not actuated by any desire to save wealth from whatever amount of conscription is necessary. It is based upon the belief that power-loving bureaucrats at war's end would not demobilize industry, and during war's progress would operate it with that lack of efficiency which characterizes political bureaucracy.

Labor, too, finds a cause for objection. If factories are conscripted, obviously the labor to run the factories should be conscripted. To make conscription of industry work, it will be necessary that operatives in the factories be compensated at nearer 20 cents a day than the $20 a day many demanded during the last war. And under industrial conscription labor will make no demands. The laborer will be told where he is to work, when he is to work, and how long he is to work.

In this conscription of wealth business like in the "soak the rich" tax policies, it happens that the wealthy are not the only ones hit. The less wealthy and the poor get hit, too—and because there are more of them they get hit hardest. Maybe totalitarianism will come for us; certainly some New Deal policies have been in that direction; but the poor man who thinks it will injure only his rich neighbor, the laborer who thinks only employers need be concerned, the farmer who expects only the "city slicker" to suffer—all these and any like them will find they have been sadly mistaken.

Compulsory Military Training

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EARL R. LEWIS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

LETTER FROM A CONSTITUENT

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, today we begin consideration of a bill to provide for the first peacetime conscription of men for the armed forces of the United States ever to be enacted, if it shall be enacted, into law.

On this momentous proposal our people are radically divided. Today I have received a letter from a newspaperman in my district which shows a profound grasp of the fundamentals involved in this proposed legislation and intelligently constructive suggestions for its improvement. The letter, which I commend to your careful consideration, is as follows:

THE ST. CLAIRSVILLE GAZETTE-CHRONICLE PUBLISHING CO.,
St. Clairsville, Ohio, September 3, 1940.

Hon. EARL R. LEWIS,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Since conscription seems to be the keynote of Congress, I am making herewith a suggestion which might not have been brought to your attention before, but one which, I believe, is of sufficient importance to merit some thought.

As a thinker you have probably considered this bill from many angles. Have you thought, though, what these young draftees will do when they are released from 1 year of compulsory military training? Will they get their same jobs back if they are now employed? My best guess would be "No." Emphatically.

And what of the boy who is trying to learn a trade? Let us say he is a machinist or an apprenticed printer. What machine shop or print shop would attempt to hold a situation open for 1 year while Uncle Sam is making a lad learn the manual of arms? It would not be possible, and is, therefore, a hardship upon a lad with an eye to the future.

There are many other objections to conscription, but this one seems to me to be the greatest.

There is one solution to this problem. Recent figures show us that there are today in these United States some 10,000,000 unemployed and some 18,000,000 on relief. Now comes conscription to take a cross-section of this group, cutting likewise into that group of young men now gainfully employed. In a democracy such as ours one cannot draw class barriers and say, "You have a job, so we won't take you; but watch us take your neighbor." Comes that day and you'll have riots comparable to those in New York during Civil War days when the rich were able to buy a substitute and the poor lads had to go. So we'll have to take them all, and in so doing, we'll hamper industry by taking young men trained in commerce and in industry that is of vital interest to any country in peace or war or in preparation for war.

Let us assume that in the next 2 years we still have a democracy or a quasi democracy. Without a dictatorship it will not be possible to place men mustered out of the Army back into industry without disrupting business, causing hard feelings among employees, and, in fact it could not be done without a direct order that would be a violation of the rights of any employer. Simply because a man walks up to the employees' entrance and shakes an honorable discharge under the nose of the boss does not mean he will be as welcome as the flowers of spring. And by the time this happens too often, organized labor will probably have something to say about it, too.

The only answer to a difficult—and one might add—embarrassing problem, is a well-paid professional army. It will be more efficient, less expensive, and certainly more to the public taste. Of course, this brings up the cost chart. Let's see what that might be.

What is the cost of a nonprofessional army? An army of some 4,000,000 men like that conscripted for service in the World War—the cost of the Army after it has been mustered out and sent back to civilian life?

We have spent nearly $9,000,000,000 for disability and pensions to World War veterans and their dependents. And in the next 20 years we shall have spent another $10,000,000,000, and in the succeeding 20 years, or 60 years after the armistice of 1918, the grand total of more than $25,000,000,000 will have been spent in wages and indirect subsidies to the conscripted men who carried rifles and fought in the trenches.

The cost of a conscripted army following the Civil War was staggering; even last year (1939) we paid over $33,000,000 to soldiers and their widows.

We are paying $125,000,000 for Spanish-American War pensions.

Since 1890, or the last 50 years, we have never had less than 500,000 pensioners on the public pay roll and many times it has been nearer to 1,000,000. And at no time during this 50-year period have we paid out less than $106,000,000. And at no time in the last 20 years has this cost been under $300,000,000 per year.

These expenditures are purely for paying for a war that has been ended. They do not include the wages of the Army under arms, nor the cost of building tanks, nor that of new mechanized units, nor the cost of rifles, machine guns, and sidearms. It does not include the cost of one Missouri mule. It is the cost of a war that is over, written off the books, closed to the pages of history. And yet it has cost millions of dollars. We have, in effect, been paying men for not fighting, for not carrying a rifle, for not running a machine gun, or steering a tank.

If it is so easy for us to pay men for not fighting, why cannot we pay them for being prepared to fight if the need arises?

It has been expressly stated that an army of 500,000 men, properly equipped with mechanized equipment, would be a sufficient number to insure this country against invasion, provided, of course, that an air corps second to none in the world were provided to work in conjunction with this army.

Such an army, assuming that all these men were to get $45 per month, would cost only $270,000,000 yearly in wages. Officers' salaries would, of course, be over and above this figure.

In other words, one-thirtieth of the cost of maintaining a conscripted army of 20 years ago. Would anyone object to a professional army, ready to fight, at 10 percent less than the cost of a conscripted army, fighting because it is forced to fight, often against its own will?

Since we must have an Army and we all assume rather belatedly that this is the case, what would be wrong with a professional army, bearing in mind the figures here set forth? Some of the greatest armies have been professional armies. Of course, there is always the argument that professional soldiers do not fight as well as those men who battle because of their patriotism. But, on the other hand, it goes without saying that in modern warfare few generals are taken from the clerk's desk or from the banker's cage. If professional leadership is good enough to entrust the future of a country's welfare to, why is not the professional cavalryman, airman, or buck private capable of following this leadership even if he is paid for fighting?

There is very little question in my mind but that if the foot soldier—and I mean the infantryman—were given a basic wage of, say, $40 to $45 per month, and others such as mechanics and skilled laborers paid in accordance, and a merit system with proper compensation for advancement installed, an Army of 1,000,000 men could be raised in a fortnight, signed for, sealed, and delivered postpaid.

With modern warfare what it is today, it seems to me that modes of procedure are outmoded overnight. Certainly tactics and probably even tank and motorized unit attack and deployment do vary from month to month as the present European war has conclusively proved.

If you were to have a tooth pulled or a finger amputated, you would most likely go to the dentist or physician with a steady, active practice. You would hardly go to the retired practitioner who was not right up to the minute. This is because a sore tooth or an infected finger are of vital importance to you. But when my life depends upon an army, I'd like to know protection was to be given by a general staff and an army that didn't have to think twice, or blunder through a second Bull Run to win a war.

You might throw up your arms in holy horror and say: "But this will cost a lot of money." Certainly it will cost money. War and armies always cost money. But this country has millions for the W. P. A. and the C. W. A. and the P. W. A. and the R. F. C., and every other alphabetical bureau in Washington. And yet, basically, none of these are relatively one-tenth as important as a modern, mechanized, highly mobile army of some 500,000 men—not 5,000,000 conscripts who are falling all over each other in an effort to get out of somebody else's way to get where they feel they have to go. And don't forget that we had millions for the Army in 1917, and millions more for the payment of the soldiers' bonus. Add it all up and you get the same answer—money.

My sole contention is that a professional army would give us more protection, less confusion, and would at the same time create more professional opportunities in the Army while at the same instant it would not disrupt occupational and professional employment in other fields. At the same time we could save our faces, and maintain our democratic standard of living by simply saying to the young and middle-aged man: "The Army will give you a job—yes; for the next 20 years and then a modest retirement. You protect us and we taxpayers will protect you."

And that, my dear Congressman LEWIS, is this country editor's idea of just what this might develop into, without confusion, without resentment, without placing democracy in jeopardy—but probably won't.

Sincerely yours,

I. A. FLUHARTY.

Bituminous Coal Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ANTON J. JOHNSON

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE DAILY METAL TRADE

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there has been so much opposition by the consumers, dealers, and many coal operators to the application of the proposed price schedules, that it has been deemed wise to again forego its autocratic imposition of coal-price regulations.

I submit an editorial on this subject from the Daily Metal Trade.

[From the Daily Metal Trade of August 20, 1940]

BITUMINOUS COAL ACT APPEARS TO HAVE STRUCK ANOTHER SNAG

The Bituminous Coal Act has struck another snag. Another postponement of the date of its effectiveness has moved it back another month nearer the November election day. Interior Secretary Ickes' Coal Division has just announced that, instead of the proposed minimum-price schedules taking effect September 3, they will not become effective until October 1. Some shrewd observers believe they never will be allowed to take effect—politics. At the same time Ickes also postponed the deadline for filing appeals from the price findings to August 30. In this latter case the Secretary appears to have overruled Director Howard Gray, of the Coal Division, who just the other day notified the Youngstown Chamber of Commerce that it is too late to file its proposed appeal against the price schedule, which would hog-tie the industrial Mahoning and Shenango Valleys and undo their years-old established ex-Ohio River coal rates. Gray said he had so ruled June 4—but nobody seems ever to have heard of it before this time.

So, now the Bituminous Coal Act, loaded with political and economic dynamite, has come out into the open for just what every well-posted man knew it was—another New Deal political football in the effort to garner votes among the union pressure groups. Senator GUFFEY had as little to do with his so-called act as any man in the street. He simply handed in the bill hatched by John L. Lewis, head of the miners' union and hatcher of that hermaphrodite C. I. O.-S. W. O. C. The stench of "pressure group" politics has never been wiped from the Coal Control Act by any number of New Deal apologies. Now it stands naked and exposed as merely a New Deal vote-getting adjunct—which it always has been. And no one knows that better than Senator JOE GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania, now vainly trying to cling to the outer rim of Pennsylvania New Deal politics.

Director Gray also, at the same time as Ickes' postponement announcement came out Friday, made public "findings of fact" upon which he based his price schedules for the sale of bituminous fuel at the mines. In his findings the Director announces the discovery that coal producers have charged lower f. o. b. prices as their coal moved farther away from the mines and met additional marketing competition from other fields. Which raises the question whether the Director ever before had discovered that in marketing almost every line of produce or manufacture there is such a thing as "absorbing part of the freight" in order to meet fierce competition abroad. When Texas wheat meets Iowa wheat at Chicago, when Florida oranges meet California oranges at Cincinnati, when Chicago steel meets Pittsburgh steel at Detroit in days of keen competition, it is a safe bet there are freight absorptions." Gray calls this "lowering f. o. b. mine prices." Maybe it is, but the practice is older than Gray and as widespread as daylight. Well, what about it? Is competition actually become a New Deal cardinal sin?

Wendell L. Willkie Favors Drafting Youth, But Opposes Drafting Wealth

REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, August 30, 1940

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, Mr. Wendell L. Willkie, the candidate for President on the Republican ticket, came out in favor of drafting the young men but opposed to the drafting of the wealth of this Nation.

In that position he is supported by the Wall Street financiers and the munitions manufacturers throughout the land. They do not want this provision written into the bill, because it would be a powerful club in the hands of the Government to prevent such profiteering as we witnessed in the last war.

These munitions manufacturers, and these Wall Street financiers who are financing them, and who really own them, do not want this provision in the bill, because they want to be able to threaten the Government with a sit-down strike on their part if Congress attempts to make them pay their just proportion of the taxes necessary to finance this program.

Mr. Willkie says in his statement that this amendment, as passed by the Senate, "gives the President, whenever the Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy is unable to arrive at an agreement with the owner of any plant or facility which is deemed necessary for national defense, power to acquire such a plant or facility."

"In addition," continues Mr. Willkie, "he—the President—may take immediate possession of the plant or facility and may operate it by Government personnel."

Mr. Willkie objects to this salutary provision of the Senate amendment which goes further toward protecting this Government and the American people against such a saturnalia of profiteering as we witnessed during the last war than any other amendment or provision yet proposed.

If we are going to draft the young men of this Nation, take them from their homes in the prime of youth, in order to prepare to defend this country against any eventuality, why not also draft the dollars, the wealth of these swollen fortunes that have been pyramided with every war in which the Nation has engaged?

We are told that we came out of the last war with 23,000 newly made millionaires, some of whom could not pay their grocery bills before the war began. They promised Woodrow Wilson that they would help pay for the war with their taxes, but as soon as the war closed and they could elect an administration to do their bidding, they had those tax laws modified or repealed. If the laws in force at the close of the Wilson administration had remained in effect, the national debt would have been entirely wiped out by 1932. But instead of that these war profiteers, who coined their multiplied millions from the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world, managed to elect an administration that would do their bidding, take these taxes off their swollen fortunes and pile them onto the backs of the American people in the form of high protective tariffs that levied a tax upon everything the average American had to buy, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away. They even went beyond the grave and taxed the tombstone that marked his last resting place.

One of the ablest men who ever spoke on this question said during the mid-twenties that the tariff was then costing the unprotected masses of the American people $4,000,000,000 a year, of which amount $600,000,000 went into the Federal Treasury, and $3,400,000,000 went into the pockets of the beneficiaries of that law. But these war-made millionaires were escaping their just proportion of the burdens of taxation and passing their pyramided fortunes down to their posterity.

I wonder if that is what Mr. Willkie proposes to do this time, if he should be elected President of the United States?

Not satisfied with that, these war profiteers induced the party then in power to go back and return to them billions of dollars in taxes that had already been collected, and which they never even proposed to pass on back to the people from whom they had collected it.

There has not been such a concentration of wealth since the world began as that witnessed in this country from the time we entered the World War until the crash of 1929. We are told that today less than 5 percent of the American people own more than 90 percent of its wealth. That 5 percent is opposing the Senate amendment, but demanding that we draft the youth of the land.

Mr. Willkie even goes so far as to quote Woodrow Wilson in a statement in which he said, "the highest and best form of efficiency is the spontaneous cooperation of a free people." Of course it is, but who ever heard of war profiteers spontaneously cooperating in helping to bear the Nation's burdens, or to keep the country's wealth distributed?

What kind of cooperation did they give when Woodrow Wilson went out of office and they had the opportunity to remove this burden of taxation from their war profits and pass it on to the unprotected millions who bore the brunt of the war?

But Mr. Willkie says:

> It is said that if men are to be conscripted, wealth must be conscripted. If this statement is taken literally, if our assets and enterprises are to be taken over by the Government at its sole discretion, I cannot understand what we are undertaking to defend.

Mr. Willkie evidently thinks we are getting ready to defend the swollen fortunes of America and the utilities monopoly with which he has so long been connected. He knows, and every other intelligent man knows, that we are not proposing to take over all farms and factories as he intimates, but we are proposing to give the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, the right to take over the munitions plants, those plants that manufacture our war materials, in case it is necessary to do so, to prevent such racketeering as we witnessed on their part during the last war.

But if we are going to take them over in order to protect the American Government, and the American people, then Mr. Willkie, according to his own statement, "cannot understand what we are undertaking to defend."

Does he think they are all there is in this country worth defending?

I will tell Mr. Willkie what we are undertaking to defend: We are undertaking to defend American rights; we are undertaking to defend our territorial integrity; we are undertaking to defend our way of life, and our form of government; we are undertaking to defend the homes from which these boys are to come; we are undertaking to defend the life, liberty, and property of all American people, and not just a few munitions manufacturers, utility monopolies, and the Wall Street bankers that own or finance them.

But Mr. Willkie undertakes to frighten organized labor with these words: He says:

> It will constitute a threat to American labor and particularly union labor, for the President of the United States sometime ago told American labor, "You cannot strike against the Government." Thus, those persons who become employees of the Federal Government would be deprived of the right of collective bargaining, another step toward what took place in Germany—industries conscripted, unions abolished.

Mr. Willkie knows that it would not be necessary for labor to strike if the Government were operating any of these plants, for the reason that the Government would give labor decent treatment. He also knows that the conscription bill provides the drafting of men that can be put to doing any work the Government may require. It is not the men in whom those forces are interested that are opposing the Senate amendment, but it is the owners of these swollen fortunes who want to perpetuate them and to swell them further at the expense of the American people, and further concentrate the wealth of this Nation into the hands of the favored few.

While he did not say so in so many words, Mr. Willkie is evidently afraid this Government might take over some of these profiteering power utilities and stop them from burdening the American people as well as the American Government with their ruthless overcharges.

Mr. Willkie's statement is a great contribution and will have two effects if the American people and the Members of Congress thoroughly understand it: It will insure the adoption of this amendment and probably strengthen it in many ways, and it will also eliminate Mr. Willkie as a serious contender, if he ever was a serious contender, in the Presidential campaign.

There are living today more than 4,000,000 ex-service men of the World War, as well as the widows and orphans of the ones who have passed away. For more than 20 years they have expressed their resentment at the way these war profiteers were permitted to hoard and protect their enormous profits made out of the last war. Whenever they have spoken on the subject these veterans and their dependents have demanded that hereafter we take the profits out of war. For my part, I propose to carry out that mandate, and not only do my best to prevent the pyramiding of these swollen fortunes now, but I am ready to tax the profits of the last war by raising the inheritance taxes and the income taxes in the higher brackets in order to raise funds to pay for our national defense, to maintain the Government and to ultimately liquidate the national debt.

Mr. Willkie is opposed to the drafting of wealth, but he is in favor of drafting the youth of the land. Wealth does not have to face the enemy's guns, but soldiers do. Wealth does not have to stand in muddy trenches, or bear its dying comrades from the field, but soldiers do. Wealth is not slain upon the field of battle, to leave widows and children or dependent parents to face the wants of after years, but soldiers are.

They answer that by telling you that the sons of the wealthy go to war, that the sons of this 5 percent who own the 90 percent of the Nation's wealth will also be drafted. That may be true, but they will leave their growing fortune behind to take care of their loved ones, or greet them on their return home; while the young man who has nothing else to give, places not only his own life, but his fortune, which consists of the earning power of his hands and mind, upon the altar of his country. It is all he has.

Mr. Willkie would draft that willingly, but he is opposed to drafting the wealth of the Nation, or the passage of a law to prevent such profiteering as we witnessed during and after the World War.

If we pass a bill to draft the youth of this land, in order to build up our defense, we should also include this Senate amendment for taking over the war industries of the Nation, if necessary, and then provide for taxing, or drafting, the swollen fortunes of these profiteers in order to help pay the expenses. [Applause.]

What's Holding Up Printing of the Anti-Poll-Tax Hearings?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Subcommittee finished the hearings on the Geyer anti-poll-tax bill on May 17, 1940.

To date these hearings have not been ordered printed by the chairman of the subcommittee conducting the hearings. He has been urged to do so many times. Witnesses came from long distances from the States suffering under this limited suffrage to testify at these hearings.

The Congress spent time and money to get facts that the Members and the Nation at large have a right to know.

I firmly believe that if the Nation knew the deplorable conditions that exist in the eight States that still cling to this relic of feudalism, the poll tax, it would demand that these States really give the vote to the three and one-half million Negroes and the 8,000,000 whites who cannot pay the tax.

Poll Taxes Breed Corruption—An Example

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LEE E. GEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, since it is impossible to obtain copies of the anti-poll-tax hearings yet—to date they have not been printed—I insert in the RECORD further evidence to prove that the poll tax is a source of corruption amounting to the buying of votes.

There will be found below a letter from a citizen of Arkansas and a political advertisement from the Northwest Arkansas Times, of Fayetteville, Ark. A glance at the ad will show plainly that the poll tax is being used as a racket to keep in office some people regardless of the true wishes of the people. What interest could the few who paid the poll taxes of others have except to control the votes of these people for whom they paid the tax? Please note the connection between those who paid the taxes and the man running for office.

Mr. Hudson, of Fayetteville, Ark., who furnished us with the information should be complimented on his patriotism and civic spirit. It was such persons as he who requested me to introduce the Geyer anti-poll-tax bill.

DISCHARGE PETITION IS AWAITING SIGNATURES

The petition on the desk to discharge the committee is No. 34. All Members will want to sign it after reading this letter and studying the table below.

FAYETTEVILLE, ARK., August 28, 1940.

Hon. LEE E. GEYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GEYER: Being a citizen of a poll-tax State, I am deeply interested in your effort to liberate 10,000,000 citizens from political bondage. I am enclosing a single page of our local paper which is self-explanatory.

You will note that relatives and close friends of certain candidates bought poll-tax receipts in quantities and passed them to individuals who voted as instructed. This is equivalent to buying votes. This primary election was held on August 13, 1940.

The poll tax is supported by chronic politicians and political machines and on every election day they make raids on these defenseless disfranchised people to the extent of their ability to buy poll-tax receipts. The practice is un-American, unpatriotic, and dishonorable. In this State of Arkansas we have government by minority groups—it is oligarchical in practice and strictly machine controlled. It is little wonder that the eight poll-tax States represent economic problem No. 1. At least one-half of the voters have no voice in government. Various kinds of consumer taxes are imposed by minority groups. I truly hope you will succeed in getting your poll-tax bill before the House for discussion and passage.

Yours very truly,

W. N. HUDSON.

P. S.—The above-mentioned election was a State-wide primary including all State and county officers. It was vigorously contested and there were approximately 250,000 votes cast, including the bought votes.

W. N. H.

[From the Northwest Arkansas Times, Fayetteville, Ark.]

POLL-TAX RECEIPTS PURCHASED FOR VOTERS

For whose benefit were the following poll-tax receipts purchased? Check the results of the preferential primary and be your own judge! Evidence of the following may be found in the collector's office.

This is only four townships that have been covered by these poll taxes. Space will not permit a complete list that they will use as these were used in the past primary.

Name	Township	By whom purchased
Stanley King	Winslow	O. H. Chandler.
Maggie Dockery	do	Do.
Reginald Praley	do	Do.
Vina Praley	do	Do.
W. J. Dwyer	do	Paul Bogan.
Seth Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. Seth Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. Reece Watkins	do	Do.
Mrs. Hazel Watkins	do	Do.
Amos L. Watkins	do	Do.
Mrs. Louie Wells	do	Do.
Louie Wells	do	Do.
Mrs. W. J. Dwyer	do	Do.
Mrs. J. J. Foster	do	W. E. Langston.
J. J. Foster	do	Do.
A. L. King	do	Do.
Mrs. Amz I. Tomlinson	do	Do.
Ed Morgan	do	Do.
Mrs. E. Morgan	do	Do.
John W. Burnett	do	Do.
Mrs. Jeff Wolfe	do	Do.
Vera May Riddle	do	Do.
Mrs. Ethel Arnett	do	Do.
Mrs. A. C. Bogan	do	Do.
W. H. Donaldson	do	Do.
Mrs. Tula Nelson	do	Do.
Mr. W. A. Nelson	do	Do.
Grace Donaldson	do	Do.
Jim Smith	do	Do.
Desey Wright	do	Do.
Mrs. M. Godsey	do	Do.
Mrs. Lee Smith	do	Paul Bogan.
R. H. Godsey	do	W. E. Langston.
Leonard Loftin	do	Paul Bogan.
Mrs. Muriel King	do	O. H. Chandler.
Jewell Deen	do	Hoyt Hight.
Mrs. W. F. Price	do	Elmer Griffith.
W. F. Price	do	Do.
Mrs. G. C. Bogan	do	Paul Bogan.
Roger W. Ramey	do	Do.
Mrs. Carl Smith	do	W. E. Langston.
Hazel Hight	do	Hoyt Hight.
Opal Smith	do	Do.
Harry A. Deen	do	Do.
Lizzie Malone	do	W. E. Langston.
R. P. Purser	do	Paul Bogan.
Joseph F. Langlin	do	Do.
Claud Malone	do	W. E. Langston.
Mrs. Claud Malone	do	Do.
Edna Griffith	do	O. H. Chandler.
I. L. Beckett	do
Lillie Beckett	do
Mrs. George E. Tomlinson	do	Do.
Hugh Adams	do	Do.
Mrs. Hugh Adams	do	Do.
Clyde Lidywood	do	Do.
A. C. Bogan	do	Elmer Griffith.
W. E. McClelland	do	W. E. Langston.
Mrs. J. M. Jones	do	Do.
Mrs. C. F. Pennington	do	Do.
Joe Cherveny	do	Paul Bogan.
J. F. Smith	do	Omal Chandler.
Laura Langlin	do	W. E. Langston.
Dessie Caudle (Mrs. Eli)	do	Do.
Sam Deen	do	J. D. Smith.
Ruth Dockery	do	J. D. Hight.
Nellie C. Clark	do	Do.
H. B. Dockery	do	Do.
Don Hight	do	J. D. Smith.
Oliver McKenzie (J. W.)	do
Lester Easter	do	W. E. Langston.
A. C. Yerton	do	J. D. Hight.
Alvis Reed	do	W. E. Langston.
Edmon Easter	do	Do.
Agnes Loftin	do	Do.
J. C. Hampton	do	Do.
Willie Hampton	do	Do.
Joe L. Evans	do	Do.
Leon Davis	do	R. A. Beckett.
Mrs. Leon Davis	do	Do.
J. A. Winn	do	Do.
M. C. Meadows	do	Do.
Mrs. J. A. Winn	do	Do.
Pete Cook	do	Do.
A. J. Smith	do	Do.
B. F. Arnett	do	Wilma Chandler.
Ada West	Crawford	J. D. Hight.
Henry Allen	do	Do.
Alma Huethens	do	Do.
Rhoda Hutchens	do	Do.
Raymond Smith	do	Do.
Oscar Hughes	do	Do.
Ruby Smith	do	Do.
Lillie Powell	do	Do.
Leo Osborn	do	J. D. Smith.
Juanita Duncan	do	Do.
Dorothy Meyer	do	Do.
Bertha Meyer	do	Do.
C. W. Timbrook	do	Do.
Mrs. C. W. Timbrook	do	Do.
Eleanor Ellyson	do	Do.
Harry Ellyson	do	Do.
Carson Duncan	do	Do.
W. L. Watkins	do	Charley Smith.
Mrs. W. C. Dennis	do	R. A. Beckett.
W. C. Dennis	do	Do.
Dewey Hoover	do	Wilma Chandler.
Minnie Johnson	do	Mrs. Orval Chandler.

Name	Township	By whom purchased
Charley Jenks	Crawford	Paul Bogan.
Lois Falley	do	Do.
Edith Watkins	do	Charley Smith.
Millard Watkins	do	Do.
Gladys Osborn	do	W. E. Langston.
Dewey C. Underhill	do	O. H. Chandler.
Hazel Underhill	do
Chloe Isenhower	do	Do.
Mrs. W. H. Price	do
Dessie Calhoon	do	Do.
F. G. Bills	do	Do.
T. J. Ripper	do	Do.
Flonce Ripper	do	Do.
Mrs. Joe Smith	do	Do.
Mrs. C. R. Talley	do	Do.
Thelma Stonesifer (Mrs. John)	do	Do.
John Stonesifer	do	Do.
Albert Smith	do
Nell Smith	do	Do.
Mrs. Theodore Talley	do	Do.
Fay Bills	do	Do.
Mary Ramey	do	Do.
Henry Ramey	do	Do.
Earl Smith	do	Do.
Joe Smith	do	Do.
Mamie Hughes (Mrs. Oscar)	do	Do.
Dilford Hughes	do	Do.
Orin Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. J. W. Hughes	do	Do.
J. W. Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. J. E. Hughes	do	Do.
J. E. Hughes	do	Do.
Oral Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. Emma Hughes (Mrs. Oral)	do	Do.
Mrs. Odus Jamerson	do	Do.
Odus Jamerson	do	Do.
J. P. Brown	Reed	J. D. Hight.
Loyd Stout	do	Do.
Thelma Stout	do	Do.
Wilburn Christison	do	Frank Doss.
Toy Shepherd	do	Wallace Pamell.
E. E. Starkey	do	Frank Doss.
Mrs. Elmer Stout	do	Wilma Chandler.
Elmer Stout	do	Do.
Earl Bogan	do	O. H. Chandler.
T. W. Ritter	do	Do.
J. D. Robertson	do	Do.
R. S. Hughes	do	Do.
Mrs. R. S. Hughes	do	Do.
Robert T. Hudspeth	do	Do.
Mrs. Ewell Napier	do	Do.
Sallie Evans	do	Do.
Albert Evans	do	Do.
J. F. Isenhower	do	Do.
Dillard Shepherd	do	Paul Bogan.
Lonnie Stout	do	O. H. Chandler.
Mrs. Sam Stout	do	Do.
Sam Stout	do	Do.
Silverster Stout	do	Do.
Mrs. A. C. Stout	do	Do.
Carl Smith	do	Do.
Ewell Napier	do	Do.
Nora Stout	do	Do.
Maudie Stout	do	Do.
D. O. Ritter	do	Do.
Mrs. T. W. Ritter	do	Do.
Lillie Stout	do	Do.
Littsie Stout	do	Do.
Chess F. Stout	do	Do.
Ida Isenhower (Mrs. Harry)	do	Do.
Mrs. Chas. Mitts	do	Do.
Chas. Mitts	do	Do.
Mrs. J. D. Robertson	do	Do.
Audie Smith	do	Do.
Mrs. Eare Sisemore	do	Do.
Eare Sisemore	do	Do.
W. O. Chandler	do	Do.
Jim Chandler	do	Do.
Mrs. Jim Chandler	do	Do.
Jim Dillard	do	Do.
Edd Dillard	do	Do.
Carie F. Fields	do	Do.
Mary Chandler	do	Do.
D. M. Chandler	do	Do.
Ermel Williford	do	Do.
Lula Chandler	do	Do.
Mrs. Alex Tout	do	Do.
Alex Tout	do	Do.

In 1936 there were 18 Democratic voters in Reed Township. In the past primary 50 people and very few of them Democrats, voted in Reed Township.

Name	Township	By whom purchased
Garland Parrish	Lees Creek	Mack Redfern.
Ova Southern	do	Do.
G. R. Booth	do	Do.
Sarrah E. Hill	do	Do.
Mrs. Glenn Booth	do	Do.
Mrs. Oval Tanner	do	Do.
Ida May Loftin	do	Do.
Mack Southern	do	Do.
Claude Redfern	do	Do.

Name	Township	By whom purchased
John Redfern	Lees Creek	Mack Redfern.
Mrs. Gravel Hays	do	Do.
Inez M. Murphy	do	Do.
Mrs. N. A. Hays	do	Do.
Granuil Hayes	do	Do.
Mrs. C. L. Loftin	do	Do.
C. L. Loftin	do	Do.
Francis Toon	do	W. M. Redfern.
Harry Isenhower	do	O. H. Chandler.
W. C. Redfern	do	J. H. Coker.
Mrs. Mary R. Flanary	do	Do.
C. A. Flanary	do	Do.
H. B. Wilson	do	Jim Coker.
Gertie Wilson	do	Do.
Ethel Toon	do	J. H. Coker.
M. S. Redfern	do	Do.
Bessie Redfern	do	Do.

Is this the proper way for home people to endorse a man—83 out of Mr. Davidson's 150 home-town voters may be on above list.

EXPLANATION

W. E. Langston, father-in-law of Arthur Davidson.

O. H. Chandler, strong supporter of Davidson and central committeeman from Reed Township.

J. D. Hight, nephew of P. B. Smith, county home superintendent.

J. D. Smith, brother of P. B. Smith, county home superintendent.

Paul Bogan, relative of Davidson.

Results of preferential primary in sheriff's race in above townships

Winslow:
Davidson	150
Jones	3
LeMaster	0
Gulley	0
Crawford:
Davidson	101
Jones	10
LeMaster	5
Gulley	6
Reed:
Davidson	38
Jones	4
LeMaster	8
Gulley	5
Lees Creek:
Davidson	57
Jones	10
LeMaster	6
Gulley	5
Total in four townships:
Davidson	346
Jones	27
LeMaster	19
Gulley	11

Four hundred and three people voted in sheriff's race in past primary in above townships and 222 poll taxes are on the above list. Does this mean anything?

Again I say: For whom were these poll-tax receipts bought? I pledge if elected that my deputies will be men of known honesty and integrity and that no political clique or ring, past or present, will dictate my appointments or any of the policies of the office.

It is upon this basis that I solicit your support in Tuesday's primary.

CLINT JONES,
Candidate for Sheriff.

Nazi Envoys and Agents

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES SECCOMBE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE JEWISH VETERAN

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include an article from the Jewish Veteran, which appeared in the issue of August, this year. This article, entitled "Nazi Envoys and Agents," is one of utmost importance and I hope will be read by every Member of this honorable body. It is especially timely at a time such as this, Mr. Speaker, and I trust our State Department will benefit by our experiences of the past and will deal with Nazi envoys and agents accordingly. I expect to introduce legislation within a few days to cover such a situation.

[From the Jewish Veteran of August 1940]

NAZI ENVOYS AND AGENTS

Baron Edgar Von Spiegel, German consul general at New Orleans, threatened that Germany would not forget the aid given its enemies by the United States. A spy carrying information to Costa Rica was recently caught, and implicated Hans Widmann, Nazi consul at Los Angeles. We read how German consuls and agents tried to influence representatives at the Habana Pan-American Conference. Recently, Dr. Gerhard Westrick, counselor of the German Embassy, arrived in New York, and has been seeing many prominent Americans. He has just been found guilty by the New York Motor Vehicle Bureau of falsifying several statements on an application for a motor license (incidentally, the car which he was driving belonged to the Texas Oil Co.). Many other consuls and attachés all over the country have been overactive in distributing Nazi propaganda.

Don't you think that this should now stop? What happened to our Ambassador and consuls in Poland? What happened to our Embassy and consulates in Belgium and France? They had to get out. Hitler won't even tolerate our diplomatic officers doing lawful duties, so why should we continue to knowingly permit Nazi officers to be active illegally? The State Department should have a list of each and every member and employee of every Nazi consulate in the United States of America and be permitted to check on their activities. There should be no immunity to anyone to undermine our Government or even our attitude. We should also demand the immediate withdrawal of those who have already been caught acting improperly. Let us not forget how Von Papen and Boy-ed of the Germany Embassy were the spy and sabotage leaders in 1916 and 1917.

Steps Toward British Union, a World State, and International Strife—Part VII

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. THORKELSON

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article by the Reverend Dr. W. Pascoe Goard which appeared in the National Message, March 28, 1936, the official publication of the British-Israel World Federation. This article is entitled "British-Israel Is True."

We wish to speak a word of caution and expostulation to those of our brethren of the Christian ministry who are boldly challenging the truth of the British-Israel.

First, we may present our credentials to justify what we are about to say hereafter. The following has been written without particular consultation with our associates, but there need be no question that they carry the weight of the judgment of the clergymen and ministers, educationists, and other professional men, and of the laity, who stand with us in the many countries where our movement prevails.

What is the truth of the British-Israel? The truth is that the British-Israel is not a denomination and is not an ecclesiastic sect; but is instead a subsidized political organization. The question may then be asked, How can the British-Israel call the Christian clergy "brethren" when their organization is not ecclesiastic, but political, as I have stated?

It is generally stated, in order to give weight by comparison to the opposition, that there are no scholars in the British-Israel movement. No doubt those who make such statements think that they are strictly adhering to truth, and that this movement is one carried forward by those not qualified to judge.

The statement, however, is not only untrue—which is the negative form of the statement—it is positively untrue. A much shorter form of expression might be used. Facts will be desired to support this statement. Anyone who cares to search the literature of the British-Israel movement will be struck with the fact that among the small number who for many years stood together in defense of this truth a very large proportion of them carried the various degrees which our universities bestow. Such degrees were earned from Oxford, Cambridge, London, Birmingham, Durham, Trinity College, Dublin, Aberdeen, Yale, McGill, Toronto, British Columbia, and many other universities. We warn our opponents, if they have any respect for truth, to avoid circulating such misleading statements as these.

I do not believe anyone will deny that the British-Israel World Federation is well connected and well financed. The question is, Who are the financial promoters of the subversive movement to establish a world government? Can it be possible that the international bankers are the financial backers? Can it be possible that this movement is connected with the Grand Orient Lodge? Is it not true that the British-Israel and its proponents comprise the group now actively promoting war, and is it not true that the backers of this movement are those who control gold and international gold credit? We must recognize that the British-Israel world movement is anti-American and destructive to the principles of this Government.

Turning to standing and experience in the various churches: Within our ranks have been archbishops, bishops, well-placed clergy, ministers of high standing in the various churches, heads of educational departments and institutions, distinguished members of the bar, and so on. Such positions as have been occupied by many of those referred to have been achieved through merit in long and vigorous years of service in the various branches of the Christian church.

It is indeed unfortunate that many Christian churches Ministers should know that political movements within church organizations will destroy the church itself.

Of late a movement to bring forward such leaders as Dr. Goudge, Dr. Dimont, Dr. Campbell, and so on, heads of theological divinity schools, has evidently had as its object the forming of a ring around us of authority. We recognize the attainments and achievements of these highly esteemed men in other fields, but not in the one under consideration. Within our movement we can meet these gentlemen with men of equal attainments, of as wide experience; teachers and authors of equal standing. We cannot allow position or authority to weigh in a question of facts and have allowed the British-Israel in the church organizations. truths. That argument does not meet the point at issue. But if the argument continues to be advanced, we balance it as we have already said.

We respectfully ask of the rank and file, of those who oppose us—What is it you oppose? We recommend each opponent to face this question, lest in opposing us he may be found to oppose the very standard upon which the whole doctrinal structure of his own communion is based. We will state the things for which we stand.

Dr. Goard employs a subtle argument to disarm anyone who may take issue with his statements. The fact remains, however, that the British-Israel is to establish a world state with a David as King, and the capital of this state, according to their own publications, is to be Jerusalem. I am opposed to the British-Israel, because I am quite well satisfied with our own government and unwilling to crusade for the British Empire or for the real motivators behind this movement in Asia, Africa, Egypt, or anywhere else.

We accept the Bible as it stands. We are quite aware of the various approaches to the Bible and of the various criticism to which it has been subjected. We do not speak in ignorance of these things, but rather with the full knowledge of them as men who have been over the ground again and again for many years past. Our approach to the Bible is an intelligent one. Our acceptance of the Bible is confirmed by facts beyond counting. It is our considered opinion that with the facts in hand which we possess, it is impossible to do otherwise than accept the great, sequent, even consequent, development of facts and truth as it is presented in Holy Writ.

We believe the Bible as it now stands does not need any other interpretation than that which facts, history, and experience accord. The Bible carries information not otherwise possessed by humanity, and which must have had a source higher than humanity because its scope is wider than the sum total of unaided human knowledge. For instance, the Bible contains knowledge of the past before human history began, and knowledge of the future to which humanity has not yet attained but is from day to day attaining. We accept it in its spiritual revelations, in its contacts with natural science and history, and in its prophetic dealing with the future. We take the Bible to be what the Prayer Book assures us it is, namely, "The Word of God Written."

I shall not discuss the historical aspect of the Bible or its revelations, for I grant that education existed then as well as today. The point in issue is that the British-Israel have appointed themselves as the chosen people to sit in judgment on the throne of David in Jerusalem, and I do not deny the British-Israel such rights. Reserving my own rights, I object to giving my aid in this cherished desire, and I refuse to share any responsibility in establishing this world state.

The Bible deals with Israel as a continuous national entity, from Sinai to the end of the world.

The Bible deals with Judah as a separate national entity, from its organization as a kingdom under David to the coming again of our Lord Jesus Christ.

These two paragraphs are illuminating, for they reveal the real purpose of the British-Israel plan; and it is to establish Judah as a kingdom under David, and so stated in the latter paragraph. The British-Israel movement is, therefore, backed by those who are interested in a Judaic state, and they are not the gentiles or those which the British-Israel pretend they represent.

The Bible deals with the continental empires and nations, from the granting of the imperial charter to Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon and to his successors right down to that time indicated by Daniel, of which he said, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down * * *." Many scriptures show this to have been the ending of the Babylon succession, which took place A. D. 1918, 2,520 years after the granting of the great Babylon charter.

We see that these three participants in world history have been the chief actors on the stage. They have so monopolized the activities of world history that what has taken place outside of their scope has scarcely been worth telling.

Bible prophecy and secular history are now merged into one.

This is within the scope of our faith. What objection has any churchman of any denomination to make of the facts here given, and on what grounds can such objection be raised? Surely every Bible reader must know the truth of that which we have just stated. If not he can easily verify the truth.

We see and know that the general course of the history of each of these peoples is told in the prophetic scriptures. Further, by the interweaving of these lines of prophecy the general course of world history was foretold.

We take these lines of prophecy and we compare them carefully with world history. This is not an easy task. It takes much original research, which we have gone to the labor and expense of making. For instance, for years we have maintained a research department, the members of which have worked and still work in such institutions as the British Museum, and elsewhere, where the treasures of knowledge are deposited. As a result of the general scholarship of our leaders and the special knowledge thus obtained, we can give chapter and verse for much of the information required to establish the fact that history fully fulfills prophecy. A large and growing literature is produced and is still being produced in this field of research.

What a triumph that is for the Bible and for those who preach the Bible facts and truths. Dr. Driver was compelled by his lack of this special knowledge to admit what he believed to be a fact, that many of the promises made by God to the northern Kingdom of Israel and to the southern Kingdom of Judah had never been fulfilled, and that circumstances have so changed that they never can be fulfilled, but must be rather looked upon as ideals which God would fain see fulfilled in the life of His people. This is not a verbatim quotation, but whoever desires to do so will find the original statement in the introduction to Dr. Driver's Commentary on Jeremiah.

The fact that a scholarly wing of the British church, for whom Dr. Driver spoke as the regius professor of Hebrew at Oxford, should have found itself driven by the great atheist, Tom Paine, and his follower, Bradlaugh, to make such an admission, denotes a great tragedy for British Christianity.

The whole thing was a consequence of Dr. Driver's failure to read the continuous history of Israel and to identify it in its modern strength. Possessing this key to the knowledge of history, we are able to say that every covenant which God has entered into, every promise which God has made, and every prophecy which God has authorized concerning the northern Kingdom of Israel and the southern Kingdom of Judah have been and are being fulfilled to the letter up to date, and time only is the element required to complete the fulfillment of them all. Thus we bring triumph to the church; thus we restore shaken faith in the Bible and all its implications. Why Christian ministers should oppose us in making known this triumph is beyond our understanding.

This article which I am quoting is interesting, and I shall now requote a part of the foregoing paragraph:

Possessing this key to the knowledge of history, we are able to say that every covenant which God has entered into, every promise which God has made, and every prophecy which God has authorized concerning the northern kingdom of Israel and the southern Kingdom of Judah have been and are being fulfilled to the letter up to date, and time only is the element required to complete the fulfillment of them all.

In making this statement, Dr. Goard takes much for granted, and I am sure he will find many disappointments on the road he has selected to follow. I realize that he expects the armed forces of the United States to aid him so that his prophecies may be fulfilled, but the taxpayers of the United States, who pay the expenses of the Army, and particularly the men in the Army who must give their lives to please Dr. Goard, might object to aid him in establishing a world state in Egypt.

It will be and is being objected to that we substitute the national and secular phases of the gospel for the spiritual evangel. We do no such thing, and we commend this fact especially to the judgment of our evangelical brethren. Speaking to the latter for a moment, we say that the evangelicals have rightly opposed with vigor and courage the mutilation of the Bible by the higher critical and modernist schools. We join with them heartily in this. But now we say in all kindliness, and with the seriousness which belongs to such a statement, that our evangelical opponents go much further than higher critics and modernists in determinately ignoring and often vigorously denying the whole of the kingdom message which deals with the state and its administration. To do this is to deny or ignore quite half of the Bible literature.

Further, we call the attention of our evangelical brethren to the fact that at every point the kingdom message, as it refers to the state, interpenetrates the evangelical message as it refers to the church of Christ.

The evangelical message cannot be given in its fullness nor in its full power if the kingdom message and its references to the state are eliminated. It would be foolish for either side to boast; it would be equally foolish to fail to estimate the work being done. Accordingly, we say that because we understand and use the national element as it penetrates the spiritual evangel, we not only preach the evangel as our evangelical brethren do, but we preach it in its fullness with the fullness of its power in a way that our evangelical brethren who disregard the kingdom message as it refers to the state cannot do.

The question is asked, What are the standards of doctrine recognized in the British-Israel movement? We make answer: We form no denomination; we are not an ecclesiastical sect; our members as a rule are members in good standing in their own communions. We send a constantly increasing army of members into congregations and churches. We take none out. We leave it to the membership and adherents of our movement to exercise perfect freedom as to the formula by which they express their faith. Among us we hold to the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed. One wing of our adherents expresses its faith in the terms of the Articles of the Church of England. Another wing holds as the expression of its faith the standards of the Presbyterian, Congregational, and Baptist Churches. Still another wing holds the Methodist standards. These three great expressions of faith cover in general the same ground and may be considered as the basis of the faith of British-Israel. Further, as a body we hold and use the Book of Common Prayer, recognizing that that book in its entirety and in detail is compiled upon the assumption that the people who use it and hold it dear are the people of Israel and inheritors of the covenants made with our forefather Abraham.

These three paragraphs are informative, because we find that the British-Israel movement is not a Christian movement. It is not a denomination or church movement and it is not ecclesiastic, as I have already stated in discussing the first paragraph. The interesting part is this statement:

We send a constantly increasing army of members into congregations and churches. We take none out. We leave it to the membership and adherents of our movement to exercise perfect freedom as to the formula by which they express their faith.

This statement leaves no doubt as to this movement, for it is an organization which Judah is employing to destroy and upset Christian faiths in order to establish their own world state. The statement, "We take none out," is true, for these "fifth columnists" are sent into every church, and even into the Government itself, to spread British-Israel and world union now. This in itself proves clearly that all of these movements are un-American, anti-American and most damnably subversive. If we had a patriotic Justice Department and law-enforcement bodies that had the interest of the United States at heart, they would bring every one of these organizations before the bar of justice, because they are enemies of the United States and performing treasonable acts against our Government.

Stated briefly, the Bible, the prayer book, the great confessions of faith are ours. We are probably unique in this, that alone we hold what was generally held by the established church, the Covenanters, the Puritans, and all the great denominations up to a very recent period, namely, the fact that Britain and her associate nations are Israel. Consequently we hold the Bible in its entirety, both in its references to church and state; we hold the prayer book to mean fully what it says; we hold the great confessions of faith, with all the understanding of the fathers who produced them. We hold the state to be designed of God to be as holy as the church, and we believe the time is speedily coming when upon the holy vessels of the temple and the bells of the horses in the streets there will be inscribed equally, "Holiness to the Lord."

This paragraph also identifies the source of this movement in these words:

We are probably unique in this case, that alone we hold what was generally held by the established church, the Covenanters, the Puritans, and all the great denominations up to a very recent period, namely, the fact that Britain and her associate nations are Israel.

This statement reveals how deceptive this movement is, for Great Britain and her associates comprise Mongolians, Negroes, Australians, and many other racial types, who are not of the tribe of Israel. I may also say that no one would make such claim except the British-Israel; and the reason for that claim is due entirely to the fact that the background of this movement in Judaic.

Knowing these things, we know that we, as Israel, are subject to the Israel constitution, that in fact our kingdom is made up as of old of Jehovah, the King of Israel, represented on earth by the House of David, of the nation Israel, over which the King bears rule; and of the constitution, which consists of the commandments, statutes, and judgments of the Lord.

This paragraph lets the cat out of the bag, for Jehove, or Jehovah, is the God of the Jews and David is their coming king. Their constitution or laws is the Talmud, and their prophecy is taken from the Old Testament.

IS THIS AN AGE OF REASON?

Let us now be practical. The United States Army and the United States Navy, conscripts or no conscripts, are to crusade in a stupid war in Asia and Africa. Our young men are to give their lives—not in protection or defense of the United States, but for the sole purpose of establishing a kingdom in Arabia with Jerusalem as the capital, and with David as the king of the world.

I now conclude by quoting the last paragraph:

These are the things we hold; these are the things we teach. On what ground do Christian ministers oppose us? On what ground do they say that we are schismatic or heretics? Surely, if either ourselves or our opponents are schismatic or heretics, it must be our opponents, for we stand squarely for the faith which was first delivered to the saints.

Published by the Covenant Publishing Co., Ltd., 6 Buckingham Gate, London, SW. 1. Printed by the Stanhope Press, Ltd., Rochester, Kent.

I hope that Members of Congress will read this insert, entitled, "British-Israel Is True," and another insert entitled, "The International Situation," because both state the purpose of the British- and the American-Israel, as well as the Anglo-Saxon Federation.

The Union Label and Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. PAUL W. SHAFER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS BY I. M. ORNBURN

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Labor Day address by I. M. Ornburn, secretary-treasurer, union label trades department, American Federation of Labor, over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co., September 2, 1940:

THE UNION LABEL AND DEFENSE

Every Labor Day definitely marks an advance in the steady progress of the organized labor movement in America. The rapid improvement in wages, hours, and working conditions is just one of the achievements accomplished by collective bargaining of labor unions.

It would be uncharitable even to compare the standards of American workers with those of the enslaved toilers of the Old World. Except in England, Sweden, and Switzerland, dictatorships have destroyed trade-unionism throughout Europe. That is why we believe it our sacred duty to preserve the great union between the United States and Canada—better known as America—because by preserving this greatest of all unions, we shall, in turn, preserve labor unions and the democratic institutions which make them possible.

The American Federation of Labor always has loyally supported our Government in every crisis. In 1914, 3 years before we entered the first World War, the American Federation of Labor, under the able leadership of Samuel Gompers, gave its moral support to the Allies' cause. Many members of organized labor served in the American Expeditionary Force. Those who remained at home cooperated with the Federal Government by speeding up munitions of war and serving on important war commissions in order to bring that conflict to an early conclusion. Organized labor helped in every drive for Liberty Loans and the Red Cross. Labor worked overtime and cooperated with the Federal Government to insure industrial peace. That patriotic record of the American Federation of Labor is now a matter of history. So great was the support of the war by the American Federation of Labor that at a banquet given in London, in honor of Samuel Gompers, Premier Lloyd George of England addressed his remarks to the great labor leader and said: "You are the greatest contribution the United States can give to the Allies."

Modern warfare requires total defense. The old conception of preparedness was merely a well-equipped army with one or two men to furnish supplies for each soldier. Today, with the highly mechanized forces, it requires at least 12 men to furnish supplies. We must not only have a well-equipped Army, Navy, and air force, but we must also have industrial preparedness behind the lines. Economic warfare has become as important as military engagements. It is at this point that organized labor of America becomes a most vital and necessary factor.

The officials and members of the American Federation of Labor have pledged their unqualified support to the President of the United States for the defense program of America. In no better way can any group of our citizens create greater loyalty and patriotism for a nation than to urge better working conditions for the men and women who make the munitions of war. It will be the hands of skilled American workers who will actually turn out the weapons of defense.

Believing that the best preparation for war is based on a contented, self-supporting, and self-respecting citizenry, American labor desires to wipe out unemployment and place the 10,000,000 jobless, but willing workers, in essential industries to back up our total defense program.

While the military forces are being emphasized at this time, we must not overlook the essential factors of industrial and agricultural preparedness. Industry and transportation must be manned by well-paid workers so that the purchasing power will maintain an evenly balanced business economy. Any proposal to reduce the income of essential workers to the level of the soldier or sailor, who is furnished food, clothing, and shelter, would greatly jeopardize the prosperity of our Nation. It would decrease the total income of workers to a point where it would reduce purchasing power to a depression level. Industry would not have sufficient income to pay sufficient taxes required for the huge cost of our total defense program.

The union label trades department of the American Federation of Labor has constantly urged that American consumers buy American-made and union-label products. We believe this would create greater economic stability for American industries and at the same time sustain wage levels so there would be adequate buying power to maintain business and industry on an even keel of prosperity. If, on the other hand, all workers and farmers, for example, were paid at the same rate as the soldier in our Army, we would be thrown into a depression so panicky that it would endanger the economic security of America.

There are many reasons why American consumers should buy union-label products and use union services. The first and best reason is the union label is the best guaranty that the article is made in America. The second reason is that the purchaser of union-made goods stabilizes the labor standards established by the American Federation of Labor. These include the higher wages, shorter hours, and better working conditions of union and nonunion labor. By maintaining union labor's standard of wages, the consumer sustains the mass purchasing power of the buying public to such a high degree that our prosperity is assured.

One cannot mention the progress of American workers without pointing out the superior working conditions obtained for them by the American Federation of Labor.

For the past 60 years, the American Federation of Labor has consistently advocated the three basic principles which are now generally accepted as a foundation for permanent prosperity. Through labor unions, hours of labor have been reduced from 72 hours a week in 1880 to 40½ hours a week in 1940. By decreasing working hours more jobs are created, which is the only method through which America can reemploy its millions of jobless men and women workers.

The American Federation of Labor has been a pioneer in free education. It has been in the forefront of every battle for free textbooks in our public schools. It has always led in every fight to give the children of all citizens an equal opportunity to broaden themselves in both cultural and educational fields.

The American Federation of Labor has placed powerful protective legislation to safeguard the rights of both organized and unorganized workers on the statute books of our Federal and State Governments. Some of the earliest laws for workmen's compensation were sponsored by the American Federation of Labor. President William Green, of the A. F. of L., when senator in the Ohio State Legislature, sponsored the first compensation law, which has become a model for all other States in the Union. Among other acts which have become the law of the land is the Walsh-Healey law. This act protects workers who make and process all products purchased by the United States Government. It requires that decent wages be paid and all labor work reasonable hours and under humane conditions. The American Federation of Labor helped to pass the Social Security Acts, including old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. There is no reason why these beneficial measures to labor should be repealed on account of our defense program in peacetime or even in times of war.

While the American Federation of Labor has advocated protective legislation for workers, it has strong faith in its original purpose of privately reaching collective-bargaining agreements with employers in industry. A law may be ever so well written, but many times it is so poorly administered it loses its effect. It is not the use of a law but the abuse of a law that destroys its practical application.

For 60 years the American Federation of Labor has arranged collective-bargaining contracts with private industry, transportation, and all other business establishments without any interference from the Federal Government. We prefer to have the workers organized into labor unions and become so influential they can obtain their rights without Federal paternalism. If we do not stop somewhere in the regulation of labor unions by the Federal Government, we may reach the same stage in this country that they have reached in Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. True trades-unionists will not compromise with politicians. They prefer to deal directly with private industry and not to be forced by Federal decree of some Federal administrator who has been appointed and not elected to his position.

The American Federation of Labor will give its unqualified support for total defense of America, but it is unalterably opposed to sending our Army, Navy, or air forces to any foreign land.

Why not keep our able-bodied men at home, working at decent wages and making the products America consumes instead of sending them to European battlegrounds again? America should not become involved in the Old World conflicts but should make our democratic institutions a shining example for the rest of the world. We must keep the torch of liberty aloft and lighted in the Western Hemisphere in order that it will be a beacon light for the other half of the world.

There is one other point I desire to make perfectly clear. It is that those skilled craftsmen and experienced technicians in industry, who are so essential to our defense program, should remain in their present positions and not be replaced by inexperienced and unskilled apprentices by unscrupulous employers who desire to decrease the wage scales in America. It is our understanding that it is the intention of the new draft law to exempt essential workers now employed in industry, but during the last World War there were many injustices. Men who could have done a better job making munitions of war were sent to the front and those who were not qualified to work in the necessary industries replaced the skilled and experienced workers.

So far as possible the American Federation of Labor hopes that the Government will follow the policy of encouraging private industry—especially when it has collective-bargaining agreements with American labor unions—rather than take over the plants and establish Government ownership with the ever-increasing industrial dictatorship which grows under Federal control. If we are to fight the totalitarianism theory of government we must not establish it in our own democracy. We sincerely believe private ownership under rigid democratic controls is more efficient than government ownership with enslaved workers as witnessed today in Germany and Italy.

At this time I wish to express the deep gratitude of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor for this time on the air so generously given to us by the National Broadcasting Co. on its national network. We also desire to express our appreciation to all members of labor unions, union label leagues, women's auxiliaries and their friends for their cooperation in our national campaign to promote the purchase of union-label goods and the use of union services. We assure the consuming public that this continual demand for the union label on articles will guarantee they are American made and of the highest quality. Union-label merchandise is produced by skilled workers under the most humane conditions in the United States and Canada—the greatest nations on the face of the earth.

The Union Label Trades Department also desires to assure manufacturers and other business firms that we have mobilized an army of 25,000,000 eager representatives of the most compact and unified purchasing market in the world. This vast consuming army has an annual purchasing power of over 6,000,000,000 union-earned dollars. This is an attractive market for all industries and business firms that are union.

In conclusion, I desire to appeal to all Americans to buy union-made and American-made products. If you should like to know how to create more jobs for American workers; if you should like to aid in raising wage levels of all American workers; if you should like to reduce taxes collected for workers on relief, and if you should like to assist in establishing economic security for America; then buy union-label, union-made products and use union services.

It's War—Not Short of War

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROBERT B. CHIPERFIELD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE GALESBURG (ILL.) DAILY REGISTER-MAIL

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Daily Register-Mail of Galesburg, Ill.:

[From the Galesburg (Ill.) Daily Register-Mail of August 28, 1940]

IT'S WAR—NOT SHORT OF WAR

The efforts which many Americans appear to be making to carry water on both shoulders with respect to the national attitude toward the war in Europe are leading to more and more glaring examples of the inconsistency of their position. Their sympathies are openly with Great Britain and they say they would give practical expression to the sympathies by aiding that nation in its struggle "in every way short of war." In other words, they want to help Britain win the war and yet keep this Nation out of the struggle. But they give to the phrase "in every way short of war" such exceedingly elastic constructions that they reduce it, in effect, to the merest sophistry.

The country is being flooded with propaganda to the effect that this Government should turn over 50 or more of its "overage" destroyers, relics of the World War, not now in commission by the United States Navy, to Great Britain for patrol duty. This is to be accomplished by some sort of legalistic hocus-pocus, such as transfer of the vessels to a private corporation, which would in turn sell them to Britain. Others would have them a part of the price by which this Nation would secure from Britain and Canada naval and air bases in the Atlantic. Still others would have the Government give them to Britain outright, without thought of a quid pro quo. To make the transaction in any form more palatable to the American public, it is being argued that this step is justified on the ground of national security and national defense; that by providing Britain with extra means of defense of her home waters and home land we keep a potential enemy away from this side of the Atlantic.

But the trouble with all of this argument appears to us to be that in the history of our relationship with Great Britain we have furnished a well-established precedent that such a transfer of ships of war to a belligerent by any subterfuge constitutes an unfriendly act. During the American Civil War British shipbuilders constructed and outfitted a number of vessels of war for the Confederate States. Among these vessels was the famous privateer, the Alabama, which preyed upon upon American commerce and caused millions of dollars in loss and damage to shipping.

The Government of the United States protested to the Government of Great Britain against the release of these vessels to the Confederacy and when it protests proved ineffective, the American envoy to Britain, the redoubtable Charles Francis Adams, declared that the failure to detain these vessels constituted an act of war.

Following the cessation of hostilities the American Government made claim against Great Britain for damages resulting from this incident and after prolonged negotiations a treaty of arbitration was signed at Washington. The first rule adopted by the arbitrators in the proceedings was that a neutral government is bound to use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping within its jurisdiction of any vessel which it has reason to believe is intended to cruise or carry on war against a power with which it is at peace, also to use like diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel intended to cruise or carry on war as above, such vessel having been in whole or in part adapted within such jurisdiction for warlike use.

This was the basis for arbitration upon which the American Government insisted, which it was successful in establishing, and upon which it won an award of millions of dollars from the British Government. It thus became a precedent in international law.

Now it is proposed by those who advocate aid to Britain "short of war" to turn over American war vessels for use against Germany, or, for that matter, perhaps against Italy, nations with which we are at least technically at peace, and in violation of this established principle of international law by which our own Government declared similar acts to be acts of war. To make the inconsistency of the thing complete, we are being asked to commit an act of war, to keep us out of war.

All this is not to say that the extension of this aid to Great Britain might not be desirable from the standpoint of national interest and national defense. But why hide behind sophistry and subterfuge to accomplish it? Why not be honest about the thing and do it in the full knowledge that by so doing we are committing what our own history has established as an act of war? Why not do it, if we do, in understanding of the consequences of such action and back our stand with the fullest aid? If we are sufficiently sympathetic with Britain to risk what this action entails and breach a principle our own Government has established, why limit our course to furnishing a half-hundred worn-out destroyers for patrol duty?

Whatever else they may be, the axis powers are not dense enough to let such a mere subterfuge pass unchallenged. They will be quick to point out the consequences and will regard it as an act of war, which, according to our own official action, this Government has so declared it. What then of keeping us out of war or protecting the national security? It does not seem to us there is any practical value in this "short of war" business. We have repeatedly overstepped the bounds of neutrality in thought and in the expression of responsible public officials. It is now proposed that we overstep by direct action. If the national interest demands that we throw our lot with Britain and fight the totalitarian powers, let's do it. But let us be honest and courageous about it, rather than devious and inconsistent. We certainly cannot presume to set ourselves up as judges of international morality and decency and condemn the axis powers for violation of international law when we ourselves are guilty of an offense which falls in the same category.

Compulsory Military Training

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE A. DONDERO

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

STATEMENT BY MOTHERS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement by the Mothers of the United States of America, giving their views on the bill now before the House:

THE BURKE-WADSWORTH BILL

MOTHERS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

September 1, 1940.

On September 1, 1940, there appeared in the Times Herald a letter expressing sorrow for "those benighted souls, those 'Congress of Mothers of the United States of America.'" Because the writer represents a cross section of the citizenry, may we say to him (and others like him) that he does not understand us nor the issue. In order to clarify the misunderstanding, will he please take note of the following:

1. We are in favor of military training, but insist that such training shall be under the control and supervision of the United States Army.

2. We want adequate national defense. That means a strong Army, Navy, and Air Corps, completely equipped with guns (together with bullets which fit the bore), tanks, antiaircraft guns, etc., to be used "to repel invasion and suppress insurrection" (see Constitution).

3. Section 10 gives the President complete power to write the rules and regulations as he pleases. We have suggested that this section be amended as follows: In subsection A, strike out the words "the President is authorized" and insert the words "the Chief of Staff of the Army, by and with the advice of and consent of Congress." (For full details read testimony given by Rosa M. Faber, for the Mothers of the United States of America, before the Senate Military Affairs Committee, July 11, 1940.)

In other words, we prefer to leave the business of our corporation (the United States of America) to the board of directors (Congress), and not overload the general manager (the President) with responsibilities.

4. We object to being fooled and lied to. Compulsory military training is being sold to the public as a year of health building, discipline, straight shoulders, sun tan, and what not. We suggest the people stop believing such drivel and begin to ask intelligent questions.

5. Long before the Burke-Wadsworth bill was even introduced in Congress war plans were complete, draft boards set up in States, and personnel appointed. The War Department has asked for bids on thousands of coffins and coffin drapes (called interment flags.)

6. We refuse to be satisfied with an intimated threat to the integrity and institutions of the United States. We want Congress to specify the exact threat or threats which we supposedly face.

7. We ask that no exemptions be granted by reason of religious, political, or financial status.

To summarize briefly: we are not opposed to the principle of military training, but we are against certain specific sections of the bill and the apparently cleverly planned regimentation of all of us under the European corporate-state plan.

May we remind the writer that we are not alone in the stand we take. Numerous organizations have expressed their opposition to the Burke-Wadsworth bill. They have presented convincing arguments. Where are they now? Or can it be that woman alone has the courage of her convictions and that her interest in future generations and the preservation of her country are the motives behind her action?

MOTHERS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
MARY A. DECKER,
President.
ROSA M. FARBER,
Vice President and Chairman, Legislative Committee.

Administration of the Wage and Hour Act

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAMPTON P. FULMER
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I am inserting an address delivered by Col. Philip B. Fleming, Administrator, Wage and Hour Administration, United States Department of Labor, before the Southern Garment Manufacturers' Association, at their eighth annual convention, Biltmore Hotel, Atlanta, Ga., on Wednesday, August 28, 1940.

It is very necessary that something be done to secure for the wage earners of the South a fair wage for their labor.

It is my hope that, in that a great many industries in the South are of a small type, giving employment to thousands of people, with the possibility of tremendously increasing the productivity of these industries, as well as establishing additional industries, the Wage and Hour Administration will give serious, common-sense, businesslike thought to the real purpose and intent of the provisions of the Wage and Hour Act in writing their rules and regulations governing same.

Large industries, because of their monopolistic organizations, operating under, as a rule, associations, whereby they are able to thresh out their trade-practice rules and regulations, agreeing thereon as to their procedure in conducting their businesses, are able to take care of increased wages as well as any other items, including profit, because they are able to maintain fixed prices.

Smaller industries, being unable to organize, and, especially, independent concerns, represent an altogether different picture, and they should be considered as a different class and in line with all the circumstances connected with their various communities and various lines of business.

I am hoping that the time will come when something will be done to properly organize and assist farmers in controlling their production, marketing, and the distribution of their products, in line with that which is being done by these other groups, so that they may be able to eliminate thousands of parasites who are now marketing their products, which would tend to enable them to secure a fair price for that which they produce.

If and when this is possible, certainly wage earners on the farms in the South should be given fair wages.

The reason for farm wages being so ridiculously low in the South, as well as perhaps in other agricultural sections of the country, is because farmers operate on an independent basis, and they are only able to pay wages in line with the unfair prices received by them for their products.

I am glad to note that Colonel Fleming, according to his statements in his address, is going to do something about securing for wage earners, in connection with cutting and hauling the forest products of the South, especially pulpwood, a fair wage for their long hours and laborious work, the one thing that I have been trying to call to the attention of the Congress for some time.

I would be glad if Members would get a copy of House Joint Resolution 576, proposing an investigation of the pulp and paper mills, with the hope that I may be able to secure your assistance in the passage of this measure. This is a most important matter.

The address of Colonel Fleming follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, there is an unusual circumstance about the little talk I am going to give you this afternoon. It is not my intention to wax dramatic about it. But the fact is this: I am the defendant in a suit brought by your organization.

I hope you all notice that I am saying this with a smile. Not that I don't take your suit seriously. But I want to be sure you understand that I do not feel at all resentful about it.

The right to appeal to the courts is a democratic privilege, and democratic privileges are of special importance in these days. Courts are expensive. Their action often is slow. We might get along faster without the courts; but you are Americans, and I know how you would feel about taking orders without the privilege of asking the court to pass on their legality and reasonableness.

The wage and hour law, which I administer, provides a relatively quick method of court review. It is written right into the act. But, to quote the late Will Rogers, "I see by the legal papers" that when you utilize this procedure I am named as the defendant.

"It is just a legal formality," I told myself when the bailiff slipped me the papers. I said to myself, "I must get over this dislike of being sued, because it evidently goes with the job." Then I told myself—a bit hopefully—"This is probably what the lawyers call 'a friendly suit.'"

And that is where you fellows are so nice about it. While I am still holding to that thought, along comes a pleasant invitation to come down to Atlanta and be your guest at luncheon. It must be a friendly suit; and you know, I think it really is.

I think it is "not the money, but the principle of the thing," that is causing you to sue me. Why, just the other day, I picked up the Daily News Record and saw a little item from Martinsville, Va. It quoted the manager of a pants factory as saying the pay roll of his three factories had increased $75,000 a year, due to the apparel wage order. And it further quoted him as saying, "But I can't kick, with business the way it is." Well, $75,000 a year increase to one pants manufacturer sounds high to me, but he seems to like it.

But friendly suit or no friendly suit, there is something I can tell you. Perhaps some of you have never been sued. I can tell you how it feels to be a defendant. A defendant may put up quite a bluff about it, but the truth is, he feels he's on the spot.

Well, that's the way I feel. And right now I am asking myself: Did I do the right thing in rejecting my lawyer's advice? Am I taking a chance in coming here to talk things over with you while your suit against me is pending in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia?

But even as the defendant, I can say a few things. In the first place, as you all probably know, I did not appoint Industry Committee No. 2 for the Apparel Industry.

What I did was this: I read the record of the public hearing on the recommendation of Industry Committee No. 2. That record contained all the evidence that was brought to the attention of the committee and all the arguments that were made on that evidence in the hearing, which lasted for 33 days.

The apparel committee was a big committee—48 members. It had a big job to do. Lumped together, the making of all garments worn by men, women, and children is a tremendous industry. It is carried on in some 15,000 establishments. Its annual value of product is $2,700,000,000.

About 650,000 persons, the majority of them women and girls, are employed by this industry. The definition was a fairly simple one. It included in the industry the making of practically every garment by cutting material and sewing it together again. Under N. R. A., 32 code authorities were set up for the industries included.

Yes; the job was a big one. I noted all the objections made at the public hearing. But I do not think anyone could read the record of the committee without concluding this: In carrying out a difficult assignment they had done a good job.

It is estimated that the wage increases starting July 15 will directly affect more than 200,000 workers. The industry is largely on a piece-work basis. This means that thousands of workers are now guaranteed more money than they were previously able to make at piece work. I have an idea that in the low-wage operations in this industry piece-work rates are going to be generally revised. Otherwise the incentive of piece work is going to be lost, because the Wage and Hour Division is going to see to it that the United States Government's guaranty of a minimum hourly wage payment prevails.

Here we are in Atlanta—right on Peachtree Street, so everyone in this audience has read Gone With the Wind. As you all know, Gone With the Wind took a lot of reading. Gone With the Wind was about an even thousand pages. The record of the public hearing on Industry Committee No. 2 was 5,000 pages. In addition there were 313 separate exhibits.

After reading a transcript of the record I heard the arguments on the disputed points. Then I approved the recommendation of Industry Committee No. 2, except for two embroidery schedules which were unsupported by the evidence. I then issued the wage order to the apparel industry which your suit is seeking to set aside.

Nothing that has been brought to my attention since has caused me at all to regret my action.

Now, while I do boast a bit about having read the transcript of a 5,000-page record on wages paid and other economic and competitive conditions in the garment industry, you won't catch me making the mistake of trying to qualify as an expert in your industry. But I would like to remind you of a few things about the industry as a whole. There is one thing that is true of every division of the industry, true of the making of practically every garment worn by man, woman, or child: The cost of labor is relatively a large part of the value of the product.

I say relatively large in comparison to other important industries. For instance, the proportion of labor cost to value of product in the automobile industry is 10 percent, in the making of flour is 3½ percent, and in the making of cigarettes is 2½ percent. In your section of the garment industry that proportion is about 23 percent.

Other conditions being equal in your industry, the manufacturer who pays a lower wage can come out with a lower price. I had no acquaintance with your industry in the winter of 1931–32, after Great Britain went off gold; and in 1935, after the N. R. A. was invalidated. I was in the Army then. But from what some garment manufacturers have told me about those periods, the wage cutting and price cutting must have approached hysteria. A garment factory in one community would obtain orders by virtue of a lower wage and come out with prices which shut down factories making the same garments in two or three other communities.

I think everyone in the management side of the garment industry is going to appreciate the removal of the speculative element regarding the cost of labor. Management goes to great lengths to remove the speculative element in the purchase of commodities. That is why there is trading in cotton futures. Businessmen feel they cannot take a chance.

In low-wage industries, where labor cost is a big part of the cost of production, management has heretofore been unable to avoid one risk. This risk had to do with the cost of labor. If a competitor obtained labor cheaper, that competitor could make lower prices, could sell the market. Due to the apparel wage order, that isn't true today in the South, and it isn't going to be true any more.

I think you are going to be able to make a better approach to your problem of staying in business and making money. You are still going to encounter underselling in the markets. Competition is going to continue. But you will know that underselling is not made possible by wage cutting. Business may not continue to be good indefinitely. And if it is no longer good and you are forced to make economies to meet prices, you are going to economize—but not by cutting wages. You are going to seek economy by efficiencies, no matter how willing your own labor is to cut prices in order to meet competition.

I know that each one of you feels that you, individually, would be the last one to cut wages. You won't have to worry in the future about who is the first one or who is the last one. Nobody is going to do it. To cut wages in this industry would bring them below the legal minimum, and the legal minimum is going to be enforced.

I mean that when I say that the manufacturer will know that the underselling he encounters is not due to wage cutting. I mean that because this wage order is going to be enforced. No piece-work shop is going to be able to solve the minimum-wage problem by the simple subterfuge of dividing piece-work earnings by the minimum rate to arrive at the number of hours worked. That's falsification of records, and wage-hour inspectors have already shown how easy it is to detect such a fraud, and your southern judges have shown what they think of that type of violation.

As you know, we changed our regulations on keeping of pay-roll records, regulations applicable to all industries, on August 2, after the apparel wage order had been in effect about 2 weeks. The change was made in order to make legal record keeping which applied two or more minimum-wage rates to the hours worked by a single employee in 1 week.

By making the workweek the unit our record-keeping regulations had been kept fairly simple for the convenience of the employer before this. They can continue to be simple as the new regulations enabling payment at more than one minimum are optional.

Previously minimum-wage orders were so classified that it was almost inconceivable that a single worker should work under more than one wage-order rate in the same week. In the hosiery industry, for instance, we have rates of 40 cents an hour for full-fashioned and 32½ cents an hour for seamless, and I am told, in the few hosiery mills which house both types of machines, workers just don't transfer from one to another. The full-fashioned machine is too complicated for the seamless-machine tender and the seamless machine is beneath the dignity of a full-fashioned machine operator.

The industry based on the use of the sewing machine seems to be different. I want to thank those among you who have written us and called to our attention the details of your operation. It was the garment manufacturers themselves who showed us how we could regulate operation under more than one minimum.

The industry committee knew, and we knew, how difficult it would be to draw the lines between many of the garments listed for different minimum rates. The other day a trade association executive in your industry published a statement in the trade press advising his members to send us no more garments for our determination of what minimum applies. This was not done at our suggestion. We want the manufacturers to continue sending us garments. Some of these border-line garments are manufactured for highly competitive markets. Fair play demands that our construction of the wage order as to which minimum applied be followed by all manufacturers making such garments. We are going to make sure that our construction of the wage orders are enforced throughout the country. They are going to stand unless set aside by authoritative decisions of the courts.

So send us the garments in question. We will tell you which minimum applies and insure that the same minimum applies to every manufacturer making the same garment throughout the industry.

The cotton-garment industry has historically and traditionally been a low-wage industry. It is an old industry. The textile industry has been historically and traditionally a low-wage industry. It, too, is an old industry. In thinking about why some industries are low-wage, others high-wage, one might fall into an error of generalization. One might think that the low-wage industries are all old ones.

The low-wage industries are not all old. Let me tell you something about a low-wage industry which has been selling the South short, depressing the prices for landowner, contractor, and labor, a large industry which is a new one—in fact, is less than 10 years old.

This is the industry which optimistic southerners said heralded a new era of profitable industrialism. I wonder how many of you have arrived at the industry to which I refer; I mean the paper industry.

During the past 5 years about $165,000,000 has been invested in southern paper plants by northern financial interests. That sounds fine, but I really believe that the wage and hour law is the one thing that is going to get the South some real cash money out of this business. Its nice to have industries—for the money they produce—not for the privilege of driving by impressively big paper mills or through miles of denuded woodland.

The paper companies have been following the common business practice of buying in a low market and doing their best to keep the market low.

This is a big industry. The paper and paper-board output of the southern mills alone was $140,302,477 in 1937. It has been a very profitable operation. The annual report of one company shows a $5,000,000 profit in southern paper manufacture. It's a good business. Prices paid for wood are low; prices paid for labor are low; and the money obtained for the sale of paper can be distributed in dividends. That is a rough measure of the extent of the South's failure to participate in the income of this industry. Analysis of stock holdings, I believe, would show that dividends paid from that $5,000,000 of profits were not distributed to any great extent in the South.

The kernel of the matter is this: Landowner, contractor, and laborer in the South—all are pitifully eager to sell their goods or services for cash. All the paper companies needed to do to keep prices down was to divide up the territories and avoid bidding against one another in the purchase of pulpwood. They were buying stumpage at a rate that gave the farmers and other landowners an inadequate return for timber stands which will take another generation to replace. They had their contractors and subcontractors on a piecework basis which had them hustling to make any kind of a living out of it. But they went further, and that is where the Wage and Hour Division came into the picture.

They made a mistake. It is charged that they informed the contractors and subcontractors just what piecework rates in the woods they were using in calculating the price they intended to pay for the pulpwood. And that piecework price was far below 30 cents an hour. The Department of Justice brought the matter to the attention of a Federal grand jury in New York, and the grand jury did not hesitate to indict the 12 companies comprising the American Pulpwood Association. These companies have pleaded not guilty, and that is now an issue before the courts.

All this is not going on without protest from the South. There is a Congressman from South Carolina, a vice chairman of the Forestry Committee, who is making an issue of it. His name is HAMPTON P. FULMER.

Mr. FULMER has introduced a resolution in Congress asking for a thorough investigation of the "apparent monopolistic purchasing of pulpwood by pulp and paper mills under a contract system from farmers and other owners."

Congressman FULMER has been protesting this: Paper prices have recently increased from $65 to $85 a ton. But the advance has not been reflected in prices paid for stumpage and pulpwood. Southern landowners and farmers are not getting anything out of this increase. And Congressman FULMER has been further protesting that "wages paid for cutting and hauling pulpwood are on a starvation basis."

The wage situation is improving and is going to improve a great deal, due to the Wage and Hour Division. Perhaps you have read something about the program we have been conducting to obtain compliance in the pulpwood and lumber industry. In 2 months we inspected 3,412 pulpwood concentrations, lumber camps, yards, mills, and similar establishments. We arranged for employers to clear up their records and come into compliance with the law by paying a total of $300,000 in restitution. We are going to see to it that payment of at least 30 cents an hour prevails in the production of pulpwood or lumber for interstate commerce.

I have been told by those who have made a study of the paper industry that the resulting reallocation of the gross income will be quite important to the economy of the South. How important it is to some of the Southern States, which have the lowest per capita income of all the States in the Union, can be measured by this: The estimate of the amount of additional money which the minimum wage will cause to be annually distributed in the South comes to ten or twelve million dollars.

The laborer in the woods is not the only one who is going to benefit by this revised distribution of the money obtained from the sale of paper products. Once it is a general fact that the contractor's operation involves more money because he has to meet the requirement of the wage and hour law, he is going to be handling pulpwood purchased at a higher price. He is going to be able to get more for himself. And after the laborer has started spending his increased wage with the merchants, there is going to be more money in the community and it won't be so pitifully necessary for the landowners to obtain cash money that they will have to sell off 30 years' growth of timber at the buyer's price.

The South is trading up and styling up. I am certain that the wage and hour law is accelerating the pace of that movement. I have been through the South from time to time for years and I have never seen things looking better than on my recent trips.

Why, only a short time ago one of our lawyers, a young man from Atchison, Kans., Yale, and Cambridge, England, was here in Georgia on an assignment. He was taken on a fishing trip up in the Blue Ridge over Saturday and Sunday. Knowing that all Labor Department attorneys are socially minded, his host on Sunday afternoon drove him around the hill country in search of Tobacco Road. Well, as this young attorney later told me about the trip, "My Georgia friend just was unable to show me situations of distressing poverty. True, the shacks were unpainted. They looked as if they would not be any too warm in winter, even with plenty of wood for the stove. But it was Sunday, and every woman that came to the door to see us bump by on the rocky roads seemed to be wearing a new dress and I noticed that the pretty girls were wearing silk stockings."

Something is happening here. Something is bound to happen when the textile industry increases wages in the South by $10,000,000 a year to meet the requirements of the textile wage order, and increases them even further because of a concurrent boom. One hundred and twenty-five thousand cotton textile workers, all of them in the South, received wage increases from that order. The hosiery wage order must account for $2,000,000 or so increase in wages in the seamless-hosiery mills, most of which are in the South.

And now you are going to be called upon to make good in the matter of increasing pay rolls in this low-wage area. I think you will make good. I think that because of the type of men I have met as representative of your membership. It seems to me that you have the strength and resourcefulness of the typical American businessman; I mean the type of which the country is proud. Even if you lose this suit you are going to meet your pay rolls and you are going to stay in business.

And I think you'll be good losers. You see, I think you are going to lose. You may find it hard to believe, but these industrial wage orders seem to increase in popularity in their respective industries. Let me read you an editorial from a typical southern newspaper, The State, of Columbia, S. C.:

"The State does not know enough of the facts to pass intelligent judgment on the advisability of a 32½ cents an hour minimum for the textile industry. From what the State has heard the well-financed and larger mills scarcely would feel the increase, but that at the moment is not the point to which the State wishes to direct attention. There is another consideration of potential and perhaps great importance to the textile industry in the Southeast. It is this:

"The textile mills came southward years ago mainly because of low wages and other low manufacturing costs in the South. There was talk of 'cotton mills in the cotton fields,' and there were other sayings, no doubt, of equally logical sound. But low wages and costs were the determining factor.

"Now, consider certain broad facts of today. Textile wages in the Southwest—this appears generally to be true—are lower than in the Southeast. Perhaps other costs are also. And cotton, the crop, has been moving westward. To some degree the Southwest now occupies a textile position with reference to the Southeast that the Southeast formerly occupied with reference to New England.

"If low wages and costs siphoned the textile industry from New England, cannot the same forces siphon it again some years hence, from the Southeast to the Southwest?

"In the light of the conditions suggested in this discussion the State wonders whether the Southeast is wise in opposing a uniform standard of wages in the textile industry."

The southwestern, or Texas, cotton manufacturers had come to the textile committee and said that they would have to have a 5-percent differential in wages under the Southeast if they were going to be able to continue in business. So I was surprised this summer to get this telegram from the president of a large cotton mill in Dallas, Tex.:

"DEAR COLONEL FLEMING: I can see that considerable pressure is being brought to bear on you for the purpose of weakening the wage and hour law. The wage and hour law as it now stands is not a handicap to any manufacturer, large or small, North or South. It is the only protection we have against the notorious, unconscionable chiselers who formerly ran unbridled at the expense of his labor, his community, his stockholders, and his competitors. My feeling is violators of this law should be forced to serve sentence in a common jail rather than be permitted to pay a paltry fine.

"Sincerely yours,

"E. SHAW CUNNINGHAM,
"President, the Dallas Cotton Mills Co."

Let me say right here that Mr. Cunningham was not one of those Texas manufacturers who came to Washington to ask for a minimum wage 5 percent under the Carolinas. He did not undertake the management of the plant until the work of the Textile Industry Committee was about completed.

I replied to him as follows:

"DEAR MR. CUNNINGHAM: Thank you very much for your telegram of June 18, which I found on my return to Washington. Expressions like yours from manufacturers whose economy has been directly affected by the wage and hour law are very encouraging.

"May I have your permission to give your telegram to the trade press so that the cotton textile industry as a whole might know what one Texas cotton manufacturer thinks of the effect of the 32½ cents an hour minimum wage order.

"I think it is significant that most complaints about the wage and hour law do not come from low-wage industries, in which cut-wage competition influences prices at the market place. Those who have been loudest in their protest for the most part have not had to increase the wage rates of their workers to meet the requirements of this law.

"As to the administration of this law, I would appreciate very much any suggestions you may have on making it smoother. You may be assured that from an administrative standpoint, the future of the wage and hour law will be marked by more efficient enforcement, and that there will be no weakening of the act on the part of those to whom Congress entrusted it."

He came right back with:

"DEAR COLONEL FLEMING: Thank you for your letter of June 26 in reference to my telegram of June 18. Indeed you may use my telegram in any manner which you feel will be helpful.

"In my opinion, the wage and hour law is the greatest stabilizing influence the textile industry has ever had. As I see it, there are only three classes of manufacturers fighting the wage and hour law.

"1. The notorious chiseler who cannot operate his plant, except at the expense of his labor and competitor. A damn poor asset to any community.

"2. The manufacturer who sees his own failure ahead and is waging a fight on the wage and hour law merely as an alibi for his own incompetency.

"3. The manufacturer who is in a strong financial position, with a large, modern plant, and who is always howling about Government interference in business, which is merely an excuse to weaken Government regulations of any sort over industry, thereby permitting him to run unbridled as he was permitted to do in the past.

"When I came to this plant, March 1, 1939, I found it badly run down, with depleted working capital and old machinery. I am very happy to tell you that we are now making progress and that we have not experienced any interference by any Government agent.

"I judge the reason for this is that we comply with the law, and my orders are to all foremen in the plant, that the first one caught violating the wage and hour law will be fired on the spot, and I don't mean maybe."

That's how a manufacturer in one of the lowest-wage areas of the country feels about 8 months' operation under a wage order.

I think that I have reason to hope that 6 months after you lose your suit that you will feel the same way.

Is It Good Business To Demand Liens for Old-Age Assistance?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANCIS H. CASE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-fifth Congress, and again in this Congress, I have introduced bills designed dealing with the liens being taken in a few States when old-age assistance is granted. The number of the bill in this Congress is H. R. 8401. It simply provides that when a State receives grants for old-age assistance for the benefit of approved clients, that this payment by the United States will be in lieu of requiring liens from the recipient for the repayment of the assistance granted. A similar bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] as H. R. 8857.

The Federal Social Security Act, from its beginning, has provided that if a State did require liens and collected from the estate of the old-age assistance client, that one-half of the proceeds would be returned to the Federal Government. If all States had such a lien, it might work fairly among the States, regardless of the merits of the proposition from the standpoint of the old people. But only 14 States have such a law. The result is that these States, when and if they collect on their liens, will be contributing unequally to the other States. Either all States should take liens or none of them should. In some States it is a question whether the amount collected will compensate for the cost of maintaining a collection agency to say nothing of the multiplied losses in the forced liquidation and probate of estates, where the folks were temporarily hard up and needed a little ready cash at the time they applied for old-age assistance.

I recognize that there are many aspects to the question. Some people argue that the principal value lies in the fact that the law serves to discourage some people from applying for assistance. Naturally folks dislike to place a lien of high and absolute priority against what little frozen assets or lifetime savings they may have. They may prefer to go hungry and skimp along in some fashion or other.

There are some very cogent reasons for looking upon liens with a critical eye. Many of them have been forcefully presented in a recent statement by the Honorable Ernest F. Jacobsen, a Minnesota Republican, and under permission granted by the House, I include some of his remarks at this point:

THE HOMESTEAD LIEN LAW

The homestead lien law is a poor business proposition. It penalizes the aged and their heirs and makes no saving for the State.

It will require another bureau or bureaus to enforce the collection of these liens. That means putting the State into the real-estate business again, as it was when our rural-credits fiasco cost the State so many millions of dollars. It also means that lurking real-estate sharpers who already have their eyes fixed on this will lie in waiting for the opportunity to buy these liens, where they can make a good profit, and thus the political pilferers and not the pioneers are benefited.

There are only 14 States in the Union having such a law. At one time there were 17, but due to defeat, or the danger of defeat, its sponsors could not sustain it, and it was therefore repealed in 3 States—namely, Oregon, Kansas, and Florida.

Economy is meritorious, and all frugal citizens are for that and are interested in keeping down tax costs. The homestead lien law does not meet this test, but does the opposite, because it puts a penalty on thrift and discourages home ownership and will socialize the last thing you would expect to socialize—the American home.

If a renting family obtains $20 per month from the State, they will have to obtain additional help from relief or other sources in order to live properly, as this is obviously inadequate.

However, a home owner obtaining a like amount would have more to maintain himself, as his taxes would not be as high as rent, and he would therefore be able to apply more toward his personal needs, and he would require less supplemental aid from local communities.

Therefore it pays to encourage people to own homes, as in the long run they will require less relief aid than a renter. They also at the same time contribute to the building up of the State.

In the long run, which is smartest—to encourage thrift and home ownership or to encourage more tenancy and larger old-age assistance checks? Homeowners have a stake in good government and in lower taxes and in the community. Homes taken over on liens by the State go off the tax rolls, thus throwing a larger tax burden on the remaining privately owned property.

Remember this, too, it is not a Republican law. The Republican Party, as such, has never gone on record as favoring this kind of war on the aged—this policy of making them vassals of the State.

Aside from the question of the politics that is now being played with these unfortunate pioneers of 65 years or over, and aside from the graft and corruption and new State agencies that will have to be created, if any money is collected, 50 percent of it will have to be returned to the Federal Government for the amount it has contributed—for the Federal Government matches every dollar that the State expends in this relief, up to $20 per month, the Federal maximum—which, when returned to the Federal Government, will, of course, go in great part to the other 34 States having no mandatory lien law. This, in effect, is making the State of Minnesota a collection agency operating against our aged and their heirs for the benefit of people in those 34 States to whom we owe no such duty and whose State policy has been far-sighted and sound enough to not thus persecute them.

England's Parliament passed an old-age pension law in 1908. It entitled every British subject of 70 years of age, who had been a resident of the United Kingdom for 20 years, to a pension if his income was not sufficient to maintain an adequate standard of living. The law did not require the recipient to be a pauper nor did it require a homestead lien.

The amount that many of our aged receive today is inadequate for their needs. The average given for the month of March in the State of Minnesota was $20.84—and this, though the Federal Government will match every State dollar up to a total pension of $40 per month.

Neither do these aged fare as well as the veriest indigent stranger who comes into our State, under the so-called adequate relief budget, which is far in excess of that allowed to our pioneer aged, who toiled and sacrificed many years to make this a great State.

A citizen's committee made a survey of public relief in Minneapolis 1 year ago. The report of this committee shows that more than 1,400 direct relief cases cover individuals and families that have been citizens of Minneapolis less than 5 years. Approximately 800 cases represent persons that moved into Minneapolis from towns, villages, and cities in our State and the balance came from almost every State in the country.

This group of relief clients have been provided with a much greater relief allowance than have the old settlers of our State. There is no law requiring these people to mortgage what property they may have or will acquire, nor are they required to reimburse the Government from future incomes or earnings.

The present social-security law does not and will not afford security for the old-age-assistance group. The allowances now given is not adequate and falls below the budget allowance provided for direct-relief clients.

A Good Substitute for Conscription—House Adopts My Suggestion for Home Training

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a memorial to the late Senator ERNEST LUNDEEN, as suggested in my earlier remarks today.

The ideas expressed in my open letter to the President of June 21 have now been adopted and approved by the highest naval and military authorities of the House of Representatives and given the unanimous endorsement of the Naval Affairs Committee, and finally by both the House and the Senate of the United States. Read the following colloquy which took place in the House on August 30, and then read my letter to the President, written 71 days previously. I quote from pages 11306–11307 of the RECORD:.

NAVAL RESERVE TRAINING CORPS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 4272) to amend the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes," and ask for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the bill the unanimous support of the committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may state to the gentleman from Michigan that the bill has the unanimous endorsement of the Naval Affairs Committee and has been reported to the House by direction of the Naval Affairs Committee, by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], a member of the committee.

It is a bill which permits the Navy Department to expand in the various colleges the Naval Reserve Training Corps. Under the law today, 11 universities have 2,400 students composing what is ordinarily referred to as the Naval R. O. T. C. This bill provides for the extension of this corps to include 7,200 students.

The money was made available in the Senate yesterday and there are some 16 more universities which will be permitted to have students in the Naval R. O. T. C.

These 13 universities that have made application are as follows: Holy Cross, Western, Brown, Temple, University of Pennsylvania, University of Virginia, Washington and Jefferson, Duke University, North Carolina State, University of Houston, University of Texas, Texas A. and M., and Carnegie.

Mr. MICHENER. That does not include Wayne University?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That university has the right to make application. These are 13 universities only and 4,800 students will permit approximately 16 more universities to establish a Naval R. O. T. C. These universities have not been designated. They are merely applying to be designated just as soon as the Congress passes the authorization act to make it 7,200 instead of 2,400.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the determination has not yet been made?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The determination has not yet been made. It is up to the various universities throughout the country to qualify under the method now established by the Navy Department.

Mr. HINSHAW. I may say that I received word that the University of Southern California has also applied.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that this is the best and cheapest way that we can train young men for the service of our country, and that we had better give these universities the opportunity to train these young men not only in the Navy but in the Army?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that there will be presented to the House in a few days a bill to commission the 2,400 boys who have already entered the R. O. T. C. and who have qualified after 4 years' training. This bill will give them a commission in the line of the Navy and in the Marine Corps instead of taking all of our officers in the Navy from the Naval Academy. It will help the Navy get the viewpoint of students in the line of the Navy, and it will enable the students to get the viewpoint of the Naval Academy.

HIGH RANKING MEMBER ON MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ALSO ENDORSES IDEA

Mr. THOMASON. Does not the gentleman think that also ought to be extended to the Army R. O. T. C., because we have right now about 200 applications pending for R. O. T. C units, and not only that, but under the Reserve Officers Act there are also a few thousand young Reserve officers who are well qualified in the same way as the naval officers?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. What the gentleman says is correct, but my committee can only deal with naval matters. The Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman from Texas is a distinguished member, should take that up.

Mr. THOMASON. What assurance has the gentleman that he will get the appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It was put in the bill yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 22 of the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled 'An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes' (43 Stat. 1276; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 821), as amended by the act approved August 6, 1927 (50 Stat. 563; U. S. C., supp. V, title 34, sec. 821), is hereby further amended by deleting the words 'twenty-four hundred' in the last line of the section, and by inserting in lieu thereof the words 'seventy-two hundred.'"

With the following committee amendment:

"Page 1, line 7, strike out '1927' and insert '1937.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Now read my open letter to the President of the United States:

JUNE 21, 1940.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Why, if you feel it necessary to train the youth of America, do you not use the available local facilities first? It looks to me, and a lot of other people back home, as though your idea of compulsory military training would be a lot more practical and sensible, and a lot more American, as well as much less expensive, if you would start by using our facilities in each home community first.

As you know, many schools are standing by, waiting and anxious to institute R. O. T. C. units, but they are receiving no encouragement either from you or from the War and Navy Department.

In my own district our city vocational schools are waiting word from you to train 1,500 additional aviation and auto mechanics, electricians, machinists, blacksmiths, radio mechanics, cooks, etc.

One school alone, De LaSalle High School, has upward of 1,000 boys enrolled, and they have asked and are pleading for a Junior Naval or Army R. O. T. C. unit. Furthermore, the idea is supported by Archbishop John Gregory Murray, of St. Paul. Still a deaf ear is turned to their request here.

We have many other facilities locally, in the institutions of higher learning, in camps, and activities now set up and operating, so why look further, or why go to such radical extremes as proposed, until we have promoted the full utilization of our present local opportunities?

Reading my telegrams and mail, it is evident that sentiment is almost unanimously opposed at this time to compulsory military training and to the youth camps you have suggested.

Why take our youth from their homes and out of the wholesome environment in which most of them are living, and transplant them into the lonely, inhospitable, disturbing, and discouraging arena of a training camp? Their mental, moral, and physical well-being is too important to be disregarded in that way. We should keep our youth in their homes, and in their home communities just as long and just as far as possible, and this suggestion I make herein is in keeping with that idea and is a practical movement which will aid our need for preparedness and national defense, but at the same time be conservative of the best values of the Nation.

Mr. President: We want no foreign war, we want none of our American boys to fight in foreign lands or seas, we want only to prepare to protect and defend our own shores and border, and the ideas I have suggested are the ones best suited to attain that end.

Most sincerely yours,

JOHN G. ALEXANDER, M. C.

During the past several weeks I have been deluged with letters and telegrams asking how I stood on the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill. In 95 percent of these communications the writers have urged me to take a firm stand against this bill. Because of the intense feeling aroused over the entire Nation by this contemplated legislation and knowing the widespread opposition of the people of the Third District of Minnesota to such a bill, I feel it my duty to state my position clearly and definitely on the matter.

Many sincere opponents are in this fight against the draft; in fact, opposition to conscription seems to be one thing upon which churches of almost every denomination agree. The clergy of the Catholic Church in every State in the Union have expressed their opposition to the bill. The Methodist Church, of which there are some 8,000,000 members, is vigorously fighting against passage of said bill. Bishop William A. Lawrence, speaking for the Federal Council of Churches in America, is strongly opposing this legislation.

Outside the church groups the Farmers' Union in a great number of States has registered opposition, as well as the railroad brotherhoods.

Also, this opposition to conscription is about the only thing John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O., and William Green, of the A. F. L., have agreed upon for months.

I feel that the size of our Army, Navy, and Air Corps should be increased to insure adequate defense in case of invasion by a foreign power, but increase these branches of the service by raising the pay for such service and cut the enlistment period to 1 year. Hold out some inducement and encourage voluntary enlistment. With the millions of young men unemployed, there should be no necessity for a draft, and there would not be if the Government would pay a decent wage and cut the enlistment period as suggested above.

On the other hand, what is going to happen to the young man of draft age who is now steadily engaged in private employment? Let us say he is earning $150 per month. Let us suppose this conscription bill becomes a law. This young man is required to report to some Army camp, where he will have to remain for the period of 1 year, and for this service to his country he will receive the salary of $21 or perhaps $30 per month. What about his employer? He loses the services of this particular young man and is forced to employ someone else to take his place. This new employee must be trained into the business, and when the year expires he is really familiar with the functions of his job. Now, the question arises, Will the employer rehire the young man who has just returned from his year's training with the Army, Navy, or Air Corps? That all depends on circumstances. Perhaps the employer is satisfied with the new man and does not want to discharge him to make room for the former employee. Or perhaps he will offer the returning trainee a job with less pay than he was receiving when he left for military training. All in all, a grave injustice and hardship results in such a case. This is just one instance of what might take place if the conscription bill is passed by Congress, and there is no provision in said law guaranteeing a trainee his job back after his year's training expires.

A conscription army might be used for purposes other than intended if controlled by irresponsible Government leaders. It might be used to interfere in labor trouble, and it might also be used as a threat to some of our South American neighbors in the event of trade wars.

The great danger is that a huge peacetime conscription army is the first step toward dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the following letter from Paul Hanchett, which logically and clearly states the viewpoint of many citizens of my district and which is also in keeping with the ideas I have repeatedly expressed on this subject.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., August 28, 1940.

Congressman JOHN G. ALEXANDER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please advise me at your earliest convenience about the following matters:

1. What your vote on the conscription bill will probably be.
2. How you believe the rest of the Minnesota Representatives will vote.
3. What chance there is that the present bill may be voted down.

I am strongly opposed to any peacetime conscription of our young men for the following reasons:

1. Conscription is not an important step in the improvement of our defenses (our greatest needs are for naval, aeronautical, and antiaircraft preparations).
2. Conscription is not a necessary step—for the voluntary system has far exceeded all expectations and Army quotas to date.
3. Conscription is not the best or even proper method of meeting our Army needs—we need a relatively small (perhaps 600,000) and permanent professional army serving at a rate of pay which will be attractive to capable young men.
4. Conscription will be grossly unfair to certain groups of our population—it calls on our young men for more than is being asked of the rest of our people; it asks of the young man with a good job more than of the unemployed or of those lucky enough to be exempt.
5. Conscription is a threat to our democratic way of life and to our civil liberties.
6. Conscription is not an insurance against war, but it invites our President to become aggressive and actually, perhaps, to start a war.

Please note that I do not say that we do not need adequate measures for defense, but am merely saying that conscription is not a desirable, efficient, or expedient means to defense. I strongly favor immediate air, naval, and antiaircraft preparations, both in the way of manpower and equipment.

I do not ask you to either think or vote in accordance with my wishes, but urge you to think carefully about these matters and then throw your influence toward that side which you believe to be the best one for our country as a whole. However, so that you may know definitely where I, as one of your many constituents, stand, I list the following suggested goals of legislative policy:

1. Absolute opposition to any peacetime conscription proposal.
2. Support for any amendments to include a wider age grouping. (If we must have conscription, the larger the age group included the more equitable the measure will be and the easier it will be to raise the required number of able men.)
3. Support for any amendments to include the conscription of wealth or industry. (If we have to confiscate the time and abilities of our young men, it is only fair to similarly call on our businessmen for their help, too.)

This business of conscription during a time of peace is a very serious matter. I invite your early answer to the questions which I have raised above and your most conscientious efforts during the debate and voting upon the bill.

Yours most cordially,

PAUL HANCHETT.

Taxpayers on the Warpath

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HAROLD KNUTSON
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 3, 1940

ARTICLE FROM THE AMERICAN MAGAZINE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article from the current issue of the American magazine:

[From the American magazine of October 1940]

TAXPAYERS ON THE WARPATH

(By S. F. Porter)

Billions for defense, but not one cent for official inefficiency or political extravagance.

That is the rallying cry of alert citizens over the country who are banding together in a swelling army to demand the slashing of every needless item from our enormous tax burden, to fight wasteful spending, and to put an end to expensive duplication in Federal, State, and local governments.

Every week adds new units to this army of more than 1,200 militant taxpayer organizations, whose members are determined to clear the Nation's decks for defense by protecting the sources of revenue needed for airplanes, tanks, and warships.

I have just traveled over the United States to survey this spontaneous, Nation-wide movement. I talked with housewives and businessmen, with tax experts, stenographers, and statisticians. And I found that, almost to a man, Americans are ready to make large sacrifices to speed up our national-defense program. They are prepared to pay their share of the new defense taxes. But they are equally determined that national defense shall not be jeopardized by a staggering weight of wastefulness.

Scarcely one of them grumbled about paying to defend our shores. But nearly everyone protested against tax money being frittered away by self-seeking politicians despite the national emergency.

The growing burden of taxes is one of the gravest problems confronting the next administration—Democratic or Republican. As I write, Congress has already appropriated $5,000,000,000 for defense, and experts agree that this figure will be more than doubled before we are adequately armed. To finance these huge expenditures, every executive, wage earner, pensioner, and high-school student across the Nation will pay new taxes, direct or hidden.

Yet in 1939, long before we started spending billions for defense, fully one-fifth of our national income went back to our governments in the form of taxes. In 1939 we paid $13,800,000,000 in taxes, almost 70 percent more than in 1932. Of this, $5,500,000,000 went to the Federal Government; $3,900,000,000 went to the 48 State governments; and $4,400,000,000 to the cities, towns, and counties.

These are startling figures, and the taxpayers I talked with are out to cut them down drastically, particularly those for State and local governments. When Germany entered the war, Hitler ordered all his provincial governments to reduce their expenditures by a specific percentage. That is the totalitarian method of assuring funds for a gigantic armament program. But America's taxpayer groups believe that the democratic way is to eliminate needless expenses by exerting the influence of the ballot, publicity, and eternal vigilance.

L. Richard Guylay, executive director of the New York State public expenditure survey, recently set the keynote for 1940's drive for economy in nonessentials:

"Battleships or 'boondoggle.' Airplanes or new post offices. What shall it be? We can't have both unless we sap the strength of our total economy. Shall we spend a million on antiaircraft guns—or on new buildings to house and flatter our mushrooming economy?"

In every section of the United States taxpayer groups are proving their ability to force the politicians to trim their sails. Not long ago, I was standing in the railway station at Albany, N. Y., when more than 6,000 New Yorkers descended upon the State capital to impress upon their legislators the meaning of a cent to a man who earns $15 a week. I watched 2,500 men and women tumble out of a 13-car train, watched leaders of 800 local organizations round up their members and pass out instructions. Hundreds carrying banners: "Make tax victims tax victors." "High taxes and disaster are twin devils." * * * More in colorful, elaborate uniforms. * * * More waving American flags. * * * Women in mink coats talking to girls dressed as waitresses. * * * New York Stock Exchange representatives joining ranks with members of the restaurant workers' union.

They marched through the streets, shouting, arguing, about one thing: New York State's proposed $396,700,000 budget. They filled every seat in a vast auditorium, fought for a chance to get to their feet and denounce the budget. They kept their legislators in session 13 hours—the longest public hearing and the greatest antitax demonstration in the State's history.

Since then I have heard housewives speak learnedly about the fundamentals of taxpayers' organizations. I have listened to businessmen discuss for hours the cost of fence posts, to determine where a little saving might be made. And I am convinced that we Americans at last are thoroughly aroused about a system that endangers our vital defense plans by forcing us to pay taxes to 161,144 overlapping political units laid out in the oxcart days of this Nation.

The revolt is being led by men who in some States are forced to pay taxes to as many as 10 separate government units. It's drawing in residents of Illinois, where there are 15,100 tax-levying counties, municipalities, and townships; residents of New York, where there are 10,191 of these units; of Minnesota, where there are 10,409; of Pennsylvania, where there are 5,586.

It is attracting tens of thousands of housewives and businesswomen who question where relief money is going today. It's attracting the wage earner whose union tells him that "hidden" taxes have been taking $1 out of every $4 he spends on goods, as compared with only $1 out of every $15.50 spent in 1913. And it's being backed by property owners and by industrialists, who fear that unless they fight they'll be paying more and more needless taxes every year.

In Massachusetts thousands of citizens, banded into a federation of taxpayers, are fighting local and State graft with spectacular success. The New England council started the movement in the depth of depression by sponsoring local taxpayers' groups. Tax associations were formed by small cliques of resentful citizens, spurred on by two men, Norman MacDonald, a former newspaperman, and Reginald W. Bird, retired business executive.

They studied budgets, uncovered amazing proofs of mismanagement, then began publicizing facts that the average person could understand * * * about public officials who turned in expense accounts asking $1 for a one-block taxi ride, who bought waste-baskets at a cost of $10 a basket * * * about a man on the Massachusetts pay roll whose sole job was teaching housewives how to fry fish! * * * about an employee who was receiving $4,500 a year from the State to publish verses in praise of the division of marine fisheries. The local associations printed pamphlets disclosing astounding budget shortages in local communities, debts no one even tried to collect.

The publicity worked. When the 1936 election returns were counted, 17 out of 19 legislators whose records showed they stood for extravagance had been defeated. Just facts defeated them, facts reduced to the simplicity of the New England family.

Today there are 200 taxpayers' associations in the State federation. They hold mass meetings to which entire communities are invited. Active and militant, they have helped block State extravagances totaling $125,000,000, have initiated administrative improvements, better budgets, cut the municipal debt of Massachusetts from a 1931 peak of $316,000,000 to $287,000,000.

In Nebraska, Tax-buster Frank G. Arnold is leading a fight against prodigality that is arousing taxpayers' organizations. He, also, started in the depression—in Fullerton, Nebr., population 1,600. Head of a small taxpayers' organization, he advanced a plan so simple that it astounded the citizens. He just wanted to find out whether one community's expenses were reasonable in comparison with those of neighboring municipalities.

He discovered, among other things, that in one community bond paper cost twice as much as in the next; in one county Nebraskans had paid for a bridge that had never been built; in another an employee of the highway department, whose sole activity was to run a small car, bought, one day, 13 gallons of gas, 4 gallons of gas, 5 gallons of gas; another day, 5, 10, and 9 gallons; another, 15½, 6¾, and 10 gallons.

He concentrated on the small extravagances, listed misspent items ranging from $5 to $100—figures that any taxpayer could comprehend.

The Nebraska Federation of County Taxpayers' Leagues elected Arnold president, and he went to work. Thousands of citizens are now turning out for meetings to discuss prices of gravel, of sewage pipes, and paper clips. Nebraska hasn't levied any new taxes for years. It operates with a balanced budget; has no cigarette, no sales, service, chain store, or income taxes; no bonded indebtedness.

Arnold's group has cut $38,000,000 from county, city, town, and district bond issues in the last decade, has saved the State $140,000,000 in general tax levies.

Every month more tax organizations are being formed—in Ohio, in California, in North Dakota, in Kentucky. In addition to local groups organized mostly to fight real-estate taxes, there are 20 State groups, organized to fight State income and sales taxes, and national groups, concentrating on the Federal Government's tax structure. All have the same objective—to find out where the citizens' money goes, and to correct abuses that threaten national security.

In Watertown, Mass., the tax league found that the community was supporting 25 purchasing agents where only one was needed; that it was buying $1,000 worth of hardware every month from a store that charged 15 to 66 percent in excess of prices quoted by another dealer on staples; that a "fine fellow" was getting oil contracts at top prices. In Columbus, Ohio, an aroused group of taxpayers found that while their tax rates were soaring, State budget items were being based simply on amounts budgeted in previous years, not on amounts actually spent.

Fort Wayne, Ind., is the scene of one of the most significant upheavals. The revolt goes back to 1933, when the county tried to put through a tax-rate increase from $2.25 to $3.19. Hundreds of citizens who had previously paid no attention to taxes became vitally interested; housewives, businessmen, students invaded public hearings of the Allen County Tax Adjustment Board—Fort Wayne is the county seat of Allen County—to discover the reason for the sharp increase.

Crowded into a large assembly room, they listened to department heads who didn't know even their own budgets, heard board members feebly attempt to analyze various expenditures. When one department head asked $6,000 for gasoline requirements, not aware that in the preceding year his gasoline costs had been only $3,329, the board meeting degenerated into a verbal free-for-all, into disorder, booing, catcalls.

And so the Taxpayers Research Association of Fort Wayne was created. Within a year more than 700,000 items of expenditures were tabulated. When the board met again, the taxpayers had detailed records of governmental expenditures, were able to talk authoritatively, accurately. The people of the Hoosier State today know why State taxes go up and down.

The greatest value of the association is "to keep public officials on their toes, so they will watch their expenditures." Its survey showed no evidence of dishonesty in Fort Wayne, but it did uncover some ridiculously high expenditures. A county farm, for instance, equipped with an $8,000 pigpen, built of glazed bricks costing $180 a thousand.

Today Fort Wayne, with a population of 125,000, has next to the lowest bonded indebtedness of any city of its size. At the same time it has one of the finest park systems in the country, and considerably better-than-average municipal services and government.

In some States the movement is just getting under way. In Ohio, for instance, the tax revolt to stop waste, to eliminate graft, to reduce expenses only began late last year. The Citizens Tax League of Ohio is now holding meetings, calling on residents from all parts of the State to form "a bulwark against the demands of patronage and selfish lobbyists." It's campaigning for members with the slogan, "What are you doing about taxes—sitting back or striking back?" It's obtaining its money from the dollar bills paid by sustaining members, while accepting citizens as nonpaying associate members.

The same thing is happening in Kentucky, where a tax-reduction association is now being organized from Ashland to Paducah, intent on finding out the facts about the assessment and collection of taxes and the expenditure of public funds.

Tax revolts may start in a dozen ways. Some are spontaneous movements, such as the uprising of the "taxcentinels" against hidden taxes, engineered by students of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, in Troy, N. Y.

Using their own and student union funds, 14 students spent a week end touring the city's banks and stores, collecting pennies in exchange for all types of money. The result was a corner on the penny market; the students owned some 250,000 of the coins.

Then, the "taxcentinels" announced their slogan: "We put the ax to the hidden tax with the accent on the cent." For every dollar's worth of purchases, members vowed to pay 25 cents in pennies—"representing the average hidden taxes involved in the manufacture and sale of any commodity."

Their object was to impress upon the average person the full amount of money he lost each day in buried taxes, and they succeeded so well that "taxcentinel" clubs were established in other communities, by other colleges and universities.

Some are revolts against basic tax philosophies, such as the growing antagonism to interstate tax barriers. Restrictions and duties enacted by States to develop or protect native industries are often so great that there is as much red-tape in passing many interstate lines in the United States as there is in passing a European frontier. The movement against these barriers is in its infancy, but is gaining headway fast.

Some are big-business campaigns, like the one waged by the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, the city's biggest taxpayer. It has been using advertising as a weapon, to inform the public that it paid more than $1,000,000 a week in taxes in 1939; that it gave the city enough money to run its police department 6 months, to run its fire department 10½ months, to support parks and museums nearly 2½ years.

Some are "individual" tax revolts, such as that carried on by Maxwell M. Nowak, Chicago businessman, who liquidated his 35-year-old $1,500,000 livestock business with the statement, "I am quitting business because I am sick and tired of taxes." Or by Harry Lang, Evansville, Ind., factory man, who wrote a letter to President Roosevelt announcing that whoever would pay him in salary for 5 years what his business cost him in taxes could have his business free.

Wherever citizens are fighting, they are getting results. In Westchester County, N. Y., the Taxpayers' League of Larchmont and Mamaroneck last year forestalled a 22-percent increase in the county's taxes and actually had the budget reduced by $1,000,000. By a single move, an association consisting of aroused businessmen and housewives saved the residents of Westchester County $5,000,000. In South Bend, Ind., a taxpayers' group has slashed taxes 38 percent in 6 years.

You can't ignore a movement that is gaining strength against political power and public apathy, that is attracting tens of thousands from every State, from all classes. It's a revolt of the masses. Yet it's not anti New Deal, anti-Democrat, or anti-Republican. It's no anti-anything—except needless taxation at a time when every available penny is needed for an armament program that will mean security for American citizens.

Are Holding Companies Exempt From Excess-Profits Tax?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JERRY VOORHIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 3, 1940

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, when the omnibus amortization, profits-limitation repeal, and excess-profits tax bill was passed by the House under a drastic "gag" rule last week, I said that I believed it was absolutely wrong to pass so important a bill under circumstances like that.

I now find, on more careful study of the bill, than it was possible to give in the few hours that elapsed between the time of its printing and its passage, that apparently holding companies are wholly exempt from any excess-profits-tax payments whatsoever. The bill provides that in determining excess-profits net income a credit equal to the full amount of any dividends received shall be allowed.

The National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOE B. BATES
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, September 3, 1940

RESOLUTION OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF MASON COUNTY (KY.) FARM BUREAU

Mr. BATES of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolution of the Board of Directors of the Mason County (Ky.) Farm Bureau:

We, the board of directors of the Mason County Farm Bureau, wish to go on record as follows:

We believe that all available destroyers and other material aid should be sent to England at once, not next month or next year.

We are unqualified for the selective draft being put into effect at once.

We feel that any American manufacturer who will not willingly cooperate with the rearmament program should be forced to do so.

We favor immediate steps toward a motor road and a railroad through Canada to Alaska.

We believe it would be better to buy air and naval bases, if possible, instead of leasing them.

We are convinced it is foolish to permit foreign consulates to maintain excessive staffs manifestly kept up for purposes of espionage and propaganda. We suggest that the size of such consulate staffs be regulated by law.

This is a democratic country, based on free speech and free assemblage, but we feel that any government that tolerates alien agencies seeking to undermine it is worse than foolish. We feel that such activities should be suppressed at once.

We heartily commend the recent agreement with Canada and the Habanna agreement.

We feel that Congress is moving entirely too slowly in matters of national defense and that they should put their country ahead of their politics.

Unanimously approved by the board of directors of the Mason County Farm Bureau, August 28, 1940.

Exchange of Destroyers for Naval and Air Bases for National Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SOL BLOOM
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 4, 1940

EDITORIALS FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES, NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE, AND THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include therein the following editorials which appeared in today's issues of the New York Times, the New York Herald Tribune, and the Washington Post. All of these editorials are on the subject of the transfer of destroyers to Great Britain in exchange for air and naval bases in this hemisphere for national-defense purposes.

[From the New York Times of September 4, 1940]

DEFENSE OF THE ATLANTIC WORLD

President Roosevelt is right in describing as "epochal" the agreement announced yesterday between Great Britain and the United States. It is epochal in the sense that it marks the recognition by these two powers of a community of interest in the defense of the North Atlantic world. A way of life has grown up on the eastern and western shores of that ocean which the British people and the American people believe to be the only way of life worth living. Through the action of their Governments, they now place at the disposal of one another instruments of which each has special need in the defense of the Atlantic world against aggression.

The two halves of the agreement fit together logically. At this moment, the most pressing of all British needs is for destroyers which can be used in the narrow waters of the English Channel to repel invasion and in the Mediterranean to safeguard the lifeline of the British Empire. Britain now obtains 50 such ships—over-age, to be sure, but nevertheless in good fighting trim, and sufficient in number almost to double the squadrons of destroyers which the British Navy has been able to maintain in service recently in waters around the British Isles. On our side, it has long been recognized that the effective use of American sea power and air power for the defense of this continent is largely dependent on the possession of bases at a sufficient distance from our shores to enable us to strike at a potential enemy before he reaches our own coast and prevent him from establishing his own bases of operation on our side of the Atlantic.

The leases we have now obtained do not instantly and automatically give us additional protection. We shall first have to turn these leases into harbors, fortifications, shipyards, and air fields. But given enough time—and destroyers we have turned over to the British will themselves be operating in the channel to win us additional time—the leases can be used to strengthen our defenses greatly, and particularly to make a vital link in those defenses, the Panama Canal, all but impregnable.

During recent weeks, when reports from Washington have forecast an exchange of destroyers for bases, three chief objections have been made to such an agreement as has now been reached. In the first place, fear has been expressed that American destroyers sold or traded to Britain might eventually fall into German hands and in turn be used against the United States itself. On this point we now have the formal assurance of the British Government that its "settled policy" will be "never to surrender or sink the British Fleet" in the face of any attack that Germany may launch against the British Isles.

In the second place, fault has been found with the method of this agreement; that is, with the decision of the President to proceed entirely on his own initiative, to leave Congress out of consideration, and to confront Congress with a bargain already signed and sealed. Without going into the disputed question of the President's authority under existing law, it must be said that the present agreement would be even more desirable if it had the formal stamp of congressional approval on it. Perhaps the President, knowing the pressing nature of Britain's need of destroyers, feared the delay of a congressional debate which might have run a month. But it must be remembered that the British request for destroyers was made early in June—our own dispatches reported such a request under date of June 11—and in the period of nearly 3 months which has passed since then there was ample time for Congress to debate the whole matter, had the President chosen to ask Congress for its cooperation and had the President not chosen to give the impression that there was no connection between bases and destroyers.

Finally, concern has been expressed that the conclusion of such an agreement as this—either on Presidential authority or with the approval of Congress—would be interpreted by Hitler as an act of war. We do not fear this result. Hitler chooses his enemies regardless of whether or not they have given him the slightest provocation. But we do believe that this is a step in the direction of more active participation with Great Britain in the defense of a common stake in the Atlantic, and we think that in all frankness it must be recognized as such, both for the risks it holds and the advantages it offers.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of September 4, 1940]

THE AGREEMENT WITH ENGLAND

The two goals that President Roosevelt has achieved and announced together are in themselves wholly admirable and long overdue. It is greatly to be hoped that regret over his uniting them in one sensational bargain will not blind the country to the vital national importance of the agreement as to bases and the high desirability of the sale of the destroyers.

There is no logical relationship between the two projects. The latter is merely an extension of the broad endeavor of this country to aid the allies through the sale of war material. The former belongs in a far different category. Every military expert has been urging the acquisition of bases in the Atlantic for months. We are confident that Congress and the Nation would have welcomed such purchases much sooner and approved them in such fashion as to avoid any possibility of criticism on constitutional grounds.

But the President has now, belatedly and dramatically, accomplished these two ends as parts of one bargain. Moreover, he has persuaded his Attorney General to submit an opinion sustaining the legality of both items. We could never sympathize with Mr. Jackson's doubts as to the sale of the destroyers, and we are glad that he has resolved them in favor of the Executive.

There is no question about the urgency of the menace which Nazi Germany and her associates present to this country—or Congress would not be voting money by the tens of billions and marshaling all other national energies to repel it. There is no question about the critical importance of developed offshore bases in any scheme of defense, no matter how many billions are voted. And there is no question whatever about the indissoluble link which now binds the United States to the fate of the British Isles and the Royal Navy.

There is no doubt that if Britain stands much of our vast military effort can be abandoned, but that if Britain should go down the chances of successfully defending this continent or this country, whatever our efforts, would be halved or quartered overnight. Not the least impressive and valuable aspect of the agreement is the accompanying pledge from Mr. Churchill "never to surrender or sink the British Fleet," doubly underlining the importance to the United States that Britain as a whole should survive.

The "isolationist" minority in Congress and outside of it will be heard, no doubt, in vociferous protest; it ought to be heard, and every argument it may advance deserves consideration. But it seems to us unthinkable that a comparatively small minority should be able to paralyze vital action by the methods of filibuster, division, and obstruction. The element of suddenness, drama, and Presidential dictation in the move is certain to arouse misgivings. But criticism of the manner of the achievement should not cause defeat of the solid gains achieved.

For the world has reached a point at which action is imperative to preserve the peace of the United States. These steps will not and cannot "put the country in the war." They are rather a kind of last chance for maintaining it at peace. It is incredible that the Nazis should respond with a declaration of war, thus in a hundred ways aggravating their difficulties while obtaining virtually no advantage they do not now have. But it is not incredible that this agreement, coming just at this moment when German prestige is already shaken by the delay in the attack on Britain, and lending in the 50 destroyers a very real material contribution to British victory, will so far tip the scales that a tolerable solution in Europe may yet be won and the United States spared the choice which Hitler has presented to every power he has confronted between surrender and the destruction of a great war.

[From the Washington Post of September 4, 1940]

BASES FOR DESTROYERS

In return for 50 over-age destroyers which Great Britain sorely needs at this time, the United States has secured the right to establish a chain of naval and air bases in British colonial areas in North America.

The transaction is rightly described by President Roosevelt as an "epochal and far-reaching act of preparation for continental defense in the face of great danger." Mr. Roosevelt regards it as "the most important action in the reinforcement of our national defense that has been taken since the Louisiana Purchase." He seems to forget the Panama Canal. But that does not minimize the significance of the step that has been taken.

The magnitude of the international emergency confronting this Nation and this hemisphere requires no elaboration at this time. It can be gaged by the vast and unprecedented sums which Congress has appropriated for the rapid building up of our armed forces. It is implicit in the circumstance that the United States is about to embark on a program of compulsory military service. It is the driving force behind increasing demands for speed and yet more speed in developing our armament industries.

Not since the days of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe has the United States faced greater peril outside our own borders. Now, as during the period of the Napoleonic Wars and the Holy Alliance, the situation calls for bold and courageous action. It is to President Roosevelt's credit that he has seen fit to take such action. Attorney General Jackson's opinion is not likely to be accepted as the final word on the technical legality of the transaction, but the results will doubtless win the approval of the great majority of Americans.

The desirability of the naval and air bases which the United States is now in a position to build on British soil in this hemisphere is beyond dispute. The prospective sites extend all the way from Newfoundland to British Guiana. When developed they will serve as an additional protective barrier for the Panama Canal. They will be of incalculable value in the defense of the entire Western Hemisphere.

A ring of protective bases in the Atlantic will make the invasion of North America by a European aggressor more difficult and far more costly than would otherwise be the case. Through their possession the range and effectiveness of the United States Fleet and air force will very greatly be increased. That fact is of particular importance to the Nation at a time when the contemplated additions to the Navy are still largely in the blueprint stage.

The transfer to Great Britain of 50 over-age destroyers is a small price to pay for the advantages we gain from this transaction. Nor can it be forgotten that to the extent that these destroyers enable Great Britain to continue the war and thus possibly avert a Nazi victory; their transfer serves our national interest. Looking at the transaction in its entirety, our defenses, as well as those of Great Britain, have been very substantially strengthened.

There is the risk, of course, that Hitler may regard the transfer of the obsolescent destroyers to Great Britain as a hostile act by the United States. But as long as Great Britain remains in the field that risk is small.

On the other hand, if Great Britain goes down, the peril to the United States and the entire Western Hemisphere will enormously increase. But even in that event this country now has the solemn and twice-repeated assurances of Premier Churchill that the "British Fleet would in no event be surrendered or sunk but would be sent overseas for the defense of other parts of the Empire."

Great emergencies call for courageous action. In the present emergency the two great English-speaking democracies, one fighting for its very existence, the other girding its loins for the defense of a hemisphere, have shown that they possess the requisite vigor, foresight, and determination to act boldly and promptly.

An Open Letter to Hon. James A. Farley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN L. SWEENEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

LETTER WRITTEN BY JOHN O'CONNOR, OF NEW YORK, FORMER CHAIRMAN OF THE RULES COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an open letter to Hon. James A. Farley from John O'Connor, of New York, former chairman of the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives. Mr. O'Connor's letter expresses my sentiments and, I am sure, the sentiments of thousands of friends and admirers of Jim Farley. During his entire service to the Nation as Postmaster General, James A. Farley measured up to the highest standard ever set by the head of the Post Office Department. As a member of the Committee on the Post Offices and Post Roads of the House of Representatives and in close touch with the personnel of the Post Office Department throughout the Nation, I know that officials and employees of the greatest agency of our Government idolized Postmaster General Farley. Because Jim Farley was humane and on the level with his fellowmen, I often throughout the country, characterized him as the greatest Postmaster General in our history. Under his administration the 40-hour week for employees was secured. Recognition of the legitimate demands of the substitutes was made possible. His official protest stopped the passage of furlough legislation. These and other scores of beneficial laws will remain as monuments to Jim Farley's interest in the welfare of the postal employees. I join with thousands of his friends in saying Godspeed to a noble character. While I differed with James A. Farley politically at times, like John O'Connor, I could not understand why one has to be loyal to anyone who doublecrosses or kicks you without cause. Members of Jim Farley's clan do not ordinarily take it laying down, and if there are any exceptions, it must be those whose forebears came from some part of the "ould sod" remote from the ancestral home of the O'Connors, the Sweeneys, and the Curleys. Get that new book going Jim, and let us have nothing but the truth, the whole truth, so help my party.

The letter follows:

AUGUST 31, 1940.

Hon. JAMES A. FARLEY,
Hotel Biltmore, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR JIM: On this day, when you are retiring from the President's Cabinet, in the high honor and esteem of the American people, permit me to congratulate you on, at last, unloading the tremendous mental burden you have borne for several years. What humiliation you have suffered, only you yourself know. It has been my privilege to personally know some of the causes of the mental turmoil you have been undergoing for years, but in the face of which you have been superbly patient, though suffering keenly.

Your release from this mental travail should permit you to throw back your broad shoulders still further, take several deep breaths and say, "Well, thank God, I'm at last out of there. I should have walked out years ago."

Let's go back about 10 years, to the time when you got into this annoying situation. You were Secretary of the New York State Democratic Committee, and the Honorable M. William Bray, later Lieutenant Governor of New York, until purged in 1938 by President Roosevelt, was chairman. Bill Bray had a mind of his own, something Mr. Roosevelt, then Governor, has never been able to tolerate at any time. So Bill had to go. But Bill was a Catholic, and it would not rest well politically if he were thrown out and some non-Catholic put in his place. So you were drafted.

The same situation arose when you quit as national chairman. Flynn, boss of the Bronx, was drafted. Not measuring up to your shoe tops as a leader, he filled the politico-ecclesiastical void. As a leader he is about as big as the Bronx River is a river—not to mention the mud.

In 1930 you started out to make Governor Roosevelt President of the United States. You did not have carfare and could not even afford to take a stenographer on your trips throughout the entire country. Tammany Hall and other Democratic leaders cautioned you to quit, that you were jeopardizing your own political future. But you stuck through it, despite the ridicule and abuse, and at Chicago in 1932 you were successful, in spite of the opposition of Tammany Hall, Hague, the Chicago crowd, McNutt, and so forth.

You will recall that then Hague, the Chicago crowd, and so forth, were publicly denouncing Mr. Roosevelt as "unfit to be President" and citing instances during his 4 years as Governor to prove that "he never kept his word" and always "double-crossed his closest friends."

You knew that Hopkins was referring to him as "a crooked politician, nominated on a corkscrew platform." A strange double turnabout is happening right now. Hopkins, the President's closest friend and roomer at the White House, is getting the same treatment you got. Hopkins does not want to leave the Cabinet. He is being pushed out for political expediency. "My friend!"

You knew that Berle was issuing communistic literature against your candidate, working with Knox and Stimson to defeat your idol.

You knew that Nathan Straus, now National Housing Administrator, was at Chicago, stamping his foot to "Stop Roosevelt."

You knew that the selection of JOHN N. GARNER for Vice President was against the wishes of Mr. Roosevelt, because all of us active there were well aware that the Governor had sent Judge Martin T. Manton to Chicago to prevail upon Mr. McAdoo to deliver the California delegation to Mr. Roosevelt in exchange for Mr. McAdoo's nomination as Vice President. And you knew that Judge Manton closed the agreement between California and New York in the same attitude that you were in at the White House on the day Flynn was drafted to succeed you. Patience was finally exhausted.

You recall how for years you had to make an appointment through one of his secretaries—no one of them a Democrat—before you could see the Chief Executive for a few minutes. Browder, Hillman, John L. Lewis, Stern, etc., could walk in unannounced.

You recall the President's New England campaign trip of 1936, on which I accompanied the President at his request, and that Gov. James M. Curley, of Massachusetts, an unsurpassed loyal friend of Mr. Roosevelt at Chicago, was running for United States Senator. You knew that Governor Curley was again being double-crossed by the Roosevelts and that "Jimmie" Roosevelt had called all the Democratic Congressmen to his house in Cambridge to order them to give Curley "the works." You also knew that on the night of Curley's defeat Jimmie said, "Well, we got rid of Curley. The next one we'll get rid of is Farley." Your reply to this was, "Oh, I know that's the way they feel, but I may beat them to it."

Like Caesar, you might well have said "Et tu Brute."

You know, as far back as 1938, when you were a logical candidate for President or Vice President, that day after day the President discussed the availability of candidates for those offices, to a total of about 13, without once mentioning your name. You were bravely amused at it, despite the White House sponsored digs in the Washington Merry-Go-Round that your handicap was that you were a Catholic.

You knew Ernest K. Lindley's newspaper story that the President had deprecated your chances of even being Vice President because you were a Catholic was true. Similar statements had been made to many others, including myself.

You know that the President had also said, "Jim Farley is a great guy, but the trouble with him is he tells the truth." That's what Senator GLASS had in mind when, at Chicago in 1940, he extolled you as "one man who never breaks his word." He could have quoted Pope's epistle to Mr. Addison:

> "Statesman, yet friend to truth! Of soul sincere,
> In action faithful, and in honor clear;
> Who broke no promise, served no private end,
> Who gained no title, and who lost no friend."

In 1938, you astounded me by stating that up to that time you had never been an overnight guest at the White House. If I did not know you as I do, and know you are incapable of stating an untruth, I would not have believed you, after 8 years of your devoted and unparalleled service to your idol. Even members of the Communist Youth Congress have slept there.

In all this, you were inspired by a very beautiful ideal. You expressed it when years ago, you said, "Most any day I may quit Washington, and, before I go, I'll have the satisfaction of telling several people, Hopkins, Ickes, etc., what I think of them, but one thing I'll never do—I'll never break with Frank Roosevelt after all these years."

Beautiful indeed, if it were reciprocated. But everybody knew it wasn't.

You became a candidate for President. You were a logical candidate in 1940. Early in 1939, President Roosevelt told you he would make a public statement that he would not be a candidate for a third term after Congress adjourned in the summer of that year. Everybody knows he did not. Then, he told you he would make the announcement after Congress convened on January 3, 1940. Everybody knows he did not do that either. From that time on you were never afforded the opportunity to discuss the matter with him, "face to face, across the table," until that Sunday at Hyde Park, just before the convention. As to what he told you then is clearly evidenced by your continuing to be a candidate up to and at the convention.

Some day—and soon—you should write another book of your experiences and reminiscences. Your diary will be an unequaled contribution to the literature of politics. Your first book, Behind the Ballots, was illuminative, but you pulled your punches. Your second one might well be titled "Behind the Scenes," now that you are foot-loose and a free man once more, in a land which used to be the home of the free. The public is entitled to know what went on daily "behind the scenes" of national political manipulation, and they are especially entitled to it from you because of the unusual high regard in which you are held throughout the length and breadth of this land, irrespective of creed or party.

I know how proud you are of your own loyalty in the fact of abject disloyalty. Loyalty has been uppermost in your code of life, despite the heartaches it has caused you and your family, and the let-down feeling you have now on going out. Some might say you had an exaggerated sense of loyalty, especially when you were well aware it was unilateral.

You could never bring yourself to say, like Emerson:

> "Goodbye, * * * I'm going home;
> Thou art not my friend; I am not thine."

Nor like Franklin, in his letter to William Strahan:

> "You and I were long friends;
> You are now my enemy, and I am yours."

May this rare and high ideal which you have so long nurtured, in pain, remain with you in your future ventures, and although you and I may differ as to the tongue belying the heart, or the Biblical admonition to "turn the other cheek"—the other fellow never did it—I need not assure you I am

Your affectionate friend,

JOHN O'CONNOR.

James A. Farley

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, August 29, 1940

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the unique career of James A. Farley is a phenomenon in American politics. This is the career of a man who, rising from the humble activities of a local political leader, reached the supreme pinnacle of political achievement by becoming both the State and national chairman of this body in the United States.

In the entire history of political parties no parallel can be found. The reason is obvious. It requires a different type of mentality to be a successful political leader in one's home town and still another type of mentality is required for political leadership of the State and Nation. James A. Farley was able to do both and to accomplish this miracle.

In addition to being a skilled and consummate statesman, James A. Farley was a successful businessman, and through his own efforts rose to leadership in business as well. The principal fact, however, which will be the outstanding achievement of James A. Farley's life will be his sponsorship of Franklin D. Roosevelt for the Presidency of the United States. It was James A. Farley who discovered the great talents of our President and who was able to carry forth his devotion and energy to the promotion of the election of our President in 1932 and in 1936. Farley and the President became thereafter inseparable companions and formed a team which was unique in history, and which gave the two administrations of our people a particular flavor of its own.

Farley represents the typical American who rises by his own efforts, achieves results by his own devotion to duty, and whose individualism is unmatched by any other people or nationality. It is only in the soil of America that a man of Farley's achievements could flourish and it is only in the soil of this country that a man like Farley can grow.

For generations Farley's achievements will be a tribute to the opportunities of America, and a beacon light to all those who love our traditions and our way of living.

I hope that the time will come when some gifted individual will take the pen into his hands and depict for the education of our young, and as a means of exemplifying the spirit of America, the career of James A. Farley.

James A. Farley is now concluding another milestone in his public career by relinquishing the Postmastership General of the United States. It was a unique career for Mr.

Farley, and he was able to give to this office not only his devotion as a public-spirited citizen, but also, which is more important, the energy of a businessman which was exemplified by his erection of many ornamental and beautiful structures for the post offices throughout the United States. These post offices will be forever a tribute to his ability and achievements. To use the words of a poet, his will be a fame expressed in granite and marble, and will be as imperishable as granite and marble can make it.

It is not only as a Democrat or statesman that James A. Farley has impressed himself upon the people of the United States. He has the love and admiration of every American, be he Democrat, Republican, or whatever political conviction he may follow. As a statesman, as a businessman, as a public official his fame and popularity will be forever enshrined in the hearts of the American people, and whatever his future may hold, he carries with him the best wishes of innumerable friends for his success and good fortune.

Our Army and Its Needs

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LAURENCE F. ARNOLD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

ARTICLE BY LAURENCE LANE ARNOLD

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article written by my son, Laurence Lane Arnold, a second lieutenant in the Reserve Corps, and who this year would have entered his senior year in Harvard Law School:

OUR ARMY AND ITS NEEDS

The events of the past few months have turned the minds of all thinking Americans to the state of our own national military preparedness. We have sat by our radios and newspaper racks and heard and read, many of us in amazement, of the quick defeat of France. We have witnessed the overwhelming defeat and collapse of a great French Army which only a year ago was deemed by military authorities the most thoroughly trained and best prepared of the armies of the world. We have seen the British Empire pushed suddenly into a corner from which even now it prepares with all energy to fight its way out. England itself is in great danger of being overrun by an invader, and we expect shortly to witness the some-time predicted Battle of England.

It is not the purpose of this modest article to analyze the causes of this surprising set-back to the nations we have come to regard, whether correctly or not, as our friends. That task is left to those more competent to deal with it; years may pass before the whole truth is known. But it is obvious that in part, at least, the defeat of France, the besieging of England at her own doors, have been due to the inability of the armies of those nations to cope with the new type of warfare that faced them in Norway, in Belgium, and in Flanders. Mechanized units, the panzer divisions, the use of vast numbers of tanks, bombing planes utilized in the attack with much greater effectiveness than the artillery that was formerly relied upon, have all been put together to form a new kind of army that can accomplish feats hitherto deemed impossible. No new weapons these, but a combination of known weapons which when combined with those two necessary military factors, thorough training and efficient use, has proven that the day of offensive combat is not gone. No longer can a nation hide behind defensive works, such as the Maginot line, and think itself safe. The new attack must be met with an attack of equal or greater destructiveness delivered by the same, or preferably better, weapons and machines. The old saying that "the best defense is a good offense" still holds true.

But now what of the United States? For years they have sat contented between the oceans, confident of the protection afforded by water and the British Fleet, which has served for sometime now, whether we realized it or not, as our Atlantic Fleet. Our own Navy has always served us well, and will do so again if called upon. But it is not enough. Without going into naval tactics or the possible movements of portions of our fleet to protect our entire hemisphere from attacks from the east and the west, let me simply reiterate what has been recently pointed out: If the Nazis succeed in defeating England and in gaining control of the ships now under command of the British Admiralty, an aggressive and potentially inimical nation will have not only a battle fleet considerably larger than our own but a shipbuilding capacity six times as great as ours. And then, who will say that the countries of Asia, to our west, will be forever friendly and peaceable toward us?

These are facts that have been pointed out many times of recent weeks. Their enumeration may bore the reader. But they have been repeated here to emphasize our own need of a strong army, equipped to fight almost anywhere in this hemisphere on the shortest possible notice, equipped to arrive at the scene of action quickly and, when there, to strike such a blow that any invading or enemy land force must either retreat from our shores or face annihilation.

Surely this need is present; surely most Americans see it. But have we such an army? It is contended that we have not, and I shall have to speak largely from personal experience as a member of the Officers' Reserve Corps to bear out the point. It is not the authoritative word of a military expert, granted, but the voice of one of the many who may be called to the defense of this country, who has spent some time in preparation for that defense, and who has every desire to see it carried out with the greatest possible effectiveness if the occasion arises.

Congress has recently appropriated sums of money sufficient, it is thought, to get us the latest types of weapons in sufficient numbers to equip in modern fashion a sizable United States Army. The weapons are ordered and will arrive, let us hope, in plenty of time. Certain it is that at present we lack enough of what might be called fundamental weapons. An experience of this summer at Camp Custer, where some of us were engaged in training the Citizens' Military Training Corps, is in point: One each of the new infantry howitzer weapons, the 81-millimeter mortar and the 37-millimeter gun, could not be obtained simply to show the trainees what they looked like; training in the use of these weapons for them was, of course, out of the question. But the need now is for men to be trained in the use of them. The day has passed when a war could be well fought by men who left their peacetime pursuits to pick up a rifle. The War Department, as an example, maintained for some time that 3 years were necessary to train a good infantry private. Now this must be whittled down, obviously, and much has been done to this end by simplifying the close-order drill and its movements, along with the movements into extended order, that is, actual combat formations. But counterbalancing this has come the need of machines of all kinds, and of men thoroughly trained to run them. Then, all this must be coordinated and synchronized; it must run like clockwork, as well as or better than the army of Europe that has lately wrought so much havoc. There must be no hitch when this army of ours goes into action, but to reach this end enough men to form a sizable army must be thoroughly grounded in the fundamentals of each arm (infantry, artillery, etc.), then when the whole thing is put together the wrinkles which will appear (for there have always been unexpected hitches in the operation of the simplest fighting forces), must be ironed out. All this must be accomplished before we actually fight.

Has it been done yet? Obviously not. Our Regular Army consists now of some 275,000. Even that force, incidentally, is underofficered at the present time. The National Guard can be counted on to augment that number considerably, but there we begin to run into units that are undertrained and underequipped. The two together will give us a force of about half a million, puny in numbers compared to the millions that were engaged in Europe last spring, that are ready to fight there now. England, for example, has two and a half million men under arms on the island now, and wonders if they are enough. And after we have added our National Guard we must draw mostly on young men who have had little or no military training at all. All these must be thrown together and made to work smoothly with weapons that have made the military one of the most difficult professions of modern times. And let us not forget that the stakes are high. The independence of our own country is one; but even if that is saved, there are lives to think of. It has been estimated that our A. E. F. of the last war, for all its bravery and energy, lost a third of its casualties because of inadequate training; this, of course, was the fault of no one in particular but due simply to lack of time to prepare.

And what of the officers, who will play an important part in this defense? The War Department must rely to a considerable extent on the Officers' Reserve Corps for these. Now, that corps is composed of men engaged in various civilian occupations, but who have been trained either by college R. O. T. C. units or by four summers' attendance at C. M. T. C. camps. A few members of the corps are veterans of the last war. In all justification, it must be said of them that they give generously of their time. During the winter they spend many nights studying or meeting together to hear a lecture on some military subject. In the summer they spend 2 to 4 weeks at a camp on active duty. Some I have met this summer were engaged during the past year in maneuvers with the Regular Army in South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana. One whom I know has taken the pains to attend the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga., and has come out a crack officer. There are good men in the corps and some not so good, who must be weeded out before our Army goes into action. But, be they good or not, their training has not been sufficient. Texts in the use of the latest-type weapons are not too available. The War Department has not made it altogether clear to us how we will combat the new attack which is called a "blitzkrieg." Speaking for myself, I might say that it has not been necessary that I learn a thing new in the last 6 years. We are prepared, in short, to fight a war of 1914–18 vintage, and that not too well, for most of us infantry officers do not know whether we will command rifle, machine-gun, howitzer, or tank units, all of them infantry weapons, and each requiring some degree of specialized knowledge. Indeed, one lieutenant I know who was assigned to a light-tank outfit admitted he had never seen the inside of one.

Now who is to blame? We can hardly lay the fault at the door of the War Department or our General Staff. Appropriations of money have been meager in years gone by; new weapons could not be bought in sufficient quantities to equip, until recently, even the small Regular Army. Hence, the weapons could not be tried out in vast scale maneuvers to develop their weaknesses and strengths, to find out the best means of employing them and of defending against them when used by others. Equipment, men, and experimentation have all been limited by lack of funds. The Army was for many years regarded as an expensive luxury, to be done away with if possible, and its most effective use was often thought to be in parades. Clearly, an undernourished child that has been allowed to show himself in a Sunday suit now and then cannot suddenly step forth a shining knight clad in impervious armor and prepared to defend us from any attacker.

Nor has the fault been that of Congress or of any administration. The government of any democratic nation can do no more than reflect and carry out the will of its people. And the attitude of our people has been one of general apathy toward their Army. Let us all realize that fact. The fault lies, then, with all of us, but the time for mutual recrimination has passed. Let us not look back but forward; it is a time that calls for action. The Army needs men and equipment as soon as it can possibly get them. It needs the weapons to fight with, the men to be trained in their use, and it needs both of them to develop the most modern type of tactics possible, to give us an army with striking power that is proven by actual physical practice and experimentation—not worked out on paper alone—striking power that will protect us from any form of aggression whatsoever. And we must have all this now, for it can't be put together and smoothed of wrinkles in a day or a month. A year may be none too long.

The Shipbuilding Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL VINSON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

LETTER FROM HON. JAMES FORRESTAL, UNDER SECRETARY OF THE NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I recently submitted for the RECORD a complete list of contracts entered into by the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department in connection with the Shore Establishment program of the Navy.

I am attaching herewith a letter from Hon. James Forrestal, Under Secretary of the Navy, which contains similar information in connection with the shipbuilding program which is now under way.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., September 3, 1940.

Hon. CARL VINSON,
Chairman, House Naval Affairs Committee,
House Office Building.

MY DEAR MR. VINSON: I am enclosing herewith for your information a tabulation of awards made to private contractors and to navy yards for the construction of naval vessels and their propelling machinery since January 1, 1940.

There is also included a list of tentative "ceilings" for special facility authorizations at the various plants.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL,
Under Secretary of the Navy.

Private contract awards

CONSTRUCTION

Name and type of ship	Contractor	Basis of contract	Cost	Profit
Aircraft carriers:
Essex, CV9	Newport News Ship Building & Dry Dock Co.	Negotiated price	$40,170,700	$3,491,300
Bon Homme Richard, CV10	do	do	40,170,700	3,491,300
Intrepid, CV11	do	do	40,170,700	3,491,300
Heavy cruisers:
Baltimore, CA68	Bethlehem Steel Co. (Quincy).	Negotiated price	$21,746,600	$1,871,400
Boston, CA69	do	do	21,746,600	1,871,400
Pittsburgh, CA70	do	do	21,746,600	1,871,400
St. Paul, CA71	do	do	21,746,600	1,871,400
Light cruisers:
Cleveland, CL55	New York Shipbuilding Corporation.	Competitive bid	17,990,000
Columbia, CL56	do	do	17,990,000
Montpelier, CL57	do	do	17,580,000
Denver, CL58	do	do	17,580,000
Amsterdam, CL59	do	Negotiated price	17,164,500	1,493,300
Santa Fe, CL60	do	do	17,164,500	1,493,300
Tallahassee, CL62	do	do	17,164,500	1,493,300
Birmingham, CL62	Newport News Ship Building & Dry Dock Co.	do	17,730,000	1,542,500
Mobile, CL63	do	do	17,730,000	1,542,500
Flint, CL64	Bethlehem Steel Co. (Quincy).	do	17,101,400	1,471,600
Pasadena, CL65	do	do	17,101,400	1,471,600
Springfield, CL66	do	do	17,101,400	1,471,600
Topeka, CL67	do	do	17,101,400	1,471,600
Destroyers (2,100 tons):
Fletcher, DD445	Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.	Negotiated price	6,586,700	573,000
Radford, DD446	do	do	6,586,700	573,000
Jenkins, DD447	do	do	6,586,700	573,000
La Vallette, DD448	do	do	6,586,700	573,000
Nicholas, DD449	Bath Iron Works Corporation.	do	6,267,900	545,300
O'Bannon, DD450	do	do	6,267,900	545,300
Chevalier, DD451	do	do	6,267,900	545,300
Percival,[1] DD452	Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.	do	7,240,715	[2] 545,000
Saufley, DD465	do	do	6,586,700	573,000
Waller, DD466	do	do	6,586,700	573,000
Strong, DD467	Bath Iron Works Corporation.	do	6,267,900	545,300
Taylor, DD468	do	do	6,267,900	545,300
De Haven, DD469	do	do	6,267,900	545,300
Bache, DD470	Bethlehem Steel Co. (Staten Island).	do	6,842,200	588,800
Beale, DD471	do	do	6,842,200	588,800
Watson,[1] DD482	Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co.	do	7,240,715	[2] 545,000
Destroyers (1,700 tons):
Bristol, DD453	do	Competitive bid	5,277,000
Ellyson, DD454	do	do	5,277,000
Hambleton, DD455	do	Negotiated price	4,863,800	413,200
Rodman, DD456	do	do	4,863,800	413,200
Emmons, DD457	Bath Iron Works Corporation.	Competitive bid	4,898,000
Macomb, DD458	do	do	4,898,000
Laffey, DD459	Bethlehem Steel Co. (San Francisco).	Negotiated price	5,503,400	473,600
Woodworth, DD460	do	do	5,503,400	473,600
Submarines:
Gato, SS212	Electric Boat Co.	Competitive bid	2,957,000
Greenling, SS213	do	do	2,957,000
Grouper, SS214	do	do	2,957,000
Growler, SS215	do	Negotiated price	2,571,300	223,700
Grunion, SS216	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Guardfish, SS217	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Albacore, SS218	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Amberjack, SS219	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Barb, SS220	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Blackfish, SS221	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Bluefish, SS222	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Bonefish, SS223	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Cod, SS224	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Cero, SS225	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Corvina, SS226	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Darter, SS227	do	do	2,571,300	223,700
Seaplane tender (large):
Currituck, AV7	New York Shipbuilding Corporation.	do	13,019,800	1,240,700

Private contract awards—Continued

[1] Special type.
[2] Cost plus a fixed fee, all others base price plus 8.7 percent profit.

Private contract awards

PROPELLING MACHINERY

Type of vessel	Contractor	Basis of contract	Cost	Profit
For SS212-214	General Motors Corporation, Cleveland Diesel Engine Division.	Competitive bid	$2,317,857
For SS215-227	do	Negotiated price	8,545,700	-$814,300

Private contract awards—Continued

Type of vessel	Contractor	Basis of contract	Cost	Profit
For SS228-230	Fairbanks, Morse & Co.	Competitive bid	$2,850,461
For SS231-235	do	Negotiated price	3,971,550	$378,450
For SS236-239	Hooven, Owens, Rentschler Co.	do	3,583,100	341,421
Reconditioning SS167, SS168, and SM1	General Motors Corporation, Cleveland Diesel Engine Division.	Competitive bid	2,056,450
For AM57	Fairbanks, Morse & Co.	Negotiated price	328,700	31,300
For AS12	General Motors Corporation, Cleveland Diesel Engine Division.	Competitive bid	1,358,169
For AVP21 and 22	Fairbanks, Morse & Co.	do	1,435,350

11-percent program

SPECIAL FACILITIES—TENTATIVE CEILINGS

	Ceiling
New York Shipbuilding Corporation	$3,000,000
Bath Iron Works Corporation	1,400,000
Bethlehem Steel Co.:
Fore River plant	3,400,000
Staten Island	1,250,000
Union Iron Works	1,450,000
Electric Boat Co	1,500,000
Federal Shipbuilding and Drydock Co	2,000,000
Newport News Ship Building and Dry Dock Co	7,000,000
Total	21,000,000

Navy yard awards

CONSTRUCTION

Type and name of ships	Builder	Basis of contract	Cost
Battleships:
Missouri, BB63	Navy yard, New York	Direct award	$50,700,000
Wisconsin, BB64	Navy yard, Philadelphia	do	50,700,000
Aircraft carriers:
Kearsarge, CV12	Navy yard, Norfolk [1]	do	35,400,000
Destroyers, 2,100 tons:
Guest, DD472	Navy yard, Boston	do	5,938,900
Bennett, DD473	do	do	5,938,900
Fullam, DD474	do	do	5,938,900
Hudson, DD475	do	do	5,938,900
Hutchins, DD476	do	do	5,938,900
Pringle, DD477	Navy yard, Charleston	do	5,938,900
Stanly, DD478	do	do	5,938,900
Stevens, DD479	do	do	5,938,900
Halford, DD480	Navy yard, Puget Sound	do	5,938,900
Leutze, DD481	do	do	5,938,900
Destroyers, 1,700-ton:
Forrest, DD461	Navy yard, Boston	do	5,034,700
Fitch, DD462	do	do	5,034,700
Corry, DD463	Navy yard, Charleston	do	5,034,700
Hobson, DD464	do	do	5,034,700
Submarines:
Drum, SS228	Navy yard, Portsmouth	do	3,256,000
Flying Fish, SS229	do	do	3,256,000
Finback, SS230	do	do	3,256,000
Haddock, SS231	do	do	3,256,000
Halibut, SS232	do	do	3,256,000
Herring, SS233	do	do	3,256,000
Kingfish, SS234	do	do	3,256,000
Shad, SS235	do	do	3,256,000
Silversides, SS236	Navy yard, Mare Island	do	3,256,000
Trigger, SS237	do	do	3,256,000
Wahoo, SS238	do	do	3,256,000
Whale, SS239	do	do	3,256,000
Submarine tender: Sperry, AS12	do	do	10,540,000
Seaplane tenders (small):
Humboldt, AVP21	Navy yard, Boston	do	3,050,000
Matagorda, AVP22	do	do	3,050,000
Minesweeper: Auk, AM51	Navy yard, Norfolk	do	1,324,000

[1] Will probably be reassigned to a private shipyard.

Fears for Democracy

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. SMITH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

LETTER PUBLISHED IN THE WASHINGTON POST

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter published recently in the Washington Post:

[From the Washington Post of August 31, 1940]

FEARS FOR DEMOCRACY

TO THE EDITOR OF THE POST:

SIR: "I never * * * uttered a word indicating the opinion that the supreme authority in a State ought to be entrusted to the majority of citizens * * * in other words, to the poorest and most ignorant part of society. I have long been convinced that institutions, purely democratic, must, sooner or later, destroy liberty, or civilization, or both."

The foregoing quotation might be from a source sympathetic to the nations under dictatorship rule, but it is from the well-known letter written in London, on May 23, 1857, by Lord Macaulay to Mr. Randall, of New York.

At this time, the quotation has a double significance to us. It calls our attention to the plight of democracy in Europe and to the most momentous test of democracy in the United States which our Government has ever encountered. Will it withstand the onslaught? Do the people grasp the influences which are attacking the foundation of democracy in the United States?

The most insidious and potent of these influences is the destruction of a sense of fidelity to the public trust of preserving the Treasury and solvency of the Federal Government. We pretend to heed the craving of the vast majority of our people to keep out of the European war, yet we propose to draft millions of our men, and we vote billions of our credit beyond all rational defensive bounds.

We subordinate the essential quality, which must be produced by physical and mental training, to a hysterical display of numbers and dollars. We play politics. We need promptly, within the bounds of time required for training, a highly trained, defensive army of manageable numbers; but every step beyond that requirement tends to defeat our needs and further violate the trust of preserving our solvency.

The mass idea must unceasingly be subordinated to the quality idea. Besides the disruption of our normal life, the attempt to draft and train too large an army will defeat or impair the effective training of the army which we really need.

It is unfortunate that this issue should be blended with the more domestic issue in our democracy of a third term in our Presidential office, which deserves the entire attention of our people. We would vote overwhelmingly against any proposal to subvert our democracy, by direct action, but that is not the way we may expect it to be assailed. What we have to fear is indirect, gradual destruction.

That is the kind of destruction of which Macaulay warned. We are not ready to despair of democracy, but there is enough in the situation abroad and at home to cause us concern and to arouse a craving to see the democratic zone clarified and purified by a breath of fresh air.

GEORGE MASON DILLARD.

SCOTTSVILLE, VA., August 27.

Compulsory Military Service

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. MILLER

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

ARTICLE BY MARK SULLIVAN

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, on August 7, while discussing certain provisions of the Burke-Wadsworth bill I pointed out that, in my humble opinion, the proponents of this bill made the mistake of trying to solve two separate problems in one piece of legislation in that they provided for the conscription of men for regular military service at the same time they were setting up machinery for the training of reserves which may or may not be needed in the future.

In the article of Mr. Mark Sullivan, well-known columnist, which appeared in the Hartford Daily Courant of September 3, this same fact is pointed out. I insert Mr. Sullivan's article in the RECORD at this point, hoping that his expression of opinion might influence Members of the House to a greater degree than they would be influenced by any remarks I might make.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Daily Courant of September 3, 1940]

CONSCRIPTION BILL PURPOSE IS CONFUSED—TWO DIFFERENT PRINCIPLES INVOLVED; TRAINING SEEN ADVISABLE, SERVICE QUESTIONABLE

(By Mark Sullivan)

WASHINGTON, September 2.—In the House, the administration leaders intend to limit debate on the conscription bill. It is argued that there has already been 14 days of debate in the Senate. Even if length of time were the measure of adequacy of discussion, 14 days would not necessarily be enough for a measure which involves departure from a national tradition, and carries momentous implications. But the true test of adequacy of debate is not the time consumed. It is whether the country has become fully informed.

At the very root of the pending bill is a condition about which the country is not fully informed. Not only the country. The condition is not clearly grasped by Congress itself.

The bill mingles two purposes. One purpose is: Immediate increase in the Army, for immediate defense of the country, against possible immediate emergency. The other purpose is long-term organization of the military arm of the country, the permanent basis for recruiting it. This permanent purpose exists in the bill, regardless of the fact that the bill is given a time limit of 5 years.

TWO DIFFERENT PURPOSES

With these two different purposes go two different principles. One principle has to do with compulsion of young men for training. The other principle has to do with compulsion of young men for service, for actual induction into the Army. The bill says training and service. Service is different from training, and much more than training.

There is a view which says that the two different purposes will be better served by two different processes. This view holds that the Regular Army should be built up to whatever is to be its permanent strength, by the ordinary process.

But back of the Regular Army, there must be a reservoir of trained men, from which can be drawn the additions that may be made necessary by emergency.

In the conscription bill as it now stands, the two different purposes and two different principles are inextricably confused. Separation of them would make for clarity and public understanding. There are additional needs for illumination.

One far-reaching, highly controversial feature of the bill was brought forward only a few hours before the Senate passed it. This is the amendment calling for the so-called conscription of industry.

Conscription of industry excites alarm now, because there is abroad in the world a movement for conscription of industry, not merely for the temporary purpose of war, but for the permanent purpose of government ownership of industry, for the purpose of totalitarian government.

Naval Aircraft Procurement Program

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL VINSON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

MEMORANDUM FROM ADMIRAL JOHN H. TOWERS, CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I asked the Navy Department to prepare a complete statement showing the progress being made with reference to the procurement of aircraft, and am attaching hereto a memorandum which I have received from Admiral John H. Towers, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, concerning the matter.

This information is complete and up to date as of September 3, 1940:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS,
Washington, September 3, 1940.

MEMORANDUM

Subject: Naval aircraft procurement programs, fiscal years 1940 and 1941—Data on.

Enclosure: (A) One list of airplanes and engines on order on September 3, 1940.

1. The amounts of cash and contract authorizations already appropriated for the fiscal year 1941 for new construction of aircraft are:

Cash	$101,088,562.00
Contract authorization	125,000,000.00
Total	226,088,562.00

2. Contracts for airplanes and engines have been awarded under these funds up to and including September 3, 1940, as follows:

1941 cash

AIRPLANES

Quantity	Model	Contractor	Amount (original contract price)
201	NP-1	Spartan	$1,859,880.80
509	N2S-1	Stearman	3,779,628.00
500	N3N-3	Naval Aircraft Factory	5,054,292.00
127 [1]	PBY-5	Consolidated	$13,328,841.60
10	JRF-1	Grumman	694,700.00
243	F4F-4	do	7,269,280.28
1	R50-1	Lockheed	114,235.97
100	NR-1	Ryan	1,110,264.00
Total			33,202,122.65

ENGINES

500	R-670	Continental	$1,442,275.00
433	R-680	Lycoming	1,527,084.80
400	V-770-6	Ranger	5,437,960.00
150	R-760	Wright	562,951.00
532	R-760	Naval Aircraft Factory	2,548,240.00
Total			11,518,510.80

[1] 127 PBY-5 airplanes ordered under 1940 contract authorization and charged to 1941 cash

3. The total amounts of cash and contract authorizations appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 were:

Cash	$69,419,000
Contract authorization	20,000,000
Total	89,419,000

4. Contracts for airplanes and engines were awarded under these 1940 funds as follows:

1940 cash "Aviation Navy" subhead 1 expenditures for planes and engines

I. AIRPLANES

Quantity	Model	Contractor	Amount (original contract price)
36	SNJ-2	North American	$676,400.00
50	N3N-3	Naval Aircraft Factory	595,250.00
1	XF4F-4	Gruman	2,629,260.00
2	XF4F-5
78	F4F-3
35	SBC-4	Curtiss	1,121,895.70
5	R3D-1, 2	Douglas	529,200.60
1	XR5O-1	Lockheed	117,668.05
3	GB-1	Beech Aircraft	66,554.41
73	PBY-5	Consolidated	6,687,858.00
57	SB2U-3	Vought-Sikorsky	1,998,420.00
100	N3N-3	Naval Aircraft Factory	1,109,500.00
158	OS2U-2	Vought-Sikorsky	3,928,352.65
87	SBD-2	Douglas	2,612,088.00
1	JO-2	Lockheed	58,286.75
25	SNJ-2	North American	458,104.56
5	JRB-1	Beech Aircraft	258,221.31
Total			22,847,060.03

II. ENGINES

48	R-1340-36 (SNJ-2)	Pratt & Whitney	$349,927.60
72	R-1830-76 (F4F-3)	do	1,448,977.60
36	R-1830-76 (F4F-3)	do	696,881.60
76	R-1535-2 (SB2U-3)	do	929,074.77
4	R-985-48 (GB-1)	do	20,563.40
560	R-1830-82 (PBY-5)	do	7,928,136.80
228	R-985-50 (OS2U-2, JRB-1, GB-1).	do	1,473,463.29
33	R-1340-36 (SNJ-2)	do	245,569.02
47	R-1820-34 (SBC-4)	Wright	505,186.88
116	R-1820-32 (SBD-2)	do	1,236,866.12
7	R-1820-44 (R3D spares)	do	95,135.84
2	XR-2600-8 (XSB2A-1)	do	36,304.80
1	XR-2600-10 (XTBF-1)	do	20,618.60
133	R-760-8 (N3N-3)	Naval Aircraft Factory	718,200.00
Total			15,704,906.32

5. A complete list of airplanes and engines on order for the Navy at this time is attached, marked "Enclosure (A)." This includes all airplanes and engines ordered and undelivered as of September 3, 1940. It also shows the delivery schedules of 1940 and 1941 contracts, and the deliveries which have been made under these contracts up to August 31, 1940.

6. Agreements preparatory to contracts have been reached with contractors as follows:

Pratt and Whitney Aircraft Division, United Aircraft Corporation, 17,000 engines.

Hamilton-Standard Propellers Division, United Aircraft Corporation, 27,000 propellers.

Vought-Sikorsky Division, United Aircraft Corporation, 1,006 observation-scout airplanes.

Brewster Aeronautical Corporation, 411 scout-bomber airplanes.

Brewster Aeronautical Corporation, 108 fighting airplanes.

Grumman Aircraft Engineering Co., 254 fighting airplanes.

Grumman Aircraft Engineering Co., 286 torpedo-bomber airplanes.

Grumman Aircraft Engineering Co., 144 utility airplanes.
Edo Aircraft Corporation, 1,362 float-type landing gears.
Douglas Aircraft Corporation, 252 scout-bomber airplanes.
Curtiss Aeroplane Division, Curtiss-Wright Corporation, 300 scout-observation airplanes.
Curtiss Aeroplane Division, Curtiss-Wright Corporation, 150 advanced training airplanes.

J. H. TOWERS,
Rear Admiral, U. S. N., Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

Status of airplanes ordered, fiscal year 1940

Model	Contractor	Contract date	Number on order	Number undelivered
F4F-3	Grumman (2 in September 1940, subsequent deliveries contingent on receipt of engines).	Aug. 8, 1939	81	77
GB-1	Beech Aircraft	Sept. 1, 1939	3	0
JO-2	Lockheed	Mar. 26, 1940	1	0
JRB-1	Beech Aircraft (1 in September 1940, 1 in October, 2 in November, 1 in December).	June 12, 1940	5	5
N3N-3	Naval Aircraft Factory (remainder indefinite, pending delivery of oleo struts).	Sept. 19, 1939	100	62
N3N-3	Naval Aircraft Factory (16 in December 1940, 30 in January 1941, 30 in February, 30 in March, 30 in April, 40 in May, 40 in June, then 50 per month until completion of contract).	June 12, 1940	500	500
OS2U-2	Vought-Sikorsky (option exercised) (3 in October 1940, 22 in November, 24 in December, 34 in January 1941, 38 in February, 37 in March).	Dec. 4, 1939 June 1, 1940	100 58	100 58
PBY-5	Consolidated (1 in September 1940, 2 in October, 4 in November, 7 in December, 22 in January 1941, 12 in February, 12 in March, 14 in April, 16 in May, 16 in June, 16 in July, 18 in August, 20 in September, 40 in October).	Dec. 20, 1939	200	200
R3D-1 and 2	Douglas (4 in September 1940).	Sept. 5, 1939	6	4
SBC-4	Curtiss	Aug. 13, 1939	35	0
SBD-2	Douglas (exercise of option) (17 in November 1940, then 21 per month until completion of contract).	Nov. 15, 1940	87	87
SB2U-3	Vought-Sikorsky (1 in September 1940, 4 in November, 13 in December, then 15 per month until completion of contract).	Sept. 25, 1939	57	57
SNJ-2	North American	Sept. 28, 1939	36	0
SNJ-2	North American (6 in November 1940, 6 in December, 6 in January 1941; 7 in February).	June 21, 1940	25	25
XPBB-1	Boeing (April 1942)	June 29, 1940	1	1
XPB2M-1	Martin (June 1941)	Aug. 23, 1939	1	1
XR50-1	Lockheed	Nov. 13, 1939	1	0
XTBF-1	Grumman (2 in March 1941)	Apr. 8, 1940	2	2
XTBU-1	Vought-Sikorsky (March 1941).	Apr. 22, 1940	1	1
Total			1,300	1,180

Status of engines ordered, fiscal year 1940

Model	Contractor	Contract date	Number on order	Number undelivered
R-760-8	Naval Aircraft Factory (5 in September 1940, 25 in October, 26 in November, 26 in December, 21 in January 1941).	Sept. 20, 1939	133	133
R-760-8	Naval Aircraft Factory (40 in April 1941, 40 in May, 40 in June, 40 in July, then 50 per month).	June 12, 1940	532	532
V-770-6	Ranger (3 by Dec. 15, 1940; 75 additional by June 1941; 110 additional by September; 120 additional by December; remainder 20 per month).	June 20, 1940	403	403
R-985-48, P&W	Beech	Sept. 1, 1939	3	0
R-985-48	Pratt & Whitney	Oct. 3, 1939	4	0

Status of engines ordered, fiscal year 1940—Continued

Model	Contractor	Contract date	Number on order	Number undelivered
R-985-50	Pratt & Whitney (57 in September 1940, 33 in October, 10 in December, 20 in January 1941, 25 in February, 25 in March, 12 in April).	Dec. 4, 1939	228	182
R-985-50, P&W	Lockheed	Mar. 26, 1940	2	0
R-1340-36	Pratt & Whitney	Sept. 30, 1939	48	0
R-1340-36	Pratt & Whitney (10 by Oct. 31, 1940, 15 by Nov. 30, 8 by Dec. 31).	Apr. 8, 1940	33	33
R-1535-2	Pratt & Whitney (39 in September 1940, 9 in November).	Sept. 11, 1939	76	48
R-1820-30	Wright	July 11, 1939	43	0
R-1820-32	Wright (42 in September 1940, 20 in October, 10 in November, 16 in December).	July 26, 1939	144	88
R-1820-38	Wright	do	15	0
R-1820-40	Wright (4 in October 1940, 2 in November).	do	25	6
R-1820-40	Wright (5 in August, 6 in September, 1 in October, 3 in November, 8 in December 1940).	do	47	23
R-1820-44	Douglas (8 in September 1940).	Sept. 5, 1939	12	8
XR-1820-46	Wright (September 1940)	June 13, 1940	1	1
XR-1820-48	do	Apr. 15, 1940	1	1
GR-1820-G102A	Lockheed	Nov. 13, 1939	2	0
XR-1830-74	Pratt & Whitney (1 in January 1941, 3 additional by April 1941).	June 29, 1940	4	4
R-1830-76	Pratt & Whitney (4 in October 1940, 24 in November, 8 in December).	Apr. 1, 1940	36	36
R-1830-82	Pratt & Whitney (26 by Sept. 15, 1940; 18 additional by Sept. 30; 24 in October; 33 in November; 38 in December; 40 in January 1941; 40 in February; 44 in March; 50 in April; 50 in May; 50 in June; then 10 per month until completion of contract).	Jan. 2, 1940	560	526
R-2600-10 Wright	Grumman (2 in March 1941)	Apr. 8, 1940	2	2
R-2800-6 P. & W	Vought-Sikorsky (March 1941).	Apr. 22, 1940	1	1
XR-2800-6	Pratt & Whitney (December 1940).	June 13, 1940	1	1
XR-3350-8 XR-3350-10 Wright	Boeing (April 1942)	June 29, 1940	2	2
XR-3350-10	Wright (February 1941)	do	1	1
Total			2,359	2,031

Status of airplanes ordered, fiscal year 1941

Model	Contractor	Contract date	Number on order	Number undelivered
F4F-4	Grumman (1 in December 1940, 81 additional by August 1941, 80 additional by November 1941, 81 additional by February 1942).	Aug. 5, 1940	243	243
JRF-1	Grumman (1 in October 1940, 2 in November, 3 in December, remainder by February 1941).	Aug. 3, 1940	10	10
NP-1	Spartan (1 in December 1940, 3 in January 1941, 5 in February, 10 in March, 16 in April, 19 in May, then 20 per month until completion of contract).	July 10, 1940	201	201
NR-1	Ryan (15 per month starting December 1940, until completion of contract).	Aug. 19, 1940	100	100
N2S-1	Stearman (20 in September 1940, 40 in October, 65 in November, 80 in December, 50 in January 1941, 45 in February, then 40 per month until completion of contract).	July 1, 1940	500	[1] 500
R50-1	Lockheed	Aug. 1, 1940	1	1
Total			1,055	1,055

[1] Option for additional 100 not yet formally stated.

Status of engines ordered, fiscal year 1941

Model	Contractor	Contract date	Number on order	Number undelivered
R-670-4	Continental (60 in September 1940, 65 in October, 80 in November, 60 in December, 60 in January 1941, 40 in February, 40 in March, 40 in April, 40 in May, 15 in June).	July 1, 1940	500	[1] 500
R-680-8	Lycoming (5 in November 1940, 25 in December, then 25 per month until completion of contract).	do	433	433
R-760-8	Wright (8 in December 1940, 25 in January 1941, then 30 per month until completion of contract).	July 8, 1940	150	138
B-5 (Kinner)	Ryan (15 per month starting December 1940, until completion of contract).	Aug. 19, 1940	100	100
Total			1,183	1,171

[1] Option for additional 133 not yet formally stated.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS

Total number of airplanes on order and undelivered Sept. 3, 1940

F2A-2	43
F4F's	320
JRB-1	5
JRF-1	10
N3N-3	562
NP-1	201
NR-1	100
N2S-1	[1] 600
OS2U-1	42
OS2U-2	158
PBM-1	20
PBY-5	200
PB2Y-2	6
R3D-2	4
R5O-1	1
SBD's	137
SBN-1	30
SB2U-3	57
SNJ-2	25
XF5F-1	1
XFL-1	1
XF4U-1	1
XN5N-1	1
XPBB-1	1
XPB2M-1	1
XPBM-2	1
XSB2A-1	1
XSB2C-1	1
XTBF-1	2
XTBU-1	1
Total	2,533

[1] Exercise of option for 100 additional requested but not yet formally stated.

Total number engines on order and undelivered Sept. 3, 1940

R-670-4	[1] 633
R-680-8	433
XV-715-2	1
R-760-6	3
R-760-8	803
V-770-6	403
R-985-50	182
R-1340-36	33
XR-1400-2	1
R-1535-2	48
XR-1740-2	1
R-1820-32	88
R-1820-40	29
R-1820-44	8
XR-1820-46	1
XR-1820-48	1
XR-1830-74	4
R-1830-76	105
R-1830-78	28
R-1830-82	526
XR-2600-8	2
R-2600-10	2
R-2800-4	1
XR-2800-4	1
R-2800-6	1
XR-2800-6	1
XR-3350-4	5
XR-3350-8	1
XR-3350-10	2
B-5 (Kinner)	100
Total	3,447

[1] Exercise of option for 133 additional requested but not yet formally stated.

Renewal of Visas of Executives of the Bata Shoe Co.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS
OF MASSACHUSETTS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 4, 1940

LETTER FROM LEO GOODMAN, OF UNITED SHOE WORKERS OF AMERICA TO ATTORNEY GENERAL ROBERT JACKSON

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from Leo Goodman, research director, United Shoe Workers of America, C. I. O.:

AUGUST 26, 1940.

Mr. ROBERT JACKSON,
Attorney General of the United States, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am informed there is pending before your Department for your consideration a petition for the renewal of visas for specified executives of the Bata Shoe Co., in connection with the operation of their plant at Belcamp, Md.

In the recent past I have presented officials of your Department certain materials which indicate a definite connection between this company and the German economic war machine.

For your further information, I am enclosing copies of two documents which show the extent to which this company's officials will go to misrepresent the true facts regarding their affiliations.

Enclosure marked No. 1 is a capy of the amendment to the British statutory list (No. 854, issued June 1, 1940), which lists the affiliates of the Bata Shoe Co., which have been determined to come under the restraints of the British trading with the enemy act, 1939.

I call your special attention to the listing of Jan Bata, himself, under the country of Brazil, at which place he was located at the time the list was prepared. Mr. Bata is now here in Belcamp, I am informed, and is seeking an extension of his entry permit as a visitor on business.

I also call your attention to the fact that the Bata Shoe Co., Inc., which operates the plant at Belcamp, Md., is included on the blacklist both under entries for the countries of Haiti and Panama. This New York corporation, I am informed, is owned by three parties as follows:

1. Jan Bata.
2. Leader, A. G., of St. Moritz, Switzerland.
3. Trans-Oceanic Co., Luxembourg, Europe.

In addition to the listing of Jan Bata on the attached blacklist, you will find in the listing under Switzerland:

Leader, A. G., Aronstrasse, St. Moritz.

Thus two of the three owners are listed on this blacklist. The third final share in ownership is controlled by Trans-Oceanic Co., of Luxembourg, which is now part of Germany.

Enclosure No. 2 is a copy of press release issued by the Bata Shce Co., June 20, 1940, through their Washington propaganda office, 1055 Earle Building. This statement, issued to clarify press dispatches regarding the enemy blacklist, states that "none of this (blacklist) has anything to do with the Bata plant at Belcamp, Md., which is an all-American company, or with the Bata plants in several South American countries and in Haiti, which operate as independent units in the country in which they are situated."

I call your attention to the fact that the Haiti plant is specifically included on the so-called blacklist and is operated by the Bata Shoe Co., Inc., which also operates the Belcamp plant.

I also call your attention to the fact that while the press release states plants in South America were not included, the blacklist contains listings of Bata subsidiaries in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Haiti, Panama, and Peru.

In view of the constant misrepresentation of the facts by agents of this company and the fraud practiced by this company on the several Government agencies with which it has had official contact, I urge that the Immigration Service of the Department of Justice should cancel forthwith the various visas and extensions which have been secured through fraud and further urge that all pending and future applications for extension be denied.

Respectfully yours,

LEO GOODMAN,
Research Director, United Shoe Workers of America, C. I. O.

Why I Am for Conscription

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1940

RADIO ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, JR., OF VIRGINIA

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me on why I am for conscription over the National Broadcasting Co. station, Washington, D. C., Friday, August 30, 1940, between 9:30 and 10 p. m.:

My friends, I want to speak frankly because I feel deeply about this piece of legislation. It involves things that are dear to my heart, it involves my home and my country.

To begin with I want to say that I am not interested in names. It matters little to me whether you call this legislation by the name conscription, or by the softer and more euphonic name, selective service law. When you are dealing with principles involving home and country, names mean very little, if anything. You cannot change principles by calling them by either soft or hard names any more than you can change the spots of the leopard by a coat of paint, because underneath the paint the leopard would still be spotted and underneath the name the principle would remain unchanged.

And to begin with I want to allay any suspicion that I am talking in a bold way because I will not be affected. I will be affected, directly and deeply affected. This piece of legislation, under any of the age limits suggested, will permit my Government to enter my home and take my only two boys. One is 21 years of age, the other 29 years of age.

These boys are as dear to me as it is possible for one human being to be to another. You know we just grew up together. We worked around the house together, played together, went to Sunday school and church together, hunted and fished and camped together, laughed together, cried together, and prayed together. We have just lived one simple, happy, old-fashioned American life together. I have tried to be open and frank with them, and they have been open and frank with me. We talk things over together, and we have talked conscription over. I find that they know as much, if not more, about this piece of legislation than I do, and that their convictions are as deep-rooted as are mine. Pardon me for bringing another member of the family into this discussion. She, too, is vitally interested. While the mother of my boys did not bring them up to be soldiers, she did bring them up to be God-fearing patriotic American citizens, proud of the freedom that that citizenship carries with it and willing to share in any sacrifice and assume any burden imposed by that citizenship. She, too, has convictions on this piece of legislation that are as deep-rooted as the convictions of our boys, as are mine. Yes, we are altogether on this piece of legislation. I would feel mighty bad if we were not. We are all in favor of conscription.

I said great principles are involved. They are. Two of the greatest of all governmental principles, the duty of the citizen to the state, and the duty of the state to the citizen. Let me state the first principle, as I understand it, in simple terms. The citizen that shares the benefits of government must assume the burdens of government. Now, let me state the second principle: The state, in order to protect the citizen, owes the citizen the duty of keeping in condition to protect, at all times, its sovereignty, this in order to safeguard the freedom and liberties of the citizen. The relationship between the citizen and the state can never be, in a democracy, a one-sided relationship. It is a mutual relationship, calling for mutual protection, mutual benefits, and mutual burdens.

Oh I hear some say:

"I believe in the principles you have enunciated. You are preaching good American doctrine, but——"

Well, but what?

And they answer:

"But conscription is undemocratic in that it is force, and a democracy never uses force. We must follow democratic processes and rely upon voluntary enlistments."

Moreover, some of these people tell you conscription will bring about a dictatorship.

Others answer with the same qualifying "but." This time the answer is:

"But there is no necessity for conscription; we are at peace, and it is only in case of necessity, such as war or some grave public danger, that the principle applies."

I want to answer these arguments and give my reasons for being in favor of conscription.

In presenting my arguments I want to deal with principles and facts. This is no time to become frightened or hysterical. The problems confronting us today not only call for a cool head and straight thinking, they call for action, immediate and definite action. The nation, in the hour of danger, that loses its head or hesitates, like the man who loses his head or hesitates, is lost.

Conscription undemocratic? Who said so? Oh, they tell you the founding fathers. But when I ask them to tell me which one of the founding fathers, they sidestep and say, "Well, we didn't resort to conscription in the Revolutionary War." No; we didn't. Not because there was any feeling or rebellion against the principle—as a matter of fact, we fought for the very principle—but for the very good reason it was not necessary to invoke the principle to raise an army. We had real patriots in those days. The patriotic fervor created by the spirit of 1776 was so intense, so overwhelming, that there were none left at home to conscript. Practically every man, old and young, kissed the home folks good-bye, picked up his squirrel rifle, and joined the battle for freedom, liberty, and equality.

Now, my friends, in the beginning let's get our democracy straight. Democracy is a living, growing, controlling, directing, restraining force. If it ever becomes static, it crumbles and falls. The trouble that has led to the downfall of so many democracies has been that they remained static and were unable to adjust themselves to new conditions, to set up the right kind of protective machinery in times of emergencies, and to properly coordinate their forces in time of danger. Now, with this principle in mind, let's go back to the founding fathers.

Oh, I know we like to go back to the founding fathers. It is right that we should. When the same set of facts, or the same circumstances, exist today that existed in their day, what they did to solve the problem should be persuasive and compelling. And while it is right that we should go back to them for fundamental principles, because it almost looks like they were divinely led in establishing those principles, we should not be so foolish as to go back to them for light and guidance in applying those principles to new and changed conditions of which they knew nothing about. This thing of trying to figure out what they would do today in a new world, brought about largely by science and invention, is all wrong. In the light of the knowledge and experience we have, ever keeping in mind the great principles they established and upon which this Republic rests, ours is the task of looking our problems right in the face and solving them in such a way as to make our democracy work under present-day conditions. And if we fail to meet this responsibility we are lost. I am not interested in indulging in fanciful speculation to find out what they would do today with respect to conscription or any other question that may arise. I know that they met the problems of their day, applied the principles of democracy to their solution, and made those principles work. Well, we know the principles, and what I am interested in is in meeting present-day problems as they arise and applying those same principles in the light of the present to their solution. The problem of the founding fathers was to make democracy work in their day and time. They were successful because they tackled the problems of their day in a common-sense, realistic way.

Ours, my friends, is the task of making democracy work in our day and time, and we are not going to be successful unless we face the facts and go about the solution of our problems in a common sense, realistic way.

Now, for a few minutes, let's get back to a few of the fundamental principles of democracy. Many, nowadays, who talk about democracy, I am afraid, have never really caught the true spirit of democracy. When faced with assuming distasteful governmental burdens or hardships, they like to harp upon freedom and liberty. Well, I believe in freedom and liberty, but I do not want any false notion about these great principles to liberate me from my freedom. They tell me that conscription will curtail their freedom. I answer, yes; that is true. What about it? A lot of liberties have to be curtailed in the name of the general welfare and the common defense. Oh, they say, it will never do to curtail the individual freedom of man, that they do not want their individual freedom curtailed. Neither do I. The only difference between us is I am willing to pay the price to keep my individual freedom from being permanently curtailed, they are not. Let me ask the opponents to conscription these questions: Don't you realize that there was a cost price for the freedom and liberties you enjoy—the toil, the sacrifice, and the blood of our ancestors. Don't you realize that the maintenance price is just the same as the cost price, and that unless we are willing to pay the maintenance price that, sooner or later, we will lose our freedom altogether? Well, whether you realize it or not, it is true. Ofttimes, my friends, in order to keep your freedom, to make it secure, you have to, for the time being, surrender, in the name of the general welfare, or the common defense, a part of that freedom.

Then, too, those who are against conscription overlook another fundamental democratic principle, the principle of equality. Democracy, it is true, means freedom and liberty, but it also means equality—equality of opportunity and equality of treatment.

My friends, in standing for conscription I am only applying in a common-sense and realistic way the great American principle of equality to present-day conditions. I am only asking that my Government in her effort to protect our freedom and our liberties place all citizens upon the same footing. Treat us all alike. When you call my boy, call the rich man's boy. When you call the laboring man's boy, call the industrialist's boy. When you call the Irish boy, call the Jewish boy. When you call the Presbyterian boy, call the Baptist boy. That's democracy. Pure and undefiled democracy. It is the kind of democracy my forefathers died to establish, and it is the kind of democracy I am willing, if needs be, to follow in their footsteps and pay the same price to maintain and preserve.

Yes, my friends, protecting America is above and beyond race or creed, station or rank. It is a common duty that brings us all down to a common level. And in the discharge of this duty the burdens imposed should be, as far as possible, distributed equally among the citizenry of our country.

When we get away from the American doctrine of equality of treatment, we are treading upon dangerous ground. We are undermining, in the hour of stress, one of the foundation stones upon which the framework of our Republic rests. It is not right, because it is not distributing the burdens of government as far as possible, equally; it is not right because it is permitting some, while sharing the benefits of Government to shirk its responsibilities and burdens, to expect my boy, or your boy, to protect the freedom of the boy who, while anxious to enjoy the blessings afforded by this Republic in times of peace, in time of danger wants to hide behind his deluded conception of freedom. The citizen who honestly shares such an opinion needs to get his democracy straightened out. He needs to be taught that those who accept the benefits of government must assume the responsibilities of government.

And then, my friends, we have an element in this country—I grant you it is a small element—but nevertheless it is here, who are simply unwilling to assume their just duties and responsibilities when danger threatens and the security of our Republic is in jeopardy. These among our citizenry should be forced—I use the word advisedly—to assume their equal part of the burdens of government. A democracy that is not flexible enough to use force, when force is needed, will soon perish. We should never hesitate to use force when the security or well-being of our Republic demands force. Ofttimes we have to use force, even in times of peace, to compel men to share their equal portion of the burdens of government. Why, for instance, sometimes we have to force men to pay their equal and just part of taxes, to observe the laws of sanitation, and to assume other burdensome and distasteful obligations.

And if we conscript boys, I am in favor of conscripting dollars to back those boys up. We can take care of this through the taxing power. Those who unduly share in the blessings of a free country should not complain if they are unduly taxed, in the hour of emergency, to keep those blessings secure. And, if industry fails to show the proper cooperative spirit—and I do not believe it will—I am in favor of conscripting recalcitrant industries. I think so much of my freedom and liberty, and the equality that is mine, that I am willing to go the limit to protect that freedom, that liberty, and that equality.

Yes, my friends, if our democracy is to exist, we cannot get away from the proposition that the citizen that shares the benefits of government must assume the burdens of government.

Now, the Government, in return, owes the citizen the duty of protecting his freedom and liberties. The Government, no matter what the cost, cannot escape its duty, even if in the discharge of its duty it has to, for the time being, use force and curtail some of the freedom usually enjoyed by the citizen. And it is the duty of those in authority who, of course, are the representatives of the citizen, under the general welfare and common defense provisions of the Constitution, to see that the Government discharges its duty; and, in my opinion, if we the representatives of the citizen should fail in seeing that the Government promptly and unhesitatingly discharges its duty, in the event of disaster or threatened disaster, the first to complain of our neglect would be those who are today holloing the loudest against conscription.

Yes, my friends, the government that does not ever remain ready to protect its sovereignty, and thus be in position at all times to protect its citizenry, has failed in the chief function of government.

To those who seem to be alarmed because they think conscription will lead to dictatorship let me say that one reason why I am for conscription is the very opposite to the line of reasoning that prompts their alarm. Conscription, in my opinion, is not only one of the ways to keep down a situation that would likely create a dictatorship here in this country, but is one of the ways to keep the foreign dictator from setting his accursed foot upon American soil. Let me tell you why. If we neglect our defense and our people become frightened and alarmed and lose faith in the ability of their Government to properly function and protect them in the hour of danger they will turn to a dictator or anyone else for deliverance. And if the foreign dictators conclude that our democracy, like so many democracies, is unable to properly function in times of danger or threatened danger and build up an adequate national defense—and this can only be done by providing the manpower to operate our implements of war—our failure to function will be but an invitation to them to come over and set up a dictatorship.

Now, as to the second proposition that there is no necessity for conscription because we are at peace and conscription is only justifiable in case of war or some grave public danger.

While I cannot accept this doctrine, because I believe the Government can, in providing for the common defense and promoting the general welfare, have peacetime conscription, let us assume, for the sake of argument, those advocating this proposition are right, and that it is only in case of war or some grave public danger that we are justified in resorting to conscription. The question then is, Is the necessity, as they define the necessity, upon us? I think it is.

Peace! Do I hear someone say there is no necessity because we are at peace? Would to God that we were entering upon the dawn of the day when nations will not lift up the sword against nations, but will be engaged in beating their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. While I believe in prophecy, I am more or less a realist, and today when kingdoms and democracies are tottering and falling like tenpins before the savage onrush of these mighty totalitarian monsters of force and tyranny, the cry of "peace, peace" sounds like the vaporings of the simpleton giving expression to some of his fantastic illusions. Let me call the roll of the nations that have already fallen prey to these totalitarian monsters of force and tyranny: Manchuria, Ethiopia, Austria, Sudetenland, Czechoslovakia, Memel, Albania, Danzig, Poland, Finland, Norway, Denmark, Luxemburg, Holland, Belgium, France, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia. Behold the picture. Nineteen nations that but a few months ago enjoyed their national sovereignty now reduced to servitude, and their citizenry who but yesterday were freemen now the cringing vassals of these gods of force and tyranny.

Peace! Do I hear someone say there is no necessity because we are at peace, when at this very moment other nations tremble helplessly awaiting their turn of subjugation and their citizenry live in daily, nightly fear of this deadly totalitarian national blight? Let me call the roll of the nations that hover over the brink: Rumania, Switzerland, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Spain, Portugal, Turkey, Egypt, and Greece. Behold the picture! Nine sovereign nations living in fear and dread, knowing not what the tomorrow will bring forth.

Peace! Do I hear someone say there is no necessity because we are at peace, when England, excepting our own, the last great democracy, and who, whether we like to admit it or not has been our first line of defense, is this hour grappling for life with this totalitarian monster? Peace! When the next short wave length may bring the sickening news that England, proud, mighty England, is no more because she, too, listened to the siren's sweet song of peace until it was too late to properly prepare to meet the onslaught?

Oh, you say, all these countries are on the Eastern Hemisphere, and we are separated by 3,000 miles of water.

Well, then, let me bring the situation closer home.

As my first witness I call no other than Adolph Hitler himself. Hear the fuehrer:

"Mexico cries for a capable master. It is being ruined by its Government. With the treasure of Mexican soil, Germany could be rich and great."

Again hear him:

"We will create a new Germany in Brazil."

And again hear him:

"We have a right to South America for the Fuggers and Welsers (famous old German trade and banking houses) had possession there. These South Americans will need us. They are fed up with the United States. If there is a place where democracy is senseless and suicidal it is in South America. We must strengthen these people's clear consciences to throw their liberalism and democracy overboard. We shall not land troops. Our weapons are not visible ones.

"Our conquistadores are audacious youth—and not in the jungle but in good society."

Do you still cry there is no necessity because we are at peace? No necessity when the threat, the direct threat, of subjugation is made against our sister republics right here on the Western Hemisphere?

Well, then, let me bring the matter home.

Listen, my friends, while I again quote the words of Adolf Hitler:

"National socialism alone is destined to liberate the American people and sweep away all the falsities of liberty and equality."

* * * * * * *

"We will soon have storm troops in America. We will have men whom degenerate Yankeedom will not be able to challenge."

Listen to what Virginio Gadya, Mussolini's editor, said on July 13, 1940.

"Ten million Italians live outside of Italy. More than half of these may be found in the two Americas. Italy has the right and the duty to maintain moral contact with these Italians and, if necessary, to provide for their defense."

Is it further proof that you demand? Then listen to Yosuke Matsuoka, Foreign Minister of Japan, in an official speech delivered June 23, 1940.

"The day is dawning when Japan will divide the world only with Germany and Italy."

Peace! Do I still hear someone holloing peace? Let me tell you, my friends, there can be no peace as long as the totalitarian blight that has enthralled Europe casts its sickening, deathly shadow upon the Americas. Be not deceived, I pray you, by the seductive pleas and cries of the pacifist and isolationist. That they may be well intentioned does not lessen the fear that their leadership, in this hour of peril and danger, would bring about our undoing. If you have any doubt, if you think that the shadow is not ominous, if you think it is not portentous and full of ill omen, then go look beneath the shadow at the poisonous, viperous, slimy agents and hirelings of the Communist and Nazi organizations as they seek to work their serpentine way into the different social, fraternal, political, and church organizations, into the munition plants, into the armies and navies, and into strategic positions of state, in the Americas, in their effort to weaken our resistance by poisoning the minds of our people by false and misleading propaganda, and thus make us, too, an easy prey to their craft and cunning.

Not since the plagues of Egypt has the world been cursed with such a plague as this totalitarian plague of force and tyranny. The only way to keep it from the Americas is to prepare to resist it by force of arms if it ever attempts to set its accursed foot upon our sacred soil.

Peace do I hear! When does the mariner prepare for the storm? After the storm has struck with all its fury and his ship, because the sails are full of wind, can no longer be steered, or when the signs of the storm appear and their distant rumblings put him on notice that trouble is in the air? When does the prudent farmer lock his barn? After the thief has entered and stolen his horse? Oh, no, he makes his barn secure so the thief cannot enter. And if our democracy is to be saved, we have got to make ready while there is yet time, and before the thief enters or the storm strikes. The cry upon every tongue, the prayer upon every lip, from now on until we are prepared to withstand the assault of any dictator, or combination of dictators, should be, Wake up America! Prepare! Prepare!

No necessity because we are at peace, do I still hear? Well, let me tell you this: If that is your plea, your past acts belie your present declarations. If that is your excuse, if that is your plea, then tell me why we voted $14,000,000,000 for defense purposes and the American people, as a whole, applauded every vote. Fourteen billions of dollars appropriated to build battleships, tanks, bombing planes, and other implements of war, and to increase the personnel of our Army, Navy, and Air Corps, and appropriated in the House with but one dissenting vote—and I wish to God I could blot that vote from the permanent records of the land I love—and then you tell me there is no necessity because we are at peace. Shades of Munchausen! In the light of our record, did anyone ever hear of such a preposterous plea. Would we, Democrats and Republicans alike—there are no politics in this matter—have appropriated, and would the American people, Democrats and Republicans alike, have approved the appropriation of $14,000,000,000, with our exchequer showing enormous bills payable, unless we thought there was not only a necessity but an urgent, imperative necessity? Would we, the chosen representatives of the people, during these days of stress, when we are called upon as never before to clothe the naked and feed the hungry, have been so reckless with the money of the taxpayers we represent as to have made the appropriation unless the necessity—yea, the gravity of the situation—was weighing heavily upon us? Oh, let's be honest about the matter. Of course, we recognized the necessity, and, like the true Americans that we are, resolved in our hearts that we would never let dollars stand between our Republic and safety.

Now, if the necessity exists to increase our battleships, our tanks, our bombing planes, our anti-aircraft guns, why would not the same necessity tell us we need additional men to man these additional armaments? If it doesn't, we were just fooling ourselves in making the appropriations, because it would be sheer nonsense to increase our armaments without providing trained men to man them.

Now, do you still ask why I am for conscription? Well, let me summarize and give you the A B C's of the question as I see it:

I am for conscription because I think that the necessity to provide for the common defense is upon us. I think that our freedom and our liberties are in jeopardy and that our Government would be derelict in its duty to its citizenry if it did not prepare to withstand any assault made upon us by any nation, or combinations. And while I am opposed to sending our boys to European soil, I think the duty resting upon our Government extends to the Americas because, in my opinion, if one of the dictators ever secures a foothold in one of the South American Republics and establishes a base, the next step would land him right in the middle of our Republic. Our own security today is, more or less, also wrapped up in the security of the South American Republics.

I am for conscription because I believe it is the fair way, the American way, to raise an army. It distributes the burden equally among our citizenry.

I am for conscription because I believe it would be sheer nonsense to build armament without providing the manpower. We cannot go halfway. We need total adequate defense. I further believe that, due to the fact that today war is largely mechanized warfare, that it would be criminal to send our boys to war without our adequate and proper training. They need to be trained, not only in the use of modern implements of war, but in the ways to protect themselves against modern implements of war. It would be too late to give this training after war begins.

And I am in favor of conscription because I believe total adequate defense is the one and only insurance policy against war we can carry. If we are prepared and the dictators know that we are prepared, then I firmly believe that we will be repaid, richly repaid, for our preparation, in that peace, glorious peace, will be our portion. In this belief, this hope, I know America joins. If she does, then let America act.

May God bless America.

Our Nation's Defense

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. O. BURGIN
OF NORTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, September 4, 1940

EDITORIAL FROM THE SANFORD (N. C.) HERALD

Mr. BURGIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the Sanford (N. C.) Herald of August 28:

[From the Sanford (N. C.) Herald of August 28, 1940]

OUR NATION'S DEFENSE

On August 12, when I left Sanford to go to Camp Beauregard, La., to witness the maneuvers of the Third United States Army, I did so with two purposes in mind: (1) To see what was going on and to form some sort of conclusions from what I found, for my own information, and for others who might be interested; and (2) to give some publicity to the One Hundred and Thirteenth Field Artillery in general and tone of its units, Sanford's Battery E, in particular.

The whole idea, of course, was prompted by the acute situation toward which and into which this country has been propelled by the fast-moving events of the European war.

APPRECIATION OF THE GUARD

Taking up the two purposes inversely, I was able to give the 113th Field Artillery considerable publicity, not only in this paper but also in several other papers in towns in which units of the regiment are located. For some years I have had a feeling that the public did not fully appreciate the boys who belonged to the National Guard, including local and nearby units, and did not give them proper recognition for the time and effort expended in drilling, in summer encampments, and in preparing to cope with State and national emergencies that might arise. I believe that today the public in general is much better acquainted with, is much more sympathetic to, and is much more enthusiastic for the Guard units than ever before. Simple down-to-earth publicity has helped to bring about this situation, along with the general public realization that the National Guard has not only been the country's second line of defense but is about to be promoted to the first line with the Army, Navy, and other standing armed forces.

FINE SPIRIT EXISTENT

In riding around portions of the 2,800 square miles over which the 70,000 men involved were engaged in a simulated warfare between Blue and Red forces, I found a fine spirit among the men I talked to and a genuine eagerness to serve their country, but, as even the high-ranking generals who staged the maneuver pointed out, I found looseness, inefficiency, and general blundering.

NEED FOR EFFICIENCY

I came away with the impression that a great deal of this was caused by too much red tape in the Army, and to too many brass hats who were without authority or initiative to make decisions themselves. I had the impression that under a system where the buck is often passed to the officer next in command, there are too many points at which things might go wrong in actual warfare.

This might reasonably be expected to happen under a system when orders are relayed down from the top through a long line of subordinates, and where problems requiring a decision must also be relayed to the top through the same line of under officers. My thought on this is that the Army system of training should be adapted to allow officers to make more decisions and to allow the exercise of more initiative. Under the warfare of the present and the future—swift movement of positions rather than fighting in a fixed line of trenches—these would be most beneficial.

NEED FOR TRAINING

A second need, that for intensive immediate training of the National Guard, was and has been so apparent for some time that it requires little amplification. The members of the National Guard are hard workers, but they are soft and inexperienced, and the latter at least applies in no little measure to our standing forces. Only rigid training can cure this. The nation is glad that Congress has empowered the President to call the Guard into training for a year, and it is glad that substantial forces will begin this training next month.

A necessary part of the training to be given the Guard—and every citizen of this Republic needs it in liberal doses—should be lessons in appreciation of the rights which citizens enjoy under our form of government. This appreciation of American rights and American ways should be so thorough that our soldiers and our citizens will want to fight rather than relinquish it to dictators or foreign aggressors. Our Nation must have iron in its mind and in its spirit, as well as steel in its collective muscles. Hitler has implanted in German minds a fire and a fervor that must be matched with a fire and fervor for our own scheme of living.

NEED FOR EQUIPMENT

A third need of our armed forces is for the very best equipment, including mechanized units. We need the most modern and up-to-date equipment that money can buy. We need far more mobile fighting equipment, ranging all the way from simple trucks to combat cars and motorcycles, and from tanks to airplanes. Congress has appropriated immense sums of money to make these things possible. No stone should be left unturned to make their production speedy. Our industry, during the present emergency, should be so geared that production of this equipment is not only on a must but also on a preferred list over everything else.

NEED FOR SELECTIVE SERVICE

